To fix, to confirm, to keep or hold, to put or place, to unite or join closely, firmly, tightly, steadfastly; to cause to adhere or stick together; to keep close to or upon.

Doth out this water, quoth Merlyn, & wen it is aweye,
Ge schul bi nethe get yfinde holwe stones tweye;
And in eyther a dragon ther inne slepe faste.

R. Gloucester, p. 131.

A ma dame mercy quath ich. me lyketh wel goure wordes
Ac the moneye of this molde that men so faste kepeth.

Piers Ploughman, p. 15.

Byddere & beggere. faste aboute goden.—Id. p. 3.

Thou sayst, we wives wol our vices hide,
Til we be fast, and then we woll hem shew.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5865

And sith she dorst nat telle it to no man
Doun to a mareis faste by she ran.

Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6553.

And with this noyse, and with this crie
Out of a barge faste by Men sterten out and weren ware
Of this felon. Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

Also it hath beene seene, that the weaker person, by the sleight of wrastlyng, hath ouerthrowen the stronger, almost or he coulde fasten on the other any violent stroke.

Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 17.

By whose footing when the hunters perceiue where their haunt is, they do eyther vndermyne or els cutte wythin the ground, all the trees there awayes, in such sorte that by thupper part they may seme to stād fast still.

Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 163.

And at this meting ye Lord Hasting, whose trouth towarde the king no manne doubted nor neded to doubte, perswaded the lordes to believe, that the Duke of Gloucester was sure and fastlye faithfull to hys prince.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 43.

Ergo he confesseth here plainely, the contrary of that he so fastelye before hath affirmed.—Id. Ib. p. 556.

And where thou didst see the feete and toes partely erthen and parte yerne, it signifieth the kingdom to be diuided, nethelesse yet shal it retain some what of the ferme fastnes of yerne as it were vnder ye sole of his fote.

Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 2.

Who shewed and declared unto him, how the hope of victory was much more assured to the Romanes than to King Antiochus; and withall, how the Romanes would be the faster and surer friend of the twaine, yea and make more conscience of keeping amitie.—Holland. Livie, p. 939.

So there were environed, intercepted, and killed in the place together with Hanno himself the generall, fast upon a thousand, even as many as were in the vaward, and could not well retire themselves backward.—Id. Ib. p. 735.

Which well I prove, as shall appear by triall,
To be this maides with whom I fastned hand,
Known by good markes and perfect good espiall:
Therefore it ought be rendred her without denial.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

The congruent, and harmonious fitting of parts in a sentence, hath almost the fastning, and force of knitting, and connexion; as in stones well squared, which will rise strong a great way without mortar.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Thereto both his owne wylie wit, she sayd,
And eke the fastnesse of his dwelling place,
Both unassayable, gave him great ayde

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

The king also beeinge fast handed, and loth to part with a second dowrie, but chiefly being affectionate both by his nature, and out of politicke considerations to continue the alliance with Spaine, prevailed with the prince (though not without some reluctation, such as could bee in those yeares, for hee was not twelve years of age) to bee contracted with the Princesse Katherine.—Bacon. Henry VII. p. 207.

It is the more obvious and common opinion, that this [the art of flying] may be effected by wings fastened immediately to the body, this coming nearest to the imitation of nature, which should be observed in such attempts as these Wilkins. Dædalus, c. 7.

Six lions' hides, with thongs together fast,
His upper part defended to his waist
And where man ended the continued vest
Spread on his back the houss and trappings of a beast.

Dryden. Ovid Metam. b. xii.

But where the fancy waits the skill
Of fluent easy dress at will,
The thoughts are oft, like colts which stray
From fertile meads, and lose their way,
Clapt up and fasten'd in the pound
Of measur'd rhyme and barren sound.—Lloyd On Rhyme.

I know there is an order, that keeps things fast in their place; it is made to us, and we are made to it.

Burke. Reform of Representation.

The capital, or rather chief fastness, of Cassibelan was then taken, with a number of cattle, the wealth of this barbarous city.—Id. An Abridgement of English History.

As soon as the petty sovereigns of Asturias ventured to steal out of their mountainous fastnesses and retreats, to extend the limits of their little kingdom at the expense of Mahometan caliphs, their conquest seems to have been entrusted to the care of generals or counts

Swinburne. Spain, Let 44.

FAST, adj.
FAST, ad.
FA'STLY.

A. S. Faste. Junius says,—fast or swift in pace. Celer, citatus, præceps. The English have manifestly retained this word from the Welsh Ffest, properus, festinus. But it is more probably a consequential application of fast, close: He comes fast behind, i.e. close behind; to attain which closeness or nearness of position (suppose in a race) speed was exerted. And by usage the word was transferred from the end to the means, i. e. from the place or position to the speed exerted in attaining it.

Speedy, quick.

And lepte on ye stede, and alwede and alog fast ye fon.

R. Gloucester, p. 63.

Ac Wyles & Wit, weren aboute faste
To overcome the kynge. Piers Plouhman, p. 68.

But that science is so fer us beforne,
We mowen not although we had it sworne,
It overtake, it slit away so fast;
It wol us maken beggare at the last.

Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,150.

To my iudgement these princes are not chosen, that they should eate more meate, than all other, nor to be aparayled rycheiyer than all other, not to renne faster than all other: but with presupposicion, that they ought to knowe more than all other.—Golden Boke, c. 80.

——— But plenteous Avon strives
The first to be at sea: and faster her to hie,
Clear Kesailgum comes in, with Hergum by and by.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

Selanus hearing this answere was nothing pleased, not so much in regard of the marriage, as because he feared Tiberius's secret suspicions, the rumour of the people, and enuie which grew fast vpon him

Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 103.

A reverend man, that graz'd his cattle nigh,
(Sometime a blusterer, that the ruffle knew
Of court, of city, and had let go by
The swiftest hours) observed as they flew;
Towards this afflicted fancy fastly drew.

Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Here the rude clamour of the sportsmen's joy,
The gun fast thundering, and the winded horn,
Would tempt the Muse to sing the rural game.

Thomson. Autumn.

I dread the next letters from Holland, will bring us an account of the duke's army being cut off in the whole, or in part. All my predictions are now verifying too fast.

Chesterfield. Works, vol. iv. b. ii. Let. 29.

FAST, v.
FAST, n.
FA'STER.
FA'STING, n.
FA'STINGLY.

Goth. Fastan; A. S. Fæst-an; Sw. Fasta; Dut. Vasten; Ger. Fasten, jejunare; which (Wachter thinks) is the verb, Fasten, servare, to keep, to guard, to secure; applied to the keeping or observing a rite of the church: observare and jejunare, he remarks, are frequently found synonymous in ecclesiastical writers. Applied to the peculiar rite of abstaining from food, as a religious observance, and then extended to such abstinence from any cause. To fast, then, will mean—

To observe or keep, (sc.) abstinence from food; and thus, consequentially, to forbear from food; to abstain from food.

His fleashe wolde haue charged him with fatnesse, but that the wantonnesse of his wombe with trauail and fastyng he adaunteth, and in ridyng & goyng traualeth myghtelche his youthe.—R. Gloucester, p. 482. Note 7.

Vigiles and fastyng dayes. fortheremore to knowe
And fulfille tho fastynges.—Piers Ploukman, p. 159.

But whanne thou fastist anointe thin heed, and waische thi face that thou be not seen fastyng to men, but to thi fadir that is in hidlis, and thi fadir that seeth in hidlis schal ȝelde to thee.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 6.

But ye, when thou fastest, annoynt thyne head, and wash thy face, yt it appeare not vnto men how yt thou fastest, but vnto thy father which is in secrete: & thy father which seith in secrete, shal rewarde the openlye.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

In hungur and thirst, in manye fastyngs, in coold and nakidneasse.—Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 11.

In honger, in thyrste, in fastinges often, in colde and nakednes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Ye shul understond also, that fasting stont in three thinges in forbering of bodily mete and drinke, in forbering of worldly jolitee, and in forbering of dedly sinne: this to say, that a man shall kepe him fro dedly sinne with all his might.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And when thei wene all shall be wele,
Thei ben downe throwe at laste
Than am I fed of that faste,
And laugh, of that I see them loure.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Nowe harken what difference ought to be betwene youre fastes, and theyrs, yf ye wil haue them acceptable to the father, and profitable to yourselves. It is not the forbearing of the meat that commendeth fastyng vnto God, but the pure and cleane affeccion of the minde, feruently desiring to please God only.—Udal. Matthew, c. 6.

Thyncke ye thys fast pleaseth me, that a man should chasten him selfe for a daye, and to wrythe his head about lyke an hoke in an heerry cloth, and to lye vpon the earth

Bible, 1551. Esaye, c. 58

Wherefore as often as godlynesse shall prounke you to fast, fauow not certayn menne which be not fasters, but counterfeyters of fasting, setting foorth the colour and cloke of fasting with a sower countensunce.—Id. Ib.

At lengthe bespeakes the elite mouse:
my frende why lyke you still,
To lyue in countrye fastyngly, vpon a craggie hill.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 6.

In the which, (for as much as he [Moses] first rested ther after seuen dayes fasting and trauel of hymselfe and his people through the deserrtes of Arabia) he hallowed the seventh day, and called it after the manner and vsage of the countrie, the Sabboth day, commaundyng it to be kept Fastyng-day for euer after to the worldes end, because that day had made an end of all their trauill and hunger.

Goldyng. Justine, fol. 138

Some with a whip their pamper'd bodyes beate,
Others in fasting live, and seldom eate.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5

I have even wearied heav'n with pray'rs, dried up
The spring of my continual tears, even starv'd
My veine with daily fasts.

Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 2.

I see Moses the receiver of the law, Elias the restorer of the law, Christ the fulfiller of the old law and author of the new, all fasting forty dayes: and these three great fasters I finde together glorious in Mount Tabor.

Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Taste of Moses.

But this notion of the word cannot at all belong to this place, where the hypocritical fasters, that desire their devotions should φανηναι, be seen and commended by men, are said to be σκυθρωποι, of sad countenance.

Hammond. Works, vol. iii. p. 35.

That holy number (as he calls it) of forty, which our Saviour honoured with his fasting is by this reckoning excluded.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

6. Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bands of wickednesse, to undo the heavie burdens and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke.
7. Is it not to deal thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poor that are cast out, to thy house? when thou seest the naked, that thou cover him, and that thou hide not thyself from thine own flesh.—Bible. Isaiah, c. 58.

From hence may an account be given why the inhabitants of hot countries may endure longer fasting and hunger than those of colder; and those seemingly prodigious and to us scarce credible stories of the fastings and abstinence of the Egyptian monks be rendered probable.

Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

John the Baptist came, neither eating or drinking, Matt. xi. 18. That is, when he was sent to preach, came solitary into the wilderness with great austereness and severity of life, with fasting and abstinence, with mortification and self denial; and they said, he is mad, and hath a Devil

Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 99.

Study and paine were now no more their care;
Texts were explain'd by fasting and by prayer

Dryden. Art of Poetry.

And upon these considerations, the king commanded all persons, of whatsoever state and degree, to observe and keep from henceforth such fasting-days, and the time of Lent, as had been heretofore used in the realm.

Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI an 1548.

For months together these creatures of sufferance, whose very excess and luxury in their most plenteous days had fallen short of the allowance of our austerest fasts, silent, patient, resigned, without sedition or disturbance, almost without complaint, perished by an hundred a day in the streets of Madras.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

Others there are, and not a few,
Who place it in the bug bear view!
Think it consists in strange severities:
In fastings, weepings and austerities

Dodsley. Religion, a Simile.

Tillotson in a fast-sermon on a thanksgiving occasion, 31st January, 1689, says, Twenty-years agone.

Tooke. Diversions of Purley, vol. i. p. 467.

FASTI'DIOUS. } Fr. Fastidieux; It. Fastidioso; Sp. Fastidioso;
FASTI'DIOUSLY. } Lat. Fastidiosus, from fastidire, quod proprié est cum
FASTI'DIOUSNESS. } fastu aspernari; fastus (from fari, to speak;) pro
FASTIDIO'SITY. } superbid, because proud or arrogant persons speak great things, grandia fantur, (Vossius.)

Affecting or arrogating superior taste or discernment; a nicer sensibility; disdaining ordinary or common gratifications; disdainful; contemptuous, squeamish, nauseating, disgusting.

Fastidiosity, in Swift, is coined for the occasion.

Also by a cruel and irous mayster, the wyttes of chyldren be dulled: and that thynge, for the whiche chyldren be often tymes beaten, is to them after fastidious.

Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 9.

[Southistel] causeth fastidiousness or lothsomness of the stomacke.—Id. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

Let their fastidious, vain
Commission of the brain
Run on, and rage, sweat, censure, and condemn:
They were not made for thee, less thou for them.

B. Jonson. The Author's just Indignation.

As for the [ifs] that he is so fastidiously displeased with, he hath, I doubt not, judgment enough, to discern that all the severals so introduced, are things that we assume to have actually proved.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 273.

What was blameable in the Pharisees, was not their bare using of some lawful indifferent, or else good, and commendable things, not commanded by God; but their teaching such for doctrines, and laying them as burthens on others, and what was consequent to this, their discriminating themselves proudly and fastidiously from other men, upon this account.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 192.

He reproved the fastidiousnesse of the Pharisee, that came with Eucharist to God and contempt to his brother

Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. iii. § 14.

This knowledge, which so many neglect and despise, nay, which the generality of men do, more than any other, fastidiously slight, or studiously shun, is, next the knowledge of its prototype, that which best deserves our study, and it most concerns us to attain.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 752.

Less licentious and more discerning times (which may be, perhaps, approaching) will repair the omissions and fastidiousness of the present, by an eminent gratitude to the names of those that have laboured to transmit to others, in the handsomest dress they durst give them, the truths themselves most valued.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 309.

As mankind is now disposed, he receives much greater advantage by being diverted than instructed; his epidemical diseases being fastidiosity, amorphy, and ossitation.

Swift. Works, vol. i. A Digression in the modern kind.

On what ground, except the constitutional policy of forming an establishment to secure that kind of succession which is to preclude a choice of the people for ever, could the legislature have fastidiously rejected the fair and abundant choice our own country presented to them, and searched in strange lands for a foreign princess.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

The fastidiousness of those critics reproved, who pretend to take offence at the freedom of some of those images which are found in the sacred writings; the nature of those images explained.

Louth. Lectures. By Gregory, vol. ii. Lect. 31. Contents.

FASTI'GIOUS. Lat. Fastigium, the highest point. Applied to an angular or pointed roof;—contradistinguished from flat.

The ancients dwelling-houses [were] generally flat at the top, Julius Cæsar being the first that they indulg'd to raise his palace in this fastigious manner, as Salmasius tells us in Solin.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

FA'STUOUS. } See FASTIDIOUS. Lat. Fastuosus; "Fr. Fastueux; proud, FA'STUOUSLY. } lofty, scornful, disdainful, arrogant, high-minded," (Cotgrave.)
FA'STUOUSNESS. }

In this notion it will accord, and associate very well with βλασφημια, calumny, and ὑπερφανια, pride, which immediately precede, the calumniating, fastuous (insolent) and vain-glorious behaviour, going ordinarily together.

Hammond. Works, vol. iii. p. 158.

Injustus fuit, se super aliquem extulit, à vero declinavit, recessit, insolenter se gessit, mentitus est, fastuosè incessit, being unrighteous, proud, transgressor, insolent, lyars, fastuous—Id. Ib. p. 389.

It [piety] feneeth him from insolence and fastuous contempt of others, rendereth him civil, condescensive, kind and helpfull to those who are in a meaner state.

Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 2.

We are apt to despise or disregard others, demeaning ourselves insolently and fastuously toward them.

Id. vol. iii. Ser. 29.

St. Chrysostome's reflexions on those passages are very good, that indeed then there was no fastuousness in the Church, and the souls of those primitive Christians were clear of vanity.—Id. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

FAT, v. } Junius says that the Dan. Feed, as well as the A. S. Fæt,
FAT, adj. } seem derived from the A. S. Fedan, pascere, nutrire, to feed,
FAT, s. } to nourish; thus, fat is, (q.d.) well-fed. Dut. Vet; Ger. Fett;
FA'TLING, s. } which latter, Wachter says, is, properly, Fedet, from föden,
FA'TNER. } pascere, nutrire, to feed, to nourish.
FA'TNESS. }
FA'TTEN. }
FA'TTING, s. }
FA'TTY. }
FA'TTINESS. }

And both fat, and food, in A. S. Fat, and fod, are, in Tooke's opinion, the past tense and past part. of this verb, fed-an, to feed. To fat, or fatten, is—

To feed well; to feed, to nourish, to a state of fulness or plumpness of size, to coarseness or grossness of body, or bodily habit.

And of fatte wetheres an hundred thousand also.

R. Gloucester, p. 52.

His flesshe wolde haue charged him with fatnesse but that the wantonnesse of his wombe with trauaile and fastynge he adaunteth, and in rydinge and goyng travayleth myghteliche his youthe.—Id. p. 482. Note 7.

And fatte thy faucones, to culle wylde foules.

Piers Ploughman, p. 129.

On fat londe and ful of donge, foulest wedes groweth.

Id. p. 213.

What if ony of the braunchis ben brokun whanne thou were a wielde olyue tree art graffid among hem, and art maad felowe of the roote and of the fatnesse of the olyue tree? nyle thou haue glorie aghens the braunchis.

Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 11.

Thoughe some of the braunches be broken of, and thou beynge a wylde olyue tree, arte grafte in among them, and made partaker of the rote and fatnes of the olyue tree, bost not thyselfe agaynst the braunches.—Bible, 1551. Rom. c. 11.

Ful many a fat patrick hadde he in mewe.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 351.

For loue leveth colour ne cleernesse,
Who loueth true hath no fatnesse.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Fynally the dyete, whiche doth extenuate and make leane, is more sure for kepyng of helth, than that whiche fatteth moch.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv.

It is little marueyle that ydlenesse and meate of another man's charge will soone feede vp and fatte likely men

Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

They were very fat, so that we were constrained to cast the fat away.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 101.

And praye him, for to make me sheepe,
and cattle verye fatte,
And for to fatten all I haue,
excepte my witte alone:
If that be fatte, adew good lorde,
our Musies may be gon.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 6.

The king [John] vpon a time in his hunting comming where a verie fat stag was cut vp and opened (or how the hunters term it I cannot tell) the king beholding the fatnesse and the liking of the stag: see, saith he, how easily and happilie he hath liued, and yet for all that he neuer heard any masse.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 233. King John.

The ground they neuer fatten with mucke, dung or any thing, neither plow nor digge it as we in England.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 271.

Next was November; he full gross and fat,
As fed with lard, and that right well might seeme,
For he had been a fatting hogs of late,
That yet his browes with sweat did reek and steem.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 7. Of Mutabilitie

As the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, the bee, &c. These all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not. The cause of their fattening during their sleeping time, may be the want of assimilating; for whatsoever assimilateth not to flesh, turneth either to sweat, or fat.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 899.

——— She largely it bestowes
On marsh land, whose swoln womb with such abundance flowes,
As that her batt'ning breast her fattings sooner feeds,
And with more lavish waste, than oft the grasier needs

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 28

For like as cooks pray for nothing, but good store of fattings to kill for the kitchen, and fishmongers plenty of fishes; even so curious and busy people wish for a world of troubles, and a number of affaires, great news, alterations and changes of state.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 114.

So deckt with floods, so pleasant in her groves,
So full of well fleec'd flocks and fatted droves.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 1.

Having now spoken of hardning of the juices of the body, we are to come next to the oleosity or fattiness of them.

Bacon. Of Life and Death.

Now what were peace without religion, but like a Nabal's sheep shearing; like the fatting of an Epicurean hogge; the very festivall revels of the Devil.

Bp. Hall. An Holy Panegyrick.

You may turn (almost) all flesh into a fatty substance. If you take flesh, and cut it into pieces, and put the pieces into a glasse covered with parchment, and so let the glasse stand six or seven hours in boyling water.

Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 678.

Cattle fatted by good pasturage, after violent motion, sometimes die suddenly; in such the liver is found to be inflamed and corrupted.—Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 3.

All the superfluous weight of an animal beyond the vessels, bones, and muscles, is nothing but fat: but the conversion of the aliment into fat is not properly nutrition, which is a reparation of the solids and fluids.

Id. On Aliments, c. 2.

The hire of the milk, and the prices of the young veals, and old fat wares, were disposed to the relief of the poor.

Strype. Memor. Edw. VI. an. 1547.

London, thou great emporium of our isle;
O thou too bounteous, thou too fruitful Nile!
How shall I praise or curse to thy desert?
Or separate thy sound from thy corrupted part?
I call'd thee Nile: the parallel will stand
Thy tides of wealth o'erflow the fatten'd land.

Dryden. The Medal.

The wind was west, on which that philosopher bestowed the encomium of fatner of the earth.—Arbuthnot.

Spirit of nitre will turn oil of olives into a sort of fatty substance; but acids may be used as stimulating.

Id. On Aliments, c. 6.

Mark the fat cit, whose good round sum,
Amounts at least to half a plum,
Whose chariot whirls him up and down
Some three or four miles out of town:
For hither sober folks repair,
To take the dust which they call air.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle.

The purport of a vision, thrown into prophetical language, would run thus: "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid, and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together: the cow and the bear shall feed, and their young ones shall lie down together; and the lion shall eat straw like the ox."
Horne. Works, vol. v. Dis. 17.

The same voice, while it retains its proper distinctions, may yet be varied many ways, by sickness or health, youth or age, leanness or fatness, good or bad humour.
Reid. Enquiry, c. iv. s. 1.

FAT. (Now written Vat.) A. S. Fat, fata, fæt, Dut. Vat; Ger. Fass, dolium, cadus: all, says Skinner, from the Lat. Vas. Wachter (including vas) from the Ger. Fassen; Dut. Vatten; Sw. Fatta; capere, continere, to hold, to contain. Traces of the ancient word remain, (Mark xii. 1; Luke xiv. 23,) in the Gothic noun, Fatha, sepes. Junius derives from the Dut. Vatten.

Put ye in the sicle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down; for the press is full, the fats ouerflow; for their wickednesse is great.—Bible. Joel, iii. 13.

FATE, n.
FA'TED.
FA'TAL.
FA'TALISM.
FA'TALIST.
FATA'LITY.
FA'TALLY.
FA'TEFUL.

It. Fato; Sp. Hado; Lat. Fatum, past part. of Far-i, to speak, to utter, to say; fatum, (Vossius,) a fando; nam ita dicitur, Dei fatum, hoc est, dictum, jussum, decretum, voluntas Dei; the word, the order, the decree, the will of God. Literally—

Any thing spoken, uttered, or said; decreed, ordained, destined; and thus applied to any thing preordained, predetermined; to any thing inevitable; as death; whence fatal is—

Deadly, mortal, destructive.

Ayenst which fate him helpeth not to striue.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

The day is comen of hire departing,
I say the woful day fatal is come,
That ther may be no longer tarying,
But forward they hem dressen all and some.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4681.

Wherfore he sayeth, Confitebor, I shall knowlege togyther all my synnes, not accusynge hys fate or destenye, nor any constellacion, neyther the Deuill or anye other thynge, but onelye hys owne selfe, therfore he sayeth, Aduersum me.
Fisher. On the Seuen Psalmes, Ps. 32.

We cleft the walles, and closures of the towne;
Wherto all helpe: and vnderset the feet
With sliding rolles, and bound his neck with ropes:
This fatal gin thus ouerlambe our walles,
Stuft with arm'd men: about the which there ran
Children and maides, that holy carolles sang
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Fither to disinthrone the King of Heav'n
We warr, if war be best, or to regain
Our own right lost: him to unthrone we then
May hope when everlasting Fate shall yield
To fickle Chance, and Chaos judge the strife.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

So without least impulse or shadow of Fate,
Or aught by me immutable foreseen,
They trespass, authors to themselves in all
Both what they judge and what they choose.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

Where's the large comet now whose raging flame
So fatal to our monarchy became,
Which o'er our heads in such proud horror stood,
Insatiate with our ruin and our blood.
Cowley. Ode on his Majesty's Restoration.

——— And now great deeds
Had been achiev'd, whereof all Hell had rung,
Had not the snakie sorceress that sat
Fast by Hell gate, and kept the fatal key,
Ris'n, and with hideous outcry rush'd between.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

The flames of one triumphant day,
Which, like an anti-comet here
Did fatally to that appear,
For ever frighted it away
Cowley. Ode on his Majesty's Restoration.

——— Whereon
A treacherous armie leuied, one midnight
Fated to th' purpose, did Anthonio open
The gates of Millaine, and i'th' dead of darkenesse
The ministers for th' purpose hurried thence
Me, and thy crying self.—Shakes. Tempest, Act i. sc. 2.

Very many even of those who have no religion, nor any sense at all of the Providence of God; yet know very well, by the light of their own natural reason, that there neither is or can be any such thing as Chance, that is, any such thing as an effect without a cause; and therefore what others ascribe to Chance, they ascribe to the operation of Necessity or Fate. But Fate also is itself in reality as truly nothing, as Chance is.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 98.

Great therefore is the deceit, and fatal the errour, by which all those delude themselves, who continue in sin, because God's mercy (they think) and his goodness and compassion abound.—Id. vol. ii. Ser. 120.

Hence, if the orbs have still resisted been
By air, or light, or ether, ne'er so thin;
Long since their motion must have been suppresst,
The stars had stood, the sun had lain at rest.
So vain, so wild a scheme, your fatalists have dress'd.
Blackmore. Creation, b. v.

It makes me think that there is something in it like fatality; that after certain periods of time, the fame and memory of great Wits should be renewed, as Chaucer is both in France and England.—Dryden. Pref. to the Fables.

The loss and gain each fatally were great:
And still his subjects call'd aloud for war:
But peaceful kings, o'er martial people set
Each other's poise and counterbalance are.
Id. Annus Mirabilis, (1666.)

Who knows, says Segrais, but that his [Achilles] fated armour was only an allegorical defence, and signified no more, than that he was under the peculiar protection of the Gods?—Id. Discourse on Epic Poetry.

But Fate, derived from the Latin fari, signifying to speak, must denote the word spoken by some intelligent being, who has power to make his words good; so that whatsoever he says shall be done, will infallibly come to pass; and does not at all relate to the causes or manner whereby it is accomplished, unless those causes be made to act in consequence of the word spoken.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 26.

When a man plants a peach tree, can you properly say it is therefore fated that he should gather peaches and not plums or filberds therefrom? or if he sows oats in his field, does he think any thing of a fatality against his reaping wheat or barley? so neither if we know a collection of atoms having motions among them which must form a regular world, should we esteem every thing fatal that might be produced by them.—Id. Ib.

Add to all this, that he saw with concern the ill use which some were ready to make of the supposed fatalism of Mr. Pope, and how hurtful it was to Religion to have it imagined, that so great a genius was ill inclined towards it.
Hurd. Life of Warburton.

Being a fatalist in natural things, and at the same time maintaining free-will in man, he [Aristotle] thought, if Providence were extended to individuals, it would either impose a necessity on human actions, or be employed on mere contingencies, be itself frequently defeated; which would look like impotency: and not seeing any way to reconcile freewill and prescience, he cut the knot and denied its care over individuals.—Id. The Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

Nor fateful only is the bursting flame:
The exhalations of the deep dug mine,
Though slow, shake from their wings as sure a death.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. iv.

FA'THER, n.
FA'THER, v.
FA'THERHOOD.
FA'THERING, n.
FA'THERLESS.
FA'THERLY, adj.
FA'THERLY, ad.
FA'THERLINESS.
FA'THER-IN-LAW.

The Gr. Πατηρ; Lat. Pater; Fr. Père; It. Padre; Dut. Vader; Ger. Vater; Sw. Fadder; A. S. Feder; Goth. Fad-rein, sunt parentes; all which, Wachter thinks, must have had a common origin, either in the infantile cry, pa, pa, or in some Scythian word, dispersed by that people over the whole world. For the former Vossius decides.

The parent, producer or begetter; the progenitor; applied also, to aged or reverend persons; to those who act with paternal kindness; who afford or bestow the protection of a father.

To father; to bear, impute or assume, the character or functions of father, the parentage or production.

Ych [Cordeille] the loue as the mon that my fader ys.
And euer habbe y loued as my fader, & euer wole ywys.
R. Gloucester, p. 30.

Al so ich wole make to day thine sones faderles.
Id. p. 142

And ge shoide be here fadres. & techen hem betere.
Piers Ploughman, p. 6.

I schal rise up and go to my fadir and I schal saye to him fader I haue sinned into heuene, & before thee, and now I am not worthi to be clepid thi sone: make me as oon of thin hirid men.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 15

I wyll aryse and goo to my father, and wyll saye vnto him: father, I haue synned agaynst heauen and before thee, and am no more worthy to be called thy sonne, make me as one of thy hyred seruantes.—Bible, 1551. Luke, c. 15.

For grace of this thing I bowe my knees to the fadir of oure Lord Ieshu Crist, of whom ech fadirheed in heuenes and erthe is named.—Wiclif. Ephesie, c. 3.

For thys cause I bowe my knees vnto the father of our Lorde Jesus Chryst, which is father ouer al that is called father in heauen & in erthe.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

A cleen religioun and an unwemmed anentis God and the fadir is this, to visite fadirles and modirles children and widewis in hir tribulacioun, and kepe himsilf undefouled fro this world.—Wiclif. James, c. 1.

Pure deuocio and vndefiled before God the Father, is this, to visite the fatherless and wyddowes in theyr aduersitye, and to kepe hymselfe vnspotted of the worlde
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And ay she kept hire fadres lif on loft
With every obeisance and diligence,
That child may don to fadres reverence.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8107.

Jason, whiche sigh his fader olde,
Upon Medea made hym bolde
Of art magike, whiche she couth,
And praieth hir, that his father's youth,
She wolde make ayenewarde newe.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The inuencion of this arte [remembraunce] is fathered vpon Simonides.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 216.

Of whiche nombre of heathens, ye Romaines are also touching your nacion, but by adopcion and fathering, called all to the right title of inheritaunce and surname of Jesus Christe.—Udal. Romaines, c. 1.

In the yeare of our Lorde (as I sayd afore) d. c. and vii., Antichrist fast approaching to the fulnesse of his age, grewe into a vniuersall fatherhode.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

If fatherhood go by age, I suppose that King Henrie was elder than Becket. If fatherhood consist in authoritie, I iudge the authoritie of a king to be aboue the authoritie of an archbishop.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 195. Clenches vpon Becket's Letter.

When hee toke his journey returnynge home it fortuned so his father espyed hym commyng a far and anone moued with mercy and fatherlye pytye wente to mete hym.
Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, pt. ii. Ps. 143.

If any man be a most holy father, then hee doth most holily observe and keepe his fatherlinesse, and if he be a naughty and wicked father, then doth he most wickedly keepe the same.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 564. Articles, &c. against Stephen Paleta.

Rhescuporis was carried to Alexandria, and there going about to escape, or because it was so fathered on him, was killed.—Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 96.

Tha. What say you, Hermia? be aduis'd faire maide,
To you your father should be as a God;
One that compos'd your beauties; yea and one
To whom you are but as a forme in waxe
By him imprinted and within his power,
To leaue the figure, or disgurse it
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dreame, Act i. sc. 1

The first that there did greet my stranger soule,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwicke,
Who spake aloud: what scourge for periurie,
Can this darke monarchy afford false Clarence?
And so he vanish'd. Id. Rich III. Act i. sc. 4

But as for himselfe, seeing that his house grieued and mourned for the death of his brother Q. Fabius, and that the Commonwealth was half fatherlesse as it were, for the losse of a consull, he would not accept the lawrell so deformed and foully blemished, both with publike and private sorrow.
Holland. Livius, p. 76.

He cannot choose but take this seruice I haue done, fatherly.—Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc. 3.

Tiberius made an oration tending to the great commendation of his sonne; bicause he tendered his brother's children with a fatherly affection.—Greneway. Tacitus. Ann. p. 90.

Whereto thus Adam fatherly displeas'd.
O execrable son so to aspire
Above his brethren, to himself assuming Authoritie usurpt, from God not giv'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

In originall nounes adjective, or substantive, derived according to the rule of the writer of analogie, the accent is intreated to the first in fátherlinesse, mótherlinesse.
B. Jonson. English Grammar, b. i. c. 7.

Those heretics who fathered the Gospel and first Epistle, which we received as St. John's, upon Cerinthus, were by Epiphanus deservedly named Ἄλογοι, men in this void of all sense and reason.—Bp. Bull. Works, vol. ii. p. 142

The true rendering therefore of these words of the prophet, is, not the everlasting father, but the father or lord of the future everlasting age, the age of the Gospel; concerning which the apostle declares Heb. ii. 5. that to Christ only, and not to angels, hath God put in subjection this age to come
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 5.

The Catholic writers, both they that were before and they that were after the Council of Nice, have unanimously declared God the Father to be greater than the Son; even according to his divinity: yet this not by nature indeed, or by any essential perfection, which is in the Father, and is wanting in the Son but only by fatherhood, or his being the author and original, forasmuch as the son is from the father, not the father from the son —Bp. Bull. Life, by Nelson.

For why should he that's impotent
To judge, and fancy, and invent,
For that impediment be stopt
To own, and challenge, and adopt,
At least th' expos'd and fatherless
Poor orphans of the Pen and Press,
Whose parents are obscure or dead
Or in far countries born and bred.
Butler. Satire upon Plagiaries.

The latter part of my poem, which describes the fire, I owe, first to the piety and fatherly affection of our monarch to his suffering subjects: and, in the second place, to the courage, loyalty, and magnanimity of the city
Dryden. Letter to Sir R. Howard.

But yet, to do justice to these [Homer, Virgil, Horace] and the rest,
Of the poor Pagan Poets, it must be confest,
That time, and transcribing, and critical note
Have father'd much on them, which they never wrote.
Byron, Epistle 2.

In truth he [Languerre] was, says Vertue, a modest, unintriguing man, and, as his father in-law John Tijou said, God had made him a painter, and there left him.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

O reader! if thou doubtest of these things,
Ask the cries of the fatherless, they shall tell thee,
And the tears of the widow shall confirm their truth.
Dodsley. Epitaph on Queen Caroline.

FA'THOM, v. FA'THOM, n. or FA'DOM. FA'THOMABLE. FA'THOMLESS. } A. S. Fæthm; Dut. Vadem; Ger. Fadem; a measure of six feet. A. S. Fæthmian; Dut. Vademen, utraque manu extensa complecti, to embrace with each hand extended. Wachter derives from Ger. Fassen, capere, comprehendere, to take, hold or comprehend.

To comprehend or embrace, (met.) to comprehend, to conceive; and (from the noun, as a measure of depth) to dive to the bottom, discern, discover or ascertain, the depth; (met.) the meaning.

Thus running north-east by north, and north-east fiftie leagues, then we sounded, and had 160 fadomes whereby we thought to be farre from land, and perceiued that the land lay not as the globe made mention.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 236.

The temple after the China manner of building is most of timber, the walls of brick diuided into fiue ile̊s with rowes of pillars on both sides, which are of round timber as bigge as two men can fathome.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. iv. c. 19.

There is indeed such a depth in nature, that it is never like to be throughly fathomed: and such a darkness upon some of God's works, that they will not in this world be found out to perfection.—Glanvill, Ess. 4.

The Christian's best faculty is faith, his felicity therefore consists in those things which are not perceptible by sense, not fathomable by reason, but apprehensible by his faith, and is the evidence of things not seen either by the eye of sense or reason; and as his felicity, so is his life, spirituall.
Bp. Hall. Satan's Fiery Darts Quenched, Dec. 3.

——— Will you with counters summe
The past proportion of his infinite;
And buckle in a waste most fathomless
With spannes and inches so diminutive,
As feares and reasons.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 2.

But here lies the fathomless absurdity, that granting this for bodily defect, they will not grant it for any defect of the mind, any violation of religious or civil society.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Where fadom-line could neuer touch the ground.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 3.

The short reach of sense, and natural reason is not always able to fathom the contrivance, or to discern the rare and curious disposal of them, (the events and contingencies of life.)—South, vol. x. Ser. 5.

Sincere was Amri, and not only knew,
But Israel's sanctions into practice drew;
Our laws, that did a boundless ocean seem,
Were coasted all, and fathom'd all by him.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

They were rather willing to patch up a present difficulty, at any rate, than to meet it fairly, to fathom its depth, and to consider what was likely to be a solid and permanent means of remedying a real evil, and preventing its arising in future —Fox. Speech on the Affairs of Ireland, 1782.

Ocean exhibits, fathomless and broad,
Much of the pow'r and majesty of God.
Cowper. Retirement.

——— Even from out thy slime
The monsters of the deep are made; each zone
Obeys thee; thou goest forth, dread, fathomless, alone.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4.

FATI'DICAL. FATI'FEROUS. } Fr. Fatadic; Lat. Fatidicus; compounded of fatum, and dicere, or ferre, to tell or declare, to bring or bear fate or that which is fated. See FATE.

Declaring what is fated, ordained or determined.

And if it be true what the antients write of some trees, that they are fatidical, these come to foretel, at least wise to wish you, as the season invites me, a good new year.
Howell, b. iv. Let. 4.

FA'TIGATE, v. FA'TIGATE, adj. FATIGA'TION. FATI'GUE, v. FATI'GUE, n. } Lat. Fatigare, -atum, quasi fatim agere, sive agitare, atque ita ad lassitudinem perducere, to reduce to a state of weariness. Fatim, perhaps from fando, quasi copiam signet, quam difficile sit fari, (Vossius.)

Fatigate has given place to fatigue. "Fr. Fatiguer,—to weary, tire, trouble, cloy, overtoyl; to give no rest unto."

He, whiche should write the negligent losses, and the pollytyque gaynes, of euery citee fortresse and turrett, whyche were gotten and loste in these dayes, shoulde fatigate and weary the reader.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 12.

And Fabius, beinge payneful in pursuinge Anniball from place to place awaytynge to haue hym at aduauntage at the laste dyd so fatigate hym and his hoste, that thereby in conclusion his power mynyshed, and also the strength of the Carthaginenses, of whom he was generall capytayne.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 10.

The Athenienses, by feare beinge put from theyr accustomed accesse to their gouernours to require iustice, and therewith being fatigate as men oppressed with continuall iniurie, take to them a desperate courage, and in conclusion expelled out of the cytie all the said tyrates, and reduced it vnto his pristinate gouernance.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

For the poore and needy people beyng fatigate, and wery with the oppression of their new landlordes, rendered their townes before thei were of them required.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 35.

The earth alloweth him nothing, but at the price of his sweat or fatigation.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 20. s. 1.

Mahumete [the Second] leaueth no time vnspent, no diligence vnsought, but maketh all his power to Cyprus and Albanie, which hee after long fatigation of siege, at length ouercame and subdued.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 683.

And so the conqueror, fatigu'd in war,
With hot pursuit of enemies afar,
Reclines to drink the torrent gliding by,
Then lifts his looks to repossess the sky.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

One of the missionaries witnesses, that being himself so fatigued, that he could hardly sit on the horse, a mandarin gave him one of these; [the gin-seng;] upon eating half of it, in an hour's time he was not, in the least, sensible of any weariness.—Cambridge. The Scribleriad, (note 19.)

When at last he [Mr. Zincke] raised his price from twenty to thirty guineas, it was occasioned by his desire of lessening his fatigue, for no man, so superior in his profession, was less intoxicated with vanity.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 5.

FA'TUOUS. FATU'ITY. } Videtur fatuus a fando, id est, a vaticinando, (presaging) dictus, sed quia vates furore correpti vaticinarentur; inde pro vesanis sumi cœpit, (Vossius.)

The common word now, as applied to persons, is infatuated; bereft of reason, of common sense; foolish, imbecile.

And may the sun, that now begins t' appear
I' th' horison to usher in the year,
Melt all those fatuous vapours, whose false light
Purblinds the world, and leads them from the right.
Brome. Epistles. A New Year's Gift.

I'll ne'er admire
That fatuous fire
That is not what it seems. Id. The Politician.

Ideocy or fatuity à nativitate, vel dementia naturalis, is such a one as described by Fitzherbert, who knows not to tell twenty shillings, nor knows his own age, or who was his father.—Hale. Pleas of the Crown.

FAVA'GINOUS. Formed upon the Lat. Favus, a honey-comb.

Formed like a honey-comb.

A like ordination there is in the favaginous sockets, and lozenge seeds of the noble flower of the sunne.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

FA'UCET. Fr. Fausset, quasi faucis obturamentum, the stop of the mouth, (Minshew.)

But nature has so placed the dug, that as it endeth one way in a spongeous kind of flesh full of small pipes, and made of purpose to transmit the milk, and let it distill gently by many little pores and secret passages, so it yieldeth a nipple in manner of a faucet, very fit and ready for the little babe's mouth.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 181.

FA'UCHON. See FALCHION.

FA'VEL. A name given to yellow coloured horses, as bayard, blanchard, to bay or brown and grey. See CURRY.

Neither yet let any man curry fauell with him selfe after this wise; the faute is but light, the law is broken in nothing but in this parte.—Udal. James, c. 2.

FAUGH, or FOH. } Is the past part. of the A. S. verb Fian, to hate; and means (any thing) hated, (Tooke, ii. 176.)

Get. An emperour's cabinet?
Fough, I have known a charnel-house smell sweeter.
If emperour's flesh have this savour, what will mine do,
When I am rotten!—Beaum. & Fletch. Prophetess, Act ii. sc. 2.

FAVI'LLOUS. Lat. Favilla, bright or hot embers, or ashes; from Gr. Φαω, sive Œolice φαυω, luceo,—lucere, to shine.

Of or pertaining to embers or ashes.

The fungous parcels about the wicks of candles onely signifieth a moist and pluvious ayr about them, hindering the evolation of the light and favillous particles: whereupon they are forced to settle upon the snuff.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 22.

FAULT, v. FAULT, n. FA'ULTER, n. FA'ULTFUL. FA'ULTY. FA'ULTILY. FA'ULTINESS. FA'ULTLESS. } Fr. Faute; It. Fallo; Sp. Falta; from the Lat. Fallere, to deceive; that into which any one is deceived or beguiled; and thus—

An error, a mistake; an offence, trespass or transgression; a failure; defect or deficiency; a want. And—

To fault; to be in error or mistake; also, to accuse of being in error or mistake; to lay an error or mistake, offence or transgression, to the charge of another.

O Deuel, said the king, this is a folled man,
When he with trechettyng bi nyght away so ran.
Thei red him alle a mysse, that conseil gaf therto.
R. Brunne, p. 164.

And to the tree she goth ful hastily,
And on this faucon loketh pitously,
And held hire lap abrode, for well she wist
The faucon muste fallen from the twist
Whan that she swouned next, for faute of blood.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,757.

He that faulteth, faulteth against God's ordinaunce, who hath forbidden all faultes, and therefore ought againe to be punished by God's ordinaunce, who is the reformer of faultes, for he sayeth, leaue the punishment to mee, and I will reuenge them.—Sir J. Cheke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Knowledge your faultes one to another: and praye one for another, that ye may be healed.—Bible, 1551. James, c. 5.

Unto him that is able to keep you, that ye fall not, & to present you faultles before the presence of hys glory we loye, that is to saye to God our Saviour, whyche onely is wyse, be glorye, maiestye, dominion, and power, nowe and for euer —Id. Ib. Sayncte Judas, c. 1.

For a plaine superstition is it, to make Angels equal with Christ. And a faultie humbleness it is, through Angels to loke for that whiche should of Christ himselfe be asked, or at the least wise through Christ of the Father.
Udal. Colossians, c. 2.

O how sorowfull am I, for in all these am I faultie.
Golden Boke, Let. 6.

Fenner an Englishman's book, which boastingly and stately enough bore the title of Theologia Sacra, which by stealth and very faultily, came out here first, was not long after printed again by them, [of Geneva,] although it were the same crumb of discipline with Travers's, and stuffed with infinite heterodox doctrine and errors.
Strype. Life of Whitgift, vol ii. p. 166. Whitgift to Beza.

Lamachus rebuked and checked a certaine captaine of footmen, for some fault committed in his charge; and when the other said for himselfe; That he would do no more so; he replied againe: Yea, but you must not fault twise in warre.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 345.

Her scorn and pride had almost lost her life;
A maid so faulted seldom proves good wife.
Mackin. The Dumb Knight, Act iii. sc. 1.

If we can be good with pleasure, hee grudgeth not our joy; if not, it is best to stint ourselves: not for that these comforts are not good, but because our hearts are evill: faulting not their nature, but our use and corruption.
Bp. Hall. Holy Observations, § 13.

Leost. 'Tis my fault.
Distrust of others springs, Timagoras,
From diffidence in ourselves. but I will strive,
With the assurance of my worth and merits,
To kill this monster, Jealousy.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act v. sc. 1.

If justice said, that iudgement was but death
With my sweete words, I could the king perswade,
And make him pause, and take therein a breath
Till I with suite, the faultors peace had made.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 499.

So fares it with this faultful lord of Rome.
Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

And so long as it may bee encreased, surely that which is lesse than it ought, is faulty, from which faultinesse it must needes follow, that there is no just man upon earth which doth good, and sinneth not, and thence in God's sight shall none living be justified.—Bp. Hall. The Old Religion.

——— But faulty men use oftentimes
To attribute their folly vnto fate,
And lay on heaven the guilt of their own crimes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

His song was all a lamentable lay
Of great unkindnesse, and of usage hard,
Of Cynthia the ladie of the sea,
Which from her presence faultlesse him debard.
Id. Colin Clout's come home againe.

And correspondence ev'ry way the same,
That no fault finding eye did ever blame.
Davies. On Dancing.

And verily it is a great comfort to us that though there be but few, there are some chosen; especially considering that you and I also are as capable of being in the number of those few, as any other whatsoever, and it is our own faults if we be not.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 90.

O Nature! frail and faulty in thy frame,
Fomenting wishes, Honour must condemn;
Or O! too rigid Honour thus to bind,
When Nature prompts, and when desire is kind.
Lansdown. The British Enchantress, Act v. sc. 1.

He [King Charles II.] said she [the Queen] was a weak woman, and had some disagreeable humours, but was not capable of a wicked thing: and considering his faultiness towards her in other things, he thought it a horrid thing to abandon her.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1678.

Nor is the People's judgment always true;
The most may err, as grossly as the few,
And faultless Kings run down by common cry,
For vice, oppression, and for tyranny
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

He who is gratified with that which is faulty in works of art, is a man of bad taste: and he who is pleased or displeased, according to the degree of excellence or faultiness, is a man of good taste.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 11.

For who is there among the sons of men that can pretend, on every occasion, throughout his own life, to have preserved a faultless conduct.—Blair, vol. v. Ser. 13.

FAUN. } Dii agrorum silvarumque; Gods
FA'UNIST. } of the fields and woods; so called from Faunus, an ancient King of Italy.
Faunist,—generally—a naturalist.

The Satyrs, and the Fawns, by Dian set to keep,
Rough hills and forest holts were sadly seen to weep,
When thy high-palmed harts, the sport of bows and hounds,
By gripple borderers' hands were banished thy grounds.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

The God [Bacchus,] returning ere they [the vines] dy'd,
"Ah! see my jolly fawns," he cry'd,
The leaves but hardly born are red,
And the bare arms for pity spread.—Parnell. Bacchus.

The southern parts of Europe, which may be supposed to receive during winter, many of our land birds, have as yet produced no faunist to assist the inquiries of the naturalists, which must account for the imperfect knowledge we have of the retreat of many of our birds.
Barrington. On the Migration of Birds.

FA'VOUR, v.
FA'VOUR, n.
FA'VOURABLE.
FA'VOURABLENESS.
FA'VOURABLY.
FA'VOUREDLY.
FA'VOURER.
FA'VOURITE, n.
FA'VOURITE, adj.
FA'VOURITISM.
FA'VOURIZE.
FA'VOURLESS.
FA'UTOR.
FA'UTRESS.

Fr. Favoriser; It. Favorire; Sp. Favorecer; Lat. Favere, from the Gr. Φαω, (q.d.) cupio fari in gratiam alicujus. See Vossius, and Lennep.

To bear good will to or towards; to will, wish or desire, the interests or advantages; to aid or assist with service or support, or protection; to further, promote or advance the interests or advantages; to countenance or protect.

A favour is applied to the colours, the badge of distinction worn by the party favoured. And, to favour,—

To follow the party, wear the colours or badge; and thus, to imitate or resemble the colour, hue, complexion, feature, countenance, and other qualities or qualifications; and, generally, to resemble. And—

Well or ill favoured; well or ill complexioned, countenanced, qualified.

The pape sauh out of coure the wikkedness of Jon,
Him & his faulours he cursed euerilkon,
& enterdited this lond. R. Brunne, p. 209.

Ther hue is wel wyth eny kynge, wo is the reome
For hue is faverable to fals. that defouleth treuthe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 47.

While fortune vnfaithfull, favoured me with light goods, that sorowful houre, that is to saie, the death, had almost drent mine hedde.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And for they seigh, he was a semely knight,
Well favoured in euery man's sight.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

But natheless the lacke of her [Fortune] favour
He may not doe me sing though that I die.
Chaucer. Balade of the Village.

The whiche our olde mother is
The erthe, doth that and this
Receyueth, and aliche deuoureth,
That she to nouther part fauoureth.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The God of loue is fauourable
To hem, that ben of loue stable. Id. Ib. b. iv.

—— But fortune is more
Unto that one parte fauourable. Id. Ib. b. v.

And as the common people regardeth more fauour, than iustice, suche officers are most fauoured, to whom the princes doth most incline. All this we saie, to shew, howe that in the time of this good emperour, wise men were fauoured.
Golden Boke, c. 4.

Whan the Kyng of Nauerr knewe the trouth of the dethe of the prouost, his great frede, and of other of his sect, he was sore displeased, bicause the prouost had ben euer to hym right fauourable.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. i. c. 188.

But anon after, he returning to hys disciples, aduised and exhorted them to a more larger fauourablenesse, that thei shoulde not onely not murmour against the goodnesse of God, but also thei shulde by al meanes and waies possible, folow the same goodness of God on their own behalfes.
Udal. Luke, c. 16.

Which request being verye agreeable to ye quietness & tranquilitee of his realme, & especially at yt time, he dyd fauourably graunt & benygnly assent vnto.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 13.

He brought in men of arma to defend his cause, the monkes laide about the like prety men, with stoles, pottes, and candleatickes, till the warriours heades were wel fauerdly broken.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

I left a certain letter behind me which was read in the church of Bethleem, the which letter my aduersaries haue very euil faueredly translated and sinisterly expounded.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 577. Letters of John Huss.

For of fence, almost in everye towne, there is not onely maisters to teach it, with his provosters, ushers, scholers, and other names of arte and schole, but there hath not fayled also, which hath diligentlye and favouredlye written it, and is set oute in printe, that euerye man maye reade it.
Ascham. Toxophilus.

Therefore we praye you for the honnour and reuerence of the Goddes, whych were then fauourers of oure societye and felishipp, and in remembrance of all the seruices and meritte towardes all the Grekes: that you wylle appease and mytygate youre hartes towardes us.
Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 85.

And after was the saydo Frenshe kynge hadde vnto a place called Sauoy, whiche thenne was a pleasaunt palays and fayre lodgynge, belongyng that tyme vnto the Duke of Lancastre, and after brent and dystroyed by Jak Strawe and his fautours.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1356.

——— Though, of all men,
He hated you, Leosthenes, as his rival,
So high yet he prized my content, that, knowing
You were a man I favour'd, he disdain'd not,
Against himself, to serue you.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act iv. sc. 3.

Great things, and full of wonder in our eares,
Far differing from this world, thou hast reveal'd,
Divine interpreter, by favour sent
Down from the Empyrean to forwarne
Us timely of what might else have bin our loss,
Unknown, which human knowledge could not reach.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

Cym. I haue surely seene him,
His fauour is familiar to me: boy,
Thou hast look'd thyselfe into my grace,
And art mine owne.—Shakespeare. Cymbel. Act. v. sc. 5.

Her. There's some ill planet raignes:
I must be patient, till the heauens looke
With an aspect more fauourable.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 1.

We (having such abundant securitie of the partialitie of divine providence) ought to rest persuaded of its favourableness, ev'n in all those encounters which seem the most irreconcileable to our sense.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 4.

If any seemed either in point of religion or morality to be better than others, such persons were by the favourers of episcopacy termed Puritans.
Milton. Defence of the People of England.

For, look how many favourites ye have ben, following and courting one patrone, so many shalle ye now be opposed to one enemie.—Holland. Livie, p. 228.

——— Revenge at first thought sweet,
Bitter ere long back on itself recoiles;
Let it; I reck not, so it light well aim'd,
Since higher I fall short, on him who next
Provokes my envy, this new favorite
Of heaven. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Yea, and he [Socrates] pierced deeper into the souls and hearts of his hearers, by how much he seemed to seek out the truth in common, and neuer to favorize and maintain any opinion of his own.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 833.

There chaunced to bee one who perceiving him comming betweene and inclining to favorize one part above the other; rayled bitterly at him.—Id. Suetonius, p. 93.

Sith of that Goddesse I have sought the sight,
Yet no where can her find: such happinesse
Heven doth to me envy and fortune favourisse.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

For when that men of merit go ungrac'd,
And by her fautors ignorance held in,
And parasites in good men's rooms are plac'd
Only to soothe the highest in their sin:
From those whose skill and knowledge is debas'd,
There many strange enormities begin.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iv.

——— In the while,
Take from their strength some one or twaine or more
Of the maine fautors. B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii.

Thou, thou, the fautresse of the learned well;
Thou nursing mother of God's Israel;
Thou, for whose loving truth the heaven raines
Sweet mel and manna on our flowery plaines.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

When she [Queen Elizabeth] was enlarged and dismissed home, yet a guard was appointed over her at her own house, which were, Sir Thomas Pope and Sir George Gage; who were always spies upon her, and her family; and oftentimes her servants, whom she most favoured, were sent away from her.—Strype. Memorials. Mary I. an. 1553.

The Church, when it was first planted by Christ, and propagated by his Apostles, subsisted, as we know, and increased for near 300 years together without the assistance of the Civil Powers, which were generally so far from shewing it any favour, that they endeavoured all they could to extirpate and root it up.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. i. Ser. 24

He liv'd with all the pomp he could devise,
At tilts and tournaments obtain'd the prize;
But found no favour in his lady's eyes;
Relentless as a rock, the lofty maid,
Turn'd all to poyson that he did or said.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria

The violent on both sides will condemn the character of Absalom, as either too favourably or too hardly drawn.
Id. Absalom & Achitopel. To the Reader.

The comparison betwixt Horace and Juvenal is more difficult; because their forces were more equal. A dispute has always been, and ever will continue, betwixt the favourers of the two Poets.
Id. On the Origin and Progress of Satire.

But he that for your sakes could part with such a brother and such a friend, you may be sure hath now no favourite but his people.
Parliamentary Hist. 30 Charles II. an. 1678-9.

They were made to swear, that they should discover all whom they knew to hold these errors, or who were suspected of them or did keep any private conventicles, or were fautors, or comforters of them that published such doctrines.—Burnet. Hist. of the Refor. vol. i. b. i. an. 1511.

——— Confess that beauty best is taught,
By those, the favor'd few, whom heav'n has lent
The power to seize, select, and reunite
Her loveliest features, and of these to form
One archetype complete of sovereign grace
Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

He [Neckar] is conscious, that the sense of mankind is so clear and decided in favour of œconomy, and of the weight and value of its resources, that he turns himself to every species of fraud and artifice, to obtain the mere reputation of it.—Burke. Speech on Œconomical Reform.

Without it [sincerity] his pretensions were as vain,
As having it he deems the world a disdain;
The great defect would cost him not alone
Men's favourable judgment, but his own.
Cowper. Conversation.

Probably your thoughts have been all along anticipating a consideration with which my mind is impressed more than I can express, I mean the consideration of the favourableness of the present times to all exertions in the cause of liberty.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

Perhaps had he [George I.] lived longer, he would have judged more favourably of his situation; and experienced that to be truly a British King is in fact to be the greatest monarch in Europe.—Maty. Memoirs of Lord Chesterfield.

Hence ev'ry state, to one lov'd blessing prone,
Conforms and models life to that alone:
Each to the fav'rite happiness attends,
And spurns the plan that aims at other ends;
Till carried to excess in each domain,
This fav'rite good begets peculiar pain.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

And, O, if ought thy Poet can pretend
Beyond his fav'rite wish to call thee friend,
Be it that here his tuneful toil has drest
The Muse of Fresnoy in a modern vest.
Mason. To Sir Joshua Reynolds.

It has been remarked, that there is no Prince so bad, whose favourites and ministers are not worse
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

It is this unnatural infusion of a system of favouritism into a government which in a great part of its constitution is popular, that has raised the present ferment in the nation.
Id. On the Present Discontents.

FA'USEN. A very large fish of the eel kind. Skinner says, "I know not whether from the Lat. Falx, (q.d.) falcinus, because in its length and frequent bending it so far resembles a falx or hooked cutter."

Thus pluckt he from the shore his lances, and left the waues to wash
The waue sprung entrailes, about which, fausens and other fish
Did shole, to nibble of the fat, which his sweet kidneys hid. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

FAWE, i. e. fain; glad, (qv.)

I governed hem so wel after my lawe,
That eche of hem ful blisful was and fawe
To bringen me gay thinges fro the feyre.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 582.

FAWN, v. FAWN, n. FA'WNING, n. FA'WNER. FA'WNINGLY. } Minshew says, perhaps from Gr. Φαεω, to speak, to say. Skinner,—from A.S. Fandian, to try; His Vir Rev. from Eng. Fain, glad; (Quia, sc. Blandientes solent præ se ferre alacritatem.) And it is perhaps from the same source as fain, i. e. the A.S. Fægn-ian, gaudere, lætari, to be glad, to rejoice, to fain.

To show or manifest signs of pleasure, joy or gladness, of gratitude or fondness; and thus, to blandish, to cringe, to court or sue flatteringly, servilely; to sue for kindness, to subserve.

And woneden in wildernesse a mong wilde beastes
Ac dorst no beste byten hem, by daye ne by nyghte,
Bote myldeliche whan thei metten maden louh chere
And feyre by fore the men. fawnede whith the tayles.
Piers Ploughman, p. 286.

And as I went there came by me
A whelp that fawned me as I stood
That had yfolowed, and coud no good
It cam and crept to me as lowe
Right as it had me yknow
Held down his heed, and loyned his eares
And laid all smothe downe his heeres.—Chaucer. Dreame.

There is no good for to be done,
whilste we are lyuyng here:
Excepte we lye, fawne, flatter, face,
cap, kneele, ducke, crouche, smile, flere.
Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 9.

Wee must be ware that we open not our eares to flatterers, nor suffer ourselues to be wonne or ouercõmed with fawning or humble behauiour of others toward vs.
Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 67.

Instead thereof he kist her wearie feet,
And lickt her lilly hands with fawning tong;
As he her wronged innocence did weet.
O how can beautie maister the most strong.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

Hee boulder now, uncall'd before her stood
But as in gaze admiring. oft he bowd
His turret crest, and sleek enamel'd neck,
Fawning, and lick'd the ground whereon she trod.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Too like that pretty child is childish Love
That when in anger he is wrong'd, or beat,
Will rave and chide, and every passion prove,
But soon to smiles and fawns turns all his heat,
And prays, and swears he never more will do it.
P. Fletcher. Boethius, b. iii.

Cæs. Thanks, Horace, for thy free, and wholesome sharpneese.
Which pleaseth Cæsar more, than servile fawnes.
A flatter'd Prince soone turnes the Prince of Fools.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 1.

Our race is then restles, our sleeping vnsounde;
Our waking is warfare, our walking hath woe,
Our talking is trustles, our cares do abound,
Our faunes deemd faithfull, and friendshippe a foe.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 85.

With flattering wordes he sweetly wooed her,
And offered faire guiftes t' allure her sight;
But she both offers and the offerer
Despyde, and all the fawning of the flatterer.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

All the cittie besides was jolous, the dictator [alone] gave no credit either to the bruit that was blased, or to the letters; saying withall, that if it were true, yet he feared more the fawning than frowning of fortune.—Holland. Livie, p. 447.

A woman scorn'd, with ease I'll work to vengeance;
With humble, fawning, wise, obsequious arts,
I'll rule the whirl and transport of her soul;
Then, what her reason hates, her rage may act.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus.

As he doth not affect any poor base ends, so he will not defile his fair intentions by sordid means of compassing them; such as are illusive simulations and subtilolous artifices, and servile crouchings and fawnings, and the like.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

He that fawningly enticed the soul to sin, will now as bitterly upbraid it for having sinned.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

In Bishop Gardiner he supported the insolent dignity of a persecutor; and, compleatly a priest, shifted it in an instant to the fawning insincerity of a slave, as soon as Henry frowned.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

FAWN, v. } Fr. Faon, fan, from infans, (Me-FAWN, n. } nage.)

"Fr. Fan,—a fawn or hind-calf; the young one of any such beast: as also, of an elephant."

To fawn,—to bring forth a fawn.

And many an hart, and many an hinde
Was both before me and behind,
Of fawnes, sowers, buckes, does
Was full the wodde, and many roes.—Chaucer. Dreame.

The dow lacking her fawne: the hind her calfe, braie no longer time after their losse, but seeing their lacke to be without remedy, they cease their sorow within short space.
Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 78.

Knowest thou the time when yᵉ wylde goates brige their yonge amõg the stony rockes? or layest yᵉ wayte when the hyndes vse to fawne.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 39.

The cook, sir, is self-will'd, and will not learn
From my experience: there's a fawn brought in.
Massinger. A New Way to Pay Old Debts, Act iii. sc. 2.

Then as a tyger, who by chance hath spi'd
In some purlieu two gentle fawnes at play,
Straight couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground
Whence rushing he might surest seize them both
Grip't in each paw. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

She rais'd her voice on high, and sung so clear,
The fawns came scudding from the groves to hear,
And all the bending forest lent an ear.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

So with her young, amid the woodland shades,
A timorous hind the lion's court invades,
Leaves in that fatal lair the tender fawns,
Climbs the green cliff, or feeds the flowery lawns.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

The Nymphs, that o'er the mountain's brow
Pursue the lightly-bounding roe,
Or chase the flying fawn.—Fawkes. Ode to Summer.

FA'XED. A.S. Feax, the hair of the head; a bush of hair, the locks, (Somner.)

They [the old English] could call a comet, a faxed starre, which is all one with stella crinita, or cometa.
Camden. Remaines. The Languages.

FAY, i. e. faith, by my faith, by my troth or truth.

And with hire hed she writhed fast away,
And sayde; I wol not kisse thee by my fay.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3284.

As God me helpe, I laugh whan that I thinke,
How pitously a night I made hem swinke,
But by my fay, I tolde of it no store.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5785.

I set hem so a-werke by my fay,
That many a night they songen wa la wa.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5797.

Beg. These fifteene yeares, by my fay, a goodly nap.
But did I never speake of all that time.
Shakespeare. Taming of a Shrew, Ind. 2.

FAY. See FAIRY.

And thou, Nymphidia, gentle fay,
Which meeting me upon the way,
These secrets didst to me bewray
Which now I am in telling.—Drayton. Nymphidia.

——— They said that all the field
No other flowre did for that purpose yeeld;
But quoth a nimble fay that by did stand.
If you could give 't the colour of yond hand.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

I thank the wise Silenus, for his prayse,
Stand forth, bright Fayes, and Elves, and tune your layes
Unto his name then let your nimble feet
Tread subtill circles, that may alwayes meet
In point to him.—B. Jonson. Oberon the Fairy Prince.

FEAGUE. Skinner says, Fease or feag, flagellare, virgis cædere, to whip, to beat with rods,—from Teut. Fegen, to sweep, to cleanse; or from ficken, to rub. Feige, carpere, obtrectare, also from Ger. Fegen. See FAG.

And eke my feare is well the lasse,
That none enuie shall compasse,
Without a reasonable wite
To feige and blame that I write.—Gower. To the Reder.

When a knotty point comes I lay my head close to it, with a snuff-box in my hand; and then I feague it away i'faith.
Duke of Buckingham. The Rehearsal.

FE'ALTY. Fr. Feauté; It. Fedeltá; Sp. Fieldad; Lat. Fidelitas, fidelis, fides, faith. Fideles homines, (as Skinner observes,) pro servis, occurs as early as Ælius Lampridius, in vitâ Alexandri Severi Augusti. Per fideles homines suos. See also Du Cange.

Fidelity or faithfulness. See the quotation from Blackstone.

Whan thise Bretons tuo were fled out of this lond,
Ine toke his feaute of alle that lond helde.
R. Brunne, p. 3.

For the Emperour vowed to the Pope not an oath of alleageance and fealtye, but of defendinge the Christian fayth, for as much as the taking of this oath maketh not greater dignitye in temporall thinges.
Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 135.

And whē he was comen to the citie of Reynes, thyder came vnto hym many nobles, as well out of Burgoyne as out of other partyes of Fraunce & dyd vnto hym feauty & homage.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 131.

Henry deceasing, Maude the empresse his right heire (to whom the prelates and nobles had sworne fealty in her father's life time) was put by the crowne by the prelates and barons; who thought it basenesse for so many and great peers to be subject to a woman, and that they were freed of their oath by her marrying out of the realme, without their consents.—Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. i. p. 35.

——— In your Court
Suitors voluptuous swarm; with amorous wiles
Studious to win your consort, and seduce
Her from chaste fealty to joys impure,
In bridal pomp; vain efforts!
Fenton. Homer Imitated. Odyssey, b. ii.

There is a natural allegiance and fealty due to this domineering paramount evil, [avarice] from all the vassal vices, which acknowledge its superiority, and readily militate under its banners; and it is under that discipline alone that avarice is able to spread to any considerable extent, or to render itself a general publick mischief.
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

The condition annexed to them (fees or fiefs) was that the possessor should do service faithfully, both at home and in the wars, to him by whom they were given; for which purpose he took the juramentum fidelitatis, or oath of fealty.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4.

FEAR, v. FEAR, n. FE'ARER. FE'ARFUL. FE'ARFULLY. FE'ARFULNESS. FE'ARLESS. FE'ARLESSLY. FE'ARLESSNESS. } A. S. Fær-an,—to fear, to terrify or make afraid, (Somner.) Sw. Fara; Dut. Vaeren; Ger. Faren, timere, metuere, terrere, facere ut metuat; to fear or cause to fear. The common etymology is the Lat. Vereor. (See APPEARD.) But the Sw. Fara; Dut. Vaeren; Ger. Faren; and A.S. Faran, signify, to go, to go away; and hence, probably, to run or cause to run away: and from the motion extended to the feeling which caused it, i. e. to feel or cause the feeling of, dread or terror.

To flee, or cause to flee, or escape or avoid, from, (sc.) any ill or risk of ill; to have or cause, sensations of terror, of dread, of timorousness, of awe; to scare, to terrify or affright, to dread; to affray or be afraid. See the second quotation from Cogan.

Fearful,—full of fear, full of that which causes fear; dreadful; also of the sense or feeling of fear; timid, cowardly.

Heo ferden rigt as gydie men, myd wam no red nas.
R. Gloucester, p. 166.

The hors neyde & lepte, that yt was gret fere.—Id. p. 459.

Some with grete processyon in gret anguysse and fere.
Wepynde byuore the kyng, and her relykes myd hem bere.
Id. p. 177.

Malcolme, whan he it herd, fled for ferd.
R. Brunne, p. 88.

Ther speres poynt ouer poynt, so sare and so thikke,
& fast togidere joynt, to se it was ferlike. Id. p. 305.

For Godes blesside body hit bar for our bote.
And hit a fereth the feonde.—Piers Ploughman, p. 365.

Ran cow and calf, and eke the veray hogges
So fered were for berking of the dogges,
And shouting of the men and women eke,
They ronnen so, hem thought hir hertes breke.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,392.

Then was I ferd, for that was min office.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,392.

Unmighty is that wretchedness, which is entred by the ferdfull wenyng of the wretche himself.
Chaucer. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

And eke so loude his belle is ronge,
That of the noyse, and of the soune
Men feren hym in all the towne
Well more than thei done of thonder.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And then it [air] breketh the cloudes all,
That whiche of so great noyse craken,
That thei the fearefull thonder maken.—Id. Ib.

Lyke as the good husbande, whan he hath sowen his grounde, setteth vp cloughtes or thredes, which some call shailes, some biechars, or other lyke showes, to feare away byrdes, whiche he foreseeth redye to deuoure and hurte his corne.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 23.

And though none of the wonders feared them, yet were they afrayd at the beastes which came vpon them, and at the hyssinge of the serpentes.
Bible, 1551. Apocrypha. The Boke of Wisdome.

Therefore Jesus minding to make them bolde and voide of all feare, and also conquerours agaynste al assaultes of the moste sore and vehement troubles, rebuking theyr greate feare: Why feare ye [quoth he] ye menne of lytel fayth.—Udal. Matthew, c. 8.

The verie houre and instant that they should goe forward with their businesse; a wonderfull and terrible earthquake fell throughout all England: whereupon diuers of the suffraganes being feared, by the strange and wonderfull demonstration, doubting what it should mean, thought it good to leaue off from their determinate purpose.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 401. Wiclif's Articles Condemned.

And at the last some that would not obey, hee put to death, to feare the rest withall.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 11.

Fellowship and Friendships heat
With thy fearers all I hold
Such as hold thy biddings best.—Sidney, Ps. 119. H.

And you his fearers, all the rest
The same to say with me be prest.—Id. Ps. 118.

Suche of them as wold seme to be lesse fearefull, sayd they feared not the enemy, but the narrownes of the wais, and the greatnes of the woods that laye betwene them and Ariouistus; or else they cast doubts howe theyr grayne should be commodiously conueyed after theym.
Golding. Cæsar, fol. 30.

When the king vnderstoode that they made towardes him with such speede, he fled for feare, and leauing behinde him his hoste and all his furniture for the warres, he fearefullye retyred vnto his kingedome.—Id. Justine, fol. 10.

Fearfulnes is nothing els, but a declarynge that a man seketh helpe and defence, to answere for him selfe.
Bible, 1551. The Book of Wisdome, c. 17.

The next morning, thinking to fear him, because he had never seen elephant before, Pyrrus commanded his men that when they saw Fabricius and him talking together, they should bring one of his greatest elephants, and set him hard by them, behind a hanging: which being done, at a certain sign by Pyrrus given, suddenly the hanging was pulled back, and the elephant with his trunk was over Fabricius's head, and gave a terrible and fearful cry.
North. Plutarch, p. 340.

Ant. Thou canst not feare vs Pompey with thy sailes.
Weele speake with thee at sea.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 6.

Ang. We must make a scar-crow of the Law,
Setting it vp to feare the birds of prey,
And let it keepe one shape, till custome make it
Their pearch, and not their terrour.
Id. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 1.

Pet. Now for my life Hortentio feares his widow.
Wid. Then neuer trust me if I be afeard.
Pet. You are verie sencible, and yet you misse my sence:
I meane Hortentio is afeard of you.
Id. Taming of the Shrew, Act v. sc. 2.

O coward conscience! how dost thou afflict me!
The lights burn blew. Is it not dead midnight?
Cold fearefull drops stand on my trembling flesh.
What! do I fear myselfe? There's none else by.
Id. Rich. III. Act v. sc. 3.

Malbecco seeing them resolved in deed
To flame the gates, and hearing them to call
For fire in earnest, ran with fearfull speed,
And, to them calling from the castle wall,
Besought them humbly him to beare withall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 9.

The image of a wicked heynous fault
Liues in his eye. that close aspect of his
Does shew the mood of a much troubled breast,
And I do feare fully beleeue 'tis done
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.
Shakespeare. King John, Act iv sc. 2.

He knew great mindes disorder'd by mistake,
Defend, thro' pride, the errours they repent:
And with a lover's fearfulness he spake
Thus humbly, that extremes he might prevent.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 1.

A gay matter indeed, and a proper device to salve their cowardice, under a colour of civile dissention to cloke their fearfulnesse.—Holland. Livie, p. 74.

Then Talus forth issuing from his tent
Unto the wall his way did feareless take
To weeten what that trumpet's sounding ment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

Frequence of conversation gives us freedome of accesse to God; and makes us poure out our hearts to him as fully and as fearelesly as to our friends.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of the Calling of Moses.

The best of the heathen emperours [that was honoured with the title of piety] lustly magnified that courage of Christians which made them insult over their tormenters, and by their feerelesness of earthquakes, and deaths, argued the truth of their religion.—Id. Heaven upon Earth, s. 3.

Now glut yourselves with prey; let not the night,
Nor those thick woods, give sanctuary to
The fear-struck hares, our enemies.
Massinger. The Bashful Lover, Act ii. sc. 5.

Long mute he stood, and leaning on his staff,
His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh;
Then would have spoke, but by his glimmering sense
First found his want of words, and fear'd offence.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore:
Or in dark churches walk among the dead;
They wake with horrour, and dare sleep no more.
Id. Annus Mirabilis.

But it seems he did it covertly and fearfully, and was afterwards drawn off, either by the love of the world or the fears of the cross: of which it appears Bucer had then some apprehensions, though he expressed them very modestly.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1547.

All the various and vicious actions of men were overruled by his providence; the falseness of Judas, the fearfulness of Pilate, and the malice of the Jews were subservient to God's eternal design.—Bates. Harmony of the Divine Attrib. c. 13.

And like a lion, slumbering in the way,
Or sleep dissembling, while he waits his prey,
His fearless foes within his distance draws,
Constrains his roaring, and contracts his paws;
Till at the last, his time for fury found,
He shoots with sudden vengeance from the ground.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

To dare undauntedly to revile the Maker of all things, and show their fearlessness even of God himself, by openly trampling upon his commandments in their lives, and reproaching his name by vain oaths and profane speeches.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 51.

In most cases as soon as we cease to fear, we begin to hope; for there are few situations so completely dark and gloomy as to exclude every ray of consolatory hope.
Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. s 3.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
E'en at the sound himself had made.
Collins. The Passions.

Fear is a painful sensation, produced by the immediate apprehension of some impending evil.
Cogan. On the Passions, c. 2. s. 3.

Yet the disgraced religion, by courage and constancy in suffering, still kept its enemies anxious amidst all their success, and fearful amidst all their power, for what might be the final issue.
Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple.

With hasty step a figure outward past,
Then paus'd—and turn'd—and paus'd—'tis she at last!
No poniard in that hand—nor sign of ill—
"Thanks to that softning heart—she could not kill!"
Again he look'd, the wildness of her eye
Starts from the day abrupt and fearfully.
Byron. The Corsair, c. 3. s 9.

That religion, which renders void the first precept of my text, by taking away the fear of God, will always be for introducing a form of government which renders void the second, by taking away all honour from the king. And so, reciprocally, will an honourless king promote the worship of a fearless God.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 14.

In these circumstances they should still continue to trade cheerfully and fearlessly as before.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

This fearlessness of temper depends upon natural constitution as much as any quality we can possess, for where the animal system is strong and robust it is easily acquired, but when the nerves are weak and extremely sensible they fall presently into tremours that throw the mind off the hinges and cast a confusion over her.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 31.

Judging that we should soon come into cold weather, I ordered slops to be served to such as were in want; and gave to each man the fear-nought jacket and trowsers allowed them by the Admiralty.—Cook. Voyages, b. i. c. 2.

FE'ASIBLE, adj.
FE'ASIBLE, n.
FEASIBI'LITY.
FE'ASIBLENESS.

Feasable, from the Fr. Faisable, faisible,—which can or may be done;—from the verb Faire, facere, (q.d.) facibilis, (Skinner.)

That can or may be done, performed, or practised

Paul. What's your suit, sir?
Infor. 'Tis feasible: here are three arrant knaves
Discovered by my art.
Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act i. sc. 1.

So Charles VIII., King of France, finding the warre of Britaine (which afterwards was compounded by marriage) not so feasible, pursued his enterprise upon Naples, which he accomplisht with wonderful facility and felicity.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. ii. c. 12.

Hence it is, that we conclude many things within the list of impossibilities, which yet are easie feasibles.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

Whereby men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible as possibilities themselves.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 5.

An opinion of the facibleness or successfulness of the work being as necessary to found a purpose of undertaking it, as either the authority of commands, or the persuasiveness of promises, or pungency of menaces, or prospect of mischiefs upon neglect, can be imagined to be
Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 473

They discoursed of surprising the guards; and that the Duke, the Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armstrong (as he remembers) went one night to view the guards; and the next day at his house they said it was very feasible if they had strength to do it
State Trials. William Lord Russell, an. 1683.

Some discourse there was about the feasibleness of it, and several times by accident, in general discourse elsewhere, I have heard it mentioned as a thing might easily be done, but never consented to as fit to be done.—Id. Ib. p. 692.

Yet this did not hinder me from prosecuting a design, whose feasibility I considered.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 569.

Here is a principle of a nature, to the multitude, the most seductive, always existing before their eyes, as a thing feasible in practice.—Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs.

FEAST, v.
FEAST, n.
FE'ASTER
FE'ASTFUL.
FE'ASTING, n.

Fr. Fester, festoyer; It. Festare, festeggiare; Sp. Festear, festejar, from the Lat. Festum, and festum or festus dies, from the Gr. Ἑστιαν, i.e. festum diem agere; as when we celebrate with a banquet a natal or wedding day. The verb ἑστιαν, Vossius adds, is from ἑστια, which signifies as well the lares or hearth, as Vesta, foci vel ignis præses: and thus, ἑστιαν, is properly, to receive or entertain any one—convivio apud larem suum, i.e. in his house.

To receive or entertain with food or victuals in the house, at the table; to feed plenteously or lavishly, luxuriously; to banquet, to supply with plenty or abundance, with luxuries, with dainties.

Alle the noble men of this lond to the noble fest come,
And heore wyues & heore dogtren with hem mony nome.
R. Gloucester, p. 156.

Thulke festes he wolde holde so noblyche,
Wyth so grot prute & wast, & so rychelyche,
That wonder yt was wanene [whence] yt com.—Id. p. 376.

The baronage & the clergie were somond to Kyngeston,
Ther was fest holden, & gyuen him the croune.
R. Brunne, p. 28.

Lytel is he a lowed there fore among lordes of festes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 185.

But by the feeste day he was wont to leeve to hem oon of men boundun whome ever thei axiden.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 15.

At that feast Pylate was wonte to delyuer at their pleasure a prysoner: whome soeuer they would desyre.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

This Theseus, this duk, this worthy knight,
Whan he had brought hem into his citee,
And inned hem, everich at his degree,
He festeth hem.—Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2195.

Walter hire gladeth, and hire sorwe slaketh,
She riseth up abashed from hire trance,
And every wight hire joye and feste maketh
Til she hath caught agen hire countenance.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8985.

In suffisaunce, in blisse, and in singinge
This Troilus gan all his life to lede
He spendeth, iusteth, and maketh festinge.
Id. Troilus, b. iii.

He must han knowen love and his service,
And ben a festlich man, as fresh as May,
That shulde you devisen swiche array.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,595.

A great merualle it is for thy,
Howe that a maide woll lette
That she hir tyme ne besette,
To haste into that thilke feste, [of marriage]
Wherof the loue is all honeste.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And whan thei had ben well feested at Valencenes, than the Bysshoppe of Lyncolne, and part of his cõpany, went to the Duke of Brabant, who feasted them greatly, and agreed, and promysed to assayne ye Kyng of Englonde, and all his cõpany in his contrey.—Berners. Froin Cron. vol. i. c. 28.

Was not Chryste ones crucyfyed in his own person? & yet in a mystery (which in the remembraunce of his very passion) he is crucyfied for the people, not onely euery feaste of Easter, but euery daye.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 37.

This dood Jesus then at length taking vpon him to be a feaster & a feder of the bodies also, which came to fede the soules & to teache in dede his disciples that they should neuer lacke foode, which being giuen vnto the Ghospel, regarded litel their vitaile: took in his handes the fiue barley loaues, & the two fishes.—Udal. Matthew, c. 14.

In this yere also and vpon the feastfull day of Easter, fyll a chaũce in Lõdon, whiche, to the fere of all good Christen men, is necessary to be noted.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1417.

And they had pleasure and appetite in goodlye harnesse & great horses for war, more than in harlottes, and in feasting, banketting, or reuellyng
Udal Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 124.

Hope, the world's welcome, and his standing guest,
Fed by the rich, but feasted by the poor:
Hope, that did come in triumph to his breast,
He thus presents in boast to Ulfinore.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 2.

Lud was hardy, and bold in war, in peace a jolly feaster.
Milton. History of England, b. i.

The virgins also shall on feastfull days
Visit his tomb with flowers, only bewailing
His lot unfortunate in nuptial choice,
From whence captivity and loss of eyes.
Id. Samson Agonistes.

——— Therefore be sure
Thou, when the bridegroom with his feastful friends
Passes to bliss at the mid hour of night,
Hast gain'd thy entrance, virgin wise and pure.—Id. son 9.

——— Yeares write thee ag'd, yet thou,
Youthfull and green in will,
Putt'st in for handsome still,
And shameless dost intrude among
The sports and feastings of the young.
Cartwright. Horace, lib. iv. Ode 13.

They are hyred vnto feasts, whither they come prouided for what play shall be demanded, offering to that end their book of comedies to the feast-master, to chuse which he liketh; which the guests behold in their feasting-time with such pleasure, that they continue sometimes ten houres in feeding their eyes, and tastes, with one seruice after another in both kinds.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, c. 18. s. 5.

All eyes you draw, and with the eyes the heart;
Of your own pomp yourself the greatest part.
Loud shouts the nation's happiness proclaim,
And heaven this day is feasted with your name.
Dryden. To his Sacred Majesty.

There, my retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war and statesmen out of place.
There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl,
The feast of reason and the flow of soul.
Pope. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 1.

But vengeful Pallas, with preventing speed,
A feast proportion'd, to their crimes decreed;
A feast of death, the feasters doom'd to bleed.
Id. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxi.

So spoke the wretch, but, shunning farther fray,
Turn'd his proud step, and left them on their way,
Straight to the feastful palace he repair'd,
Familiar enter'd, and the banquet shar'd.—Id. Ib. b. xvii.

The jury finding the book (to the best of their skill and knowledge,) of no other tendency, but to encourage such as were virtuous to take upon them the government of the city of London, with good husbandry, and sober methods, as might neither dishonour God by excess in feastings, nor yet ruin their own families.—State Trials, an. 1680. Fran. Smith.

The league of mightiest nations, in those hours
When Venice was an envy, might abate,
But did not quench, her spirit—in her fate
All were enwrapp'd, the feasted monarchs knew
And loved their hostess, nor could learn to hate,
Although they humbled. Byron. Ode, s. 3.

Songs in strains of wisdom drest,
Great Saturnius to record,
And by each rejoicing guest
Sung at Hiero's feastful board.
West. Pindar. The First Olympic.

FEAT, v. FEAT, n. FEAT, adj. FE'ATLY. FE'ATOUS. FE'ATOUSLY. } Fr. Faict; Lat. Factum, any thing done, a deed. U'pon the Fr. part. Faict, done, made, framed, formed or fashioned, Shakespeare seems to have founded his verb to feat, to form or fashion. The same adjective, done, performed, achieved, finished, accomplished, (whence also the Fr. Faictis; neat, feat, comely, well made,) has also furnished us with the adjective feat; (q. d.) bien fait, bene factus; well done or made, fit. A feat,—

An act, a deed, an exploit, an achievement.

For Jamys the gentel. suggeth in hus bokes
That feith without fet. ye febelere than nouht
And ded as a dore nayle. Piers Ploukman, p. 22.

Not only this Grisildis thurgh hire wit
Coude all the fete of wifly homlinesse,
But eke whan that the cas required it,
The comune profit coude she redresse.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8305.

Ful fetis damosels two
Right yong, and full of semelyhede
In kirtels, and none other wede
And faire tressed euery tresse
Had mirth doen for his noblesse.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

She was not wont to great trauaill,
For whan she kempt was feteously
And well arraied and richely
Than had she doen all her lourne. Id. Ib.

Of shone and bootes, new and faire
Loke at the leat thou haue a paire,
And that they sitte so fetously
That these rude may vtterly
Merualle. Id. Ib.

None knewe better the feate howe to worke myschyfe than the Herodians.—Udal. Mark, c. 3.

He appeared to be a man of singular actiuitie, & no less skyll in feates of warre than in knowledge of philosophie.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 2.

For the labour and care of man can make nothing so proper and feacte as the prouidence of nature dooeth.
Udal. Matthew, c. 6.

A student at his boke so plast.
That welth he might haue wonne;
From boke to wife did flete in hast,
From welth to wo to runne.
Now who hath plaied a feater cast
Since iugling first begonne!
Vncertaine Auctors. A new Married Student.

As those that teache in schooles,
with buttred bread, or featuare knacks,
Will lewre the little fooles,
to learn a pace theyr A B C.—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 1.

——— [He] liu'd in Court
(Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lou'd,
A sample to the youngest, to th' more mature,
A glasse that feated them.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 1.

Madge. Nay, Sue has a hazel eye, I know Sue well, and by your leave, not so trim a body neither; this is a feat bodied thing I tell you.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Coxcomb, Act iii. sc. 1.

Thus have I made this wreath of mine,
And finished it featly.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 5.

Then they spake most properly and featly.
North. Plutarch, p. 44.

She wore a frock of frolick green
Might well become a maiden queen
Which seemly was to see;
A hood to that so neat and fine,
In colour like the columbine,
Ywrought full featously.—Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 4.

They haue also dancers on the rope, tumblers, and other featworkers.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, c. 18. s. 5.

This trophy from the Python won,
This robe, in which the deed was done,
These, Parnell, glorying in the feat,
Hung on these shelves, the Muses' seat.
Parnell. The Book-Worm.

So featly tripp'd the lightfoot Indies round,
The knights so nimbly o'er the greensward bound,
That scarce they bent the flowers, or touch'd the ground.
Pope. January & May.

Not victories won by Marlbro's sword,
Nor titles which these feats record,
Such glories o'er the dead d'fuse
As can the labours of the Muse.
Jenyns. Horace, b. iv. Ode 8. Imit.

Meantime some rude Arion's restless hand
Wakes the brisk harmony that sailors love;
A circle there of merry listeners stand,
Or to some well known measure featly move
Thoughtless, as if on shore they still were free to rove.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 2. s. 21.

FE'ATHER, v. FE'ATHER, n. FE'ATHERED. FE'ATHERLESS. FE'ATHERLY. FE'ATHERY. FE'ATHERINESS. } A. S. Fether; Dut. Veder; Ger. Feder; Sw. Fjaeder. Luke, xvi. 6, "Nim thine fethere;" Take thy caution. Accipe cautionem tuam. On which Somner remarks, that fethere does not signify cautio, but calamus. In the Gothic version it is bokos, thy book. The word is derived (Wachter) from the Gr. Πτερ-ον, a wing (from πτε-ειν, πετειν, volare, to fly.) And thus, a feather is that which fleeth. To feather,—to act with or upon the feathers.

To strip of, to clothe in, the feathers, with plumage; to dress or fit with, to move in, the feathers; to trim, to gather or collect them; and thus, (met.) to feather the nest; to gather or collect the means of warmth and comfort.

Ac for hus peyntede fetheres. the pokok his honourede.
Piers Ploukman, p. 239.

And ten broad arrowes held he there,
Of which fiue in his hond were
But they were shauen well and dight
Nocked and fethered aright.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And to the crowe he stert, and that anon
And pulled his white feathers everich on,
And made him blak, and raft him all his song
And eke his speche.—Id. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,253.

Lordes, sayd this frere, there was ones a fowle appered in this worlde without ony fethers; and when al other fowles knew yt he was borne, they came to se hym, bicause he was so fayre and pleasaunt to beholde.
Berners Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 42.

Then he cried them mercy, and sayd, that he wolde amende himselfe, and noo more be prowde; and so then agayne these gentyll byrdes had pyte on hym and fethered hym agayne.—Id. Ib.

When, as from snow-crown'd Skidaw's lofty cliffs
Some fleet-wing'd haggard, tow'rds her preying hour,
Amongst the teal and moor-bred mallard drives,
And th' air of all her feather'd flock doth scour.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

They stuck not to say, that the king cared not to plume his nobilitie and people, to feather himselfe.
Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 111.

What pity it is that those wise masters were not of the counsel of the Almighty, when he was pleased to give a being to his creature; they would surely haue devised to make a winged elephant, and a corpulent gnat: a feather'd man, and a speaking beast.—Bp. Hall, Sol. 21.

This very word of patterning or imitating, excludes Episcopacy from the solid and grave ethical law, and betrays it to be a mere child of ceremony, or likelier some misbegotten thing, that having pluckt the gay feathers of her obsolete bravery, to hide her own deformed barrenness, now vaunts and glories in her stolen plumes.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 3.

——— And Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude:
Where, with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings,
That in the various bustle of resort
Were all to ruffled, and sometimes impair'd.—Id. Comus.

Thus works the hand of nature in the feathery plantation about birds.—Brown. Cyrus Garden, c. 3.

Which seems to be some feathery particle of snow.
Id. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

So when the new-born Phœnix first is seen,
Her feather'd subjects all adore their queen,
And while she makes her progress through the east,
From every grove her numerous train's increas'd:
Each Poet of the air her glory sings,
And round him the pleas'd audience clap their wings.
Dryden. To the Duchess of York.

Dame Partlett was the Sovereign of his heart,
Ardent in love, outrageous in his play,
He feather'd her full twenty times a day.
Id. The Cock & the Fox.

I took you into my house, placed you next myself, and made you governante of my whole family. You have forgot this, have you, now you have feathered your nest?
Congreve. The Way of the World, Act v.

Belin. Ay, on my conscience, fat as a barndoor fowl; but so bedeck'd, you would have taken them for Friesland hens, with their feathers growing the wrong way.
Id. The Old Batchelor, Act iv.

Thither the household feathery people crowd,
The crested cock, with all his female train,
Pensive, and dripping. Thomson. Winter.

Our resolutions are light and feathery, soon scattered by a storm of fear: it is as dangerous to trust in a heart of flesh, as in an arm of flesh.
Bates. Spiritual Reflections Unfolded, c. 12.

And yet at the first encounter of a strong temptation, our resolutions may cool and faint, and our vows of obedience may vanish as the "morning dew before the heat of the sun;" there is such a levity and featherisness in our minds, such a mutability and inconstancy in our hearts.
Id. The Sure Trial of Uprightness.

From Eurus, foe to kitchen ground,
Fenc'd by a slope with bushes crown'd,
Fit dwelling for the feather'd throng,
Who pay their quit rents with a song.—Green. The Spleen.

The volunteers have cloaths as fine, feathers as high, music of as martial a character, decorations of all sorts as captivating and imposing, as those of the regular troops.
Windham. Speeches. Additional Force Bill, June 5, 1804.

——— At a word,
His feathery subjects in obedience flock
Around his feeding hand, who in return
Yield a delicious tribute to the board,
And o'er his couch their downy plumage spread.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 1.

FE'ATURE, s. FE'ATURED, adj. FE'ATURELESS. } Minshew says—Feature or making. Fr. Faicture; It. Fattura; Sp. Hechura; Lat. Factura, from Facere, to make, form or fashion. Applied to—

The form or fashion, the make, (sc.) of the body; of the face or countenance: (met.) of any subject of thought or speech.

Therto he was the semlieste man,
That is or was, sithen the world began;
What needeth it his feture to descrive?
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,070.

Of all her feitere he shall take hede,
His eyen with all her limmes fede.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

He made an image of entaile,
Liche to a woman in semblance,
Of feature, and of countenance,
So fayre yet neuer was figure,
Right as a liues creature
She seemeth. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

——— So without pere
Was of this mayden the feyture,
Wherof Phœbus out of measure
Hir loueth. Id. Ib. b. v.

This is a mightie people, well featured and without any grossenesse.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 427.

'Twas a child, that so did thrive
In grace and feature,
As heaven and nature seem'd to strive
Which own'd the creature.—B. Jonson, Epig. 120.

A man of goodly presence and well favoured, and comely shape and feature of bodie, his lims streight and proportionably compact.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 27.

Their clay well featur'd, their well temper'd mould
Ambitious mortals make their chief pretence
To be the objects of delighted sense.
Beaumont. Of the Miserable State of Man.

Let those whom nature hath not made for stone,
Harsh, featureless, and rude, barrenly perish.
Shakespeare, son. 11.

Words are but pictures, true or false design'd,
To draw the lines and features of the mind.
Butler. Satire upon Human Learning, pt. ii.

There Herbert sate—the love of human kind,
Pure light of truth, and temperance of mind,
In the free eye, the featur'd soul display'd,
Honour's strong beam, and mercy's melting shade.
Langhorne. The Country Justice, pt. i.

Her tow'ring domes let Richmond boast alone;
The sculptur'd statue and the breathing stone:
Alone distinguish'd on the plains of Stowe,
From Jones's hand the featur'd marble glow.
Id. Studley Park.

Yet oft with pain and fear have I beheld
A little, wayward, giddy levity
Show its capricious features in the midst
Of thy endearments, while the languid sigh,
And eye dissatisfy'd, would tell the wish
For courtly grandeur.
Mickle. The Siege of Marseilles, Act i. sc. 1.

Cold as the marble where his length was laid,
Pale as the beam that o'er his features play'd,
Was Lara stretch'd; his half-drawn sabre near,
Dropp'd it should seem in more than nature's fear.
Byron. Lara, c. 1. s. 13.

FEBRI'FICK. FE'BRIFUGE. FEBRIFU'GAL. FE'BRILE. } Fr. Febrifique, fébrile; from the Lat. Febris, (a fervendo,) a fever, (qv.) Febrifick, productive of fever. Febrifuge,—that which dispels fever.

As in the formerly mentioned instance of hops, currants, and salt, neither any of the ingredients inwardly given, nor the mixture hath been (that I know of) noted for any febrifugal virtues.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 155.

The same febrile matter, either by a deviation of nature or medicines improper or unskilfully given, is discharged sometimes upon the pleura, or membrane that lines the side of the chest, sometimes upon the throat, sometimes upon the guts.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 766.

But the aliment will not be concreted, nor assimilated into chyle and so will corrode the vascular orifices, and thus will aggravate the febrific symptoms.
Fielding. The History of a Foundling, b. viii. c. 3.

The acidity occasioned by the febrile matter may stimulate the nerves of the diaphragm, and thereby occasion a craving which will not be easily distinguishable from a natural appetite.—Id. Ib.

FE'BRUARY. FEBRUA'TION. } Fr. Fevrier; It. Febraio, febraro; Sp. Febrero; Lat. Februarius; so called, because then the people (februaretur, hoc est, expurgaretur) were purified by sacrifices for the manes of the dead. Februa formed—a fervendo, whence also febris, fever, (qv.) See Vossius.

Who being upon sending for corne, and having a presage or perceivance of the businesse to bee performed (as hee had an inckling given him even by continuall dreames) would neither be seene nor come abroad for two daies, avoiding the bissext or odd daye of the leap yeare in the moneth of Februarie.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 284.

March which before was the first, he made now the third, and January the first, which under Romulus was the eleventh and February the twelfth and last: yet many are of opinion that Numa added these two, January and February.—North. Plutarch, p. 60.

Some fantastick rites and februations to chase away mormoes and spectres.—Spenser. On Prodigies, p. 227.

FE'CES. FE'CULENT. FE'CULENCE. FE'CULENCY. } Fr. Fèces, féculent; Lat. Fex, fecis, is the excrement of any thing: so called—a faciendo; according to Perottus, (but Vossius is not decisive.) And thus feculence is—
Filth or foulness, impurity, the dregs.

——— Blessed be heaven.
I sent you of his feces there calcined.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act ii. sc. 3.

Herein may be perceived slender perforations, at which may be expressed a black and feculent matter.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

And by the favour of an easie simile we may affirm them [Philosophical souls] to be to the body as the light of a candle to the grosse and feculent snuff, which, as it is not pent up in it, so neither doth it partake of its stench and impurity.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 24.

Besides the vinous liquor, the fermented juice of the grapes is partly turned into liquid drops or lees, and partly into that crust or dry feculency, that is commonly called tartar.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 580.

That a subtile terrestrious substance may lurk undiscerned, even in limpid liquors, may appear in wine, which rejects and fastens to the sides of the containing vessel a tartar, abounding in terrestrious feculency.
Id. Ib vol. ii. p. 78.

He [Joseph] preserved his sincere and constant innocence, as the sun its undefiled lustre, in the midst of all the feculent exhalations that ascend from the earth.
Bates. The Great Duty of Resignation.

That the inhabitants of the air, (birds and insects,) need the air as well as man, and other animals, is manifest from their speedy dying in too feculent or too much rarefied air.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. i. c. 1. (Note 4.)

——— Thither [to cities] flow
As to a common and most noisome sewer,
The dregs and feculence of every land.—Cowper. Task, b. i.

It was long before the spirit of true piety and true wisdom, involved in the principles of the Reformation, could be depurated from the dregs and feculence of the contention with which it was carried through.—Burke. Sp. at Bristol.

FE'CIAL. Lat. Fecialis or fetialis; plainly so called, says Varro, a fatu, that is, fando: because they were the orators or spokesmen employed on certain great public occasions.

When the greater number of them there present accord thereunto, then by generall consent they were wont to proclaime war in this order: that the fecial or king at armes should go with a javelin, having an iron head, or with a red bloodie spear burnt at the end, as far as to their borders or marches.—Holland. Livius, p. 24.

FE'CUND, adj. FECU'NDATE, v. FECUNDA'TION. FECU'NDITY. FECU'NDOUS. } Fr. Fécond, (Cotgrave has also the verb féconder, to make fertile or fruitful;) Lat. Fœcundus, from Fetus, which Scaliger thinks is from the Gr. Φοιτ-αν, coire; Vossius, from the ancient Feo, fetum: of the same meaning.
Generating, producing, fruitful.

But the Cornyshe men inhabytyng the least parte of the realme, and the same sterile and without all fecunditee compleyned and grudged greatly, affyrmyng that they were not hable to paye suche a greate somme as was of them demaunded.—Hall. Hen. VII. an. 12.

The more sickly the years are, the less fecund or fruitful of children also they be.—Graunt. Obs. on Bills of Mortality.

These meditations naturally issue and run to the right hand and to the left, for this head, and may properly refresh and fecundate ev'n the best mould they fall upon, as well as soften and unparch the dryest and barrenest earth they pass over.—Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 4. s. 4.

Hence we cannot infer a fertilitating condition or property of fecundation.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 7.

In God there is this inexplicable mystery, there is unity, and singleness without solitude: for out of the singularity of the divine essence, there is a natural fecundity and emanation of a plurality of persons, in which consists God's incapacity of solitariness.—Mount. Dev. Ess. pt. i. Tr. 17. s. 1.

And for the security of such species as are produc'd only by seed with a lasting vitality, that so if by reason of excessive cold, or drought, or any other accident, it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fecundity. I do not say two or three, nor six or seven, but even twenty or thirty years.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

We shall find in each the same vivacity and fecundity of invention, the same life and strength of imaging and colouring, the particular descriptions as highly painted, the figures as bold, the metaphors as animated, and the numbers as harmonious, and as various.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, Post.

The flowers of the male plant are produced under water, and as soon as the fecundating farina is mature they separate themselves from the plant, rise to the surface, and are wafted by the air, or borne by the currents, to the female flowers.—Darwin. Botanic Garden, i. 395. Note.

From this vessel projects a tube, through which tube the farina, or some subtile fecundating effluvium that issues from it, is admitted to the seed.—Paley. Nat. Theol. c. 20.

What further shows, that the system of destruction amongst animals holds an express relation to the system of fecundity; that they are parts indeed of one compensatory scheme; is that in each species the fecundity bears a proportion to the smallness of the animal, to the weakness, to the shortness of its natural term of life, and to the dangers and enemies by which it is surrounded.—Id. Ib. c. 26.

The Press from her fecundous womb
Brought forth the Arts of Greece and Rome.
Green. The Spleen.

FE'DERAL, adj.
FE'DERALISM.
FE'DERARY, or FE'DARY.
FE'DERATE, adj.
FEDERA'TION.
FE'DERATIVE.

Lat. Fœdus. Of the various etymologies which Vossius has collected, he prefers a fide. See FIDELITY.

Of or pertaining to a league or covenant.

Fedary and federary, in Shakespeare, are the same word differently written, (having no connection whatever with feud or feudatory,) and signify, a colleague, associate or confederate. See Feodary, in Minshew.

As are the degrees of our restitution and accesse to the first federal condition, so also are the degrees of our pardon.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. Dis. 9.

This rite of eating together the Gentiles did use, especially after such sacrifices as were federal, unto this intent, that by that superadded custom of eating together, upon or after sacrificing, they might the more ratify and confirm such covenants, first made, and begun by sacrificing.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. iii. p. 21.

——— She's a traytor, and Camilla is
A federarie with her.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— O damn'd paper,
Black as the inke that's on thee: senselesse bauble,
Art thou a fedarie for this act; and look'st
So virgin-like without!—Id. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 2.

Sweden and Denmark were united by a federal compact under one monarch; but the Swedes judging a separation more for their interest, broke off and chose Gustavus I. for their king.—Proceedings in the Parliament of Scotland relating to the Union.

In the weaker and more imperfect societies of mankind, such as those compos'd of the federate tribes, or mix'd colonies, scarce settled in their new seats, it might pass for sufficient good-fortune, if the people proved only so far masters of language as to be able to understand one another, in order to confer about their wants, and provide for their common necessities.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 2.

They who eat in the feast on that sacrifice are partakers of the supposed benefits of the sacrifice, and consequently, are parties to the federal rites which confirmed those benefits; so that the [redacted] man could not, consistently with himself, be partaker of the Lord's table, and that of Devils.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. c. 2.

We see every man that the Jacobins chuse to apprehend, taken up in his village or in his house, and conveyed to prison without the least shadow of resistance; and this indifferently, whether he is suspected of royalism, or federalism, moderantism, democracy royal, or any other of the names of faction which they start by the hour.
Burke. Remarks on the Policy of the Allies.

In a federate alliance, the two societies still subsist intire; though in a subordination of one to the other; in which case, it seems agreeable to natural equity, that no alteration in church government be made without the joint consent of both.—Warburton. Alliance between Church and State, b. ii.

The potentates of Europe have by that law, a right, an interest, and a duty to know with what government they are to treat, and what they are to admit into the federative society, or, in other words, into the diplomatick republic of Europe.—Burke. Remarks on the Policy of the Allies.

Is he obliged, from the concessions he wished to be made to the colonies, to keep any terms with those clubs and federations, who hold out to us as a pattern for imitation, the proceedings in France, in which a king, who had voluntarily and formally divested himself of the right of taxation, and of all other species of arbitrary power, has been dethroned!
Id. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

FE'DITY. Lat. Fœdus, filthy, foul. Of uncertain etymology.

A second may be the fordity and unnaturalness of the match.—Bp. Hall. Cases of Conscience, Dec. 4. c. 10.

For that hee seeing and perceiving what sodomiticall feditie and abomination, with other inconueniences, did spring incontinently vpon that his diabolicall doctrine, yet for all that would not give ouer his pestilent purpose.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1063. Priests Marriage.

FEE, n.
FEE, v.
FEE'ING, n.

Somner thinks from the A. S. Feo, (Goth. Faihu,) pecunia, pretium, opes. Probably from the old Fr. Fe; Lat. Fides. See FEALTY, ENFEOFF, FEUD, &c.

Any thing granted by one, and held by another, upon oath or promise of fealty or fidelity; any thing paid, given, and received, upon trust reposed of a faithful performance of duty; as a reward or recompence; a perquisite.

The Glossarist to G. Douglas explains Fee, beasts or cattle; whence, he adds, our English Fee; quia olim sola præmia et munera erant pecora; because cattle were formerly the only rewards or gifts; but there seems no necessity for a second etymology.

Zuf a man of holi chirche halt enl lay fe,
Person, other wat he be, he sal do theruore
Kinge's servise. R. Gloucester, p. 471.

Therfor vnto tham tuo he gaf Gryffyn's feez,
For South Wales holy thei mad the kyng feautez.
R. Brunne, p. 63.

The said defendant, by untrue surmises of a concealement, hath obtayned in fee-farme a hospitall, not dissolved nor dissolvable.—Id. p. 417. Account of a Hospital, &c.

Without that, that this complainant ought not to be priveledged in this courte, to sue or implcade her majestie's fee-farmer, or the tenements of the saide hospitall, supposed to be concealed.—Id. Ib.

Han made hire kyn nyghtes. and knyght fees purchase.
Piers Ploukman, p. 79.

What shuld I saye? but at the monthes ende
This joly clerk Jankin, that was so hende,
Hath wedded me with great solempnitee,
And to hime yave I all the lond and fee
That ever was me yeven therbefore.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6212.

I see that chance hath chosen me
Thus secretlye to liue in payne,
And to another geuen the fee,
Of all my losse to haue the gayne.
Wyatt. The Lover complaineth his Estate.

But if any be vaurers, they take of them satisfaction and bribes: and so be permitted to vse their vaurie, no lesse than before, so that they may haue their old fees and bribes.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 826. Usury craftily objected agst. Laymen.

This paper has vndone me. 'Tis th' accompt
Of all that world of wealth I haue drawne together
For mine owne ends; (Indeede to gaine the Popedome,
And fee my friends in Rome.
Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

Thou would'st be fee'd I see, to make me sport.
Id. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 4.

What should I speake of the secret frauds in contracts, bootles in matches, subornation of instruments, hiring of oathes, feeing of officers, equivocations of answers, and tenne thousand other tricks that the heart of man hath devised for the conveyances of sin.—Bp. Hall. The Great Impostor.

I was sent for, (who least thought it) and received the free collation of the poor dignitie, it was not the value of the place, (which was but nine nobles per annum,) that we aimed at, but the freedome of a goodly church, (consisting of a dean and eight prebendaries competently endowed,) and many thousand souls lamentably swallowed up by wilfull recusants, in a pretended fee farme for ever.
Id. Some Specialties of his Life.

If this man having fee-simple in his lands, yet will take a lease of his own lands from another, this shall be an estopple to him in an assize from the recovering of his own land.
Milton. Colasterion.

When I came to pay the clerk of the council his fees, she refused to pay them for me, and told me I had betrayed her; and so notwithstanding her promise I was obliged to pay the fees myself at the council.
State Trials, an. 1680. Elizabeth Cellier.

Watch the disease in time: For when, within
The dropsy rages, and extends the skin,
In vain for hellebore the patient cries;
And fees the doctor: but too late is wise.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 3.

And therefore Sir Henry Spelman defines a feud or fee to be the right which the vasal or tenant hath in land, to use the same, and take the profits thereof to him and his heirs, rendering to the Lord his due services.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 7.

Upon a closer examination of the matter however, it afterwards came out, that although there were no fees received as such, yet that money, to a very considerable amount, was received by some of the officers, under the name of gifts: thus, for instance, the chief clerk of the navy office received salary of about 240*l.* or 250*l.* a year, and it turned out that he received no less than 2500*l.* in gifts.
Pitt. Speech, 17*th June*, 1783.

FE'EBLE, adj.
FE'EBLE, v.
FE'EBLENESS.
FE'EBLY.
FE'EBLISH, v.

Fr. Foible, feble; Sp. Feble; It. Fiebole, fievole; all from the Lat. Flebilis, lamentable, and pitiful,—weak. Flebilis and flebilitas, (see Du Cange) were used in Low Lat. as equivalent to debilis and debilitas.

The common verb now, is to enfeeble, (qv.)

To weaken, to debilitate; to impair or diminish, the strength or vigour, the firmness or stability.

Feblyche he lyued al hys lyue, and deyde in feble dethe.
R. Gloucester, p. 301.

Uter, the gode kynge, (of wham we speke by vore.)
Was feble after that he was in the hors bere y bore,
That he moste vor feblesse nede holde hym stylle,
Ther vore the luther Saxons so much adde her wylle.
Id. p. 165.

Kyng Wyllam wende agen, tho al thys was ydo,
And bygan sone to grony & to febly al so.—Id. p. 380.

This wer agrete treopas, a gayn myn owen inwitte,
So febli forto wirke, for drede of Gode's awe.
R. Brunne, p. 156.

For hii eteth more fisch than fleach. and feble ale drenken.
Piers Ploukman, p. 95.

So feble were his spirites, and so low,
And changed so, that no man coude know
His speche ne his vois, though men it herd.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1371.

For loke how greatly sheweth the feblenesse and infirmitie of wicked folk, that ne mowen not commen, to that her naturall entencion leadeth hem.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

My hors is nowe feble and badde,
And all to tore is myn arraie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And thus feeblesse is set aloste,
And strengthe was put vnder foote.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

His back against the tree, sore febled all with faint,
With weary sprite, he stretcht hym vp and thus he told his plaint.—Surrey. Complaint of a Dying Lover, &c.

Thus feblyshed thenglisch capitaynes: for the same yere there dyed also the Lorde Spensar, a great baron in England, and a good knight.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. i. c. 315.

His heed maye be harde, but feble his brayne.
Skelton. Prologue to the Bouge of Court.

And yet when by the places cõferred wel togither, the feblenesse of his answere shal appeare: then shall he lese prayse of shortnesse to.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 991.

By easie iourneys he brought him to the abbey of Leycester, the xxvii. day of November, where for very feblenesse of nature, caused by purgations and vomites, he died the second night following, and in the same abbey lieth buried.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 909. Death of Cardinal Wolsey.

If thou be feble-harted, saye, Lorde increase my faythe.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

Mir. 'Tis true, ye are old, and feebled:
Would ye were young again, and in full vigor.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wild Goose Chase, Act i. sc. 3.

——— Many a burning sun
Has scar'd my body, and boil'd up my blood,
Feebled my knees, and stampt a meagerness
Upon my figure, all to find out knowledge.
Id. The Island Princess, Act iv. sc. 1.

Yet whilest I in this wretched vale doo stay,
My wearie feete shall ever wandring be,
That still I may be readie on my way,
When as her messenger doth come for me;
Ne will I rest my feete for feblenesse.—Spenser, Daph. 6.

Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a griesly wound;
Nor well alive, nor wholly dead they were,
But some faint signs of feeble life appear.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

With continual pains teaching the grammar-school there, and preaching, he changed this life for a better, in great feebleness of body more than of soul and mind.
Strype. Memorials. Q. Mary, an. 1554.

Yet there I've wander'd by the vaulted rill;
Yes! sigh'd o'er Delphi's long deserted shrine,
Where, save that feeble fountain, all is still,
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

Alas, Hilaria! what is life's short date
But the brief passage to our endless state!
Of which Heav'n wisely hides the term assign'd,
In pity to our feebleness of mind.
Boyse. To the Disconsolate Hilaria.

——— Scarce her legs
Feebly she drags, with wheezing labour, on,
And motion slow: a willow wand directs
Her tottering steps, and marks her for the grave.
Thomson. Sickness, b. ii.

FEED, v.
FEED, n.
FE'EDER.
FE'EDING, n.
FOOD, v.
FOOD, n.
FOO'DFUL.
FOO'DLESS.
FOO'DY.

Goth. Fodjan; A. S. Fed-an; Dut. Voeden; Ger. Weiden, fæden; Sw. Foeda. (Junius would derive from Βοσκω, and Skinner from Lat. Pasc-ere.) A. S. Fed-an, fovere, pascere, nutrire; to feed, to nourish, to cherish, (Somner.) To which may be added,—

To eat that which feedeth, to take or receive food or nourishment; to supply, provide or give food or nourishment; to graze, to pasture, to foster; to pamper, to glut.

Feeders, in our dramatic writers, is a term applied to servants or dependants, whose great pleasure or business was to feed or eat. See EATERS.

That men with the bestes in feldes thei tham fedde.
R. Brunne, p. 7.

& saue gour other fodes, to maynten my partie.—Id. p. 261.

He gaf Godes men goodes. and nat to grete lordes
And feddeth that a fyngrede [a hungered] wher.
Piers Ploukman, p. 289.

And tho that fynden me my fode vochen saf ich trowe
To be wol come wan ich come.—Id. p. 77.

And whanne thei hadden eten, Iesus seith to Symound Petir, Symound of Ioon louest thou me more than these? he seith to him, ghe Lord thou woost that I loue thee. Ieaus seith to him, fede thou my lambren.—Wiclif. Jon, c 21.

When they had dined Jesus sayde to Simon Peter: Simon Joanna louest thou me more than these? He sayde vnto him yea Lord thou knowest that I loue thee. He sayde vnto hym fede my lambs.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

O good lady (qd. I then) see now how seuen yeare passed and more, haue I grafted and groubed a vine and with all the waies that I coud, I sought to a fede me of the grape, but fruite haue I none found.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

That he ne shal, so mote I go,
With proper honds, and body also Get his food in laboring Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Lo suche is the delicacie
Of loue, whiche my herte fedeth. Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

My father I shall you reherse,
Howe that my foodes ben diuerse,
So as thei fallen in degree.
One feedynge is of that I see:
An other is, of that I here. Id. Ib.

Whose neck whan Sibly sawe with startling snakes to swelling fixt:
A soppe of bread with sleepy feedes, and hony sweete commixt
Against his throte she threw.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

Therefore ye whome I haue chosen to be the kepers and feders of my flocke must diligently take hede of all suche.
Udal. Matthew, c. 7.

Pastours, or feeders they are not, for they feede not: doctours or teachers they are not, for they teache not.
Jewell. Defence, p. 637.

The hypocrites hath loste their more than pryncely habitacions, theyr monasteries, couentes, hospitalles, prebendaries and chaunteryes, with theyr fatte fedyng and warme couches, for yi gotten good wyl home agayne.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

The sute in the courte of Fraunce is longe when they liste, and right well they canne foode forthe the people to make theym spende moche, and bringe lytell to effecte
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol ii. c. 132.

And in the vii. plenteous yeres they made shewes & gathered vp al the fode of the vii plenteous yeres which were in the lande of Egypte & put it into ye cytyes.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 41.

And though he fall under foot, he shall not lie,
Catching his hand for God shall straight him stay
Nor yet his seed foodless seen for to be.—Hyatt, Ps. 37.

And in his lappe a masse of coyne he told,
And turned upside downe, to feede his eye
And covetous desire with his huge threasury.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntarie move
Harmonious numbers; as the wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and in shadiest covert hid
Tunes her nocturnal note.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

For know, whatever was created, needs
To be sustained and fed; of elements
The grosser feeds the purer, earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air, the air those fires
Ethereal, and as lowest first the moon. Id. Ib. b. v.

——— To pluck and eat my fill
I spar'd not, for such pleasure till that hour
At feed or fountain never had I found. Id. Ib. b. ix.

——— For swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Id. Comus.

Now servants he has kept, lusty tall feeders,
But they have beat him and turn'd themselves away.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act iii. sc. 1.

Yet, falling to my lot, this stoutly I maintain
'Gainst forests, vallies, fields, groves, rivers, pasture, plain,
And all their flatter kind (so much that do rely Upon their feedings, flocks, and their fertility)
The mountain is the king.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 7.

With eager feeding, food doth choake the feeder.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Heav'nly stranger, please to taste
These bounties which our nourisher, from whom
All perfect good, unmeasur'd out, descends,
To us for food and for delight hath caus'd
The earth to yeeld; unsavorie food perhaps
To spiritual natures; only this I know,
That one celestial Father gives to all.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

——— To vessels, wine she drew,
And into well-sew'd sacks pour'd foodie meale.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

And all obseru'd for preseruation
Through all their foodie, and delicious fen:
With foure fierce mastifs, like one minded men
Id. Ib. A Hymne to Hermes.

The father of the people open'd wide
His stores, and all the poor with plenty fed:
Thus God's anointed God's own place supply'd,
And fill'd the empty with his daily bread.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

The climate [Bœotia] not much befriended by the heavens, for the air is thick and foggy; and consequently the inhabitants partaking of its influence, gross feeders and fat witted, brawny and unthinking.—Id. Life of Plutarch.

But as there is a sacramental feeding and a spiritual feeding, and as the spiritual is the nobler of the two, and of chief concern, and what the other principally or solely looks to, I conceive it will be proper to treat of this first.
Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 101.

The farmer is as pleas'd as he
To look upon his menial crew,
That sit around his cheerfull hearth,
And bodies spent in toil renew
With wholesome food and country mirth.
Dryden. Horace, Epode 2.

During th' autumnal heats th' infection grew,
Tame cattle, and the beasts of nature slew,
Poisoning the standing lakes, and pools impure;
Nor was the foodful grass in fields secure.
Id. Virgil, Georg. 3.

——— Were both constrain'd to wield,
Foodless, the scythe along the burthen'd field;
Or should we labour, while the ploughshare wounds,
With steers of equal strength, th' allotted grounds:
Beneath my labours how thy wondering eyes
Might see the sable field at once arise.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xviii.

——— The foodless wilds
Pour forth their brown inhabitants. Thomson. Winter.

All the time he lived at Brecknock, which is a very poor town, about sixty necessitous people, truly indigent, were fed with meat, or served with money every Lord's day at dinner time.—Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull, s. 87.

Walk in, walk in, (so Prudence votes,)
And give poor Ball a feed of oats. Smart, Fable 11.

The sun now mounted to the noon of day,
Began to shoot direct his burning ray,
When with the flocks, their feeders sought the shade,
A venerable oak wide-spreading made.—Philips, Past. 5.

Who [politicians] e'er on wing with open throats
Fly at debates, expresses, votes,
Just in the manner swallows use,
Catching the airy food of news. Green. The Spleen.

——— 'Tis art and toil
Teaches her woody hills with fruits to shine,
The pear and tasteful apple; decks with flowers
And foodful pulse the fields, that often rise,
Admiring to behold their furrows wave
With yellow corn. Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

The democratick commonwealth is the foodful nurse of ambition.—Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

FEEL, v.
FEEL, n.
FE'ELER.
FE'ELING, n.
FE'ELINGLY.

A. S. Felan; Dut. Voel-en; Ger. Fulen; which Wachter, after Martinius, derives from the Lat. Vola, manus, the hand.

To have or receive sensations or feelings: restrictedly, from the sense of touch; generally, from any of the senses; to perceive, to be sensitive or sensible, (properly, sentient,) to be percipient.

[He] felde well that he was hoole of the fallyng euelle.
R. Brunne, App. to Pref. p. cc.

For he ghyueth lyf to alle men, and brething and alle thingis, and made of oon al the kynd of men to enhabite on al the face of the erthe, determynynge tymes ordeyned & termys of the dwellyng of hem, to seke God, if peraventure thei felen hym eyther fynden, though he be not fer fro ech of ghou.—Wiclif. Deeds, c. 17.

Seyng he himselfe geueth lyfe and breath to all men euery where and hathe made of one bloude all nacyons of menne, for to dwell on the face of the earth, and hath assigned before howe longe tyme, and also the endes of their inhabitacyon, that they shoulde seke God, if they myght fele and fynde hym, though he be not farre from euery one of vs.
Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 17

Only the intellect, withouten more,
That dwellede in his herte sicke and sore,
Gan failen, whan the herte felte deth.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2607.

And if that he may felen out of drede,
That ye me touch or love in vilanie,
He right anon wol sleen you with the dede,
And in your youthe thus ye shulden die.
Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,623.

All togither I was raulshed, I cannot tell how, but wholy al my passions and feelinge weren loste, as it semed for the time.—Id. The Testament of Loue, b. i.

So felingly thou spekest, sire, I alowe the
As to my dome, ther is non that is here,
Of eloquence that shal be thy pere,
If that thou live.
Id. The Frankeleine's Prologue, v. 10,988.

For he sette of no vertu prise:
But as hym liketh for the while,
So feeleth he ful ofte gile,
Whan that he weneth seker to stonde.
Gower. Con. A. b. iv

For man of soule resonable
Is to an angell resemblable,
And like to beast he hath felyng,
And like to tres he hath growyng.—Id. Ib. Prol.

For he feeleth not the power of faith, not ye working of the Spirite in his hart, but enterpreteth the Scriptures which speake of fayth and workes after his owne blynd reason & foolish fantasies, & not of any feeling that he hath in his hart.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 66.

Methinkes I heare hir speake, methinkes I see her still,
Methinkes I feele hir feelingly, methinkes I know hir will.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

Thither by harpy-footed Furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought: and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extreams, extreams by change more horce,
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii

Iach. Had I this cheeke
To bathe my lips vpon: this hand, whose touch,
(Whose very touch) would force the feeler's soule
To th' oath of loyalty.—Shakes. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 7.

Mox. He endures beyond
The sufferance of a man.
Sap. No sigh nor groan,
To witness he hath feeling.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act v. sc. 1

There is not a living creature throughout the world, but hath the sence of feeling, although it have none else. For even oisters and the earth wormes, if a man touch them, doe evidently feele.—Holland. Pliny, b. x. c. 71.

——— I have heard
My gracious mistress often mention you,
When I served her as a page, and feelingly
Relate how much the duke her sire repented
His hasty doom of banishment, in his rage
Pronounc'd against you.
Massinger. The Bashful Lover, Act v. sc. 1

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambush'd in her silent den does lie:
And feels far off the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis

It is a long time, commonly, before men come to have a right clear sense and feeling of law and justice, and of the rules of society.—Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 30.

The words of men leaving the world make usually the deepest impressions, being spoken most feelingly, and with least affectation.—Bates. Dr. Thos. Jacomb's Funeral Serm

This tomb, inscrib'd to gentle Parnell's name,
May speak our gratitude, but not his fame.
What heart but feels his sweetly-moral lay,
That leads to truth through pleasure's flow'ry way!
Goldsmith. Epitaph on Dr. Parnell.

Pressing my hand with force against the table, I feel pain and I feel the table to be hard. The pain is a sensation of the mind, and there is nothing that resembles it in the table. The hardness is in the table, nor is there any thing resembling it in the mind. Feeling is applied to both, but in a different sense; being a word common to the act of sensation, and to that of perceiving by the sense of touch.
Reid. Ess. 2. c. 16.

——— Yet he [Rousseau] knew
How to make madness beautiful, and cast
O'er erring deeds and thoughts a heavenly hue
Of words, like sunbeams, dazzling as they past
The eyes, which o'er them shed tears feelingly and fast.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage c. 3.

FEIGN, v. / Fe'ignedly. / Fe'ignedness. / Fe'igner. / Fe'igning, n. / Fe'igningly. / Feint. / Fe'intise. } Fr. Feindre; Sp. Fingir; It. Fingere; Lat. Fingere, which Scaliger (de Causa. c. 87) thinks is the same (detractâ aspiratione) as pingere. Est igitur fingere, exprimere imitatione veram rem; to express the true thing by imitation.

To portray or image, (sc.) a likeness or resemblance; to imagine or invent, contrive or pretend, (sc.) a likeness or resemblance; and thus, to dissemble, or give or display a false appearance, a false colouring.

Ac he feynede hym somdel syk, & ney the see to be,
He byleued at Douere, gyf need were to flie.
R. Gloucester, p. 336.

Muche thing that ys eldore loren thorw feyntyse.
Thoru strengthe he wann. Id. p. 29.

And the othere Iewis assentiden to his feyning, so that Barnabas was drawen of them into that feynyng.
Wiclif. Galathies, c. 2.

She feined hire, as that she muste gon
Ther as ye wote that every wight mot nede.
Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9824.

Ye han erred also, for ye han maked no division betwix youre counsellours; this is to sayn, betwix youre trewe frendes and youre feined counsellours.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

After my young childly wit
Without drede I beset it
To loue her in my best wise,
To do her worship, and the seruise
That I coud tho, by my trouth
Without feining, either slouth.—Id. Dreame.

Wholle and plaine I yelde me
Without feining or fraintise
To be gouerned by your emprise.—Id. Rom. of the Rose

But yet in contrarie of their lore
There is nothyng thei louen more,
So that feynyng of light thei werke
The dedes, whiche are inwarde derke.
Gower, Con. A. b. i.

But ye pretended but a feigned reuerence towardes John, whose witnesse cõcerning me ye do not believe, and ye doe shew your selues to regarde the sayynges of the prophetes but feignedly, in that ye do now persecute him whom they haue promised.—Udal. John, c. 5.

Meaning that they were so naught, and so fainedly made their prayer to false Gods, without mind to amend their naughtie life, that the liuing God would not leaue them vnpunished, though they cried out neuer so fast.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 202.

King Ethelred required peace with the Danes, promising to them stipendes and tribute: to the which they fainedly assented, but they never left their cruelties.
Stow. West Saxons, an. 1011.

Why? Lucill lyude who euer vsde,
all fayners to detecte
With satyres sharpe, and quippies rounde,
Of deth he neuer rackt.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 1.

He stayd his steed for humble miser's sake,
And badd tell on the tenor of his playnt:
Who feigning then in every limb to quake
Through inward feare, and seeming pale and faynt,
With pteous mone his percing speach gan paynt.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

Only the bishop had power left him of the remitting of this severity, if he saw them by humility, and teares, and patience, and alms-deede, demonstrate their conversion to be sincere, not feigned.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 455.

Out of a love and desire, to sequester a man's selfe, for a higher conversation: such as is found, to have been falsely and fainedly, in some of the heathen: as Epimenides the Candian, Numa the Roman, Empedocles the Sicilian, and Appollonius of Tyana.—Bacon. Ess. Of Friendship.

A poet is that, which by the Greeks is call'd κατ' ἐξοχην, ὁ ποιητης, a maker or a fainer: his art, an art of imitation, or fayning: expressing the life of man in fit measure, numbers, and harmony, according to Aristotle: from the word ποιειν, which signifies to make, or fayne.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

And these three voices differ, as the thing done, the doing, and the doer; the thing fained, the fayning, and the fainer: so the poeme, the poesy, and the poet.—Id. Ib.

Picture tooke her fayning from poetry: from geometry her rule, compasse, lines, proportion, and whole symmetry.
Id. Ib.

The church is not the schoole of feignednesse and hypocricy, but of truth and sincerity.
Harmar. Translation of Beza's Sermon, p. 39.

It is not lawful indeed to contradict a point of History which is known to all the world; as for example, to make Hannibal and Scipio contemporaries with Alexander; but in the dark recesses of antiquity, a great poet may and ought to feign such things as he finds not there, if they can be brought to embellish that subject which he treats.
Dryden. A Discourse on Epick Poetry.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it.—Locke.

And, ruffled more, delighted less,
The busy mind does seldom go
To those once charming seats below;
But, in the breast incamp'd, prepares
For well-bred feints and future wars.—Prior. Alma, c. 2.

And much she marvell'd that a youth so raw
Nor felt, nor feign'd at least, the oft told flames.
Which, though sometimes they frown, yet rarely anger dames.—Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 2.

FEIZE. To feaze, or feag, says Skinner, flagellare, virgis cædere; to the same purport, Hearne. Lye;—fese, in Chaucer, is from the A. S. Fesian, fugare, to rout, to put to flight. Mr. Tyrwhitt takes no notice of fese, in Chaucer. Skinner thinks the word may be derived from the Ger. Feg-en, verrere, purgare, to sweep, to cleanse away. Fuller (who writes it reze, perhaps for the sake of a pun) interprets it to drive away; in the dialect of the West. He and Lye are probably right.

To drive away, to rout; and thus, to beat, to chastise, to humble.

See the commentators on Shakespeare; Gifford's Ben Jonson, iv. 188; and Nares's Glossary.

Thise Sarazins were so feid that fled was Saladyn,
And Cleare has he nesid Japhi & Joppyn.
R. Brunne, p. 192.

Love. Come, will you quarrel? I will feize you, sirrah,
Why do you not buckle to your tooles?
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act v. sc. 3.

Aia. And a be proud with me I'le pheze his pride; let me goe to him. Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 3.

Bishop Turbervil recovered some lost lands, which Bishop Voysey had eezed, (driven away, in the dialect of the West.)
Fuller. Worthies of England. Dorcetshire, p. 312.

FE'LANDER. See Filander.

FELE. Goth. Filu; A. S. Fela; Ger. Viel; Dut. Veel, many. An old word found in all the northern tongues, and having (the etymologists observe) an affinity with the Gr. πολυς. R. of Gloucester, as Dr. Jamieson notices, writes it, Vale. See Feil, in Jamieson.

And nowe so fele shippes this yeere there ware,
That moch losse for vntreyght they bare.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 201.

FELI'CITATE, v. / Feli'citate, adj. / Felicita'tion. / Feli'citous. / Feli'citously. / Feli'city. } Fr. Féliciter; It. Felicitare; Sp. Felicitar; from the Lat. Felix. Vossius is inclined to adopt the opinion of Beeman, that Felix is from the Gr. ηλιξ, which signifies generally Ætas, though commonly restricted to ætas florens belloque apta; quâ ratione, felix proprie sit, qui vegetæ est ætatis, corpore animoque valens; blooming age, and fit for war; wherefore, felix may properly be applied to him who is of vigorous age, strong in body and mind. Felicity is used as equivalent to—

Good fortune, good hap, happiness; good success, prosperity.

To felicitate,—to confer happiness or cause to be happy; and also, to congratulate upon any happiness or good fortune.

In that citty virtue shall never cease,
And felicity no soule shall misse,
Magnifying the name of the Kinge of Blisse.
R. Gloucester, App. p. 584.

For certes, lord, so wel us liketh you
And all your werke, and ever have don, that we
Ne couden not ourself devisen how
We mighten live in more felicitee.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7985.

And of this constillation
The very operation
Availeth, if a man therin
The purpose of his werke begin
For than he hath of propertee
Good spede and great felicitee.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

I haue red in writyng, and herde of my predecessours, and haue seene of my neighbours, that the abundance of felicitee hath caused cruell enuie to bee in many.
Golden Boke.

I [Cromwell] shall pray, that that most noble Imp, the Prince's Grace, your most dear Son, may succeed you to reign long, prosperously, and felicitously to God's pleasure.
Burnet. Records, b. iii. No. 17. To Hen. VIII.

——— I professe
My selfe an enemy to all other ioyes,
Which the most precious square of sense professes,
And finde I am alone felicitate
In your deere highnesse loue.—Shakes. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

And all the way as they passed along the capital, the castle, and other temples, they besought the Gods, as many as were presented to their eye, as many as they could conceive in their minds to vouchsafe that squadron to be attended upon with good successe and fortunate felicitie, and soone to returne home againe in safetie, to their native countrie and loving parents.—Holland. Livie, p. 78.

That life may be more comfortable yet,
And all my joys refin'd, sincere and great;
I'd choose two friends, whose company would be
A great advance to my felicity.—Pomfret. The Choice.

Is it because liberty in the abstract may be classed amongst the blessings of mankind, that I am seriously to felicitate a madman, who has escaped from the protecting restraint and wholesome darkness of his cell, on his restoration to the enjoyment of light and liberty?
Burke. On the French Revolution.

I sincerely rejoiced to hear of your advancement to the purple, yet on these occasions I did not think myself warranted to break in upon you, either with my acknowledgments or felicitations.
Anecdotes of Bp Watson, vol. i. p. 177.

That this pleasure [eating] depends, not only on our being in the possession of the sense of taste, which is different from any other, but upon a particular state of the organ in which it resides, a felicitous adaptation of the organ to the object, will be confessed by any one, who may happen to have experienced that vitiation of taste which frequently occurs in fevers, when every taste is irregular, and every one bad.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

Is that faith and obedience, which constitute us the disciples of Christ, less uniformly productive of good? did faith ever violate civil peace; or obedience impair domestic felicity.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 1.

Bartholomew Dandridge, son of a house painter, had great business from his felicity in taking a likeness.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 3.

FELL. "Wherever you fare by frith or by fell," occurs (says Skinner) in Juliana Barns: sive per sylvam, sive per campum. Fell is felled, field.

The sylvans that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,
Both in the tufty frith, and in the mossy fell,
Forsook their gloomy bowers.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17

FELL. Sw. Fiaell; Ger. Fels. Ray (Gloss. Northan.) explains Fell, mons, a mountain; and refers to the Scholiast upon Aristophanes. Ihre and Wachter both refer to Φελλευς, (in Suidas,) h. e. τοπος πετρωδεις, loca petrosa, montana: and the former says, that both φελλευς and (in Hesychius) φαλαι, montes et speculæ, seem to be of the same family with fell. The Sw. Fiaell (Ihre) is properly, A ridge of mountains or rocks. May it not be—

A fall, a descent, a declivity?

So may our ewes receive the mounting rammes;
And wee bring thee the earliest of our lambes:
So may the first of all our fells be thine,
And both the beestning of our goats and kine,
As thou our folds dost still secure.
B. Jonson. Pan's Anniversarie, Hymn 4.

On a nearer approach appeared, farmers and their families, esquires and their daughters, hastening up from the dales, and down the fells from every quarter, glittering in the sun, and pressing forward to join the throng.
Gray. Letters. To Dr. Wharton.

FELL, adj. / Fell, n. / Fe'llness. / Fe'llon. / Fe'lly, ad. } A. S. Felle; Dut. Fel; Fr. Felle, felon; It. Fello, fellon. The A. S. Felle, Somner says, is Crudelis, cruel, fell; it. bilis, gall, anger, choler, melancholinesse. The Lat. Fel, Vossius thinks, is from the Gr. Χολη, χ into f. It is used as the—

"Fr. Felle,—cruel, fierce, furious, untractable, outragious," (Cotgrave.)

"Fellon,—so called from the fierceness, the keenness, of the pain," (Skinner.)

The parties wer so felle altercand on ilk side,
That non the soth couth telle, whidir pes or werre sulde tide,
Bot God that is of myght, & may help whan he wille.
R. Brunne, p. 314.

Thanne is fleashe a fell wynde. in flouryng time
Thorgh lecherie and lustes. so loude he gynneth blowe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 306.

For the wisdom of this world is foli anentes God, for it is written I schal catche wise men in her fel wisdom.
Wiclif. 1 Corynth. c. 3.

Ther n'is ywis no serpent so cruel,
Whan man tredeth on his tail, ne half so fel,
As woman is, whan she hath caught an ire;
Very vengeance is than hire desire.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7584.

For me fortune so felly list dispose
My harme is hid, that I dare not disclose.
Id. The Floure of Curtesie.

Stormes riefest rende the sturdy stoute pine apple troe,
Of lofty ruing towers the falles the feller be,
Most fers doth lightning light, were furthest we do see
The hilles the valley to forsake.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Golden Meane.

O Joue, whiche bothe canst eke and ease,
al dolour and all teene.
Rue on my chylde (the mother crieth)
who nowe fiue weekes hathe bene,
With feuer quartayne, felly toste
Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 3.

The kyng loked felly on theym, for greatly he hated the people of Calys for the gret damages and dyspleasures they had done him on the see before.
Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. 1. c. 146.

O let him far be banished away,
And in his stead let Love for ever dwell!
Sweete Love, that doth his golden wings embay
In blessed nectar and pure pleasures well
Untroubled of vile feare or bitter fell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 11.

The she-beare, a most fell, savage, and cruell beast, bringeth forth her young whelps, without forme or fashion, unknit and unjoynted, having no distinct limbs or members to be seene.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 179.

——— A feller grief
Than ever skilful hand did give relief
Dwells on my soul, and may be heal'd by you,
Fair beauteous virgin.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act ii. sc. 1.

It is neither a rich patrician's shooe that cureth the gout in the feet, nor a costly and precious ring that healeth the whitlaw or felon in the fingers; nor yet a princely diadem that easeth the headach.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 120.

Like as a curre doth felly bite and tear
The stone, which passed straunger at him threw.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

He was neither given to greedie extortion or over-fiercely and felly bent, or hotly set upon doing mischief.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 49.

Als when his brother saw the red blood rayle
Adowne so fast, and all his armour steepe,
For very felnesse lowd he gan to weep.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

The same wild beast, notwithstanding they be always razing, yet become mild and leave off all their outrageous felnesse for the space of those seven ceremonious holy days, wherein the priests at Memphis celebrate the nativitie of Apis.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 212.

Fell Arcite like an angry tyger far'd,
And like a lion Palamon appear'd.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

Inrag'd at first, he scorn'd so weak a jail,
And leapt, and flew, and flounced to and fro;
But when he found that nothing could avail,
He set him felly down and gnaw'd his bitter nail.
Thomson. The Castle of Indolence.

FELL, v. FE'LLER. FE'LLING, n. } A. S. Fyllan, gefyllan; Dut. Vellen; Ger. Faellen; Sw. Fælla; to cause to fall.

To fall or cause to fall; to strike, throw, or hurl down; to knock down; to hew down.

For he and Tytus ys sone of oure Lord vnderstoode,
Fourti ger aftur that he deide on the rode,
And wende to Jerusalem and that toun feide to grounde.
R. Gloucester, p. 70.

The burgeis of London were wrothe & stoute,
& said thei suld fond to felle Knoute's pride.
R. Brunne, p. 48.

Maple, thorn, beche, ew, whipultre,
How they were feld, shal not be told for me.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2927.

But nightingales a full great rout
That flyen over his head about
The leaves felden as they flyen.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

And as the clerke Ouide telleth,
The great trees to grounde he felleth,
With strength of his owne might,
And made an huge fire vpright,
And lepte hym selfe therin at ones,
And brent himself both fleshe and bones.
Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

But so soone as the Russians had felled the woods and had built townes and villages in their place, the said pension ceased together with the trees which were cut down.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p 225.

Yet did he [January] quake and quiver like to quell,
And blowe his nayles to warme them if he may;
For they were numb'd with holding all the day
An hatchet keene, with which he felled wood,
And from the trees did lop the needlesse spray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, c. 7. Of Mutabilitie.

For as most of them were felled and strucken starke dead, either with the bodies of the trees, or broken arms and boughes; so the rest of the multitude, affrighted with this unexpected and unhappie accident, were killed by the Gaules that beset all the streights and passages of the wood.
Holland. Livius, p. 490.

Two high brow'd rockes on eyther side begin,
As with an arch to close the valley in,
Upon their rugged fronts short writhen onkes
Untouch'd of any feller's banefull strokes.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Thus you will have a copse, ready for a felling within eight years.—Evelyn. Sylva. Of the Chestnut.

——— And looking underneath the sun
He [Theseus] saw proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battel doubling blow on blow,
Like lightning flam'd their fauchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam, so strong they strook,
There seem'd less force required to fell an oak.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

FELL, n. A. S. Fell; Goth. Fill; Dut. Vel; which Junius derives from the Lat. Pellis, a skin or hide; and pellis from the Gr. Φελλος, the bark or hide of a tree; observing that the A. S. Fell was also so applied.

The skin or hide.

And said he and al his skinne atones
Were worthy to be brent both fell and bones.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

In this xxiiii. yere, the kyng, for ye great warre that he had with the Frenshe kynge and cllys where comaunded a new subeydie to be leuyed vpon al ye sarplers of wolle goynge out of Englande with all fellys and hydes in lyke maner.
Fabyan, an. 1296.

And after she shuld be made sitte on a fell with woolle, that shee might learne, what she ought to do at home.
Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 2.

God sendeth her in season a goodly faire feruent feuer, that maketh her bones to rattle, & wasteth away her wanton flesh, & beautyfieth her faire fell wyth the coloure of a kite's claw.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1149.

Mach. The time has beene, my senses would have cool'd
To heare a night-shrieke, and my fell of haire
Would at a dismall treatise rowse and stirre
As life were in't.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 5.

A prince is the pastor of the people. Hee ought to sheere, not to flea his sheep; to take their fleeces, not their fels.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

FE'LLOE. A. S. Felge. The iron wherewith the cart-wheel is bound, says Somner. Ger. Felge; Dut. Velge, flexura, curvatura. Ger. Felgen; Dut. Velgen; A. S. Wealwe-ian, volvere.

And the facion of the wheeles was like the facion of a charet wheele, their axeltrees, and their naues and their felloes, and their spokes were all molten.
Bible, 1553. 1 Kings, vii. 33.

Out, out, thou strumpet-fortune, all you Gods,
In generall synod take away her power:
Breake all the spokes and fellies from the wheele,
And boule the round naue down the hill of heauen,
As low as to the Fiends.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

FE'LLOW, v. FE'LLOW, n. FE'LLOW-LESS. FE'LLOWLY. FE'LLOWSHIP. } Spelman (in v. Felagus) says, from the Sax. Fe, i. e. fides, and lag, ligatus; hence the Anglo-Normans, changing (according to their custom) g into w, pronounced it Felawe: and we, fellow. And he quotes a passage from the laws of Edward the Confessor, in which the Low Lat. Felagus ejus, is interpreted, fide cum eo ligatus.

Hickes (Gram. Anglo-Sax. p. 6.) from the A. S. Foly-gan, filg-ean, to follow: and in this etymology, Minshew, Skinner, and Serenius are unanimous. Ihre (in v. Falage) is uncertain. Fellow, then, (lit.) is—

A follower; a companion, an associate; one with whom others match or mate, suit or pair, unite or consort. And to fellow, is—

To match or mate, to pair.

Fellow is much used prefixed.

To hys felawes he wende anon, & bad hem hardi be;
So that the Brytones were vp the poynt to flie.
R. Gloucester, p. 63.

The barons & the kyng were mad felawes & frendes,
Asoiled & alle on euen. R. Brunne, p. 211.

Haluendale asked Philip, as for first conant,
& for felawschip of Cipres conquerand. Id. p. 186.

Bothe faith and hus feiawe spes folweden faste after.
Piers Ploughman, p. 325.

That ich ne shal folwie. thy felawshupe yf fortune lyke.
Id. p. 193.

And seyen, if we hadden ben in the daies of oure fadris, we schulden not have be her felowis in the blood of profetis.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 23.

If we seie that we han felawschip with him, and we wandren in derknessis, we lien and doen not treuthe; but if we walkin in ligt as also he is in ligt we han felawschip togidre, and the blood of Iesu Crist his sone clensith us fro al synne.—Id. 1 Jon, c. 1.

So wel they loved, as olde bokes sain,
That whan that on was ded, sothly to telle,
His felaw wente and sought him doune in helle.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1202.

Hast thou not herd (quod Nicholas) also
The sorwe of Noe with his felawship,
Or that he might get his wif to ship?
Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3539.

He had a felawe bacheler,
Whiche was his priuie councylor,
And Thaliart by name he hight.—Gower. Con. A. b. viii.

And thus the tresour of the kynge
Thei trusse, and muche other thynge,
And with a certaine felowship
Thei fled, and went away by ship. Id. Ib. b. i.

The body was felow and partener with the soule in committing the crime and sinne, and shall also be partaker of the glory, which is prepared for them that love God.
Frith. Workes, p. 19

Where, thoughe they had offended, youe shulde haue dissymuled and wynked at it, to the intent that that, which we yet reteigne vnder the forme of a fellowlike lyuynge, should not be tourned unto hostylytie and enmitye.
Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 82.

Haue ye seen any thyng more low or basse in worldely acceptacion, any thing more poorer, more meke, more felowelyke with the people, and more ferther remoued fro all lykenesse of a kyngdome.—Udal. Luke, c. 24.

But Artabasus with those of whō he had ye charge, & with the Greeke souldiers, tooke the way towardes Parthina, thinkyng to be more sure any where then in the felowship of those traitours.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 152.

——— Thou coactive art,
And fellow'st nothing.—Shakes. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

Let me rather be disliked for not being a beast, then be good-fellowed with a hug, for being one.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 84.

And Hipothebs, whose wel-built wals, are rare, and fellowless.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. ii.

Holy Gonzallo, honourable man,
Mine eyes ev'n sociable to the shew of thine
Fall fellowly drops.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

She, proude of that new honour, which they redde
And of their lovely fellowship full glade,
Daunst lively, and her face did with a lawrell shade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

——— Of fellowship I speak,
Such as I seek, fit to participate
All rational delight, wherein the brute
Cannot be human consort.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. viii.

I must also add, that if the last Æneid shine amongst its fellows, it is owing to the commands of Sir William Trumball, one of the principal Secretaries of State, who recommended it, as his favourite, to my care; and for his sake particularly I have made it mine.
Dryden. Postcript to Virgil.

If eating and drinking be natural, herding is so too. If any appetite or sense be natural, the sense of fellowship is the same.—Shaftesbury. Ess. on Freedom, &c. s. 2.

And oft I wish, amidst the scene to find
Some spot to real happiness consign'd,
Where my worn soul, each wand'ring hope at rest,
May gather bliss, to see my fellows blest.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

As we must give away some natural liberty to enjoy civil advantages; so we must sacrifice some civil liberties, for the advantages to be derived from the communion and fellowship of a great empire.
Burke. Speech on Conciliation with America.

FE'LON, n. / FE'LON, adj. / FELO'NIOUS. / FELO'NIOUSLY. / FE'LONOUS. / FE'LONY.

Skinner says, either from the A. S. Felle; Fr. Fellon, It. Fellone, crudelis, cruel, fell; or from fiah, beneficium, stipendium; and Ger. Lon, pretium, (sc.) the crime that is punished by loss or forfeiture of the fee. Hickes (Gram. Franco Theo. p. 95) is of the former opinion; and Spelman favours the latter: according to Hickes, the forfeiture of the fee was an incidental punishment, adjudged to the felness, cruelty or atrociousness of the crime. According to Spelman, this forfeiture was the cause of the imposition of the name upon the crime so punished. Vossius (de Vitiis, p. 202) proposes the Ger. Faelen, vel feelen, errare, delinquere, cadere; this etymology is noticed by Spelman, and rejected by Wachter; quia non explet mensuram criminis. The common usage among our older writers, as well as amongst the French, confirms the opinion of Hickes.

"Fr. Fellonnie,—felness, curstness, despightfulness, ire, anger; untractableness, cruelty, unmercifulness, outragiousness; also, disobedience; treachery, treason; any such hainous falshood or offence, committed by a vassal against his lord, or by a subject against his soveraign, whereby he loses, or is worthy to lose, his estate," (Cotgrave.) And see the quotation from Blackstone.

Vor al that the felon hath, the kinges it is.
R. Gloucester, p. 471.

He bythoughte him of felonye, and lette him arme there.
Mid armes of Brytones, as he of this lond were.—Id. p. 63.

In the courte of France he was cald a felown.
R. Brunne, p. 206.

Now the bode is gon to France Arthure is dede,
And somond haf thie Jon, to Philip courte him dede,
To tak his jugement of that felone. Id. p. 207.

For thauh the fader be a frankelayne. and for a felon be hanged.
The heritage that the air sholde have ye at the kynges wille. Piers Ploughman, p. 178.

——Ful ofte hath he drede
That fals folke fetche away. felonliche hus godes.
Id. p. 214.

For daungere, that is so felown
Felly purposeth thee to werrey
Which is full cruel the soth to sey.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And moreover, certes pride is gretly notified in holding of gret meinie, when thei ben of litel profite or of right no profite, and namely whan that meinie is felonous and damageous to the peple by hardinesse of high lordeship, or by way of office.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Ther saw I first the derke imagining
Of felonie, and alle the compassing.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1998.

Though I no death to the deserue,
Here shall I for thy loue sterue,
Here shall I a kyng's sonne die
For loue, and for no felonie. Id. Ib. b. iv.

Whā he [Tanner] had thus contynued a season, not without some rumoure in the lande, lastelye he was takyn out of that place and caryed as a felon vnto Northampton, and there reygned and iudged for his falsenes and soo drawen and hangyd.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1315.

Then like a woolfe most vehemente
agaynst him, and his foo
Incens'd, with fellon fasting face
he flings, and fayreth so,
The councter captaines standerd straighte
he swayed to the ground.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Julius Florus.

They sayd it was falsely and felonously done, to assemble the rychesse of the realme, and to sende it into other straūge contreys wherby the realme was greatly impouerysshed.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 94.

And so the said jury hathe sworn vpon the holy Euangelist, yt the sayde William Horsey, clercke, Charles Joseph, and John Spaldynge, of their set malice then, & their, felonyously kylled & murthered the sayde Richard Hun, in the maner and forme abouesayde.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 6.

Notorious felons, and which openly be of euil name, & will not put themselues in enquests concerning the felonies that men shal lay to their charge before the justices at the king's suite, shall be sent backe to strong and hard imprisonment, as they which refuse to be iustified by the common lawe of the land.—Rastall. Statutes, p. 170. Felonie.

He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle swain.
Milton. Lycidas.

——Else, O thievish night,
Why shouldst thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars,
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil, to give due light
To the misled and lonely traveller? Id. Comus.

The wicked rable (I say) and offscouring of the base multitude (not to be reckoned) committed such felonious outrages, as forced men to nayle up covers and cases before these faire lights and beautiful prospects.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 4.

An argument much like this in substance. No man ought to rise up against an honest officer or captaine in the due execution of his office, when he offers him no injury at all. Therefore he ought not in conscience to resist him when he turnes a theefe or murtherer, and feloniously assaults him, to rob him of his purse, or to cut his throate.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. iii. p. 84.

Yet she was of such grace and vertuous might,
That her commaundment he could not withstand,
But bit his lip for felonous despight,
And gnasht his yron tuskes at that displeasing sight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

When, suddenly casting aside his view,
He spide his foe with ferenous intent,
And fervent eyes to his destruction bent.
Id. Virgil's Gnat.

Sir, I arrest you at your Country's suit,
Who, as a debt to her, requires the fruit
Of that rich stock, which she by nature's hand
Gave you in trust, to th' use of this whole land;
Next she indites you of a felony
For stealing what was her propriety,
Yourself, from hence.—Carew. To Master W. Montague.

The gentlemen, and other commons of the kingdome might haue thought their ancient libertie, and the clemencie of the lawes of England inuaded, if the will in any case of felonie should be made the deed.—Bacon. Hen. VIII. p. 65.

But he the king of heaven, obscure on high,
Bar'd his red arm, and launching from the sky
His writhen bolt, not shaking empty smoke,
Down to the deep abyss the flaming felon strook.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

For courtesies, though undeserv'd and great,
No gratitude in felon minds beget,
As tribute to his wit, the churl receives the treat.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

Nor outward tempest, nor corrosive time,
Naught but the felon undermining hand,
Of dark corruption can its frame dissolve,
And lay the toil of ages in the dust.—Thomson. Liberty.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies
It does but touch thy Irish pen and dies.
Dryden. To Sir Robert Howard.

The next accusation is particular to me,—"That I the said Bays would falsely and feloniously have robbed Nat. Lee, of his share in the representation of Oedipus."
Id. Vindication of the Duke of Guise.

Lord Hyde. We are to look to that which is according to law; the goods of a man that is accused of felony (he is but only so yet) he forfeits none of his goods, until convict; more than that, he is to live upon them during his trial.
State Trials, an. 1664. Col. Turner & Others.

The fact is the same in all,—the death of the man is the imputed crime: but the intention makes all the difference; and he who killed him is pronounced a murderer,—a single felon, or only an unfortunate man, as the circumstances by which his mind is deciphered to the jury show it to have been cankered by deliberate wickedness or stirred up by sudden passions.
Erskine. Speech on the Trial of Lord George Gordon.

Yes, Leila sleeps beneath the wave,
But his shall be a redder grave;
Her spirit pointed well the steel
Which taught the felon heart to feel.—Byron. The Giaour.

There could therefore be no doubt of his [Damaree] purpose and intention, nor any great doubt that the perpetration of such purpose was from its generality, high treason, if perpetrated by such a force, as distinguishes a felonious riot from a treasonable levying of war.
Erskine. Speech on the Trial of Lord George Gordon.

They declared it to be high treason to dispute the queen's authority, to deny that the parliament was competent to confine and limit the succession, and, finally, to render attempts to introduce a system, different from that which they had established by the laws, feloniously penal.
Pitt. Speech, November 17, 1795.

If Lord Balmerino, in the last rebellion, had driven off the cattle of twenty clans, I should have thought it would have been a scandalous and low juggle, utterly unworthy of the manliness of an English judicature, to have tried him for felony as a stealer of cows.
Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Felony, in the general acceptation of our English law, comprises every species of crime, which occasioned at common law the forfeiture of land and goods.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 7.

FELT, v. / FELT, n. / FE'LTRE, v. / FE'LTAR, n.

A. S. Felt; Dut. Vilt; Ger. Filz; Fr. Feultre, feutre; It. Feltro; Sp. Fieltro; Low Lat. Feltrum. Wachter says, it may be derived either from the Gr. Πιλουν, arctare, densare, lanam cogere, or from the Lat. Villus or villosus. Skinner suggests to full, (qv.) Spelman calls it Pannus crassior ex pilis, proprie coactus, non textus; and see the quotation from Holland's Pliny. The word is probably a mere consequential usage of fell,—

A hide, or skin; a covering.

The poorer sort do line their clothes with cottō cloth which is made of the finest wooll they can pick out, & of the courser part of the said wooll, they make felt to couer their houses and their chests, and for their bedding also.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 94.

They make also of the said felt couerings for their stooles, and caps to defende their heads from the weather.—Id. Ib.

Xenophanes saith, that the moon is a thick, compact, and felted cloud.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 179.

Or els verily as Anaxagoras affirmeth, by reason of violent winds getting close within the ground below; which when they happen to hit and beat upon the sides thereof, hard baked or felted together, finding no way of issue, shake those parts of the earth at which they entred when they were moist.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 89.

It were a delicate stratagem, to shoo
A troope of horse with felt.—Shakes. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

Moreover, wool of itselfe driven together into a felt without spinning or weaving, serveth to make garments with [Lanæ et per se coactam vestem faciunt.] and if vinegre be used in the working thereof, such felts are of good proof to here off the edge and point of the sword, yea and more than that, they will checke the force of the fire.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 48

His feltred locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bullogne, b. iv. s. 7

They put things call'd executorships upon me,
The charge of orphans, little senseless creatures,
Whom in their childhoods I bound forth to felt-makers,
To make 'em lose, and work away their gentry.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act I. sc. 1

FELU'CCA. It. Filucca. "Fr. Falouque," which Cotgrave calls, "a barge, or a kind of barge-like boat, that hath some five or six oars on a side." "Falcatoria," says Du Cange, "a species of ship; perhaps the same with our felouque or falouque."

Naples, 1645. Having well satisfied our curiosity among these Antiquities, we retir'd to our felucca, which rowed us back againe towards Pozzolo, at the very place of St. Paule's landing.—Evelyn. Memoirs.

Letters from Genoa of the 14th instant, [April, 1709] say, that a felucca was arrived there in five days from Marseilles with an account that the people of that city had made an insurrection by reason of the scarcity of provisions.
Tatler, No. 6

FE'MALE, n. / FE'MALE, adj. / FE'MINE. / FE'MININE, n. / FE'MININE, adj. / FE'MINAL. / FEMINA'LITY. / FE'MINATE. / FEMI'NITY. / FE'MINIZE. / FE'ME-COVERT.

Fr. Femelle, féminin; It. Femina, femminina; Lat. Femina, which Scaliger derives from Fœtus, and fœtus from Φοιταν, coire; Vossius, from the ancient Lat. Feo, fetum, of the same meaning, i. e. coire, copulare, and therefore, gignere, parere; and thus, femina, that which beareth, which bringeth forth. And Female, whether animal or vegetable,—

That which bringeth forth, which produceth, which beareth offspring,—young of its own species or kind.

For Feme-covert, see the quotation from Blackstone, and COVERTURE.

I sawe perpetually ystalled
A femine creature,
That neuer formed by nature
Was such another thing I saye.
Chaucer. Book of Fame, b. iii.

O Soudannesse, rote of iniquitee,
Virago, thou Semyramme the second,
Of serpent under femininitee,
Like to the serpent depe in helle ybound.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4780.

The males go with the female,
And so began there a quarele
Betwene loue and hire owne herte.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

As soon as the man looked upon the femall of his kinde, he began to loue aboue all things, and saide: Now is this bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 2.

With halfe a bearde, as a feminate man.
Golden Boke, Let. 14.

So that as in Xerxes was to be sene a kinde of femine fearfulness, so in her was to be seene the kynde of manlye couragiousnesse.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 18.

When the hunts-men haue made prouision, & the elliphant is so entangled, they guide the femininues towards the pallace which is called Tambell.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 235.

Affyrming that in the queene rested nothyng but fraude and femmyne malice, which rulyng the kyng at her pleasure and will studied nothyng so muche, as the destruccion of the nobilitie, and peeres of the realme.
Holl. Henry VI. an. 37.

The ark is finish'd, and the Lord is wrath,
To aid just Noah, and he provided hath
His blessed Angels, bidding them to bring
The male and female of each living thing
Into the ark, by whom he had decreed
T' renew the world. Drayton. Noah's Flood.

——— The boy is faire,
Of femall fauour, and bestowes himself
Like a ripe sister: the woman low
And browner then her brother.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act v. sc. 1.

——— But to Adam in what sort
Shall I appear? shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake
Full happiness with mee, or rather not,
But keep the odds of knowledge in my power
Without copartner? so to add what wants
In femal sex, the more to draw his love,
And render me more equal, and, perhaps,
A thing not undesirable, sometime
Superior; for inferior who is free?
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

——— And other suns perhaps,
With thir attendant moons thou wilt descrie,
Communicating male and femal light,
Which two great sexes animate the world
Stor'd in each orb perhaps with some that live.
Id. Ib. b. viii.

So if in the minority of natural vigour, the parts of feminality take place, when upon the encrease or growth thereof the masculine appear, the first design of nature is atchieved, and those parts are after maintained.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

And while all things are judg'd according to their suitableness or disagreement to the fond feminine, we shall be as far from the tree of knowledge, as from that, which is guarded by the Cherubim.—Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

Yet the fourth time when must'ring all her wiles,
With blandisht parlies, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watch't, and wearied out.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

The serpent said to the feminized Adam, why are you so demure.—More. Conject. Cabb. (1663.) p. 45.

Now to dispose the dead, the care remains
To you, my son, and you, my faithful swaine;
Th' offending females to that task we doom,
To wash, to scent, and purify the room.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxii.

We saw, as unperceiv'd we took our stand,
The backward labours of her faithless hand.
Then urg'd, she [Penelope] perfects her illustrious toils;
A wond'rous monument of female wiles!—Id. Ib. b. ii.

And when they consider, besides this the very formation of the word Κοινονημοσυνη upon the model of the other femalized virtues, the Ευγνωμοσυνη, Σωφροσυνη, Δικαιοσυνη, &c. they will no longer hesitate on this interpretation.
Shaftesbury. On the Freedom of Wit and Humour, pt. iii.

Could no more title take upon her
To virtue, quality, and honour,
Than ladies errant unconfin'd,
And feme-coverts to all mankind.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

The caterpillar cannot meet her companion in the air. The winged rover disdains the ground. They might never therefore be brought together, did not this radiant torch direct the volatile mate to his sedentary female.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

——— On his ear the cry
Of women struck, and like a deadly knell
Knock'd at that heart unmoved by battle's yell.
"Oh! burst the haram—wrong not, on your lives,
One female form—remember—we have wives."
Byron. The Corsair, c. 2. s. 5.

The which with pleasure so did her enthral,
That for ought else she had but little care,
For wealth, or fame, or honour feminal,
Or gentle love, sole king of pleasures natural.
Weal. On the Abuse of Travelling.

But nothing will be found of such extensive use for supplying the deficiences of Chaucer's metre, as the pronunciation of the e feminine, and as that pronunciation has been for a long time totally antiquated, it may be proper here to suggest some reasons for believing (independently of any arguments to be drawn from the practice of Chaucer himself) that the final e in our ancient language was very generally pronounced, as the e feminine is at this day by the French.—Tyrwhitt. Ess. on the Language and Versification of Chaucer.

Of higher birth he seem'd, and better days,
No mark of vulgar toil that hand betrays,
So femininely white it might bespeak
Another sex, when match'd with that smooth cheek,
But for his garb and something in his gaze,
More wild and high than woman's eye betrays.
Byron. Lara, c. 1. s. 27.

By marriage the husband and wife are one person in law: that is, the very being or legal existence of the woman is suspended during the marriage, or at least is incorporated and consolidated into that of the husband: under whose protection, wing, and cover, she performs every thing; and is therefore called in our law French a feme-covert, femina viro co-operta.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 15.

FE'MORAL. Lat. Femur, the thigh, quia, says Perottus, ferat ac sustineat animal. Vossius, from the obsolete feo.

Of or pertaining to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation.—Sharp. Surgery.

FEN. FE'NNISH. FE'NNY. Goth. Fani; A. S. Fenn; Dut. Venne. "Fen, or fan, is the past tense, and therefore past part. of fyn-igean, (to corrupt, to decay, to wither, to fade, to spoil in any manner;) and means,—corrupted, spoiled, decayed, withered. In modern speech (Tooke continues) we apply fen only to stagnated or corrupted water; but it was formerly applied to any corrupted, or decayed, or spoiled substance." (Div. of Pur. ii. 61. 76.) Nisus is said, by G. Douglas, to fall grufeling (grovelling) amid the fen or beistes blude of sacrifyce. And in Lybeaus Disconus, Ritson, Met. Rom. ii. 64, (referred to by Dr. Jamieson,)

And thorughout Synadowne
Both maydenes, and garsfoun,
Fowyll fen schull on the throwe.

See the quotation from Gilpin.

Grantebrugye and Hontyndone meet plente of deep fen.
R. Gloucester, p. 6.

He lyeth amõg the redes in the mosses, the fennes hyde hi with their shadowe, & the wylowes of the broke couer hym round about.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 40.

Also the mylk of beastes, fedynge in large pastures, and out of fennes and marshes, is better than of them whiche be fedde in lyttell closes, or in watry grounds.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 20.

It was not the northerne wind, whiche blustereth colde out of the cloudes: nor the southerne winde, that bryngeth warmthe with hym oute of the marryshe and fennes places, pestilente to all liuyng bodies.—Udal. Actes, c. 2.

But now his cruelty so sore she drad,
That to those fennes for fastnesse she did fly,
And there herselfe did hide from his hard tyranny.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

By reason that he [Hannibal] had overwatched himselfe, and the moist nights besides together with the dampe and moiste of the foggie fens stuffed his head and filled him full of rhewmes, and because neither time nor place serued for any cure and to take physicke, he lost one of his eyes quite.
Holland. Livius, p. 433.

Therefore is a little water proceeding from a good fountaine, by stones and leade kept from things that may hurt it, hardlier putrifyed and corrupted, than all the fennishe waters in the whole country, than mightie pooles, yea than the Thames itselfe.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 378.

Occasion calls the Muse her opinions to prepare,
Which (striking with the wind the vast and open air)
Now in the fenny heaths, then in the champains roves,
Now measures out this plain, and then surveys those groves.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3.

——— Here never shall you more,
O're hang this sad plaine with eternall night!
Or change the gaudy greene she whilome wore
To fenny blacke.—Browne. The Shepheard's Pipe, Ecl. 4.

The farre-fam'de fen-affecter (seeing him) said;
Ho! stranger! what are you? and whence, that tred
This shore of ours? who brought you forth? replie,
What truth may witnesse, lest I finde, you lie.
Chapman. Homer. Batrachomyomachia.

Come! by whatever sacred name disguis'd,
See Nature's richest plains to putrid fens
Turn'd by thy fury. Thomson. Liberty, pt. i.

Quicken'd with fire below, your monsters breed
In fenny Holland, and in fruitful Tweed.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Nor need we wonder how in a ditch, bank or glass plat newly dig'd, or in the fen-banks in the Isle of Ely, mustard should abundantly spring up, where in the memory of man none hath been known to grow, for it might come of seed that had lain there more than man's age.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The fen is a plashy inundation, formed on a flat—without depth—without lineal boundary—of ambiguous texture—half water, and half land—a sort of vegetable fluid.
Gilpin. On the Mountains and Lakes, s. 7.

Ah, luckless swain, o'er all unblest, indeed!
Whom late bewilder'd in the dank dark fen
Far from his flocks, and smoking hamlet, then!
Collins. On the Popular Superstitions of the Highlands.

He [Carausius] cut canals with vast labour and expence through all the eastern parts of Britain; at the same time, draining those fenny countries, and promoting communication and commerce.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, an. 286

FENCE, v. FENCE, n. FE'NCEFUL. FE'NCELESS. FE'NCER. FE'NCIBLE, n. FE'NCIBLE, adj. FE'NCIBLY. FE'NCING, n. FEND, v. FE'NDER. FE'NDING, n. Lat. Fend-ere, (used only in composition,) i. e. arcere, depellere; to drive away or repel; and thus—to keep safe or secure, guard or protect; and fence,—

That which keeps safe or secure, which guards or protects; a guard, security or protection; any hedge, enclosure, wall, mound, ditch, or other thing built or constructed for security or safety, or protection.

Fender, i. e. defender, that which fends, defends or guards. A common word in speech, but not in writing.

And fendede hem fro foule uvels, fevres and fluxes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 368.

For executynge of which disporte the place of Smithfelde by the kynge was appoynted, and barryd and fensyd for the same intent.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1508.

Such as are great men hauing yᵉ rewle of thinges, & such as are euil, shal murmour and grutche againste your doctrine. Against these men doe I send you forth naked, wᵗout weapõ or fense.—Udal. Luke, c. 10.

It is thought to be the surest fence, & strongest warde for that Religion, that they should be keapte still in ignorance, and know nothinge.—Jewell. Replie vnto M. Hardinge, p. 550.

Disciplina gladiatoria, is—the preceptes and way of trayning men in the weapons, and the schooles that maysters of fence kepe.—Udal. Flowres of Latine Speaking, fol. 153.

The whiche byshop had made there a stronge garyson, so that this castell doubted none assaute, for there was a square toure thick walled and fensably furnished for the warre.—Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 209

Walls here are men, who fence their cities more
Than Neptune, when he doth in mountains roar,
Doth guard this isle.—Drummond. Speech of Caledonia

No pitched battaile in plaine field, no campe so well fortified, no cities and fortes howsoever fenced were able to withstand the puissant Romanes in force of open armes.
Holland. Livius, p. 336

Dear! on yon mountain stands my humble cot,
'Gainst sun and wind by spreading oaks secur'd,
And with a fence of quickset round immur'd,
That of a cabin make't a shady grot.
Sherburne. A Shepherd inviting a Nymph to his Cottage.

You were never at the dealing of fence blowes, but you had foure away for your part.—Edwards. Damon & Pithias.

——— A bridge
Of length prodigious, joyning to the wall
Immovable of this now fenceless world,
Forfeit to Death. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

But to pourtraie in imagerie tables, and painted cloth, the publike shews of fencers and sword-players, and so set them up to be seen in open place to the view of the world, began by C. Terentius, a Lucan.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 7.

No fort so fenceble, nor wals so strong,
But that continuall battery will rive,
Or daily siege, through disparvayance long
And lacke of reskewes will to parley drive.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10

Now all this provision of foyle, fencing, stoning, planting, were nothing without a continuall over sight.
Bp. Hall. Sermon, at a Publick Feast, an. 1623.

And now, when the fence-fabrickes and all devices else requisite for a siege, were in readinesse, toward the end of the second watch, when the night happening to be very light with the moon shine, shewed all thinges evidently to those that stood upon the bulwarkes, suddenly a multitude gathered together in one plumpe, opened the gates at once, and sallied foorth.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 253.

And if some that have bin good at the foils, have proved cowardly at the sharp, yet on the contrary, who ever durst point a single combat in the field, that hath not bin somewhat trained in the fence-schoole.
Bp. Hall. Heaven upon Earth, s. 11.

Eug. You little think he was at fencing-school
At four o'clock this morning.
Sim. How at fencing-school!
Massinger. The Old Law, Act iii. sc. 2.

Your son and t' please you, sir, is new cashier'd yonder,
Cast from his mistress favour, and such a coil there is,
Such fending, and such proving.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act v. sc. 4.

And to explain what your forefathers meant,
By real presence in the sacrament,
After long fencing push'd against a wall,
Your salvo comes, that he's not there at all.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The fairest of the fruit he serves,
Priapus, thy rewards:
Sylvanus too his part deserves,
Whose care the fences guards.—Id. Horace Epode 2.

From side to side he darts his eager eyes;
When, lo! before him, in a full survey,
Exempt from war, the fenceless city lay.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

A man, in his full tide of youthful blood,
Able for arms, and for his country's good;
Urg'd by no pow'r, restrain'd by no advice,
But following his own inglorious choice.
'Mongst common fencers practices the trade,
That end debasing for which arms were made.
Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

ix. That all the fencible men in the nation [Scotland], betwixt 60 and 16, be armed with bayonets and firelocks, all of a caliver; and continue always provided in such arms and ammunition suitable.
Parliamentary History, an. 1706. App. No. 1.

When he [the Marquis of Northampton] was crossed, or contentious with any, he never replied to any answer; which, he said, was a manifest sign of no strong spirit. It was a manifest sign indeed of no contentious spirit, and that delighted not in fending and proving, as we say.
Strype. Memorials, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 28.

He fends his flock, and clad in homely frize,
In the warm cot the wintry blast defies.—Philips, Past. 6.

The moderns, on the contrary, have their guards and fences about them; and we hold it an incivility to approach them without some decent periphrasis, or ceremonial title—
——— gaudent prænomine molles
Auriculæ.
Hurd. The Manner of Writing Dialogue, Pref

Then swiftly drawing forth his trenchant blade,
High o'er his head he held his fenceful shield.
West. Education.

Where, then, ah! where shall poverty reside,
To 'scape the pressure of contiguous pride?
If to [illegible] common's fenceless limits stray'd,
He drives his flock to pick the scanty blade,
Those fenceless fields the sons of wealth divide,
And e'en the bare-worn common is deny'd.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

The most prominent of these objectionable estimates, he agreed with the honourable gentleman, was that of the Manx fencibles.
Windham. Speech. Army Estimates, Feb. 26, 1806.

In the American war the fencible regiments received higher bounties for limited service, than others did unlimited, and yet there was no complaint on the part of the latter.—Id. Ib. April 3, 1806.

FENERA'TION. "Fr. Fénération,—usury or the practice thereof," (Cotgrave.) Fenerator a fenore est cognominatus; fenus autem dictum a fetu, et quasi a feturâ quâdam pecuniæ parientis atque increscentis, (Varro.) The product or increase of money."

To fenerate, Cockeram explains, "To put money to usury."

And what vices therein it [the Hare] figured, that is, not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, feneration or usury from its fecundity and superfetation; but, &c.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 17.

FENE'STRE. } Dut. Venster; Ger. Fenster;
FENE'STRAL. } Sw. Fenster; It. Fenestra; Sp. Hemestra; Fr. Fenestre; Lat. Fenestra; perhaps ἀπο του φαιν-ειν, (q.) Phœnestra, that through which light is admitted. (See Vossius, and Wachter, in v. Fenster.) Among the ancient Romans,—

Openings in the wall to admit the light; (perhaps—air, vent-us;)—a wind-ow.

He let caste thys traytor in the euenynge late
At fenestre in Temese. R. Gloucester, p. 312.

——— Low how men wryten
In fenestres at the freres.—Piers Ploughman, p. 262.

Then was Faith in a fenestre, cryde o fili David,
As doth an heraud of armes.—Id. p. 339.

——— Of castell Angell the fenestrell
Glittryng and glustring and gloriously glased
It made some mennes eyen dasyld and dased.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

After his [Dugdales] death, Lord Fairfax took into his possession not only all the old MSS. but also his collections of monumental and fenestral inscriptions, &c.
Wood. Fasti Oxon. vol. ii.

FE'NIGREEK. Fænogræcum; Fr. Fenugrec. See the quotation.

Fenigreeke commeth not behind the other hearbe before specified, in credit and account for the vertues which it hath: the Greeks call it Telus and Carphos: some name it Buceras and Agoceras, for that the seed resembleth little horne: wee in Latine tearme it Silicia or Siliquia.
Holland. Plinie, p. 207.

FE'NNEL. A.S. Fenol; Fr. Fenouil; Dut. Venckel; Ger. Fenchel; all, says Skinner, from the Lat. Fæniculum, which Vossius thinks may be from Fenum, quia ubi exaruit, feno similis sit. Isidorus, from Φαινεσθαι, because its juice sharpens the sight.
See the quotation from Pliny.

A ferthing worth of fynkel-sede, for fastynge daies.
Piers Ploukman, p. 106.

Fenell being eaten, the sede or rote maketh abundance of mylke.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

As for fenell, the serpents have woon it much credit, and brought it into name, in this regard, that by tasting thereof (as I have already noted) they cast their old skin, and by the juice that it yeeldeth doe cleare their eyes: whereby we also are come to know that this hearb hath a singular propertie to mundifie our sight and take away the filme or web that overcasteth and dimmeth our eyes.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 23.

The seed of ferula or fennell-geant is counted good meat in Italie: for it is put in pots of earth well stopped, and will continue a whole yeare.—Id. Ib. b. xix. c. 9.

The most friendly to the stomach, is fennel.
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 3.

You can by no culture or art extend a fennel-stalk to the stature and bigness of an oak.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

The species of caterpillar which eats the vine, will starve upon the elder; nor will that which we find upon fennel, touch the rose bush.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

FE'NNOW, or } In Kent, Junius says, is
FI'NNOW. } mucidus, mouldy, from the A.S. Fynig-can, mucescere, to be mouldy; Somner says, to wax fennewed; and fynig, finnewy. (See FEN.) Mr. Justice Blackstone has remarked, that in "the Preface to King James's Bible, the translators speak of fenowed," i. e. vinewed or mouldy translations. Note on Shakespeare, Troilus & Cressida, Act ii. sc. 1. See VINEW.

The old moth-eaten leaden legend, and the foisty and fenowed festival are yet secretly laid up in corners.
Dr. Favour. Antiquities. Triumph over Novelty, (1619,) p. 334.

FE'OD. See FEUD.

FE'OFF, or } See ENFEOFF, FEE, &c. Fee
FIEF. } is the old Fr. Fe; Lat. Fides;
FE'OFFER. } and a fee, any thing granted by FE'OFFER. } one, and held by another, upon FE'OFFMENT. } oath or promise of fealty or fidelity. And to feoff is—
To give or grant, yield, surrender or give possession of, (sc.) a feud, fief or fee.

And men of relygyon of Normandie al so
He feffede here myd londes, and myd rents al so.
R. Gloucester, p. 368.

The abbey of Rumeye he feffed richely,
With rentes fulle gode & kirkes of pris.—R. Brunne, p. 35.

After the forty dayes of that feffement,
Philip, without delayes, sallo gyue that ilk tenement
Tille Edward & tille Blanche, and ther heirs of tham comen
Id. p. 254

And feffe falsenesse, wit floreynes ynowe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 22

Than Symonye and Cyvyle, stode forth bothe
And unseeld that feffement. Id. p. 27.

Nay God forbid to feffe you so with grace.
Chaucer. The Court of Love.

I trow it were to longe you to tary,
If I you told of every script and bond,
By which that she was feoffed in his lond
Or for to rekken of hire rich array.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9372.

Coranus shal a feoffement force;
and eke the writting scale,
A cutting write for Scipio,
which he ne shal repeale.—Drant. Horace, b. ii. Sat 5.

In the fourth book he shal find Anastatius a married presbyter, feoffed in some tẽporalties which he would rather die than not leave to his issue.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. ii. s. 8.

Godlinesse can give wisdome to the foole, eyes to the blind, life to the dead; it can eject Devils, change the course of nature, create us anew, free us from evill, feoffe us in good, honour, wealth, contentment, everlasting happinesse.
Id. b. xxiv. c. 19. The Hypocrite.

And though his majesty came to them by descent, yet it was but in nature of the heire of a feoffee in trust, for the use and service of the kingdome; as a king in his politicke; not as a man or proprietor in his natural capacity.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt. ii. p. 12.

He ha's a quarrell to carry, and ha's caused
A deed of feoffment, of his whole estate,
To be drawne yonder.
B. Jonson. The Divell is an Asse, Act iv. sc. 6.

The iurisdiction as touching feofments upon trust, [Jurisdictionem de fides commissis,] which was wont yeere by yeere and onely within the citie to be committed unto the magistrates, hee ordained to hold by patent for ever.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 165.

But the voyce went, and rumours ran abroad, that Constantius in his time had made his last will and testament, wherein he did set downe, as I said before, Julian to be his heire, and gave to those whom he loved, feoffments upon trust, and legacies.—Id. Ammianus, p. 185.

A chamber of dependencies was fram'd,
(As conquerours will never want pretence,
When arm'd, to justify th' offence)
And the whole fief in right of Poetry, she claim'd.
Dryden. To the Pious Memory of Mrs. Anne Killigrew.

She [Spain] is a province of the Jacobin empire, and she must make peace or war according to the orders she receives from the Directory of assassins: in effect and substance, her crown is a fief of regicide.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

FERA'CIOUS. } Lat. Ferax, acis, bearing;
FERA'CITY. } from ferre, to bear. See FERTILE.
Bearing, producing, fruitful.

This firm Republic, that against the blast
Of opposition rose; that (like an oak,
Nurs'd on feracious Algidum, whose boughs
Still stronger shoot beneath the ridged axe)
By loss, by slaughter, from the steel itself,
Ev'n force and spirit drew.—Thomson. Liberty, pt. iii.

Such writers, instead of brittle, would say fragile, instead of fruitfulness, feracity.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 3.

FE'RAL. Feralia ab inferis, et ferendo; quod ferunt tum epulas ad sepulcrum, quibus jus ibi parentare, (Varro, lib. v.) Vossius thinks from the Æolic accus. Φηρα, feram: quæ enim fera magis effera est morte?
Of or appertaining to funerals; deadly.

Mars and Hercules, and I know not how many besides of old were deified, went this way to heaven, that were indeed bloudy butchers, wicked destroyers and troublers of the world, prodigious monsters, hel-hounds, feral plagues, devourers, cõmon executioners of humane kind, as Lactantius truly proves.—Burton. Democritus to the Reader, p. 33.

FE'RDNESS, i. e. fearfulness. Ferdly is still used, Jamieson says, as fearfully.

In the Glossary of obsolete words in Wiclif's New Testament we find, ferdful, fearful, terrible; but the reference is to Jer. xvii. Cant. vi. (which remain in MS.)

And that innocence sikerly withouten tenefull annoy among shrewes safely might enhabite by protection of safe conduct, so that shrewes harm for harm by bralle of ferdnesse shoulden restraine.—Chaucer. Test. of Loue, b. iii.

This iclousye in ful thought, euer should be kept for ferdnes to lese his loue by miskeping thorowe his owne doing in lewdnesse, or els thus.—Il. Ib.

FERE. } (Also written Phere.) A. S. Fera,
FE'REHRAD. } ge-fera: Socius, comes, sodalis; a fellow, a companion, a mate. We as yet sometimes say a feer in the same sense, (Sommer.) Perhaps (says Skinner) from A. S. Far-an, ire, proficisci; (q. d.) itineris particeps; a fellow-traveller.

A fellow, a mate, an associate, a companion: also, company, fellowship.

A dogter ich haue of gret prys, & noble & god al so,
Y geue here the to thi wyf, &, gef thou walt by leue here,
The thridde del my kyndom y geue to be my fere.
R. Gloucester, p. 12.

Eldol Erl of Gloucestre, as he wende in this ferhede
Toward the batail, to the kyng these wordes he seyde.
Id. p. 138.

Godwyn, an Erle of Kent, met with Alfred,
Hem & alle his feres vntale prison tham led
R. Brunne, p. 52.

What wendest thou, fondes fere?
I nervstenede that were
Tyd y saw the wyth syght.
Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

Kyng Richard entered without drede,
Hym followed ful great ferhede.
Richard Cœur de Lion. Weber, vol. ii.

For though in earth twinned be we twain,
Yet in the felde of pitie, out of pain
That hight Elisos, shall we ben yfere
As Orpheus and Eurydice his fere.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

And right anon she for her conseil sente,
And they ben comen, to know what she mente;
And whan assembled was this folk in fere,
She set hire doun, and sayd as ye shal here.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4748.

Fidelia and Speranza virgins were,
Though spoused, yet wanting wedlock's solemnize;
But faire Charissa to a louely feere
Was linked, and by him had many pledges deere.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

In which regards, she both delighted me, and also yeelded no small testimony of rare debonairity that nature had endued her withal; for she would make prety meanes to her nurse, and seem (as it were) to entreat her to give the brest or pap, not onely to other infants, like herselfe, her play-feeres, but also to little babies and puppets, and such like gawds as little ones take joy in, and wherewith they use to play.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 439.

——— Lauinia kneele,
And kneele sweet boy, the Romane Hector's hope,
And sweare with me, as with the wofull feere
And father of that chast dishonoured dame,
Lord Junius Brutus sware for Lucrece rape,
That we will prosecute (by good aduise)
Mortalle reuenge vpon these traytorous Gothes,
And see their blood, or die with this reproach.
Shakespeare. Titus Andronicus, Act iv. sc. 1.

FE'RETORY. Lat. Feretrum, (from ferre, to bear.) A bier.

Weaver saye expressly that the abbat brought back with him from Rome workmen and rich porphyry stones for Edward the Confessor's feretory; and for the pavement of the chapel.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 1.

In 1163, Hen. III. lodged his [Edward the Confessor's] body in a costly feretry, translating it from its pristine place.
Pennant. London, p. 84.

FE'RIE, n. } Lat. Feriæ (Vossius) was originally Fesiæ, for which see FE'RIAL. } FESTIVAL. The Glossarist to FERIA'TION. } Wiclif says,—"Feries, Lat. feasts, holydays. Levit. xiii. fairs."

They did learn to dance, and to sing, and to play on instruments on the feriall days.—Dugdale. Orig. Judic. c. 55.

Why should the Christian church have lesse power than the Jewish synagogue? here was not a meere feriation, but a feasting; they must appeare before God cum muneribus—with gifts.—Bp. Hall. The Poole of Bethesda.

Brown has words still more extraordinary, as feriation, for keeping holiday, dedentition, for falling the teeth, &c.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 3.

FE'RINE. } Lat. Ferinus, from fera, Θηρα:
FE'RINENESS. } Æolic accus. for Θηρα: from
FE'RITY. } Θε-ειν, currere, to run, so called from its speed, (says Lennep:) ab impetu feridiori quo ruit, (Scheidus.)

Of or pertaining to a wild beast; wild, savage, ferocious.

4. The only difficulty that seems to remain, is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts, as lions, tigers, wolves, boars, and foxes with which that continent abounds: for it is not probable that these should be transported by shipping.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 202.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a more barbarous habit of life and manners, would easily assimilate, at least, the next generation to barbarism and ferineness.—Id. Ib. p. 197.

If he be not absolutely arrived to Arrian's ἀπολιθωσις του πρακτικου (his practical as well as judicative faculty, quite quarr'd and petrified within him) to that ἀπονοια in the Gospel, that direct ferity and brutality, in comparison of which, the most crest-fal'n numness, palsie or lethargy of soul, were dignity and preferment.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 576.

And though the blindness of some ferities have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and been so injurious unto worms, as to disenter the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. vii. c. 19.

They who use to eat or drink blood are apt to degenerate into ferity, and cruelty, and easiness of revenge.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2. Rule 2.

FE'RLY, n. } A. S. Færlic, ferlic, repentinus,
FE'RLY, adj. } suddain, unlooked for, (Somner;) which Dr. Jamieson says is undoubtedly formed from A. S. Faer, subitus, and lic, (like,) having the appearance of suddenness,—i. e. of coming from afar; for faer, subitus, is from A. S. Far-an, ire; and thus, ferly, (sometimes written, farly,) is—

Any thing foreign, strange, and therefore, surprising, wonderful; surprise, wonder.

Bot I haf grete ferly, that I fynd no man,
That has writen in story, how Hanclok thys lond wan.
R. Brunne, p. 25.

Ther speres poynt ouer poynt, so sare & so pikke,
& fast togidere joynt, to se it was ferlike.—Id. p. 305.

Many ferlies han fallen.—Piers Ploukman, p. 4.

——— And ferliche me thynketh.—Id. p. 291.

A wilde fire upon his bodies falle,
Wha herkned ever alike a ferly thing?
Ye, they shall have the flour of yvel ending.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4171.

My father hight Sir Edmund Mortimer,
The Earle of Marche, whence I was after earle,
By just descent these two my parents were
Of which the one of knighthood bare the fearle,
Of womanhood the other was the pearle.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 273.

FE'RMENT, v. } Fr. Fermenter; It. Fer-
FE'RMENT, n. } mentare; Sp. Fermentar;
FERMENTAL. } Lat. Fermentum, q. fervi-
FERMENTA'TION. } mentum, a fervendo, quia
FERME'NTATIVE. } massam in quâ continetur, quasi fervefacit, et attollit, turgidamque reddit; Vossius, from Isidorus; (because it raises and swells the mass in which it is contained.)

To raise, to swell, (sc.) by the motion or action of internal parts; to cause or have, an internal commotion or tumult, an internal heat.

And eke of our materes encorporing,
And of our silver citrination,
Our cementing and fermentation.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,260.

It is not more naturall for the sun, when it looks upon a moist, and well fermented earth, to cause vapours to ascend thence, then it is for greatnesse, and goodnesse, when they both meet together upon an honest heart, to draw up holy desires of gratulation.—Bp. Hall. A Sermon, 29 Jan. 1625.

To which I add, (4.) That the familiar doth not only suck the witch, but in the action infuseth some poisonous ferment into her, which gives her imagination and spirits a magical tincture, whereby they become mischievously influential; and the word veneficus intimates some such matter.
Glanvill, Ess. 6.

That containing little salt or spirit, they [cucumbers] may also debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomack, we readily concede.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 7.

Some used to put thereunto [the juice out of mulberries] myrrhe and cypresse, setting all to frie and take their fermentation in the sun, untill it grew to hardnesse in the foresaid vessell, stirring it thrice a day with a spatula.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 17.

Their courage dwells not in a troubled flood
Of mountain spirits, and fermenting blood;
Lodg'd in the soul with virtue over-rul'd,
Inflam'd by reason and by reason cool'd.
Addison. The Campaign

The nation is in too high a ferment for me to expect either fair war, or even fair quarter from a reader of the opposite party.—Dryden. Hind & Panther, Pref.

At thy command the vernal sun awakes
The torpid sap, detruded to the root
By wintry winds; that now in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerous-colour'd scene of things.
Thomson. Spring

Raven. This blood, I think, my lord, must be extravasated by the violence of his gripes, for it is proved he drank a great quantity of claret, and afterwards of small-beer, which set the blood upon a fermentation, that set him a vomiting.
State Trials. Earl of Pembroke, an. 1668.

Compound aromatical spirits destroy, first, by their fermentative heat. Secondly, &c.—Arbuthnot. Aliments, c. 5.

But I had to do with another class of men, with holy inquisitors of sordid minds, and sour spirits: priestly reformers, whose sense was noise, and religion fanaticism, and that too fermented with the leven of earthly avarice and ambition.
Hurd. Dial. On Sincerity in the Commerce of the World.

We can easily conceive how that high ferment, by which lightning is formed, may produce a natural phosphorus, in the same manner as a long process by fire makes the artificial.—Warburton. Of Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple, b. ii. c. 3.

It is not a fermentative process; for the solution begins at the surface, and proceeds towards the centre, contrary to the order in which fermentation acts and spreads.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

FE'RMILLET. Fr. Fermaillet,—a small buckle or clasp, (sc.) to hold firmly or fast.

Those stones were sustained or stayed by buckles and fermillets of gold for more firmness.
Donne. History of the Sept. p. 49.

FERN. } From A. S. Fearn; Dut. Vaeren-
FE'RNY. } kruyd; Ger. Faren-kraut, from A. S. Faran; Dut. Vaeren; Ger. Fahren, to go; because this plant everywhere meets the traveller or way-faring man, (Skinner.)

There is a change in the bread, saith M. Harding, but not in the accidentes thereof; ergo, in the substance. In like order of reason he might haue said, it is not a fearn-bushe
Jewell. Defence, pt. ii. p. 255.

When they far'd best, they fed on fern and brack,
Their lean shrunk bellies clear'd up to their back.
Drayton. The Moon-Calf

As still this goodly train yet every hour increas'd,
And from the Surrian shores clear Wey came down to meet
His greatness, whom the Thames so graciously doth greet,
That with the fern-crown'd flood he minion-like doth play.
Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

The seeds of fern, which by prolific heat
Cherish'd, and unfolded, form a plant so great,
Are less a thousand times than what the eye
Can, unassisted by the tube, descry
Blackmore. Creation, b. x.

For when the herd suffis'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to the forest lare,
She made a mannerly excuse to stay
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. i.

Else, when the flowerets of the season fail,
And this your ferny shade forsakes the vale,
Though one would save you, not one grain of wheat,
Should pay such songsters idling at my gate.
Parnell. The Fairy

Or, if your sheep are of Silurian breed,
Nightly to house them dry on fern or straw,
Sinkening their fleeces.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

Sift then yourself, I say, and sift again;
Glean the pernicious tares from out the grain.
And ask thy heart, if custom, Nature's heir,
Hath sown no undiscover'd fern-seed there.
Smart. The Horatian Canons of Friendship.

FERO'CIOUS. } Fr. Féroce; It. Feroce;
FERO'CIOUSNESS. } Sp. Feroz; Lat. Ferox. See
FERO'CITY. } FIERCE.

Fierce, savage, ravenous.

The lyon, a fierce and ferocious animal, hath young ones but seldome, and but one at a time.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 16.

Though they seem tame beasts and may admit a while to be plaid with: yet on a soddain, and when we think not on't, they will return to their natural deceit and ferocity.
Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 74.

Slow rose a form, in majesty of mud:
Shaking the horrours of his sable brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze,
Greater he looks, and more than mortal stares;
Then thus the wonders of the deep declares.
Pope. Dunciad, b. ii.

The fir-trees and the cedars of Lebanon (under which images the parabolic style frequently delineates the kings and princes of the Gentiles) exult with joy, and persecute with contemptuous reproaches the humbled power of a ferocious enemy.—Louth, Lect. 13. by Gregory.

The host, like dogs contending o'er their prey,
With curs'd ferocity their comrades slay,
Then leave on earth their mangled trunks behind,
Like pines or oaks uprooted by the wind.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius, b. iv.

It [Christianity] has abated the ferociousness of war.
Blair, vol. i. Ser. 6.

To this ferocity there is joined not one of the rude, unfashion'd virtues, which accompany the vices, where the whole are left to grow up together in the rankness of uncultivated nature.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

FE'RREOUS. } Lat. Ferreus, from Ferrum,
FERRU'GINOUS, or } iron; which Vossius thinks
FERRUGI'NEOUS. } may be so called—a feritate.
Having the properties of iron, irony.

But this upon enquiry, and as Cebeus hath also observed, is nothing else but a weak and inanimate kind of loadstone, veyned here and there with a few magnetical and ferreous lines.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 3.

And if we yet make a more exact enquiry, by what this salt of vitriol more peculiarly gives this colour, we shall find it to form a metalline condition, and especially an iron property or ferreous participation.—Id. Ib. b. vi. c. 12.

By a diligent enquiry, there may be discovered in England (and in divers other countries too) a far greater number than is yet imagined, of mineral waters, especially ferruginous ones.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 798.

By this means I found the German spa to retain a little acidity, even here at London; but more than one of our own ferruginous springs did not, even upon this trial, appear to have any.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 814.

Hence they are cold, hot, sweet, stinking, purgative, diuretick or ferrugineous.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

FE'RRET, v. } Fr. Furet; It. Fiarretto; Lat.
FE'RRET, n. } Viverra. Junius says, they are thought to be called from Φωρ, fur, whence some name them furunculi, because they are animals of wonderful subtilty in thieving stores.
"Fr. Fureter,—to ferret, to search, hunt, boult out; pry, look, spie narrowly into every corner of," (Cotgrave.)

And when young men were forbidden boules, and suche other games: some fell to drinkyng, and some to feretyng of other mennes conies, and stealyng of dere in parkes, and other vnthriftines.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 18.

Con. Make fast the doors, for fear they do escape,
Let's in, and ferret out these cheating rake-hells.
Carturight. The Ordinary, Act v. sc. 4.

Ferrets are in great account for chasing and hunting of conies: the manner is to put them into their earths, which within ground have many waies and holes like mines, and thereupon these creature are called Cuniculi: and when they are within, they so course the poore conies from out of their earth, that they are soon taken above ground at the mouth of their holes.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 55.

I am a Lord of other geere! this fine
Smooth Bawson Cub, the young Grice of a Gray;
Twa tynie Urshins, and this ferret gay.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc. 2.

I know many of those that pretend to be great Rabbies in these studies, have scarce saluted them from the strings, and the title-page; or to give them more, have bin but the ferrets and mouse hunts of an index.
Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Has light legs else I had so ferret-claw'd him.
Beaum. & Fletch. Women Pleas'd, Act iii. sc. 4.

I ordered the proper officer of my court to ferret them out of their respective caves, and bring them before me
Tatler, No. 131.

From each low passion, from each low resort,
The thieving alley, nay, the righteous court,
From Bertie's, Almacks', Arthur's, and the nest
Where Judah's ferrets earth with Charles unbleat!
Langhorn. The Country Justice, pt. ii.

FE'RRULE. From the Lat. Ferrum, iron. "Fr. Virole,—an iron ring put about the end of a staff, &c. to strengthen, and keep it from riving," (Cotgrave.)

The fingers' ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortifie the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferules.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

FE'RRY, v. } A.S. Faru; Ger. Fare; Dut.
FE'RRY, n. } Vaer, veer; Sw. Farja. From FE'RRYAGE. } A. S. Faran, to go. See FORD.
A passage, (sc.) by water.

Blow but gently, blow favre winde,
From the forsaken shore,
And be as to the halcyon kind,
Till we have ferry'd o're.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

But that a book in worse condition than a peccant soul, should be to stand before a jury ere it be born to the world, and undergo yet in darkness the judgment of Radamanth and his colleagues ere it can pass the ferry backward into light, was never heard before.
Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

A number of horses swam after the ships, haled by the bridle raines which were tied to the poupes, beside those, which being sadled and bridled, and fitted to serve the men of armes so soon as they were landed, were bestowed in barges and ferry-botes.—Holland. Livius, p. 408.

So forth they rowed; and that ferry-man
With his stiffe oars did brush the sea so strong,
That the hoare waters from his frigot ran,
And the light bubles daunced all along,
While the salt brine out of the billowes sprong
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Physic, journeying, ferriage, carriage, &c.
Strype. Life of Parker, b. iv. c. 25.

But no one seems to have been the object of her admiration so much as the accomplished Phaon, a young man of Lesbos; who is said to be a kind of ferry man, and thence fabled to have carried Venus over the stream in his boat, and to have received from her as a reward, the favour of becoming the most beautiful man in the world.
Fawkes. The Life of Sappho.

The next thing observable is the ferry-man, Charon; and he the learned well know, was a man of this world, an Egyptian of a well-known character.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

FE'RTILE, adj. } Fr. Fertile; It. Fertile;
FE'RTILENESS. } Sp. Fertil; Lat. Fertilis,
FERTI'LITATE. } (from ferre, to bear;) by FERTI'LITY. } corrupt usage, that can or
FERTILI'ZE, v. } may bear; properly, that can or may be borne. Feltham uses fertile as a verb.
That can or may bear or produce; productive; generally, with a subaudition of abundance or plenteousness.

For neyther was the ayre more temperate in all the world than in Asia, nor the soyle more fertile, nor more plentie of fayre and pleasaunt cyties.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 160.

He, according to the fertileness of the Italian wit, did not only afford us the demonstration of his practice, but sought to enrich our mind with the contemplation therein.
Sidney. The Defence of Poesy.

The Belgies for the most part were descêded of Germanes, who passing the Rhine time out of mind, and setling themselues there bycause of the fertillitye of the soyle, draue out ye Galles that dwelt there before.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 46.

Now to certifie you of the fertillitie and goodnesse of the countrey, you shall vnderstand that I haue in sundry places sowen wheate, barlie, rie, oates, beanes, pease, and seedes of herbs, kernels, plumetones, nuts, all which haue prospered as in England.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 132.

But then again, he that hopes too much, shall cozen himself at last; especially, if his industry goes not along to fertile it.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 81.

Their bounty falls like rain, and fertiles all that's under them.—Id. pt. ii. Res. 39.

And in the stead of their eternal fame
Was the cool stream that took his endless name,
From out the fertile hoof of winged steed.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 2.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded for many weeks after.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 28.

Whence notwithstanding we cannot infer a fertilitating condition or propertie of fecundation.—Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 7.

The fields, which answer'd well the ancient's plough,
Spent and out worn, return no harvest now;
In barren age wild and unglorious lie
And boast of past fertility;
The poor relief of present poverty.
Cowley. To Mr. Hobbs.

We may say of this unhappy fecundity, that our earth needs no rain to fall upon it, that is, no external provocation to fertilize it, there ryseth a mist out of itself that watereth it, to wit, our innate perversity.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 2. s. 1.

Superstition may seem in the name (saint-foin, or holy hay:) but I assure you there is nothing but good husbandry in the sowing thereof, as being found to be a great fertilizer of barren ground.—Fuller. Worthies. Kent.

Her [Mantua] mighty walls, illustrious founders grace,
Of diff'rent countries, and a different race,
Three tribes distinct possess her fertile lands,
And four fair cities every tribe commands.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. x.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy; and the accuracy in the expression.—Dryden. Letter to Sir R. Howard.

Thou art the garden of the world, the home
Of all Art yields, and Nature can decree;
Even in thy desert, what is like to thee?
Thy very weeds are beautiful, thy waste
More rich than other climes' fertility.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4.

The foe, the victim, and the fond ally
That fights for all, but never fights in vain,
Are met—as if at home they could not die—
To feed the crow on Talavera's plain,
And fertilize the field that each pretends to gain.
Id. Ib. c. 1.

FE'RULE. } Lat. Ferula, a feriendo, from FE'RULA. } beating or striking.
FE'RULAR. }

The eye of the parent, and the ferule of the master, is all too little to bring our sonnes to good.
Bp. Hall. A Censure of Travel.

What advantage is it to be a man, over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only escap'd the ferular, to come under the fescue of an imprimatur.—Milton. Unlicensed Printing.

The generous nature likes himself then the worst, when he must appear a pedagogue with a rod or ferula ever in his hand, the good inclination is soonest wonne by fair and civill dealings.—Feltham, pt. ii. Resolve 40.

If I had leisure, or that if it were worth my while, I could reckon up so many barbarisms of yours in this one book, as if you were to be chastis'd for them as you deserve, all the school boys' ferulas in Christendome would be broken upon you.—Milton. A Defence of the People of England.

It may be he thinks of those ancient ferule fingred baypopes: one of the Benedicts, a grave father of tenne yeeres old, or John the thirteenth, an aged stripling of nineteene.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie.

FE'RVENT. } Fr. Fervent; It. Fervente;
FE'RVENCY. } Sp. Herviente; Lat. Fervens,
FE'RVENTLY. } from Fervere, to warm, to be FE'RVENTNESS. } or cause to be warm; (of un-FE'RVID. } certain origin.)
FE'RVIDNESS. } Warm, glowing, burning,
FE'RVOUR. } ardent.

What euer it be, yt me hath thus purchased
Wening hath not deceiued me certain
But feruent loue, so sore hath me ychased
That I vnware, am casten in your chaine.
Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

Min hart welkneth thus sone, anon it riseth
Now hotte, now cold, and eft in feruence.
Id. Boecius, b. i.

The which frends feruently him pray
To send after more. Id. Troilus, b. iv.

For so sone as by ouerlong continuyng in that dulnesse of prayer, the feruentnes therof & deuotion is once colde in our myndes, we do forthwith lose the inwarde consolation of our myndes, whiche that feruencie of deuotion, not beyng utterlye extynguyshed, wrought and preserued in vs.
Fisher. On Prayer.

The ryuer of Cydnus spoken of before, dyd runne through thys cytte where the kynge arryued about myddaye, yt beynge in the sommer season, what time the heat ys no where more feruent than in that countrey.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 27.

For those Christians, that were conuerted frō the heathē, in the whole world, dyd imbrace & receyue the Gospel, very desyrously & feruently framing theyr lyues in euery condicion ther after.—Udal. Reuelation, c. 7.

Come vnto me with fayth and aske in the feruentnesse of soule.—Bale. Image, pt. i. sig. G 3.

Our lorde then, as he sometime dydde in other thingis, touche and temper the zeale of Peter thorow feruoure and hete somwhat vndiscrete.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1316.

Where the mind was to be edify'd with solid doctrine, there the fancy was sooth'd with solemn stories: with less fervency was studied what Saint Paul or Saint John had written than was listen'd to one that could say here he taught, here he stood, this was his stature.
Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

Ev'n at the point of parting they unfold
With fervent zeal, how only he rely'd
Upon the merits of the precious death
Of his Redeemer.
Daniel. On the Death of the Earl of Devonshire.

Even so many there be who conceive pleasure in philosophy, and make semblance as if they had a fervent desire to the study thereof; but if it chance that they be a little rettted from it by occasion of other businesse and affaires, the first affection which they tooke unto it vanisheth away, and they can well abide to be without philosophy.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 204.

They were cloyed with God, while he was perpetually resident with them, now that his absence had made him dainty, they cleave to him fervently, and penitently in his returne.—Bp. Hall. Cont. The Remove of the Ark.

While she seemed to hang upon a cross as it were by the ferventnesse of her praier, she much comforted the rest of the saints.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 43. The first Persecutions.

For Chaos heard His voice: Him all His traine
Follow'd in bright procession to behold
Creation, and the wonders of His might.
Then staid the fervid wheels.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. vii.

And whilst together merry thus they make,
The sun to west a little 'gan to lean,
Which the late fervour soon again did stake,
When as the Nymphs came forth upon the plain.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl. 9.

Consulting secret with the blue-ey'd maid,
Still in the dome divine Ulysses stay'd:
Revenge mature for act inflam'd his breast,
And thus the son the fervent sire address'd.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

Even David himself was fain to call upon his soul with repeated fervency, and excite every faculty within him, "to bless the Lord, who had forgiven his iniquities, and redeemed his life from destruction, and crowned him with loving kindness and tender mercies."
Bates. Mr. D. Clarkson's Funeral Sermon.

I told him the Church had appointed an office at the visitation of the sick, and I must use that, and he said, yes, he chiefly desired the prayers of the Church, wherein he joined with great fervency and devotion.
Parl. Hist. Chas. II. an. 13. Let. from Dr. Bridcock.

Ah me! the sweet infus'd desires,
The fervid wishes, holy fires,
Which thus a melted heart refine,
Such are his, and such be mine.
Parnell. The Happy Man.

For though the person [Malchus] was wholly unworthy of so gracious a cure, yet in the account of the meek Lamb of God it was a kind of injury done to him by the fervidness of St. Peter, who knew not yet what spirit he was of, and that his master's kingdom was not of this world.
Bentley, Ser. 6.

As down the hill I solitary go,
Some power divine, who pities human woe,
Sent a tall stag, descending from the wood,
To cool his fervour in the crystal flood.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

The Poet cannot always fill himself with inspiration, nor the Philosopher with his clear discernment of abstracted Truth, nor the Religious man with his ardours and transports; therefore the want of a fervent faith and glowing zeal is not so much the mark of reprobation, as a present indisposition of the organs.
Search. The Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

Yet did I love thee to the last
As fervently as thou,
Who didst not change through all the past,
And canst not alter now.
Byron. Stanzas, s. 3.

Whither, Simichidas, so fast away,
Now when meridian beams inflame the day?
Now when green lizards in the hedges lie,
And crested larks forsake the fervid sky.
Fawkes. The Idyllium of Theocritus, Idyl. 7.

Thus while she spoke, her eye, sedately meek,
Look'd the pure fervour of maternal love.
Beattie. The Judgment of Paris.

FE'SCENNINE, n. } Lat. Fescennini, a
FE'SCENNINE, adj. } Fescinid, Hetruriæ civitate.

See the quotation from Crusius.

Their fescennis and Atellan way of wit was in early days prohibited, and laws made against it, for the publick's sake, and in regard to the welfare of the community; such licentiousness having been found in reality contrary to the just liberty of the people.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii.

Besides these hymns, the Romans had their fescennine verses, so called from a town of that name in Campania. They were a kind of impromptu's, and made up of low wit, and scurrilous jests, such as the ignorant clowns and common people may be imagined capable of making, at their feasts, upon getting in their harvest.
Crusius. Lives of the Roman Poets, Introd.

Satire, in its origin, I mean in the rude fescennine farce, from which the idea of this poem was taken, was a mere extemporaneous jumble of mirth and ill nature.
Hurd. On Epistolary Writings.

FE'SCUE. See FESTUE.

FE'STAL. } Fr. and Sp. Festival; Lat.
FE'STIVAL, n. } Festus, festivus. See FEAST.
FE'STIVAL, adj. } Mr. Gifford thinks that in FE'STIVE. } the expression festival exceedings, Massinger alludes to a
FESTI'VITY. } dish in addition to the regular dinner, which at the Middle Temple still retains the name of Exceedings.

How many festiuall bygh dayes to worship saints haue thei made themselues to call poore men from their daily labours and lucre to serue their idle belys.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

Aristomenes of Messene, a good and iust man, when he had conquered the Lacedemonians, on a time as they kept a festiuite in the night, called Hiacynthina, tooke away fifteen maidens, that were playing in company there, & fled away by night with them.
Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 11.

Thence she them brought into a stately hall,
Wherein were many tables faire dispred,
And ready dight with drapets festiuall
Against the viands should be ministred.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Mess. Occasions drew me early to this city,
And as the gates I enter'd with sun rise,
The morning trumpets festival proclaim'd,
Through each high street.—Milton. Samson Agonistes.

——— Thou unthankful wretch,
Did our charity redeem thee out of prison,
(Thy patrimony spent,) ragged and lousy,
When the sheriff's basket, and his broken meat,
Were your festival-exceedings! and is this
So soon forgotten.
Massinger. The City Madam, Act i. sc. 1.

Looks thou shouldst wear more grave and sad
Than Hector's wife or mother had Never at Comedies appear,
All festive jollities forbear.
And whate'er else doth laughter cause,
And the clos'd lips asunder draws.
Sherburne. Martial, lib. ii. Epig. 11.

In the ancient Church when on days of festivities men began to adorn themselves sumptuously to show their pride, not to honour the day, and fared deliciously to surfeiting and drunkenness, the fathers did not thereupon forbid what before they allowed, but thought to reduce them from that pride and luxury.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 654.

Hence Theodoret writes, that the Christians of his time instead of solemnizing the festivals of Love and Bacchus, did celebrate the festivities of Peter, and Paul.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act viii. sc. 3.

Whether your life in sorrows pass
And sadly joyless glide away;
Whether reclining on the grass
You bless with choicer wine the festal day.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ode 3.

The Romans also, as nature is the same in all places, though they knew nothing of these Grecian demi-gods, nor had any communication with Greece, yet had certain young men, who, at their festivals, danced and sung after their uncouth manner to a certain kind of verse, which they called Saturnian.—Dryden. On the Origin and Progress of Satire.

When the day crown'd with rural chaste delight,
Resigns obsequious to the festive night;
The festive night awakes th' harmonious lay.
Somervile. The Chase.

The king also ordered his [Beckett's] name to be struck out of the kalendar, and the office for his festivity to be dashed out of all breviaries.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1538.

For them the voice of festal mirth
Grows hush'd, their name the only sound:
While deep remembrance pours to worth
The goblet's tributary round.
Byron. On the Death of Sir Peter Parker.

——— He hears
The merry voice of festival delight
Saluting the return of morning bright
With matin-revels, by the mid day hours
Scarce ended. West. Education.

Imagination fondly stoops to trace
The parlour splendours of that festive place;
The white-wash'd wall, the nicely sanded floor,
The varnish'd clock that click'd behind the door.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

Much the same may be observed of the Roman drama, which, we are told, had its rise in the unrestrained festivity of the rustic youth.—Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

FE'STER, v. } Of unknown etymology. Per-
FE'STER, adj. } haps connected with the Fr. Flaistrir, which Cotgrave interprets, to burn in the hand or eare, to brand on the forehead, to mark for a rogue, with a hot iron.

To putrefy, to suppurate; to generate corrupt or virulent matter; (met.) any virulent sensations.

O calcars dreaming heads: what helps her vows, and pilgrim deedes,
What helps her temples sought? whan soking flame her mary feedes,
This while, and festring deepe in brest her wound the faster breedes.—Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. iv.

But, for excuse hereof, somewhat to salue a festry matter, yee tel vs a longe tedious tale, without heade, or foote
Jewell. Defence, p. [illegible]

One day as he was searching of their wounds,
He found that they had festred privily:
And rankling inward with unruly stounds,
The inner parts now gan to putrify,
That quite they seem'd past help of surgery.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

Now many a wounded Briton feels the rage
Of missive fires that fester in each limb,
Which dire revenge alone has pow'r t' assuage,
Revenge makes danger dreadless seem.
Congreve. To the King. On the Taking of Namur.

Yet since he learn'd to wing th' unerring dart,
Much cause has man to curse his fatal art:
But most have I, the sun has wheel'd his round
Since first I felt the deadly festering wound
Yet, yet, I fondly, madly, wish to burn,
Abjure indifference, and at comfort spurn.
Granger. Tibullus, b. ii. El. 3.

If your peace be nothing more than a sullen pause from arms, if their quiet be nothing but the meditation of revenge, where smitten pride smarting from its wounds, festers into new rancour, neither the art of Henry VIII. nor its handmaid of this reign, will answer any wise end of policy or justice.—Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

FE'STINATE. } Lat. Festinare, festim sive
FE'STINATELY. } fertim progredi; hoc est,
FESTINA'TION. } fertis sive densis gressibus, (Vossius;) to proceed with thick or close steps; with steps closely, quickly following. And thus—Quick, hasty, speedy.

Aduice the Duke where you are going, to a most festinate preparation: we are bound to the like.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 7.

Take this key, giue enlargement to the swaine, bring him festinatly hither.—Id. Love's Labour Lost, Act iii. sc. 1.

Syn. But sweet Frank, when shall my father
Security present me?
Quick. With all festination.
Chapman. Eastward Hoe, Act ii. sc. 1.

FESTOON. Fr. Feston, (q.d.) sertum festum seu festivum, a festal or festival garland, (Skinner.) Generally, "a garland, bundle or border of fruits, and flowers; especially in graven or imbossed works," (Cotgrave.)

What adde much to the pleasure of the sight is that the vines, climbing to the summit of the trees, reach in festoons and fruitages from one tree to another planted at exact distances, forming a more delightful picture than painting can describe.—Evelyn. Memoirs. Naples, Jan. 1645.

Here is a vista, there the doors unfold,
Balconies here are ballustred with gold;
Then counts the rounds and ovals in the halls,
The festoons, friezes, and the astragals.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

But the most superb monument of his [Gibbon's] skill is a large chamber at Petworth, enriched from the ceiling, between the pictures, with festoons of flowers and dead game, &c. all in the highest perfection and preservation.
Walpole Anecdotes of Painting, &c. vol. iii. c. 2.

FE'STUE, or } Dut. Vaese; Fr. Festu, Lat.
FE'SCUE. } Festuca, a stalk or stem. "Fr.
FE'STUCINE. } Festu, a feskue; a straw, rush,
FESTU'COUS. } little stalk or stick, used for a feskue," Cotgrave.

A stalk or straw, and hence used for a wire or stick employed by schoolmasters in pointing out letters to children learning to read; also for the gnomon of a sun-dial, as in the quotation below from an old Play.

But I shall afterward anon lay it afore him agayne, and sette him to it with a festue, that he shal not say but he saw it.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1102.

And with thy golden fescue, plaidst upon
Thy hollow harp.—Chapman. Homer. Hymne to Apollo.

What advantage is it to be a man, over it is to be a boy at school, if we have only escaped the ferula, to come under the fescue of an imprimatur!—Milton. Unlicens'd Printing.

The fescue of the dial is upon the Christ-cross of noon.
Anonymous. The Puritan, Act IV. sc. 2.

Herein may be discovered a little insect of a festucine or pale green, resembling in all parts a locust, or what we call a grasshopper.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 3.

But we speak of straws or festuceous divisions lightly drawn over with oyl, and so that it causeth no adhesion; or if we conceive any antipathy between oyl and amber, the doctrine is not true.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 5.

FET, i. e. Feat, (qv.)

For Jamys the gentel suggeth in hus bokes
That feith with oute fet ys feblere than nouht
And ded as a dore nayle.—Piers Ploughman, p. 22.

The Pope after certain communications, perceyuyng hym in all poyntes fyt for his purpose sent him anon into Germanye wyth hys ful auctorityе (as afore is specyfyed) to do hys false fets there, and to bryng that styffe necked people vnder hys wicked obedyence, whome they call the holy Christian beleue.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

And told me, That the bottom clear,
Now laid with many a fet
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there
Was known as black as jet.
Drayton. The Quest of Cynthia.

FETCH, v. } In old authors also written
FETCH, n. } Fet; A. S. Feccan, fet-ian; Dut.
FE'TCHER. } Vat-en, adducere, afferre, to FE'TCHING, n. } bring or bear to.

Fetch, the noun, is applied to any thing fetched, or sought for, fraudulently. And thus, a deceitful trick or artifice.

To fetch, implies to go or send for, and bring or carry to, back to. And, generally,—

To draw or derive; to deduce, educe or produce; and thus, to effect, to perform, to reach, to arrive at, to attain, to acquire.

For in the farreste stude of Affric geandes while fette,
Thike stones for medycine, & in Yrlond hem sette.
R. Gloucester, p. 146.

Beke ther was non fette, ne non ther after fore,
Hubert his croice doun sette, & William theron suore.
R. Brunne, p 208.

And fetcheth away this frut some tyme byfore both myn eyen. Piers Ploughman, p. 306.

And thereupon the win was fette anon.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 821.

And right, this cursed ireus wretche
This knightes sone before him fetche.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 6746.

But yet amonge full pitouslie
She praied, that thei nolden dretche,
Hir husbond for to fetche
Forthwith hir fader eke also. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Thus fortune chaunged her copy in such wyse, that they fetched in on euery side and slew those that stoode in good hope and possibility of wynnyng theyr campe.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 68.

Than he sayd to the two hurt Scottes, go your wayes, and say to your king, that Wyllyam of Montague hath thus passed through his hoost, and is goyng to fetche ayde of the King of Englonde.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. I. c. 77.

He fell to perswading with the princes of Gallia, calling them backe one by one, and exhorting thē to tary still in the maine land, and putting them in feare it was done for some further fetch that Gallia was thus robbed of all her nobilitie at once.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 112.

——— And now, thou threatst to force from me,
The fruit of my sweat, which the Greekes gave all, and though it be (Compar'd with thy part, then snatcht up) nothing: nor ever is
At any sackt towne; but of fight (the fetcher in of this)
My hands have most share.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. I.

First the kyng with her had not one penny, and for the fetchyng of her the Marquis of Suffolke demaunded a whole fiftene in open parliament.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 18.

All hardy youth, from valiant fathers sprung,
Whom perfect honour he so highly taught,
That th' aged fetch'd examples from the young,
And hid the vain experience which they brought.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. I. c. 1.

Next, the word politician is not used to his maw, and thereupon he plays the most notorious hobby-horse, jesting and frisking in the luxury of his nonsence with such poor fetches to cog a laughter from us, that no antic hobnail at a morris, but is more handsomely facetious.
Milton. Colasterion.

How strange a rescue from the sackage of an enemy had that city, that by the leaders crying, back, back, when he wanted room for the fetching of his blow, to break a chain that hindered him, was by misapprehending the word, put back in a violent flight.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 79.

This gentleman thinks he has a fetch for that; he subscribes not to the truth of every particular, but to the use only, and that "it contains nothing contrary to the word of God."—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 243.

I will only add here, that I have not observed in any of his [Chaucer's] writings a single phrase or word, which has the least appearance of having been fetched by him from the south, with which I was so particularly pleased, both for the invention and the moral, that I cannot hinder myself from recommending it to the reader.
Tyrwhit. Chaucer, App. to Pref.

Those early wise men, who fetched their Philosophy from Egypt, brought it home in detached and independent placita; which was certainly as they found it.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

How they have done it—such as have a mind
To know their fetches, if they look, may find;
And smile thereat.—Byrom. Critical Remarks on Horace.

FE'TID. } Fr. Fétide; It. Fetido; Lat.
FE'TIDNESS. } Fetidus, from Fatere: and Vos-
FE'TOR. } sius thinks that it may, from the filthiness of a fœtus, be thence applied to any thing filthy or nasty.

Boyle (Works, ii. 236) has a marginal direction, "Way of taking off the fetidness from hartshorne, &c." but the word is not used in the text.

Filthy, nasty; having a foul smell or stench.

So they have set down likewise, that a rose set by garlick is sweeter: which likewise may be, because the more fetide juyce of the earth goeth into the garlick, and the more odorate into the rose.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 481.

Dogs (almost) onely of beasts delight in fetide odours, which sheweth there is somewhat in their sense of smell, differing from the smells of other beasts.—Id. Ib. § 853.

They having now a congruity only to such fœtid vehicles, may be no more able to abide the clear and lightsome ayr; then the bat or owl are able to bear the sun's noon-day beams.—Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

The fœtor whereof may discover itself by sweat and urine, as being unmasterable by the natural heat of man, not to be dulcified by concoction beyond an unsavory condition.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 10.

——— From Ethiopia's poison'd woods,
From stifled Cairo's filth, and feted fields
With locust-armies putrefying heap'd,
This great destroyer [the Plague] sprang.—Thomson. Sum.

When the symptoms are attended with a fœtor of any kind, either in the urine, mouth, breath, with drought, heat, hæmorrhage of the gums, or of any kind, such a disease will be cured by acescent substances, and none better than whey.
Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 4.

We find amongst their [animals] secretions not only the most various but the most opposite properties, the most nutritious aliment, the deadliest poison, the sweetest perfumes, and the most fœtid odours.—Paley. Nat. Theol. c. 7.

And as is credibly related of some animals, by driving away their pursuers by an intolerable fœtor, or of blackening the water through which they are pursued.—Id. Ib. c. 19.

FETLOCK, in a horse, the joint of the leg and foot, which locks or fastens them together, (q. d.) feetlocks. Dr. T. H. thinks from the long locks of hair that grow there.

Yet this uneasy loop-hol'd goal,
In which ye'are hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock.—Hudib. pt. ii. c. 2.

White were the fetlocks of his feet before,
And on his front a snowy star he bore.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

But first, out-spent with this long course,
The Cossack Prince rubb'd down his horse,
And made for him a leafy bed,
And smooth'd his fetlocks and his mane,
And slack'd his girth, and stripp'd his rein,
And joy'd to see how well he fed. Byron. Mazeppa.

FE'TTER, v. } A. S. Feter-ian, ge-feterian;
FE'TTER, n. } Dut. veteren, compedire, (q.d.)
FE'TTERING, n. } footer, feeter, as the Lat. Pedica, a pedibus. See ENFETTER.
FE'TTERLESS. } To bind or fasten the feet;
FE'TTERLOCK. } generally, to bind, fasten or enslave.

He did tham fetire wele, streitly & right hard
& sent tham to Carlele vnto Kyng Edward.
R. Brunne, p. 327.

Ich viseted nevē feble man, ne fetered man in prisone.
Piers Ploughman, p. 111.

And forth is ladde this woful yong knight
Unto the countre of King Minos full of might,
And in a prison fettred fast is he.
Chaucer. Legend of Ariadne.

For shortly for to say, this Palamon
Perpetually is damned to prison
In chaines and in fetters to ben ded.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1343.

Being willed to say his minde, when silence was made and his bondes losed, he [Emmenes] stretched forthe his hand fettered as he was, and shewed it them saying.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 74.

And therefore he made a chayne or fetters of wood and put them about his necke, and prophesied agayne, and preached that they should be taken prisoners & led captiue into Babilon.—Frith. Workes, p. 107.

Some act of Love's bound to rehearse
I thought to bind him in my verse
Which when he felt, away, (quoth he)
Can Poets hope to fetter me?
B. Jonson. Why I write not of Love.

Where wilt thou appeal? power of the courts below
Flows from the first main head, and these can throw
Thee, if they suck thee in, to misery,
To fetters, halters. Donne, Sat. 5.

Well, this disguise doth yet afford me that
Which kings do seldom hear, or great men use,
Free speech: and though my state's usurped,
Yet this affected strain gives me a tongue,
As fetterless as is an Emperor's.
Marston. The Malcontent, Act I. sc. 4

And truly, when they are ballanced together, this order seemeth more an infranchising, than a fettering of our nature, which without it seemeth rather bound, then free in revenge, such is the dominion of our irritated passions.
Montaigne. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 15. s. 1.

The said Edmund of Langley [Duke of York] bare also for an impresa a faulcon in a fetter-locke, implying that hee was locked up from all hope and possibility of the kingdome, when his brethren began to aspire thereunto.
Camden. Remaines. Impreses.

If he call rogue and rascal from a garret,
He means you no more mischief than a parrot:
The words for friend and foe alike were made,
To fetter them in verse is all his trade.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

How shall I welcome thee to this sad place?
How speak to thee the words of joy and transport?
How run into thy arms with held by fetters;
Or take thee into mine, while I'm thus manacled
And pinion'd like a thief or murderer?
Congreve. The Mourning Bride, Act III

The frequent contemplation of this world, with the grace of God (always at hand to assist the honest endeavours of men,) at least enable them to break their fetters, recover their liberty, and return again into one fold, under one shepherd, Jesus Christ the righteous.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 33.

At last men came to set me free,
I ask'd not why, and reck'd not where,
It was at length the same to me,
Fetter'd or fetterless to be,
I learn'd to love despair.—Byron. Prisoner of Chillon.

FE'TTLE. To set or go about any thing, to dress or prepare, (Ray.) Fettle may perhaps be considered as a diminutive of Fit, or feat, (qv.)

Mr. Brocket says, that Fettle is used by Ascham in his Toxophilus as a noun.

The sturdy ploughman doth the soldier see
All scarfed with pride colours to the knee,
Whom Indian pillage hath made fortunate;
And now he gins to loath his former state:
Now doth he inly scorne his Kendall greene,
And his patcht cockers, now despised beene,
Nor list he now go whistling to the carre,
But sells his teme and fetleth to the warre.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 6.

When you [the footman] know your master is most busy in company, come in, and pretend to fettle about the room; and if he chides, say, you thought he rang the bell.
Swift. Directions to Servants, c. 3.

FEUD. A. S. Fæhth; Dut. Veete, veede; Ger. Fede. Spelman says, A. S. Fehth, inimicitia, a Fah; Ang. Foe; hostis, inimicus; and Foe, qv. (any one hated,) past part. of fian, to hate.

Hatred, enmity; hostility, quarrel.

Thus is all inuerted, many kings, and few subjects: none now in this vncertaintie paying their accustomed tenths, intending rather mutuall feuds and battels betwixt their seuerall tribes and kindreds, then common fidelitie and allegiance.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. vi. c. 2. s. 3.

Crowes and owles are at mortall feaud one with another.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 74.

Be veil'd the savage reigns when kindred rage
The numerous once Plantagenets devour'd,
The race to vengeance vow'd! and when oppress'd
By private feuds, almost extinguish'd lay
My quivering flame. Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

Yet oft-times in his maddest mirthful mood
Strange pangs would flash along Childe Harold's brow,
As if the memory of some deadly feud,
Or disappointed passion lurk'd below.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

FEU'D, or FEOD. FEU'DAL. FEU'DALITY. FEU'DARY, adj. FEU'DARY, n. FEU'DATARY, or FEU'DATORY. FEU'DIST. } See FEE, and FEOFF. And see the quotations from Spelman, and Blackstone, infra. That with which any one is feoffed or enfeoffed; any thing granted by one and held by another upon oath or pledge of fealty or fidelity.

Also he delyuered vnto them olde auncyent wrytynges sealyd with the sealys of the Kynge of Scottys, and of dyuerse lordys of that lande, both spyrytuell and temporall with many other chartyrs and patentes, by the whiche the Kynges of Scottis obligid theym to be feodaryes vnto the crowne of Englande.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1327.

As certaine of the lords and barons were busie to choose the said Ludowike for their king, the Pope sent thither one Gualo, the Cardinall of Saint Martin, to staie those rash and cruell attempts, charging the French king upon his allegiance, that he with all power possible should fauour, maintaine, and defend King John of England, his feudarie or tenant.—Fox. Martyrs, p 230. The English Nobility against King John.

But before the releasament thereof, first he was miserablie compelled (as hath beene declared) to giue ouer both his crowne & scepter to that Antichrist of Rome for the space of flue daies, & his client, vassale, feudarie, & tenant to receive againe of him at the hands of another Cardinal.
Id. Ib. p. 230. King John resigneth his crown to the Pope.

A feud is a right which the vassal hath in land, or some immoveable thing of his lord's, to use the same and take the profits thereof hereditarily: rendering unto his lord such feodal duties and services as belong to military tenure the mere propriety of the soil always remaining unto the lord.—Spelman. Feuds & Tenures, c. 1.

And what greater dividing than by a pernicious and hostile peace, to disalliege a whole feudary kingdom from the ancient dominion of England.
Milton. On the Articles of Peace with the Irish.

Yea our owne King John being a feudatory to the King of France, was by Philip the French king in a full parliament there (during his absence in England) arraigned, condemned to death, and deposed from his crowne by the sentence of his peeres, for murthering of his nephew Arthur, (then subject of France) with his owne handes.
Prynne. Treachery and Disloyalty, &c. pt iv. p. 13.

The one as he was Duke of Burgandy, the other of Bavaria, both which countries are feudatory to the empire.
Howell, b i. Let. 14. s. 2.

But one thing I am persuaded of, that no King of Spain, nor Bishop of Rome, shall umpire, or promote any beneficiary, or feodatory king, in they designed to do, even when the Scots Queen lived, whom they pretended to cherish.
Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

I call it, as the feudists do, jus utendi prædio alieno; a right to use another man's land, not a property in it.
Spelman. Feuds & Tenures, c. 2.

I shall only request of him, and of the other gentlemen of the city's council, to show me the opinion of one learned man of this kingdom, or any other nation, deliberately delivered upon the question, that feodatory and subordinate governments cannot, for any cause whatsoever, be forfeited or resumed.
State Trials. The King and the City of London, an. 1682.

It [the constitution of feuds] was brought by them from their own countries, and continued in their respective colonies, as the most likely means to secure their new acquisitions; and to that end, large districts or parcels of land were allotted by the conquering general to the superior officers of the army, and by them dealt out again in smaller parcels or allotments to the inferior officers and most deserving soldiers. These allotments were called fœda, feuds, fiefs, or fees; which last appellation in the northern languages signifies a conditional stipend or reward.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 4.

The grand and fundamental maxim of all feodal tenure is this, that all lands were originally granted out by the sovereign, and are therefore holden, either mediately or immediately, of the crown.—Id. Ib.

Accordingly, we are indebted to this act of his [Cromwell] for the preservation of our laws, which some senseless assertors of the rights of men were then on the point of entirely erasing, as relickes of feudality and barbarism.
Burke. Letter to a Member of the National Assembly.

The granter was called the proprietor, or lord; being he who retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud or fee; and the grantee, who had only the use and possession, according to the terms of the grant, was stiled the feudatory or vasal, which was only another name for the tenant or holder of the lands.—Blackstone. Com. b. ii. c. 4.

The Greeks, the Romans, the Britons, the Saxons, and even originally the feudists divided the lands equally; some among all the children at large; some among the males only.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 14.

FE'VER, v. FE'VER, n. FE'VERISH. FE'VERISHNESS. FE'VEROUS. FE'VEROUSNESS. FE'VEROUSLY. } Fr. Fiebure; It. Febbre; Lat. Febris, a fervendo, (ferveo, ferbeo, ferbis, by transposition febris,) quia calida sit totius corporis intemperies, (Vossius.) A hot distemperature of the whole body.

——— And God on hem sendeth
Feeveres other foulet hyveles.—Piers Ploukman, p. 42.

And some thou saidest haue a blaunch feuere
And praidest God, they should neuer keuere
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

A feuer it [jelousie] is cotidian,
Whiche euery daie wol come aboute,
Whete so a man be in or oute.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Notwithstandynge vnnaturall or supernaturall heate destroyeth appetite, and corrupteth digestyon, as it appeare in feuere.—Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

And feuerlike I feede my fancie still,
With such repast, as most empaires my health;
Which feuer first I caught by wanton wyll
When coles of kind did stirre my blood by stealth.
Gascoigne. Flowers. The Passion of a Louer.

What a monster man is, in his inebriations, a swimming eye, a face both roast and sod, a temulentive tongue, clammed to the roof and gummes; a drumming ear, a feaboured body, a boyling stomach.—Feltham, pt i. Res. 54.

My virgin thoughts are innocent and meek,
As in chaste blushes sitting on my cheek:
As in a fever I do shiver yet,
Since first my pen was to the paper set.
Drayton. The Lady Geraldine, to the Earl of Surrey.

Before the starry threshold of Jove's court
My mansion is, where those immortal shapes
Of bright aëreal Spirits live insphered
In regions mild of calm and serene air,
Above the smoke and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth; and, with low-thoughted care
Confin'd and pestered in this pinfold here,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being.
Milton. Comus.

And now of late came tributary kings,
Bringing him nothing but new fears from th' east,
With which his fev'rous cares their cold increased
Crashaw. Steps to the Temple.

As in our bodies the members diseased and in pain draw humours continually unto them, and all the corruption of the parts neare unto them flow thither; even so, the tongue of a babling fellow, being never without an inflamation and a feverous pulse, draweth always and gathereth to it one secret and hidden thing or other.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 160.

Nor [couldst thou] by the eye's water know a malady
Desperately hot, or raging feverously.—Donne, Elegy 7.

A rage of pleasures madden'd every breast,
Down to the lowest lees the ferment ran:
To his licentious wish each must be blest,
With joy be fevered; snatch it as he can.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

To conclude all; if the body politic have any analogy to the natural, in my weak judgment, an act of oblivion were as necessary in a hot distempered state, as an opiate would be in a raging fever.—Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, Pref.

How pleasant is't, beneath the twisted arch
Of a retreating bower, in mid-day's reign
To ply the sweet carouse, remote from noise,
Secur'd of feverish heats. J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Satiety, perpetual disgust, and feverishness of desire, attend those who passionately study pleasure.
Shaftesbury. Enquiry concerning Virtue.

My old Lady Phelips is a constant water-drinker, and it hath preserved her (as she conceives) from a resort of feverous heats in her stomach.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 386.

——— Lay me reclined,
Beneath the spreading tamarind that shakes,
Fann'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit.
Thomson. Summer.

Hark! from yon hall as headlong waste purveys,
What Bacchanalian revels loud resound,
With festive fires the midnight windows blaze,
And fever'd tumult reels his giddy round.
Mickle. Sacred to the Heirs of Radnor Castle.

Reclin'd and feverish in the bath
He, when the hunter's sport was up,
But little deem'd a brother's wrath
To quench his thirst had such a cup.
Byron. The Bride of Abydos, c. 2.

——— O! what a wretch is he
Whose fev'rous life, devoted to the gloom
Of superstition, feels the incessant throb
Of ghastly panic. Smollett. The Regicide, Act v. sc. 1.

FEU'ILLAGE, i. e. foliage, (qv.)

I have done Homer's head, shadowed and heightened carefully; and I enclose the outline of the same size, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval, or about the square of the busto.
Pope. Mr. Jervas to Mr. Pope.

FEU'ILLEMORT. Fr. Feuille, and mort, a dead leaf.

So to make a countryman understand what feuillemorte colour signifies, it may suffice to tell him, 'tis the colour of withered leaves falling in Autumn.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 11. s. 14.

FEU'TER. Mr. Todd says, "Made his spear ready." The phrase is in the Romance of King Arthur, folio edition, without date, sig. H 1, "They feutred their speares." Old Fr. Feutrer. See FETTLE.

All which when Blandamour from end to end
Beheld, he woxe therewith displeased sore,
And thought in mind it shortly to amend;
His speare he feutred, and at him it bore;
But with no better fortune, then the rest afore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 4.

FEU'TERER. A dog keeper; from the Fr. Vautrier, or vautrier; one that leads a lime-hound or grey-hound to the chase, (Whalley.) Cotgrave calls the Fr. Vautre, a mungrel between a hound and a mastiffe. And see Menage, Le Orig. della Lin. Italiana, in v. Veltro, and Du Cange, in v. Canis Veltrus.

When these Pharisaicall foxe feuterers commande the therfore to worship ymages, or to crepe to crosse.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c 3

——— A feuterer
To such a nasty fellow, a robb'd thing
Of all delights youth looks for.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— If you will be
An honest yeoman feuterer, feed us first,
And walk us after.
Hil. Yeoman-feuterer!
Such another word to your governer and you go
Supperless to bed for't.
Massinger. The Picture, Act v. sc. 1.

Car. Faith, spending my metall in this reeling world (here and there) as the sway of my affection carries me, and perhaps stumble upon a yeoman-pheuterer, as I doe now.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 1.

FEW. FE'WNESS. } Goth. Fauai; A. S. Fea, feawa, and feawnesse; in which Junius thinks that traces of the Gr. Παυρος, pauci, are manifest; ρ (ut sæpe) omitted. Sw. Fac. Mr. Tooke has produced from G. Douglas the expression (unusual enough to modern ears) "Ane few menye," i. e. many; to show that few and many are not (as is generally supposed) in meaning opposite terms and contraries; "many means mixed or associated, (for that is the effect of mixing,) subaud. Company, or any uncertain and unspecified number of things." And few, must restrict or restrain, confine or limit this number, in the repetition of unity. And thus to denote—
Confined, limited, narrowed, small, minute; in number or quantity.

So faste he slowe of this men, and to gronde caste,
That the kyng with a fewe men hymself flew at the laste.
R. Gloucester, p. 18.

How streit is the gate and the way narrowe that ledyth to lyf, and ther ben fewe that fyndon it.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 7.

But strayt is ye gate, and narowe is the way which leadeth vnto life: And fewe there be that find it.
Bible, 1551. Matt. c. 7.

A fewe termes coude he, two or three
That he had lerned out of some decree.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 641.

If I may gripe a riche man
I shall so pul him, if I can
That he shall in a fewe stoundes
Lese all his markes and his pounds.—Id. Rom. of the R.

And that by wordes but a fewe
I shall by reason proue and shewe.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

She [Hope] alway smyl'd, and in her hand did hold
An holy-water-sprinkle, dipt in deaw,
With which she sprinkled fauours manifold,
On whom she list, and did great liking shew;
Great liking vnto many, but true loue to fewe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 12.

Dispersed love grows weake, and fewness of objects vseth to unite affections. If but two brothers be left alive of many, they think that the loue of all the rest should survive in them.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Cain & Abel.

Exe. Doe not beleeue it, fewness and truth, 'tis thus.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act i. sc. 5.

Of all we read, the sacred writ is best;
Where great truths are in fewest words exprest.
Waller. The Fear of God, c. 2.

Yet these, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers of the rest, with whom they are embodied in one common name.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, Pref.

As to fewness of the executions, and the good effects of that policy, I cannot, for my own part, entertain the slightest doubt.—Burke. Letter to the Lord Chancellor, in 1780.

FE'WELL, n. } Skinner says, Esca, seu
FU'ELLED. } pabulum ignis, q.d. Lat. Focale; Fr. Feu;—and (Menage)
FU'ELLER. } the Fr. Feu, fire, from the Lat. Focus; as jeu from jocus, lieu or lieu from locus.

That which fireth or burneth, which kindleth fire; which inflameth, which continueth fire or flame.

The 21 day we departed from Ordowil aforesayd, trauelling for the most part ouer mountaines all in the night season, and resting in the day, being destitute of wood, and therefore were forced to vse for fewell the dung of horses & camels, which we bought deare of the pasturing people.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 348.

It happened vnto hym also (as it cannot otherwyse be) that many of his souldiers which were gone abrode into the woodes to fetch fewel & timber, were cut shorte by the sodeyne approche of the ennemyes horsmen.
Goldinge. Cæsar, p. 132.

One with great bellowes gathered filling aire,
And with forc't wind the fewell did inflame,
Another did the dying bronds repayre
With iron tongues.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Love's fuellers, and the rightest company
Of players, which upon the world's stage be,
Will quickly know thee!—Donne. Elegie on his Mistris.

If the passions be raging and tumultuous and constantly fuelled, nothing less than he who has the hearts of men in his hand can settle and quiet such tumultuous, overbearing hurricanes in the mind, and animal oeconomy.
Cheyne. On Health, c. 6.

But first the fuel'd chimney blazes wide;
The tankards foam; and the strong table groans
Beneath the smoking sirloin, stretch'd immense
From side to side. Thomson. Autumn.

So it [a huge image of wood, called Darvel Gratheren] was ordered to be brought to London, where it served for fewel to burn Friar Forrest.—Burnet. Hist. of Reformation, (1538.)

To retain fire unconsum'd, Sir H. Plate hath obliged the fuellier.—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 420.

—— Hard-faring race,
They pick their fuel out of ev'ry hedge,
Which kindled with dry leaves, just saves unquench'd
The spark of life. Cowper. Task, b. i.

FE'WMET. See FUMET.

FEY, or } I. e. Faith.
FAY. }

I haue be negligent in good fey,
To chastize him. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

FEY, v. This seems to be the same word as fag, (g softened into y.) See TO FAG.

To fey a ditch, is to work hard at it, and thus, to cleanse or empty it

Such muddy deep ditches, and pits in the field,
That all a dry summer no water will yield;
By feying and casting that mud upon heaps,
Commodities many that husbandman reaps.
Tusser. June's Husbandry.

FI'ANCE, v. } Fr. Fiancer, (fidem dare.) See
FI'ANCE, n. } TO AFFIANCE.

To give, place or repose, faith, trust or credit; to trust, credit or rely upon; to bind or pledge to the faithful performance of; particularly, the marriage contract; to betroth.

—— She is Fortune verely
In whom no man should affy,
Nor in her yefts haue fiaunce,
She is so full of variaunce.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And they had with theym theyr younge sonne, who hadde fyaunced the vere before Mary, doughter to the Duke of Berrey.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 123.

Howbeit, the Frenchemen sayd, it coulde nat be doone shortly because the lady was so yonge, and also she was fyanced to the Duke of Bretayn's eldest son.—Id. Ib. c. 203.

FIAT. Lat. Fiat, imperative of Fieri, to be done.

Spenser writes Fiaunt, to rhyme with graunt.

Let it be, or be it, done. Applied to—

An order, command, decree, (sc.) that something be done.

Nought suffered he the ape to give or graunt,
But through his hand alone must passe the fiaunt.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

What wealth in souls that soar, dive, range around,
Disdaining limit, or from place, or time;
And hear at once, in thought extensive, hear
Th' Almighty fiat and the trumpet sound!
Young. The Complaint, Night 6.

FIB, v. } Skinner says Fibby, a diminutive of FIB, n. } fable, from the Lat. Fabula.

To fib, though common enough in speech, is not so in writing.

To tell falsities or falsehoods, to speak falsely, to lie.

Who shames a scribbler? Break one cobweb through,
He spins the slight, self pleasing thread anew:
Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again.
Pope. Prologue to the Satires.

How smooth, persuasive, plausible, and glib,
From holy lips is dropp'd the specious fib!
Which whisper'd slily, in its dark career
Assails with art the unsuspecting ear.
Criticisms on the Rolliad, pt. ii. The Lyars.

FI'BRE. } Fr. Fibres; It. and Sp. Fibra;
FI'BRIL. } Lat. Fibra. A finio, fiber, extremus.
FI'BROUS. } (Scaliger, in Varr. lib. iv.) And Vossius thinks that fibres originally denoted—rei cujusque extremitates, and then more especially applied to the liver and to plants. As the—

"Fr. Fibres,—the small strings or hair-like threads of roots; also, the fibers or threads, or strings of muscles and veins," (Cotgrave.)

He observes God in the colour of every flower, in every fibre of a plant, in every particle of an insect, in every drop of dew.—Glanvill, Ess. 4.

Whereas to apply Christ, is not simply to take him into thy thoughts only, and to think thus and thus barely of him, but to strike forth a sprig or fibre from every faculty into him, to be rooted in him, to draw nourishment from him, to digest him, to give up thy soul to him, and to be one with him. John, xi. 56.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv pt. ii. p. 65.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots and hirsute roots. In the fibrous the sap delighteth more in the earth, and therefore putteth downward.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 616.

Pull in his eye the weapon chanc'd to fall,
And from the fibres scoop'd the rooted ball,
Drove through the neck and hurl'd him to the plain.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

I saw Petræus' arms employ'd around
A well grown oak, to root it from the ground.
This way, and that, he wrench'd the fibrous bands;
The trunk was like a sapling, in his hands,
And still obey'd the bent.—Dryden. Ovid. Met. b. xii.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells.—Cheyne. Phil. Principles.

—— Each frail fibre of her brain
(As bow-strings, when relax'd by rain,
The erring arrow lanch aside)
Sent forth her thoughts all wild and wide.
Byron. Parisina, s. 14.

Hence fermentation, hence prolific power,
And hence the fibrous roots in quest of food,
Find unobstructed entrance, room to spread,
And richer juices feed the swelling shoots.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

FI'CKLE. } Perhaps, says Skinner, from FI'CKLENESS. } the Lat. Facilis, i. e. one who FI'CKLY. } easily or fickly, and for weak reasons, changes his opinion. The A. S. is Ficol, which may be from A. S. Wicel-ian; Dut. Wugghelen, vacillare; Sw. Fjaecker, huc illuc vagari; to ramble this way and that.

Varying, changing, unsteady, inconstant; wavering, irresolute.

Ofte thing that is fikeled to worse ende ys brogt.
R. Gloucester, p. 36.

Heo no kouthe of no fikelyng, and ne onswerede not so.
Id. p. 30.

Alle the Norreis, that had bien so fikelle,
Pes forto haue thei glosed him fulle mykelle.
R. Brunne, p. 34.

The right lawes did he loke for fals men & fikelle.
Id. p. 36.

On favel was hure fader, that hath a fykel tonge
And scilde soth seith.—Piers Ploughman, p. 25.

Thy loue, thy lande, and all thy gentilnes
I compted small in my prosperitie,
So effated I was in wantonnesse
And clambe vpon the fickell whele so hie.
Chaucer. The Complaint of Creseide.

I maruile what hath moued the fyckle heades of our doctours, so earnestly to mayntayne a matter by their doctrin, of so moch mischefe.—Bale. Apology, Pref. fol. 13.

And this lourneing fro place to place, was not the disease of fickelnesse or of vnstablenesse: but it was the earnest affeccion to doe good vnto al men.—Udal. Luke, c. 5.

Which makes me loath this state of life so tickle,
And love of things so vain to cast away;
Whose flowring pride, so fading and so fickle,
Short Time shall soon cut down with his consuming sickle.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 8.

It will concern the multitude, though courted here, to take heed how they seek to hide or colour their own fickleness and instabilite with a bad repentance of their well-doing, and their fidelity to thy better cause, to which at first so cheerfully and conscienciously they join'd themselves.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Thus winter fixes the unstable sea,
And teaches restless water constancy,
Which, under the warm influence of bright days,
The fickle motion of each blast obeys.
Halifax. On the Death of Charles II.

And when this fickleness was laid to his [Raphael] charge, he excused himself, that what he wrote before, he wrote ex alterius mente, and ad ingenii exercitationem.
Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1532.

Keep up that spirit still, and do not now
Like a young wasteful heir, mortgage the hopes
Of God like majesty, on bankrupt terms,
To raise a present pow'r, that's fickly held
By the frail tenure of the people's will.
Southern. The Spartan Dame, Act i. sc. 1.

—— Fancy now no more
Wantons on fickle pinion through the skies;
But fix'd in aim and conscious of her power,
Aloft from cause to cause exults to rise,
Creation's blended stores arranging as she flies.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii.

When he [Lucas] came to the English, he painted a naked man with cloth of different sorts lying by him, and a pair of sheers, as a satire on our fickleness in fashions.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

The one was fire and fickleness, a child
Most mutable in wishes, but in mind
A wit as various,—gay, grave, sage, or wild,—
Historian, bard, philosopher, combin'd.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3

FI'CTION. } Fr. Fiction; It. Fizione;
FI'CTIOUS. } Sp. Ficcion, from the Lat.
FICTI'TIOUS. } Fingere, fictum. See FRIGN.
FICTI'TIOUSLY. } A portraiture or image,
FICTI'TIOUSNESS. } (sc.) of a likeness or re-
FI'CTIVE. } semblance: an invention or
FI'CTILE. } pretence (of a likeness or resemblance,) and thus, a dissimulation, a giving or displaying of a false appearance, a false colouring.

Fictile,—Lat. Fictilis, made, worked, manufactured (a figulo) by the potter.

Men say they haue prescriptions
Against the spiritual contradictions
Accompting them as fictions.
Skelton. The Boke of Colin Clout.

And so fictile earth is more fragile than crude earth, and dry wood than green.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 641.

There Persian Magi stand; for wisdom prais'd;
Long since wise statesmen, now magicians thought;
Altars and arts are soon to fiction rais'd,
And both would have, that miracles are wrought
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 5.

Among other tenents of the first times, they hold the ten Sibylls to be fictitious and fabulous, and no better than Urganda, or the Lady of the Lake, or such doting bedlams.
Howell, b. iv. Let. 43.

Beside these pieces fictitiously set down, and having no copy in nature; they had many unquestionably drawn, of inconsequent signification, nor naturally verifying their intention.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 20.

And therefore to those things whose grounds were very true,
Though naked yet and bare (not having to content
The wayward curious ear) gave fictive ornament.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

The fiction pleas'd: our generous train complies,
Nor fraud mistrusts in virtue's fair disguise.
The work she ply'd; but, studious of delay,
Each following night revers'd the toils of day.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

With fancied rules and arbitrary laws
Matter and motion he [Man] restraines;
And studied lines and fictious circles draws.
Prior. An Ode, 1658.

Mem. See where the master villain stands! Unmov'd
And harden'd in impiety, he laughs
At the fictitious justice of the Gods,
And thinks their thunder has not wings to reach him
Rowe. The Ambitious Step-Mother, Act iii.

Under the title of lyars, are primarily comprehended all idolaters, that is, all who pay religious worship where it is not due; applying themselves to false and imaginary objects, whether they be fictitious Gods or fictitious Mediators.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 122.

The letters ascribed, fictitiously I believe, to Sir Thomas Fitzosborne, are rather verbose, and in the composition too elaborate, but in other respects of very considerable merit.
Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 4.

Thus, some make Comedy a representation of mean, and others of bad men: some think that its essence consists in the unimportance, others in the fictitiousness of the transaction.—Rambler, No. 125.

FI'DDLE, v. FI'DDLE, n. FI'DDLER. FI'DDLING, n. } A. S. Fithele, fidicula; fitheler, fidicen; Dut. Ved-ele; Ger. Fidel; Sw. Fidel; a musical instrument, fidibus tensum. The Lat. Fidicula and Ger. Fidel are both also applied to an instrument (ex nervis) of torture. Ihre thinks that this instrument and the name of it were both of northern origin; and suggests the Goth. and Island. word Fidra, also written Fidla, and fitla, as the parent root.

To use, to play upon, a fiddle; (met.) to play, to trifle, to act triflingly, inefficiently.

Fiddle faddle,—i. e. fiddle fiddle, an augmentative or emphatic repetition.

For him was lever han at his beddes hed
A twenty bokes, clothed in black or red,
Of Aristotle, and his Philosophie,
Than robes riche, or fidel, or sautrie
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 298.

And Dauid and al the house of Israel played before the Lord with all maner instrumentes of fyrre woode, wyth harpes, psalteries, timberelles, fyddelles and symbals.
Bible, 1551. 2 Kinges, c. 6.

The merye noyse of theym that play vpon harpes, lutes, and fydeles, shall no more be hearde in thē to the delyght of men.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

Whether they be Jew or Greeke, free or bounde, friar or fidler.—Barnes. Workes, p. 244.

Ah syrs, wouldе ye haue the common people come to the Generall Councel? Whom meane ye, I praie you? Tinkers and tapsters, fydlers and pypers, such as your ministers be? Alas poore soules, what should they doo there? for there is no tinkinge nor tippling, no fidlinge nor pypinge.
Jewell. Defence, p. 600.

And certainly those degenerate arts and shifts whereby many counsilours and governors gaine both favour with their maisters, and estimation with the vulgar, deserve no better name than fidling; being things rather pleasing for the time, and gracefull to the professors themselves; then tending to the weale and advancement of the state, whiche they serve.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 3.

As her waist stands, she lookes like a new fiddle
The favorite Theorbo, (truth to tell ye,)
Whose neck and throat are deeper then the belly.
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

He sayes, "Sir can you spare me?" I said; "willingly." "Nay, sir, can you spare me a crowne?" Thankfully I Give it as a ransom; but as fiddlers still,
Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jigge upon you; so did he
With his long complementall thanks vexe me.
Donne, Sat. 4.

—— Ye may as easely
Outrun a cloud, driven by a northern blast,
As fiddle-faddle so.—Ford. The Broken Heart, Act I. sc. 3.

And that sweet tilting war, with eyes and kisses,
Th' alarms of soft vows, and sighs, and fiddle-faddle,
Spoils all our trade.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act i. sc. 1.

Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.
Pope. The Dunciad b. iv.

Stiff in opinions, always in the wrong,
Was every thing by starts, and nothing long,
But, in the course of one revolving moon,
Was chymist, fiddler, statesman, and buffoon.
Dryden. Absolom & Achitophel.

Sometimes your hair you upwards furl,
Sometimes lay down in favourite curl
All must through twenty fiddlings pass,
Which none can teach you but your glass.
King. The Art of Love, pt. xii.

Is not this indeed the great work, the onely necessary matter, in comparison whereto all other occupations are mere trifling, or unprofitable fiddling aboute nothing.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

And that somebody else would have been fiddled into it again, if a certain treasonable Jacobite tune had not been timely silenced by the unwearied pains and diligence of the administration.—Chesterfield. Miscel. Common Sense, 18.

Oh, laugh or mourn with me the rueful jest,
A Cossack'd huntsman, and a fiddling priest!
He from Italian songsters takes his cue:
Set Paul to music he shall quote him too.
Cowper. Progress of Error.

But there is a substitute [for dance] in this country, well known by the name of a hop. We all know the alarm which the very word inspires, and the sound of the fiddle calls forth a magistrate to dissolve the meeting.
Windham. Speech, April 18, 1800.

The fiddlers trembled as he look'd around,
For fear of some false note's detected flaw.
Byron. Beppo, a Venetian Story.

FIDE'LITY. FIDE'LE, adj. } Fr. Fidélité; It. Fedeltà; Sp. Fidelidad; Lat. Fidelitas, fidelis, fides; from fidere, and this from Gr. Πειθ-ειν, or ϝειθ-ειν, or from the Æol. Πιστις, for ϝιστις. The verb Πειθειν, ex origine significabat ligare, to bind; and Πιστις, fides, quæ nos persuadendo ligat: that which by persuasion binds or attaches. It is applied to—

An attachment or adherence to a bond or obligation, to any obligatory covenant, engagement or connexion; an observance of, a regard to, good faith.

We not only made his [Pole's] whole family of nought, but enhanced them to so high nobility and honour as they have been so long as they were true and fidele unto us.
Hen. VIII. to Sir T. Wyatt. March 10, an. 30.

And bad me bide till his abilitie,
Might better gwerdon my fidelitie.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

Who presently, upon so good report,
Relying on his friends fidelity,
Conveys himself out of the French king's court
Under pretence to go to Britany.
Daniel. Civil War, b. i.

You knowe that none is admitted to anye degree here in Cambridge, but the same is first presented to the Vicechancelor, and to the Uniuersitie, by some one of that facultie, who giueth his fidelitie for them.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 137.

For he who freely magnifies what hath been nobly done, and fears not to declare as freely what might be done better, gives ye the best covenant of his fidelity; and that his loyalest affection and his hope waits on your proceedings.
Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

Verbal translations are always inelegant, because always destitute of beauty of idiom and language, for by their fidelity to an author's words, they become treacherous to his reputation.—Grainger. Advertisement to Elegies of Tibullus.

The sacrament of the supper is the oath of fidelity. Let us dispose ourselves for celebrating it, by taking a view of the rewards which await the faithful.—Blair, vol. ii. Ser. 9.

FIDGE, v. FI'DGET, v. FI'DGET, n. FI'DGETY. } The Sw. Fika is,—tendere aliquò, citato cursu ferri; but fidge, or fig, is probably the same word as fag, and feague, (qv.)

To be restlessly active; like an over-busy, over-labouring person; to have the quick, unsteady motion or action of such a person.

Where ha you ben fidging abrode, since your neele lost?
Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act i. sc. 4.

So at this booth, which we call Dublin,
Tim, thou'rt the Punch to stir up trouble in;
You wriggle, fidge, and make a rout,
Put all your brother puppets out.
Swift. Dialogue between Mad Mullinix & Timothy

Tim, with surprise and pleasure staring,
Ran to the glass, and then comparing
His own sweet figure with the print,
Distinguish'd every feature in't,
The twist, the squeeze, the rump, the fidge in all,
Just as they look'd in the original.
Id. Tim and the Fables.

The poker lost, poor Susan storm'd,
And all the rites of rage perform'd,
As scolding, crying, swearing, sweating,
Abusing, fidgetting, and fretting.—Smart, Fable 4.

Jesu Maria! Madam Bridget,
Why, what can the Viscountess mean!
(Cried the Square-hoods in woeful fidget)
The times are alter'd quite and clean.
Gray. The Long Story.

But sedentary weavers of long tales
Give me the fidgets, and my patience fails.
Cowper. Conversation.

FIDU'CIAL. FIDU'CIALLY. FIDU'CIARY, n. FIDU'CIARY. adj. } Lat. Fiducia, from Fides, faith. (See FIDELITY.) Fidelitas, virtus fidelium. Fiducia, — constantia fidem habentis, (Gesner.)

Having faith or trust, trusting, confiding; having or holding upon faith or trust; confidential.

I will suppose this definition of faith to be given me (which by them that affirm good works to be an effect of faith is ordinarily given) that it is a fiducial assent to the promises of Christ.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p 725.

The fiduciarie, having resolved faith to be the only instrument of his justification, and excluded good works from contributing any thing toward it, proceeds to define his faith to be a full perswasion, that the promises of Christ belong to him, or an assurance of his particular election.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 480.

This servant, if he aime only at his own ends, cherishes and aggravates the divisions of a family, but if he be sincerely faithfull and upright, certainly he deserves much, so as to be reckoned as one of the brethren; or at least to receive a fiduciary administration of the inheritance.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

Faith causes the soul fiducially and strongly to rely and cast itself upon God in prayer: love to sin causes the soul to depart and fly off from God.—South, vol. ix. Ser. 10.

Augustus, for particular reasons, first began to authorize the fiduciary bequest, which in the Roman law was called fidei commissum.
Montesquieu. The Spirit of Laws, b. xxvii. c. 1. Note.

FIE, or FYE. } Lye observes, "that Fian, A. S. is Odisse, to hate;" and Tooke asserts, that it is the imperative of the Gothic and A. S. verb. See FOE.

Of all swiche cursed stories I say fy.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4501.

And when that Pertelote thus herd him rore,
She was agast, and saide, Herte dere,
What aileth you to grone in this manere?
Ye ben a verray sleper, fy for shame.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,858

I will not tell what shrieks and cries,
What angry pishes, and what fies,
What pretty oaths then newly born
The list'ning taper heard there sworn.
Carterright. The Ordinary, Act iv. sc. 5.

But fie, my wand'ring Muse, how thou dost stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way.
Milton. At a Vacation Exercise, v. 53.

FIEF. See FEOFF.

FIELD. FI'ELDED. FI'ELDISH. FI'ELDY. } A. S. Feld; Dut. Veld, Ger. Feld; Sw. Fält. Helvigius, ingeniously, says Wachter, derives from fallen, i. e. that which has fallen by lot, because the ancients divided fields (agros) by lot. And hence, says Minshew, the expression,—"My lot has fallen to me in a good ground." Somner, perhaps from ϖολ-ειν, colere terram. Tooke,—"This word by Alfred, Gower, Chaucer, &c. was always written Feld. It is merely the past part. felled, fel'd, of the verb, to fell, (fæll-an, be-fæl-an.) Field-land is opposed to wood-land; and means, land where the trees have been felled," (Div. of Purley, ii. 41.)

The examples given below from Gower are produced by Tooke, and he observes in confirmation of his etymology, that in the collateral languages the same correspondence subsists between the equivalent verb and the supposed substantive. Ger. Fellen, fild; Dut. Vellen, veld; Dan. Falder, falt; Sw. Faella, fält. Field, therefore, is—

Land whose trees have been felled, and thus fitted, prepared for cultivation; tilled or cultivated land; producing corn or pasture. Again,—

Cleared or open land, open space, ample room, and thus fitted for armies, battalions or battle; (met.) for action or execution. And a field,—

The time or season passed in the field; a campaign; the events of a field; a battle.

That sole by hete hym the echon, prest vor to be
To deye rather in feld, than the batayle fle.
R. Gloucester, p. 125.

That men with the bestes in feldes thei tham fedde.
R. Brunne, p. 7.

That lawe shal be a laborer, and lede a felde of donge.
Piers Ploukman, p. 71.

And if God clothith thus the hey that to day is in the feeld, and to morowe is cast into an ovene: how much more you of litil feith.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 12.

If the grasse which is to day in the felde, and to morow shalbe cast into the furnace, God so clothe; how much more wyll he clothe you, O ye endued wyth lytle fayth!
Bible, 1555. Ib.

And Jhesus cam doun fro the hil with hem, and stode in a feeldy place, and the cumpany of hise disciples.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 6.

And he came doune with them and stode in the playne felde with the cõpanye of his disciples.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But soth is said, gon sithen are many yeres,
That feld hath eyen, and the wood hath eres.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1524.

In woodde, in felde, or in citee,
Shall no man stele by no wise. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

In woodes, and in feldes eke,
Thus robbery goth to seke,
Whereas he may his purchas finde. Id. Ib.

And robbeth men's goodes aboute
In woode and feide, where he goth oute. Id. Ib.

My mother's maides when they do sowe and spinne,
They sing a song made of a feldishe mouse:
That for bicause her liuelod was but thinne,
Would nedes go see her townish sister's house.
Wyatt. Of the Meane and Sure Estate. To John Poins.

Likewise I caused the two small field-pieces which I had left me, to be trimmed in such sort, as if in approching to the fort they had not cryed that it was Captayne Ribault, I had not failed to haue discharged the same vpon them.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 350.

And there-withall he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assayld;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equall value countervayld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

But manhood lost and number wonne,
The Danes they got the felde:
And Osbret dyed valiantly,
That not to liue would yield.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 21.

Women and maides, the cruel souldiers sword
Shall perse to death, and sillie children, loe,
That playing in the streetes and fields are found,
By violent hand shall close their latter day
Sackville. Ferrex & Porrex, Act v. sc. 2.

Now Mars, I pray thee make vs quicke in worke,
That we with smoaking swordes may march from hence
To helpe our fielded friends.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc 4.

Romeo, good night, I'le to my truckle-bed,
This field-bed is too cold for me to sleep
Id. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 1.

Some departed into the countrie of the Hernikes, other some to the territories of the Latines, for to raise booties and make spoile: leaving behind them rather a competent guard for defence of the campe, then a sufficient power to maintain a field-fight.—Holland. Livius, p. 129.

The Romanes made stay in the enemies land, the rather to traine them both, and draw them to a field-fight.
Id. Ib. p. 239.

——— Though all the Nine
Might well their hearts and heavenly voices join,
To sing that glorious day,
When bold Bavaria fled the field,
And veteran Gauls, unus'd to yield,
On Blenheim's plain imploring mercy lay.
Congreve. Ode.

What God but enters yon forbidden field,
Who yields assistance, or but wills to yield:
Back to the skies with shame he shall be driven,
Gash'd with dishonest wounds, the scorn of heaven.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

Architecture, the most suitable field in which the genius of a people, arrived at a superiority, may range, seems reviving.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. Pref.

FIEND, n.
FI'ENDFUL.
FI'ENDLY.
FI'ENDISH.
FI'ENDISHNESS.

Goth. Fiqands, fiands; A. S. Feond, fynd; Dut. Viande; Ger. Feind; Sw. Fiend: from the Goth. Fig-an; A. S. Feogan, fean, fian, odisse, to hate, (Junius, Wachter, and Ihre.) Tooke, also, considers it to be the present part. of the verb, fian, to hate, meaning (subaudi, some one, any one,) hating. See FIE, and FOE.

A hater, (sc.) of good; and thus, a worker of evil; applied, emphatically, to the devil and his ministers.

Cambinhoy beres him coy, that fende's wheip,
Ther with craft he has tham raft, it may not help.
R. Brunne, p. 281.

He shal haue my soule, that al soules made
And defende hit fro ther feende.—Piers Ploukman, p 133.

The ymage of ypocricie ymped vpon fendes.—Id. Crede.

Feondes and foendekenes, by for me shullen stande
And be at my byddyng. Id. Vision, p. 361.

And Jon answerde and seyde, comandour, we sighen a man castinge out fendis in thi name, and we han forboden him: for he sueth not thee with us.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 9.

This frere bosteth that he knoweth helle,
And, God it wot, that is but litel wonder,
Freres and fendes ben but litel asunder.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Prologue, v. 7256.

He semed frendly, to hem that knew him nouht,
But he was fendly, both in werk and thought
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,781.

This letter spake, the quene delivered was
Of so horrible a fendliche creature,
That in the castle non so hardy was
That any while dorste therein endure.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5171.

For through the fendes sleight him thought,
Amonge other goddes mo,
That Serapis spake to him tho,
Whom he sigh there in great arale —Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Sith that the whole kyngdome of Deuyls, sayeth he, is agaynste the kyngdome of God, howe may it then bee that Sathan casteth out Sathan? excepte peraduenture the fiendes make battayle and goe together by the eares among themselues —Udal. Mark, c. 3.

This woman was so fendish, that the Diuell perceiuing her nature: put her in the minde, that she shoulde anger her husband so sore, that she might giue him occasion to kil her, and then should he be hanged for her.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1187.

That cursed man, that cruell feend of hell
Furor, oh Furor, hath me thus bedight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

——— Regard his hellish fall,
Whose fiendful fortune may exhort the wise
Only to wonder at unlawful things.
Marlow. Tragical History of Dr. Faustus.

Dames under a cloake of modesty and devotion, hide nothing but pride and fiendishnesse.
Bp. Hall. An Holy Panegyricke.

The very fiends know for what crime they fell,
And so do all their followers that rebel:
If then a blind, well meaning Indian stray,
Shall the great gulf be show'd him for the way.
Dryden. Religio-Laici.

Ye scowling shades who break away,
Well do ye fly and shun the purple day,
Every fiend and fiend like form,
Black and sullen as a storm.
Rowe. Ode for the New Year, (1716.)

He calls for famine, and the meagre fiend
Blows mildew from between his shrivel'd lips,
And taints the golden ear. Cowper. Task, b. ii.

FIERCE.
FI'ERCELY.
FI'ERCENESS.

Fr. Fier, farouche; It. Fiero, feroce; Sp. Feroz; Lat. Ferus, from Fera, (Æol. Φηρα, pro θηρα, a celeritate dictum, from θε-ειν, currere, to run.) Ferus and ferox, Vossius observes, differ: that animal is called ferum, quod nullo septo, aut custode, servatur; ferox autem ad mores pertinet. Junius suggests, whether Chaucer may not allude to the origin of this word in the expressions—"As sharp as fire," (Pl. T. v. 39,) and (quod propius accedit,) "As fierse as any fire," (Test. Cr. 185.) See FEROCIOUS.

According to the etymology of Lennep,—applied properly to those animals which run after or pursue, (sc.) their prey; and generally—

Impetuous, rapid, ravenous, eager to attack or destroy; fearless, vehement, furious, violent, in attack or pursuit: and generally, furious, violent. And in B. Jonson, violent, excessive, (credulity.)

And the Erl of Penbroc, and the Erl of Storgoil that was so fers.—R. Gloucester, p. 513.

Therfore se the goodnesse and the fersenesse [severitatem] of God, ghe the fersenesse unto hem that felden doun, but the goodnesse of God into thee, if thou dwellist in goodnesse.
Wiclif. Romaynes, c. 9.

Then armed they hem comenly
Of such armour, as to hem fell.
Whan they were armed, fers and fell
They went hem forth all in a rout
And set the castel all about.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

You must thinke that ye haue to do wyth wylde beastes, whiche being fierce of nature whé they be first taken, must bee shutt vp and tamed with tyme.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 143.

Being come ouer to that side of the riuer where we were, they saddled their horses, and being mounted vpon them with their lances charged, they came very fiercely running at vs.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 476.

And whan theyr courage was chafed, or that by fiersnesse of the beast they were in daunger, than force constrayned them to strike with the swerde.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 18.

Lup. Ay, Cæsar, this is he.
Cæs. Let him be whipped. Lictors, go take him hence,
And Lupus, for your fierce credulity,
One fit him with a pair of larger ears:
'Tis Cæsar's doom, and must not be revoked.
B Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 1

With that he drew his flaming sword, and strooke
At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his seuen-folded shield away it tooke,
And glaunncing on his helmet made a large
And open gash therein.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 5.

The Gaules charged the right wing more fiercely, so that hardly they might have been abidden, had not by good hap the dictator been there in person.—Holland. Livius, p. 259.

But euermore those damzels did forestall
Their furious encounter, and their fiercenesse pall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 4.

At the first the Gaules only were sharp set and eger for battaile: but afterwards the Roman souldiours, by rushing into fight and skirmish, exceeded farre the fiercenesse and forwardnesse of the French —Holland. Livius, p. 257.

They that had sail'd from near th' antarctic pole,
Their treasure safe, and all their vessels whole,
In sight of their dear country ruin'd be,
Without the guilt of either rock or sea!
What they would spare, our fiercer art destroys
Surpassing storms in terrour and in noise
Waller. Of our late War with Spain.

Then, fiercely rushing on the daring foe;
His lifted arm prepares the fatal blow:
But, jealous of his fame, Apollo shrouds
The godlike Trojan in a veil of clouds.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

With that, his courser urging on to flight,
He vanish'd from the mournful city's sight,
With cries and loud laments they fill the air,
And curse the cruel Gods, in fierceness of despair.
Rowe. Lucan, b. viii.

——— By no baneful herb,
No daring tiger, no grim lion's glare,
No fierce-descending wolf, no serpent roll'd
In spires immense progressive o'er the land,
Disturb'd. Thomson. Liberty, pt. v.

[This] from the dying youth the warrior tore,
And the refulgent prize in triumph wore.
His eyes fierce-flaming o'er the trophy roll
That wakes the slumb'ring vengeance of his soul.
Pitt. Virgil. Eneid, b. xii.

The body of the king shook with fear, and forgetfulness seized his fierce-minded confidence.
2 Macc. vi. 18. Bp. Wilson's Bible by Cruttwell.

Yet let a Poet (Poetry disarms
The fiercest animals with magic charms)
Risk an intrusion on thy pensive mood,
And woo and win thee to thy proper good.
Cowper. Retirement.

No, blest chiefs! a hero's crown
Let th' Athenian patriots claim:
You less fiercely won renown
You assum'd a milder name.
Jones. Ode in Imitation of Callistratus.

So when his shaggy mane a lion shakes,
And with loud roar his slumbering fury wakes;
If chance he view the man whose soothing art
First tam'd the fierceness of his lofty heart,
His pride consents th' ignoble yoke to wear.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. viii.

FIFE. } Also written (by Hackluyt) Phiph, Fi'fer. } phipher, (qv.) Fr. Fifre; It. Piffero; Ger. Pfeiffe, which Wachter derives from Puffen, or pfuffen, to blow.

Fife, in Shakespeare, is—the fifer; and he is called—a wry-neck'd musician, because he always looks away from his instrument. See Mr. Boswell's note on the play.

——— With outeries every where
The clamours, drums, and fifes to the rough charge do sound,
Together horse and man come tumbling to the ground.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

——— And when you hear the drum
And the vile squeaking of the wry-neckt fife,
Clamber you not vp to the casements then,
Nor thrust your head into the publique streete
To gaze on Christian fooles with varnisht faces.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 5.

Astonish'd at the view, he cross'd the road,
(Tho' gorg'd and reeling with the nauseous load)
Commands the drums and shriller fifes to cease,
And thus begins, when all was hush'd in peace.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. iv.

And sweetest songster of the winged kind,
What thanks, said he, what praises shall I find
To equal thy melodious voice? in thee
The rudeness of my rural fife I see —Philips, Past. 5.

——— To fifes and trumpets clear
From ev'ry vessel in a blended sound
Reply the concave shores.—Glover The Athenaid, b. xx.

FIFTEEN, i. e. five and ten. See Five.

As in the zer of grace tuelf hundred & fiftene
Contek bi gan bi tuene hom. R. Gloucester, p. 509.

Men gaf fueten schillynges for a goos or hen.
R. Brunne, p. 174.

At mortal batailles hadde he ben fiftene,
And foughten for our faith at Tramissene
In listes thries, and ay slain his fo.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 61.

The Lapland bay where he arriv'd,
Now cald Saint Nicholas bay,
Though Russian, fifteen hundreth miles
From Moscow is away.
Warner. Albion's England, b. xi. c. 63.

If not for God's, for Mr. Wheatlye's sake
Levell the walkes. suppose these pitfalls make
Him spraine a lecture, or misplace a joynt
In his long prayer, or his fivetcenth point:
Thinke you the dawes or stares can set him right?
Corbet. Iter Boreale.

That way which the Apostles us'd, was to call a council: from which by any thing that can be learnt from the fifteenth of the Acts, no faithful Christian was debarr'd, to whom knowledge and piety might give entrance.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 6.

FIFTH. } i. e. that unit which fiveth, or
Fi'fthly. } which maketh up the number five.

And dyede the fyfthe day myd sorwe doel ynowg
R Gloucester, p. 50.

Ser. The foure strangers seeke you, madam, to take their leaue: and there is a fore-runner come from a fift, the Prince of Morocco.—Shakespeare. Merch. of Ven. Act i. sc. 2.

Fifthly, they counted all them as wicked and reprobate whyche were not of their secte.—Whitgift. Defence, p. 41.

FIFTY. }
Fi'ftieth. } i. e. five tens.
Fi'fty-fold. }

Endiene hondred zer and fifti and two,
After that God an erthe com, this spousinge was ido.
R. Gloucester, p. 466.

And Leulyn is fulle fayn to pray Edward for pes,
Gyues Edward for his trespas fifti thousand marks.
R. Brunne, p. 237.

Who receiuinge their pledges, committed them to the kepinge of Phradates, and from thence the fyftye day retourned agayne to hys campe.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 148.

Let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his graue, fifty-fold a cuckold.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 2.

This fiftieth yere shal be a yere of jubile unto you, ye shall not sowe, nether reape that which groweth of it self, nether gather (the grapes) therof, that are left vnlaboured.
Geneva Bible, 1561. Leviticus, xxv. 12.

Advance thy golden mountain to the skies:
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise;
Add one round hundred, and, (if that's not fair,)
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square
Pope. Imitations of Horace, b. i. Ep. 6.

Rubens set out with such a train that the duke apprehended the expence of entertaining so pompous a visitor, and wrote to stop his journey, accompanying the excuse with a present of fifty pistoles.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

FIG, n. A.S. Fic; Dut. Vighe; Ger. Feige; Fr. Figue; It. Fico; Sp. Higo; Lat. Ficus; perhaps from the Gr. Συκη, or, as Vossius rather thinks, from the Heb. גס, grossus; the fig-tree producing (grossus) green fruit or figs when other trees produce flowers. See Vossius and Martinius, in v. Ficus.

But of the fige-tre lerne ye the parable whanne now his braunche is tendre and leves ben sprungun out, ye knowen that somer is nygh.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 13.

Learne a similitude of the fygge-tree. When his braunches are yet tender, and hath broughte forth leues, ye knowe that sommer is neare.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And whan they knewe that they were naked, they sowed of a fig-tree leves in manner of breches.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

And thus hauing more respect vnto his present then to his person, because I perceiued him to be vain-glorious, I bade him welcome and gaue him a dish of figs.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 278.

So counsel'd hee, and both together went
Into the thickest wood; there soon they chose
The fig-tree, not that kind for fruit renown'd,
But such as at this day to Indians known
In Malabar or Decan spreds her armes
Branching so broad and long, that in the ground
The bended twigs take root, and daughters grow
About the mother tree, a pillar'd shade
High overarch't, and echoing walks between.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Close by, a rock, of less enormous height
Breaks the wild waves, and forms a dangerous strait:
Full on its crown a fig's green branches rise,
And shoot a leafy forest to the skies
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

But the objector makes himself diversion about their sewing fig-leaves together for aprons "having, it seems, (says he with a sneer) all things necessary for sewing" I apprehend what he means: they wanted needle and thread, and perhaps thimble too.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 36.

If by those oaks with roving steps you wind
An image fresh of fig-tree formed you'll find;
Though cloth'd with bark, three legg'd and void of ears,
Prompt for the pranks of pleasure he appears.
Fawkes. Theocritus, Ep. 4.

——— Thus cochinille
Feeds on the Indian fig: and, should it harm
The foster plant, its worth that harm repays.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. ii.

They dropped into the yolk of an egg the milk that flows from the leaf of a young fig-tree, with which instead of water, gum, or gumdragant, they mixed their last layer of colours.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

FIGA'RY, i. e. vagary.

——— Is she not a woman, and
Subject to those mad figaries her whole sex
Is infected with.
Beaum. & Fletch. Cupid's Revenge, Act ii. sc. 1.

O. Small Sp. We old men have our crotchets, our conundrums,
Our figaries, querks, and quibbles,
As well as youth. Ram Alley, Act iii. sc. 1.

FI'GENT. Perhaps from Fidge or Fig, q. d. Fidging.
Unsteady, unfixed, quick.

Vert. I have known such a wrangling advocate,
Such a little figent thing; O, I remember him,
A notable talking knave.
Beaum. & Fletch. Little French Lawyer, Act iii. sc. 1.

Quick. I will carry a sailor's gown and cap, and cover her; and a player's beard.
Sir Pet. And what upon her head?
Quick. I tell you, a sailor's cap: 'slight, God forgive me, what kind of figent memory have you?
Sir Pet. Nay then, what kind of figent wit hast thou?
Eastward Hoe, Act iii.

FIGHT, v. } A.S. Feohtan, fight-an; Dut. Fight, n. } Vechtan; Ger. Fechten; Sw. Fi'ghter. } Fekta. Verba pugnandi plerumFi'ghting, n. } que formantur a manu, says Wachter, and derives from the Gr. Πυκτευειν, pugnare, and that from Πυξ, the fist. And thus, to fight, will be—

To strike or hit, or beat, with the hand or fist; to engage in, carry on, contend in battle, in war; to war, to combat.

Tho this strong mon was slawe, that so strong was in fyht,
Ys men bi gonne to fle and fayn that heo mygt.
R. Gloucester, p. 121.

Catigen, the kynge's brother, myd hys men echone,
Asailede Hors and hys host, so that heo fought faste,
So that this Catigen yalaw was atte laat. Id. Ib.

——— Vor hil ne couthe of fyhtenge.
Ther vor into Normandye he let hem sone bringe.
Id. p. 299.

Right vnto the gate with the targe thei gede,
Fighland on a gate vndir him thei slouh his stede.
R. Brunne, p. 183.

And whilk did wrong & whilk ryght,
And whilk mayntend pes & fyght.—Id. App. to Pref. p. 97.

By my power Peers ich plyghte the my treuthe
To defende the in faith. fyghte thauh ich sholde.
Piers Ploukman, p. 129.

And lo a whyt hors, and he that sat on him was clepid feithful and soothfast, and with ryghtwisnesse he deemeth and fighteth.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 19.

The long day with speares sharp yground
With arrows, darts, swerds, and maces fel
They fight, & bringen horse, & man to ground,
And with her axes out the braines quel.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

Thou mightest wenen, that this Palamon
In his fighting were as a wood leon,
And as a cruel tigre was Arcite.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1653.

For so it fell that like stounde,
That he hath with a deadly wounde
(Fightende) his own hand slaine
Branchus. Gower. Con. A. b i.

Thus thei defenden vs the vices,
And sitten him selfe all amidde,
To flea and fight, thei vs bidde. Id. Ib. b. iv

The Erle of Warwick after long fight, wisely did perceiue his mē to be ouerpressed with the multitude of his aduersaries: wherfore he caused new men to relefe thim, that fought in the forward, by reason of the whiche succors, Kyng Edwardes parte gane a little backe (whiche was the cause that some lokers on, and no fighters galoped to Londō, saying: that therle had wonne the feld.)
Holl. Edward IV. an. 10

Warne thē—that they speake euill of no man, that they be no fighters, but soft, shewynge all mekenes vnto all men.
Bible, 1551. Paul to Philemon, c. 3.

They seldome or neuer fall out among themselues, and, as for fightinge or brawlings, wounds or manslaughters, they neuer happen among them.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i p. 55.

I marualle why wise men leauing the plaine and manifest doctrine of Christ, whereby he teacheth patience, do seek corners of their owne imagining, to the intent they may approoue fightinge and warres.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 447. The Storie of Walter Brute.

He put downe all the Jewes and lyberties of ye Jewes, and set up the wycked statutes. He durst make a fyghtynge scole vnder the castel.—Bible, 1551. 2 Maccabees, c. 4.

Servant of God, well done, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintained
Against revolted multitudes the cause
Of Truth, in word mightier then they in armes.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

And verily, when I call to mind and remember the conflicts and fights at sea, in the first Punick warre, for the space of xxiiii. yeares, with the Carthaginians, I suppose the whole age of Alexander would hardly have brought about and finished that one warre, and against one of those two states.—Holland. Livius, p. 327.

——— Nor be thou forgot
My first poor bondman, Geta, I am glad
Thou art turn'd a fighter.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Prophetess, Act iv. sc. 6

For there's the folly that's still mixt with fear,
Cowards more blows than any hero bear;
Of fighting sparks some may their pleasures say,
But 'tis a bolder thing to run away.
Dryden. Essay on Satire.

An hour and more, like tides, in equal sway
They rush'd, and won by turns, and lost the day:
At length the nine (who still together held)
Their fainting foes to shamefull fight compell'd,
And with resistless force o'er-ran the field.
Id. The Flower and the Leaf.

She sees new verdure all the plain o'erspread,
Where the fight burn'd, and where the battle bled.
Pitt. On the Approaching Congress of Cambray.

Whether repletion is not bad,
And fighters with full stomachs mad.—Churchill. Ghost

FI'GMENT. } Lat. Figmentum, from Fingere,
FIGME'NTAL. } fictum. See FICTION.

There be of those that esteem prelaty a figment, who yet can pipe if they can dance, nor will be unfurnish'd to shew that what the prelates admire and have not, others have and admire not.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

I heard he was to meet your worship here.
Punt. You heard no figment, sir; I do expect him at every pulse of my watch.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act iv. sc. 4.

I enquire, whether it be the thin membrane, or the inward and something soft and fuzzy pulpe it contains, that raises and represents to itself these arbitrarious figments and chimeras.—H. More. App. to the Antidote, c. 10.

There being a memory also of these figmental impressions, (I demand) how they can be seated upon the brain, the seat of memory.—Id. Ib.

And yet after all, even those which are taken in, as Justin, Irenæus, Athenagoras, &c. furnish out evidence enough to confute the ill-contrived claim, and prove it a figment.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 328.

The folly and unreasonableness of this ridiculous and ungrounded figment, I cannot better display and reprove than in the words of Cicero.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

FI'GURE, v.
FI'GURE, s.
FI'GURABLE.
FI'GURATE.
FI'GURATELY.
FI'GURATED.
FIGURA'TION.
FI'GURATIVE.
FI'GURATIVELY.
FI'GURATIVENESS.
FI'GURING, s.
FI'GURIST.

Fr. Figurer; It. Figurare; Sp. Figurar; Lat. Figurare; from Fingere, to form or frame. Fictor, (says Varro,) cum dicit fingo, figuram imponit, (De L. L. lib. v.)

To frame or form, to fashion or shape, to make into form or fashion, to delineate, depicture or portray the shape, form or image; to invest or clothe with figures: (met.) to imagine or conceive, express or declare, similarities or resemblances, representations or allusions, types, symbols.

To make a figure,—emphatically, a great figure, an important figure, a handsome figure.

A figure,—applied to the forms of numerical or arithmetical characters, and thus figures, generally; numbers or arithmetic.

The figure of a syllogism,—the formal arrangement or disposition of its component parts.

And ghe han take the tabernacle of Moloch and the sterre of ghoure God Remfam, figuris that ghe han maad to worschip hem.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 7.

And ye tooke vnto you the tabernacle of Moloch, and the starre of youre God Remphan, figures which ye made to worshyppe them.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Marriage is figured betwix Crist and holy chirche.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Tell us som mery thing of aventures,
Your termes, your colours, and your figures,
Kepe hem in store, til so be ye endite.
Id. The Clerkes Prologue, v. 7892.

This was the sweuen, whiche he had,
That Daniell anone arad,
And said hym, that figure strange
Betokeneth how the world shall change.
Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Both these sacraments were figured in Moyses' law, baptisme was figured by circumcision: & the Lordes supper by the eatyng of the passe-lamb.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 467.

Their sacramentes were figures of the thinges, but our conteyne the very thinges.
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament.

Circumcision is a figure of baptisme, but the Leuiticall priesthoode is no figure of the ministerie of the Gospell, therefore we may well proue the baptizing of infantes by circumcision, but we can not proue the ordering of ministers of the Gospell by the ceremonies used about the Leuites.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 169.

Thei enterpreted that in these woordes of Jesus, there laie priuely hidden some figurale & mistical manier of speaking, such as the Lorde did of a speciall propretee that was in him, and veral muche and often vse to bring in, beguiling by meanes of that same colourable speaking, not onely the people, but also the veral Apostles selfes.—Udal. Luke, c. 18.

Now if any man be superstitious that hee dare not vnderstand this thyng as figurately spoken, then may he verifie it vpon them that God raysed from naturall death as he did Lazarus.—Frith. Workes, p. 35.

After this, the auctor occupyeth a great numbre of leaues, that is to say, from the lvii. leef unto the lxxiii. to proue Christes wordes (this is my body) to be a figurative speche.
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament.

The metaphores & figuratiue kind of speeches that Solomon vseth in those bookes, can not be vnknown to any.
Whitgift. Defence, p. 270.

There bee three parts of penaunce which this holy prophet sheweth derkely and figuratiuely by the symylitude of thre diuers byrdes, that is to saye, the pellycane, the nyght rauen, and the sparowe.—Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, Ps. 143.

Euen as Christ is the verie vine, abiding reallie and figuratiuelie the vine: so the Temple of Jerusalem was realme the materiall temple and figuratiuelie it was the bodie of Christ.—Pos. Martyrs, p. 456. The Storie of W. Bruce.

Who, mov'd with her sweet fashion, had her rise
With gentle language full of comforting;
Read her request—but thought not what he read
The lines he view'd her eyes had figured.
Daniel. The Civil Wars, b. viii.

K. Hen. Stanley, we know thou lov'st us, and thy heart
Is figur'd on thy tongue.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act i. sc. 1.

Part loosly wing the region, part more wise
In common, rang'd in figure, wedge their way,
Intelligent of seasons.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

——— He grants what they besaught
Instructed that to God is no access
Without Mediator, whose high office now
Moses in figure bears, to introduce
One greater, of whose day he shall foretell,
And all the Prophets in their Age the times
Of great Messiah shall sing. Id. Ib. b. xii.

A figure is the superfices, circumscription and accomplished lineament of a body. The Pythagoreans affirme the bodies of the foure elements be of a sphœrick or round figure; only the highest of them (to wit, fire) is pyramidall, or sharpe pointed above.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 667.

Said hee, these seeming beasts are men indeed,
Whom this enchantresse hath transformed thus,
Whylome her louers, which her lusts did feed,
Now turned into figures hideous,
According to their mindes like monstrous.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

The differences of impressible and not impressible; figurable and not figurable; mouldable and not mouldable; scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions, applied unto the instruments and uses which men ordinarily practice.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 846.

Wax remains figurable, whether it be melted or congealed.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 16.

Plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 602.

Neither doth the wind (as farre as it carrieth a voice) with the motion thereof, confound any of the delicate, and articulate figurations of the air, in variety of words.
Id. Ib. s. 821.

In the form, I will first consider the general figuration, and then the several members.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 14.

Your good mother of England is down again in the throng, who with the rest reads it, the woman Jesabel, but suppose it were wife: a man might as well interpret the word figuratively, as her name Jesabel no man doubts to be a borrowed name.—Milton. Remonstrants' Defence.

For let us consider the different qualities of the optick nerves, humours, tunicles, and spirits; the divers figurings of the brain.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 22.

All those chains which vaine lovers forge for the figuring out the powerfulnesse of beauty may be said to be those irons the flesh hath cast off and set upon the spirit, which is truly captivated alwayes by the others liberty.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 13. s. 6.

Some have dealt with him by suit, as the old Satanian hereticks, and the present Indian savages, sacrificing to him, that he hurt not; others by covenant, cõditioning their service upõ this assistãce, as witches and magicians, others, by insinuation of implicite cõpact, as charmers, and figurecasters.—Bp Hall. Cont. Christ among the Gergesens.

The song, as Grotius thinks, hath respect to the time of the children of Israel's departure out of Egypt, by which the time of the Messias was figured and typified, not without a wonderful congruity of circumstances disposed by Divine Providence.—Bp. Bull. Works, vol. i. Ser. 4.

The disposition of the three terms [of a syllogism] that is to say, of the medium with the three terms of the conclusion, is called figure.
Port Royal Logick, by Ozell, pt. iii. c. 4.

The number 30 is a figurated number, because three times ten, or five time six make this number.
Potter. On the Number 666, p. 195.

In this essay he [Boyle] informs us, that gems were once fluid, and have their virtues from the mineral matter; which he shows from their transparency, figuration, internal texture, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 100. Life.

The sum of this doctrine is, that the typical Melchizedek blessed Abraham in and by bread and wine, considered as symbols, images, figurations of our Lord's passion and sacrifice; and that the true Melchizedek so blessed his own disciples in delivering to them the benefits contained in his passion, by the like symbols.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 333.

Agreed forms of speaking have no deceit. From hence it follows, that all usual forms of rhetorick, all figurative expressions, though they seem to signify that as true which is not literally so, yet can by no means be accounted lies. And the same may likewise be said of fables, and parables, and mythological descriptions.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 133.

Christ there said of them that received him in the sense that was meant in that chapter, that all that did so eat his flesh had eternal life in them; therefore these words can only be understood figuratively of receiving him by faith, as himself there explains.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1549.

From the figurativeness therefore of these expressions, as well as from the nature and evident reason of the thing itself, it is plain that the kingdom of Satan, set up in opposition to the kingdom of God, is not literally a kingdom of force or power, but in the spiritual sense a kingdom or party, a dominion or prevalency of sin, in opposition to the kingdom or establishment of righteousness.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 122.

But least of all does he favour the figurists, or memorialists; for his doctrine runs directly counter to them almost in every line.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 164.

They are to be accounted part of that language which nature dictates to men. They are not the invention of the schools, nor the pure product of study: on the contrary, the most illiterate speak in figures, as often as the most learned.
Blair, vol. i. Lect. 14.

Men are used to talk of beauty in a figurative manner, that is to say, in a manner extremely uncertain and indeterminate.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s 1.

Whenever the imaginations of the vulgar are much awakened, or their passions inflamed against one another, they will pour forth a torrent of figurative language, as forcible as could be employed by the most artificial declaimer.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 14.

At that hallowed hour when the eucharist is consecrated, Christ is, again, figuratively and sacramentally, presented in the temple on earth.—Horne. Works, vol. v. Dis. 11.

FILA'CEOUS. } Lat. Filum, a thread. As FI'LAMENT. } the Fr. Filamens, little strings,
FILAME'NTOUS. } threads or hairs, in veins, plants, roots, &c.; the beard of a root.

It is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter, commonly.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 614.

[Pliny] affirms that in some part of Tartarie, there were mines of iron whose filaments were weaved into incombustible cloth.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 14

When it began to swell, they divided or slived it longwise into small filaments with the point of a nedle or bodkin. These filaments or strings, they dried in the shade, and laid them up to serve as need should require.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 5.

The doctrine of the filamentous cataract will become as familiar as any established theory among us, only by supposing this, like all other membranes, thickened and become opaque by disorders.—The Student, vol. i. p. 341.

When one tossed his weaver's beam and the other carried the gates of Gaza, they performed their prodigious feats by tender filaments slighter than a cobweb, undiscernible with a microscope.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 3.

The filaments, antheræ, and stigmata of flowers, bear no more resemblance to the young plant, even to the seed, which is formed by their intervention, than a chisel or a plane does to a table or chair. What then are the filaments, antheræ, and stigmata of plants, but instruments strictly so called?—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 4.

FI'LANDERS. It. Filandre; "Fr. Filandres; the felanders, small worms that breed in bruised, surfeited, or foul fed hawks; also, nets to catch wild beasts with." And Filandre, the adj. "Streaked with, or full of, small threads, fibres, felanders," (Cotgrave.) The Filanders are probably thread worms; worms thin as a thread; from the Lat. Filum, a thread.

This may probably destroy that obstinate disease of the filander or back-worm.—Brown. Miscellanies, p. 115.

FI'LBERD, s. Junius says,—forte a multis barbis; and Skinner,—full and beard; q.d. plenus barbâ et lanugine. Mr. Tooke and Mr. Todd have noted the passage quoted below from Gower: the latter, as supplying a legitimate etymology; the former, probably, as supplying an etymology of the same character with that which in the 22d page of the Div. of Purley, vol. ii. he has produced from Chaucer of the word cokold. Virgil's Phillis (Phillis amat corylos) has a claim as good as Gower's.

Filberd exists in no other language than the English; and it is not very probable that our ancestors alone were so classical as Gower's lines suppose.

Another origin (of as little value) is given by Peacham in his Emblems, 1612. He is describing an English fruit-garden.

> The Persian peach and fruitful quince,
> And there the forward almond grew,
> With cherries knowne no long time since,
> The winter warden, orchard's pride,
> The Philibert that loves the vale,
> And red queen apple, so envide
> Of school-boys passing by the pale.

Upon this he observes in a note, "The Filbert so named of Philibert, a king of France, who caused by arte sundry kinds to be brought forth; as did a gardener of Otranto in Italie, by clove-gilliflower and carnation, of such colours as we now see them."

> —— Phillis
> Was shape into a nutte tree
> That all men it might see:
> And after Phillis Philberd
> This tree was cleped in the yerd:
> And yet for Demophon to shame,
> Into this day it beareth the name.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The countrey yeeldeth many good trees of fruit, as filberds in some places, but in all places cherie trees, and a kind of peare tree meet to graffe on.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 132.

> There might you see ——
> With loue juice stained the Mullberie,
> The fruit that dewes the poet's braine;
> And Phillis Philbert there away
> Compar'de with mirtle and the bay.
> Spenser. Elegie on Sir P. Sidney.

> No, Jockie, rather wend we to the wood,
> The time is fit, and filberds waxen ripe;
> Let's go and fray the squirrell from his food;
> We will another time heare Willie pipe.
> Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe.

> Thou hast a brain—such as it is indeed;
> On what else should thy worm of fancy feed!
> Yet in a filbert I haue often known
> Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.
> The Earl of Dorset, to Mr. Howard.

Its only ornament was a short walk, shaded on each side by a filbert-hedge, with a small olive at one end.

Fielding. Joseph Andrews, b. ii. c. 4.

When a man plants a peach tree can you properly say, it is therefore fated that he shall gather peaches and not plums or filberds therefrom?

Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

FILCH, v. FILCH, n. FI'LCHING, n. FI'LCHER. Junius says, Filch, filch, suffurari, clam subducere, expilare; and from the Fr. Piller, Skinner seems to think it may be derived.

To purloin, to pill or pilfer, to steal.

> A hard wele telle, that bagelle & belle be filchid & fled.
> R. Brunne, p. 282.

> If thou purloynst one mette from out
> a thousand mette of beanes,
> My losse is lesse, thy facte not lesse
> in this thy filching meanes.
> Drant. Horace. Epistle to Quintius.

> For, hauing filcht her bels, her vp he cast
> To the wide world, and let her fly alone.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

Which he practised so long, that in the end he gat himselfe the anger and displeasure of the masters and keepers of the said ponds and cisterns, with his continuall and immeasurable filching.—Holland. Plinie, vol. i. p. 251.

> Hig. That thou art chosen, venerable Clause,
> Our king and soveraign; monarch o' th' maunders,
> Thus we throw up our nab-cheats, first for joy,
> And then our filches.
> Beaum. & Fletch. Beggars' Bush, Act ii. sc. 1.

> —— For never
> Will I leave off the search of this bad man,
> This filcher of affections, this love pedler.
> Id. Love's Pilgrimage, Act iii. sc. 1.

> Thilke moral shall ye understond
> From school-boy's tale of fayre Ireland
> Which to the fennes hath him betake,
> To filch the gray ducke fro the lake.
> Pope. Imitations in his Youth, (Chaucer.)

> While the sly rogue who filch'd the prey,
> Too close beset to run away,
> "Stop thief! stop thief!" exclaims aloud,
> And so escapes among the crowd.
> Lloyd. Epistle to Mr. Colman.

FILE, v. FILTH. FI'LTHY. FI'LTHILY. FI'LTHINESS. FI'LTHIHEAD. FI'LTHLESS. A.S. Fylan, afylan, and befylan. "Afylan, inquinare, contaminare, fœdare, to de*file*, pollute or make filthy," (Somner.) See To DEFILE, and FOUL.

To dirty, to pollute, to corrupt, to contaminate; in R. Brunne (met.) to disgrace or degrade. Filth—

That which fileth, fouleth or dirtieth; dirt, pollution.

> Eft we toke him fled, brouht hem ageyn to toun,
> The courte opon him sat, the quest filed him & schent.
> R. Brunne, p. 173.

Lo I come as a nyght theef, blessid is he that wakith and kepith hise clothis that he wandre not nakid, and that thei se not the filthehed of hym.—Wiclif. Apocalypse, c. 16.

> Fountain al filthlesse, as bircll current clere.
> Chaucer. A Balade to our Ladie.

The filth of secret chaumbers, the stenche of the pumpe in shippes, nor the odures of cities do not corrupt the ayre so muche, as ydell folke do the people.—Golden Boke, c. 23.

Moreouer hee sayth that if any spirituall mā doth after this decree marry then his sinne shall neuer bee forgeuen hym, nor they may neuer afterward handle the blessed sacramēt, because that mariage is a filthy and foul concupiscence sayth hee.—Barnes. Workes, p. 316.

There is no flesh or fish which they find dead (smell they euer so filthily) but they will eat it, as they find it without any dressing.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 38.

Moreouer if the filthines of sin be ones conceiued in the soule, & longe continue there by vnhappy custom, it maketh foule and infecteth it more and more.

Fisher. On the Seuen Psalms, Ps. 32.

> Rod. Sirrah, I scorn my finger should be fil'd with thee.
> Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act ii. sc. 2.

> Where feeling one close couched by her side,
> Shee lightly leapt out of her fled bed,
> And to her weapon ran, in mind to gride
> The loathed leachour.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

> —— If 't be so,
> For Banquo's issue haue I fil'd my minde,
> For them, the gracious Duncan haue I murthur'd,
> Put rancours in the vessell of my peace
> Only for them, and mine eternal jewell
> Giuen to the common enemie of man,
> To make them kings: the seede of Banquo kings.
> Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc. 1.

Oaths are necessary for nothing: they pass out of a man's mouth like smoke through a chimney that files all the way it goes.—Wilkins. Inforced Marriage, Act iii.

> Duch. He called his father villain and me strumpet,
> A word that I abhor to file my lips with.
> Tourneur. The Revenger's Tragedy.

And that which is a very great wonder, neither is the lake once stirred with that violent streame running through it, nor yet the river stayed in his hastie course, for all the muddie filth of the lake.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 34.

> And by his side rode loathsome Gluttonie,
> Deformed creature, on a filthy swine;
> His belly was vphlowne with luxury,
> And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyne.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

For the liberty of doing filthily and obscenely, is next to the liberty of speaking filthily and obscenely: therefore obscenities are especially to be exterminated from young tender mindes, that they neither heare nor speake any such thing.—Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 3.

> Her, late forlorne and naked, he had found,
> Where she did wander in waste wildernesse,
> Lurking in rocks and caues farre vnder ground,
> And with greene mosse couering her nakednesse,
> To hide her shame and loathly filthinesse.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

> But there's no thought thou shouldst be ever he
> Whom either shame should call from filthinesse,
> Terror from danger, or discourse from fury.
> B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iv.

The chamber where he [Hooper] lodged, vile and stinking; on one side of which was the sink and filth of all the house, and on the other side the town ditch.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1554.

> When from the filthy dunghill Faction bred
> New-form'd Rebellion durst rear up its head,
> Answer me all, who struck the monster dead?
> Otway. Epilogue, April 21, 1682.

In his time [Wiclif] the gentlemen or nobles occupied in the wars, the merchants in their affairs, the plowmen in their labours, the priests, monks, and friars, most filthily abused their wives

Strype. Mem. From Wiclif. De Hypocrisi, vol. iv.

> Was there no milder way but the small-pox,
> The very filthiness of Pandora's box?
> Dryden. Upon the Death of Lord Hastings.

They consider their subjects, as the farmer does the hog he keeps to feast upon. He holds him fast in his stye, but allows him to wallow as much as he pleases in his beloved filth and gluttony.—Burke. A Vindic. of Natural Society.

> But whoso entereth within this town,
> That, sheening far, celestial seems to be,
> Disconsolate, will wander up and down,
> 'Mid many things unsightly to strange ee;
> For hut and palace show like filthily.
> Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. i.

They are no longer Jews who are such outwardly: nor is that circumcision, which is outward in the flesh: but they are Jews, who believe in the Son of God; and they are of the circumcision, who are cleansed by him from all filthiness of flesh and spirit.—Horne. On the Psalms, Ps. 76.

FILE, v. FILE, n. FI'LING, n. See ANVILE. A.S. Feolan; Dut. Vilen; Ger. Feil-en; which Junius thinks may be from that φαλυν-ειν, which Hesychius interprets λαμπρυνειν, splendidum reddere. Wachter,—that it may be from the Lat. Pol-ire.

To brighten, to smoothen, to polish, to burnish, to refine; (met.) to give smoothness or polish, refinement or subtilty.

> But they their tonges file,
> And make a pleasaunte style.
> Skelton. The Boke of Colin Clout.

> Was never file yet half so well yfiled,
> To file a file for any smithe's entent,
> As I was made a filing instrument,
> To frame other.—Wyatt. The abused Lover seeth his Folv.

> With faire discourse the evening so they pass;
> For that olde man of pleasing wordes had store,
> And well could file his tongue, as smooth as glass.
> Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

For common chalybs præparatus, or corroded and powdered steel, the loadstone attracts like ordinary filings of iron.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 2.

> —— And law, is but a forme,
> A net of Vulcan's filing, a meere ingine,
> To take that life by a pretext of justice,
> Which you pursue in malice!—B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iii.

Some there bee who take file-dust of lead, put the same in an earthen pot of greene potters clay, set the same into an oven, and so let it calcine therein untill such time as the pot be well and thoroughly baked.

Holland. Plinie, vol. ii. p. 519.

At the end of that time he [Sir Edward Grimston] procured a file, and so cut out one of the bars of the window, and, having a rope conveyed to him, he changed clothes with his servant, and went down on the rope; which proving a great deal too short, he leaped a great way, and having done that before the gates were shut, made his escape without being discovered.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1558.

In a day or two the exposed filings had gained a fine bluish green colour, but the spirit that swam upon the other filings, did in a few hours acquire a fine redness, which afterwards in two or three days degenerated into a colour like that of the exposed filings

Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 615.

> What, though the footsteps of my devious Muse
> The measur'd walks of Grecian art refuse!
> Or through the frankness of my hardy style
> Mock the nice touches of the critic's file.
> Akenside, b. ii. Ode 1.

FILE, v. FILE, n. Fr. Filer; Lat. Filum, a thread. See to DEFILE.

To draw out threads, to prolong, to extend in length; and thus, to move in a line or file. Also, to put upon a file or thread, string or wire, or other similar substance; to pass such file through any thing.

> —— My endeavours
> Haue euer come too short of my desires
> Yet fil'd [fil'd] with my abilities
> Shakespeare. Hen. VIII. Act iii. sc. 2.

> Card. Please you, sir,
> I know but of a single part in ought
> Pertaines to th' state, and front but in the file,
> Where others tell steps with me.—Id. Ib. Act i. sc. 2.

> And were it not ill fitting for this file,
> To sing of hills and woods mongst warres and knights,
> I would abate the sternnesse of my stile,
> Mongst these sterne stounds to mingle soft delights,
> Spenser. Of Mutabilitie, b. vii. c. 6.

> Reports and judgments will not do't,
> But 'tis dragoons, and horse, and foot:
> Words are but wind, but blows come home;
> A stout tongu'd lawyer's but a mome,
> Compar'd to a stout file-leader.
> Brome. Political Songs. On Sir G. B. his Defeat.

Now were some of them salued out of the gates alreadie and others followed hard after at their heeles, keeping their array, and every man commyng orderly into his ile and rank.—Holland. Livius, p. 129.

The horsemen closely among the rankes and iles of the footmen, gat againe to their horses, and from thence rode speedily unto the other side, reporting to their fellowes the victorie.—Id. Ib. p. 131.

——— The military mound
The British iles transcend, in evil hour
For their proud foes, that fondly brav'd their fate.
J. Philips. Blenheim.

In the mean time I may be bold to draw this corollary from what has been already said, that the ile of heroick poets is very short.—Dryden. Discourse on Epick Poetry.

Achilles! yes! this day at least we bear
Thy rage in safety through the iles of war
But come it will, the fatal time must come,
Nor ours the fault, but God decrees thy doom.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b xx

——— Taste were sacrilege,
If, lifting there the axe, it dar'd invade
Those spreading oaks that in fraternal iles
Have pair'd for centuries, and heard the strains
Of Sidney's, nay, perchance, of Surry's reed.
Mason. The English Garden, b. i.

Persons who are nurtured in office, do admirably well, as long as things go on in their common order, but when the high roads are broken up, and the waters out, when a new and troubled scene is opened, and the ile affords no precedent, then it is a greater knowledge of mankind, and a far more extensive comprehension of things is requisite than ever office gave, or than office can ever give Burke. On American Taxation.

FI'LIAL. FI'LIALLY. FILIA'TION. } Fr. and Sp. Filial; It. Filiale, from the Lat. Filius, a son. To this adjective formed from the Latin noun, we have not any equivalent from our own English noun "son."

Of or pertaining to a son; relating to, having the character of a son.

Bearinge as nature requireth all filial reuerence to the duchess his mother.—Sir T. More. Works, p. 63.

He said, and on his Son with rayes direct
Shon full, he all his Father full expresst
Ineffably into his face receiv'd;
And thus the filial Godhead answering spake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

The Father knows the Son; therefore secure
Ventures his filial vertue, though untried,
Against whate'er may tempt, whate'er seduce,
Allure, or terrifie, or undermine.—Id. Par. Regained, b. i.

Indeed the worst kind of feare, is that we call servile: but the best feare, is the feare of servants. For there is no servant of God, but feares filially.
Bp. Hall. Works. A Holy Panegyricke.

Consequently the relation of paternity and filiation between the first Affluate and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof must needs be eternal
Hale. Origin of Mankind, p 127.

The sire then shook the honours of his head,
Full on the filial dulness.—Dryden. Mac-Flecknoe.

The first and most proper filiation and generation, is his eternally existing in and of the Father; the eternal λογος, of the eternal mind.
Waterland. A Defence of some Queries, Q. 7.

I now return, and quit the martial strife,
My care to succour on the verge of life,
Whose feeble age the present aid demands,
And kind assistance of my filial hands.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. vi.

He [Dr. John Edwards] is persuaded, that all of them have been mistaken by the misapplication of the common and received notion of paternity and filiation, in the translation of these from man to God.
Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull, p. 269.

FI'LIBEG, FEILEBO, PHILIBEG. Gael. Filleadh, a fold, plait, or cloth, and beg, little; or perhaps Goth. Isl. Fila, a light garment, and beig-a, to surround. A piece of dress worn by men in the (Scottish) Highlands instead of breeches, (Jamieson,) who gives the following extract from Pennant's Tour in Scotland, 1769, p. 210, "The feil-beg, i. e. little plaid, also called kelt, is a sort of short petticoat reaching only to the knees, and is a modern substitute for the lower part of the plaid, being found to be less cumbersome, especially in time of action, when the Highlanders used to tuck their breeches into their girdle."

The filibeg or lower garment is still very common.
Johnson. Journey to the Western Islands.

FILIGRANE, or FI'LIGREE. FI'LIGRAINED. } Fr. Filigrane, from the It. Filigrana, a word composed of filum, and granum, (a very old invention,) Menage. "Sp. Filigrana, filigran-work, which is curious fine work in silver or gold, or any other metal; as fine as threads, and therefore has its name from filum, thread," (Delpino.)

Filigrained, or (as there written) filigrain'd (work) is described (by Evelyn) in the Fop's Dictionary, (1690,) to be "Dressing boxes, baskets, or whatever else is made of silver wire work." And Mr. Todd has produced a quotation from Dr. Brown's Travels, (1685.)

A curious filigrane handkerchief, and two fair filigrane plates brought out of Spain.—Dr. Browne Travels, p. 147.

Adam and Eve in bugle-work, without fig-leaves, upon canvass, curiously wrought with her ladyship's own hand; several filigrain curiosities.—Tatler, No. 245.

The churches of our ancestors shot up into spires, towers, pinnacles, and filigree work, and no such thing as a cupola seems ever to have been attempted
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 44

FILL, v. FILL, n. FI'LLER. FI'LLING, n. } Goth. Fulljan; A. S. Fyllan; Dut. Vollen; Ger. Fullen, implere. See FULL.

To occupy or take possession of void, vacant, or empty space; as to fill a glass, i. e. the cavity or hollow of a glass; to take possession, to possess,—space unoccupied; (met.) the mind, i.e. to occupy all its thoughts; to occupy or engage, completely, wholly, entirely; so as to leave no vacuity, no deficiency or want.

And with the bandes of bakun his baly for to filen.
Piers Ploughman. Crede

And Jhesus saith to hem, Fille ye the pottes with water, and thei filliden hem up to the mouth.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 2.

And Jesus sayde vnto them fyl the water pottes wt water. And they fylled them vp to the brymme.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Anone as filled is your lust many of you be so trew, that little heede take ye of suche kindnesse, but with traisoun anone ye thinke hem beguile, and let light of that thing which first ye maked to you wonders deare
Chaucer. The Test. of Love, b. ii.

Gode spede you: goth forth and lay on fast
With longe swerde and with mase fighteth your fill
Goth now your way, this is the lordes will
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2561.

Whan he thirto his tyme sigh
All priuelithe, that none it wist,
His owne honden that one chist
Of fine golde, and of fyne perle,
The whiche out of his tresorie
Was take, anone he felde full.—Gower. Con. A. b v.

And hauing rydden hys fyl, brought backe the horse agayn.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 6.

Rich. They do me wrong, and I will not endure it.
Who is it that complaines vnto the king,
That I (forsooth) am sterne, and loue them not?
By holy Paul, they loue his grace but lightly
That fill his eares with such dissentious rumors
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 3

But thou hast promis'd from us two a race
To fill the earth, who shall with us extoll
Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake,
And when we seek, as now, thy gift of sleep.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

My teares shall wipe away these bloody markes:
And no more words, till they have flow'd their fill.
Shakespeare, 3 Part Henry VI. Act ii. sc. 5.

You are old, and therefore for your part, as one that hath had his fill of both fortunes, are content to accept of conditions.—Savile Tacitus Historie, p. 129.

Pet. Braue soldier yield; thou stock of arms and honor,
Thou filler of the world with fame and glory.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bonduca, Act iv. sc. 1.

Home when she came, her secret woe she vents,
And fills the palace with her loud laments;
Those loud laments her echoing maids restore,
And Hector, yet alive, as dead deplore
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

Horrentia is such a flat epithet as Tully would have given us in his verses. It is a mere filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter and connect the preface to the work of Virgil.—Id. Dedication to the Æneid.

And why that spiteful character given to all crowds? mere fillings of his own, without warrant from his original
Bentley. Free Thinking, § 54.

Content is better, all the wise will grant,
Than any earthly good that thou canst want;
And Discontent, with which the foolish fill
Their minds, is worse than any earthly ill.
Byrom. Miscellaneous Pieces

FI'LLET, v. FI'LLET, n. } Fr. Filet, a little thread, string or twist; from Lat. Filum, a thread; a slight bandage, (redimiculum,) says Skinner, wrought of threads.

Fillet of veal,—the more muscular part of the thigh, perhaps so called, because large and strong tendons and nerves, exhibiting the appearance of threads, present themselves in that part, (Skinner.)

To bind, surround or cover with a fillet.

Here fillet brode of silk, and set full hye.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3243

And of the 1775 shekels, he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them. [Bible, 1551, whooped them; Geneva, 1561, made fillets.]
Exodus, xxxviii. 28.

Bass., ——— I am for you,
It most concerns my heart, my credit.
Quick fillet both his arms
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act v. sc. 2

Binde your fillets faste
And gird in your waste.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. April.

Our Englisher of Hans Bloome names it [the Astragal] a bettel or fillet in any part of a pillar, but I take a fillet to be more flat, this more swelling and (as I say) torus like
Evelyn. On Architecture

There frame a town, and fix a tent with cords,
The town be Shiloh call'd, the tent the Lord's:
Carv'd pillars, filleted with silver, rear,
To close the curtains in an outward square.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

Go, Barce, call my sister; let her care
The solemn rites of sacrifice prepare
The sheep, and all the atoning offerings bring.
Sprinkling her body from the crystal spring
With living drops: then let her come, and thou
With sacred fillets bind thy hoary brow.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

We cannot hardly help comparing this [the ligament at the knee] with the binding up of a fracture, where the fillet is almost always strapped across, for the sake of giving firmness and strength to the bandage
Paley. Natural Theology, c. x.

FI'LLIP, v. FILLIP, n. FI'LLIPING, n. } Skinner (adopted by Lye) vox a sono ficta. And so also Minshew.

To throw out the finger or thumb,—the one from the other—withholding it: applied, (met.) to a quick, sudden, helping action or motion.

Therefore they, which by nature haue a promptnesse, shall soner attaine perfection, than any other can do, if by labour and earnest trauaile, they will stretche to attaine that, whereunto they are apt, and, with good endeuour, fillip nature forwards.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 10.

When we try a false lute string, we use to extend it hard between the fingers, and to fillip it, and it giveth it a double species, it is true; but if it giveth a trebble, or more it is false.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 117.

Let them look neuer so demurely, one fillip chokes them.
Ford. Love's Sacrifice, Act i. sc. 1.

Tush, all these tortures are but fillipings,
Flea-bitings.—Massinger. Virgin Martyr, Act v. sc. 1.

They [spirits] ought never to be used, but as spurs and whips, to push on and stimulate the sluggish organs for a time, and make them carry off the over-load with a short vigour; and so are only proper in extremities, as a present fillip.—Cheyne. Philosophical Theory, Dis. 3.

FI'LLY, i. e. a Foal, &c. applied to the female, or, as North expresses it, the mare-colt; (met.) to a wanton young woman.

A young mare-colt or filly, breaking by chance from other mares running and flinging through the camp, came to stay right against them.—North. Plutarch, p. 247.

——— My first wife
Which was indeed a fury to this filly,
After my twelve strong labours to reclaim her.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act i. sc. 2

——— How much did Stalion spend
To have his court-bred fillies there commend
His lace and starch.—B. Jonson. Epistle to Master Colby.

FILM, v. } A. S. Film, cutis, a skinne, a
FILM, s. } filme. Filmes, pelliculæ; skales, thin
FI'LMY. } skinnes, (Somner.)
A cover with a thin, slight skin.

——— My dull'd senses
Relish no objects. Colours do not take
My filmed eyes. Nabbes. Microcosmus, Act iv.

How long have I been blind! Yet on the sudden,
By this blest means, I feel the films of error
Ta'en from my soul's eyes.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act v. sc. 3.

If our understanding have a film of ignorance over it, or be blear with gazing on other false glisterings, what is that to truth?—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

——— Hence at eve,
Steam'd eager from the red horizon round,
With the fierce rage of winter deep suffus'd,
An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool
Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career
Arrests the bickering stream.—Thomson. Winter.

Loose to the wind their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew,
Dipp'd in the richest tinctures of the skies,
Where light disports in ever-mingling dyes.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock, c. 2.

What shall we do with this film then? for, till it is removed, the man might as well be without eyes. This was the very case of the Heathen world.—Sherlock, vol. i. Dis. 4.

But gasping heav'd the breath that Lara drew,
And dull the film along his dim eye grew;
His limbs stretch'd fluttering, and his head droop'd o'er,
The weak yet still untiring knee that bore.
Byron. Lara, c. 2.

Thee, Pallas, skill'd in every work divine,
Foolish Arachne at the loom defied;
Incessant thence she draws the filmy twine,
Memorial of her fond presumptuous pride.
West. Triumphs of the Gout.

FI'LTER, v. } A. S. Felt. Pannus, vel lana
FI'LTER, s. } coactilis; Barb. Lat. Feltrum;
FI'LTRATE. } Ger. Filz; Dut. Vilt; It. Feltro;
FILTRA'TION. } "Fr. Feutre, a filter; a piece of felt, or thick woollen cloth to distil, or strain things through," (Cotgrave.) See Filz in Wachter, Feltrum in Du Cange, and Martinius.

To strain or pass through felt; to strain, generally.

Having for trial-sake filtred it through cap-paper, there remained in the filtre a powder of a very deep and lovely colour, but in so little quantity, that we could not attempt any experiment upon it to make it confess its nature.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 365.

All I could do, was to take a good decoction of cabbage, and filtrate it through cap-paper, that it might be, though yellow, yet clear.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 652.

From hence it appears, that the expressed juices of vegetables, not filtrated very clear, contain their whole specifick virtues.—Arbuthnot. On Aliments, c. 3.

The nature of suction, the cause of filtration, and the rising of water in siphons.—Glanvill, Ess. 5.

Also the cause of filtration, and of the rising of water in small glass pipes above the surface of the stagnating water they are dipped into, &c.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 112. Life.

What more artificial, or more commodious instrument of selection, could have been given to it, than this natural filter, [the bills of a duck.]—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

"Durst we make a single movement," asks a lively French writer, "or stir a step from the place we were in, if we saw our blood circulating, the tendons pulling, the lungs blowing, the humours filtrating, and all," &c.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

The salts being separated by filtration through the strata, and the rising waters being opposed by a clayey substance that generally lies near the surface of the lower lands, they proceed to the mountains, from whence, by the advantage of a descent, they spread wealth and pleasure round all the earth.—Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. ii. (Note, v. 123.)

FILTH. See FILE.

FI'MBLE. Grose says,—"The female hemp; soonest ripe and fittest for spinning, but it is not worth half so much as the carle with its seed." (Essex and Sussex.) Miller calls it the male, and he is probably right; though it may have taken its name (fimble, corrupted from female) from a supposition that it was the female plant. It is the male plant that is barren.

Good flax and good hemp, to have of her own,
In May a good huswife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, to serve at a need,
The fimble to spin, and the carl for her seed.
Tusser. May's Husbandry, p. 16.

The first season for pulling the hemp is usually about the middle of August, when they begin to pull what they call the fimble hemp, which is the male plant.
Miller. Gardener's Dictionary, in v. Cannabis.

FI'MBRIATE, v. Lat. Fimbriæ et fibræ, extremitates rei, non cujusvis, sed incisæ; sic ut nunc accedat, nunc recedat, (Vossius.) Applied in Heraldry to a border; as a cross, having a narrow border or hem, of another tincture, is called, A fimbriated cross.

Besides the divers tricking or dressing [heraldick crosses] as piercing, vouding, fimbriating, &c. inasmuch that crosses alone, as they are variously disguised, are enough to distinguish all the several families of gentlemen in England.
Fuller. Holy War, p. 271.

FIN, s. } A. S. Finna; Dut. Vinne; perFI'NNED. } haps, as Junius and Skinner think,
FI'NLESS. } from the Lat. Pinna or penna;
FI'NNY. } since the fins (pinnæ) are to fish, what the wings are to birds. The fins are—
The organs by which fish balance and move themselves. See the quotation from Paley.

The which fish had on euery side a wing, and toward the taile two other lesser as it were finnes, on either side one, but in proportion they were wings, and of a good length.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 107.

They will swim you their measures, like whiting-mops, as if their feet were finns, and the hinges of their knees oil'd.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Martial Maid, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Sometime he angreres me,
With telling me of the moldwarpe and the ant,
Of the dreamer Merlin and his prophecies;
And of a dragon, and a finneless fish
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iii. sc. 1.

It fortuned, whilest thus she stifly stroue,
And the wide sea importuned long space
With shrilling shrieks, Proteus abroade did roue,
Along the fomy waves driuing his finny droue.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
Now to the moon in wavering morrice move.
Milton. Comus.

Do scales and fins bear price to this excess?
You might have bought the fisherman for less.
Duke. Imitation of Juvenal, Sat. 4.

They plough up the turf with a broad finned plough.
Mortimer. Husbandry.

Such creatures as are whole-footed or fin-toed, viz. some birds, and quadrupeds, are naturally directed to go into the water and swim there, as we see ducklings, though hatch'd and led by a hen.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. i. p. 147.

——— Nor look on,
Shamefully passive, while Batavian fleets
Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores.
Thomson. Autumn.

The balancing use of these organs is proved in this manner. Of the large headed fish, if you cut off the pectoral fins; i. e. the pair which lies close behind the gills, the head falls prone to the bottom: if the right pectoral fin only be cut off, the fish leans to that side; if the ventral fin on the same side be cut away, then it loses its equilibrium entirely: if the dorsal and ventral fins be cut off, the fish reels to the right and left.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

——— As th' immense Leviathan, [o'erwhelms]
The finny brood, when near Inne's shore
Out-stretch'd, unwieldy, his island length appears
Above the foamy flood. Dyer. The Ruins of Rome.

FINA'NCE. } Fr. Finance; Sp. Finanza.
FINA'NCIAL. } (See Du Cange, Wachter, and FINA'NCIALLY. } Menage.) Skinner says, from FINA'NCIER. } the old, and, in that sense, obsolete Fr. Finance, finis, an end; q. d. Finantia. Bullokar has Finance, an end; and Menage, (Dict. Etymol.) Finance, pecunia, quâ exsolutâ lis finitur; in his Orig. della Ling. Ital. (MS. note,) Finance, q. medium ad finem, (sc.) ways and means to a final settlement. The old It. Finanza is, finis. Menage, however, suggests the Sw. Finna; Ger. Finden, invenire, to find, (A. S. Findan.) The Lat. Finis, a fine, (see Du Cange,) seems sufficiently to account for the application of the word in French, as in English, to—

"Wealth, substance, riches, goods; also a prince's revenue, or treasure," (or that of any other person or persons,) Cotgrave.

So then he was put to his fynance to pay xxii. thousande frankes of France, and the companyons of the Englyshe garysons in Champaigne payed the sayd ransaume.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 202.

And ye other knyghtes, as Syr Taynboton, Sir Othes of Grantson, and Johan of Grunes, were put to their fynance, and by the meanes of Sir Olyuer of Manny, they passed with easy and courtesse raūsome.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 312.

In like robes followed the lordes of the chamber of accounte and of the finaunce.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 10.

All the finances or revenues of the imperial crown of this realm of England, be either extraordinary or ordinary.
Bacon. The Office of Alienations.

I therefore, whom only love and duty to your majesty and your royal line, hath made a financier, do intend to present unto your majesty a perfect book of your estate, like a perspective glass, to draw your estate nearer to your sight.
Id. Ib. Letter to the King.

Historians inform us, that one of the chief causes of the destruction of the Roman state, was the alteration which Constantine introduced into the finances, by substituting an universal poll-tax, in lieu of almost all the tithes, customs, and excises, which formerly composed the revenue of the empire.—Hume, vol. i. Ess. 8. Of Taxes.

Though their proud assumption might justify the severest tests, yet in trying their abilities on their financial proceedings, I would only consider what is the plain obvious duty of a common finance minister, and try them upon that, and not upon models of ideal perfection.
Burke. Reflections on the French Revolution.

I consider therefore the stopping of the distillery, œconomically, financially, commercially, medicinally, and in some degree morally too, as a measure rather well meant than well considered.—Id. Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

The objects of a financier are, then, to secure an ample revenue, to impose it with judgment and equality; to employ it œconomically; and when necessity obliges him to make use of credit, to secure its foundations in that instance, and for ever, by the clearness and candour of his proceedings, the exactness of his calculations, and the solidity of his funds.—Id. Reflections on the French Revolution.

Was I right? The house sees whether I was: the house sees the finance-post is now totally abandoned, and for the best reason in the world, because it is no longer tenable.
Fox. Speech on the East India Bill, Dec. 1, 1783.

FINCH. To pull a finch (says Mr. Tyrwhitt) was a proverbial expression, signifying, to strip a man, by fraud, of his money, &c.

In Dut. Vinche, and so called, says Lye, from the sound vink, vink, which this bird utters.

Ful prively a finch eke coude he pull.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 654.

But. The finch, the sparrow, and the larke,
The plain-song cuckow gray,
Whose note full many a man doth marke,
And dares not answere nay.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 1.

FIND, v. } A. S. Findan; Dut. Vinden;
FIND, s. } Ger. Finden; Sw. Finna. Helvigius (says Wachter) prefers
FI'NDER. } the Lat. Vid-ere; Wachter him-
FI'NDING, s. } self suggests the Lat. Ven-ire, quomodo invenire est in rem venire. The A. S. Findan, invenire, and fund-ian, niti, to labour to come to a thing, (Somner,) are the same word, and mean, to seek or search or look for, and consequently to come to, (invenire,) or find. And thus find may be explained to mean—

To seek, and, consequentially, to see or perceive; to come to or meet with; to reach, attain or acquire, to discover, to detect, to invent; to obtain, to procure, to provide.

Spenser and some others write the old pret. fund; common in Scotch writers.

An slowe al that hii founde, bote wuch [who] so mygte fle.
And astored hem of her tresour, as me mygte yse.
R. Gloucester, p. 403.

For werre withouten hede is not wele, we fynde.
R. Brunne, p. 2

And fyndeth folke to fighte, and Cristene blod to spille.
Piers Ploughman, p. 389.

And so saue me God I hold it greate synne,
To gyuen hem any good, swiche glotones to fynde,
To mayntaynen swiche maner mē yt michel good destruieth. Id. Crede.

And the freres hadden a fyndynge, that for neode fiateren.
Id. Vision, p. 411.

Axe ye and it schal be gyven to you; seke yee, and ye schulen fynde.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 7.

Aske & it shal be geuen you. Seke & ye shal fynde.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Afterward Jhesus fond him in the temple, and seide to hym, lo, thou art maad hool: nyle thou do synne, leste ony worse thing bifalle to thee.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 5.

And after that, Jesus founde hym in the temple, & sayd unto him: behold, thou art made whole, sinne no more.
Bible, 1551. John, c. 5.

Or elles he meste tellen his tale untrewe,
Or feinen thingis, or finden wordes newe.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 738.

But Grekes saine of Pithagoras
That he the first finder was
Of the art. Id Dreame.

My good dere sonne,
If thou woll fynde a siker wele
To loue, put enuie awaye.—Gower. Con. A. b ii.

O mearum voluptatum omnium inuentor, inceptor, perfector. O thou that hast been ye deuiser and fynder out, the begynner & also the finisher of al my pleasures
Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 104.

Howbeit Paule (whose disciple I was, and did long time folow and atted vpon hym,) had more mind to labour with hys owne handes, then to liue at the finding of other folkes.
Id. Luke, c. 8

For in old time whē mē at the incursion of infydels did hyde holy sayntes relikes, at the fynding agayne the names happely decayed, some relyques might rest vnknowen, or some peradventure left or mistakē
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 192.

Bass. In my schoole dayes when I had lost one shaft
I shot his fellow of the self same flight
The self-same way, with more aduised watch
To finde the other forth, and by aduenturing both
I oft found both.—Shakespeare. Mer. of Ven. Act i. sc. 1.

But oh, thou wretched finder, whom I hate
So that I almost pity thy estate,
Gold being the heaviest metal among all,
May my most heavy curse upon thee fall.
Donne. Upon the Losse of his Mistresses Chain.

But 'tis all one to me: for if I had been the finder-out of this secret, it would not haue reliash'd among my other discredits.—Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 2.

When a man hath been labouring the hardest labour in the deep mines of knowledge, hath furnish'd out his findings in their equipage, drawn forth his reasons as it were a battel rang'd, scatter'd and defeated all objections in his way, &c.
Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

In reading a style judiciously antiquated, one finds a pleasure not unlike that of travelling on an old Roman way: but then the road must be as good, as the way is ancient; the style must be such in which we may evenly proceed, without being put to short stops by sudden abruptnesses, or puzzled by frequent turnings and transpositions.
Pope. Postscript on the Odyssey.

He finds his fellow guilty of a skin
Not colour'd like his own; and having pow'r
T' enforce the wrong, for such a worthy cause
Dooms and devotes him as his lawful prey.
Cowper. The Task, b. ii.

FINE.
Fi'nal.
Fi'nally.
Fi'neless.
Fi'nish, v.
Fi'nish, s.
Fi'nisher.
Fi'nishing, s.
Fi'nishment.
Fi'nite.
Fi'nitelesse.
Fi'nitely.
Fi'niteness.

Fr. and Sp. Fin; It. Fine; Lat. Finis, which Julius Scaliger derives from fio. Sane finis est cujus gratiâ aliquid fit. Et in naturalibus forma et finis, solum eo differunt, quod cùm res est, quâ est. forma dicitur: cùm fit, quâ intenditur, finis vocatur, (Vossius.) See Finish.

Finisher,—see the quotation from Udal in v. Find.

The end or the point to which our view or course is directed; when or where our progress ceases or is to cease; the point we seek or intend to reach; the last, ultimate, extreme point of time or space. And—

Final,—extreme, most remote, most distant, ultimate, last; terminating, concluding. To finish.

Fr. Finir; It. Finire; Sp. Fenecer; Lat. Finire, to end.

To end or bring to an end, or to the last, ultimate, or extreme point,—of time or space; to the point to which our view or course is directed; when or where our progress ceases or is to cease; the point we seek or intend to reach: to terminate, to conclude, to complete.

Heo ne fyneđ neuer mo, at the other ware at gronde.
R. Gloucester, p. 140.

In the ger of grace a thousend & nyenetene & nyene
Thys stalwarde Cristene folc thys sworre [war] brogte to fyne.
Id. p. 413.

Allas! that jentille blode com to ill fyne,
& alle for falsnes gode to scheme's [shame] dede & pyne.
R. Brunne, p. 335.

The partis conseile hent, messengers thei ches,
Unto the kyng thei sent, for a finalle pes.—Id. p. 226.

And whan they had whole her tale fined
Ethiocles fully is enclined,
Whatsoeuer thereat laugh or weepe
Like her counsaile possession to kepe.
Lydgate. Story of Thebes, pt. ii.

How oft time may men rede and seen
The treason, that to women hath be doe
To what fine is such loue, I can not seen,
Or where becometh it whan it is go
Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii.

This is the final end of all this thing.
Id. Legend of Ariadne.

But finally, thus at the last it stood
That fortune wolde that he muste twin
Out of that place, which that I was in.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,890.

For the contrarie of his estate
Stant euermore in suche debate,
Tyll that a parte be ouercome
There maie no finall peas be nome.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

But finally no spede it dooth.—Id. Ib. b. i.

In fine obtaining the roume of a rascall souldiour loke how dishonest he was in his liuing before, euen as seditious was he in his doinges ther, and moste ready and forwarde to doo all kinde of mischefe.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 99.

But now takynge hym as he woulde say, if hys wit would serue hym, yt is to wit, that by his word electes, he meneth the finall & eternall electes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 578.

Fynally brethrē fare ye wel, be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one minde, liue in peace, and the God of loue and peace shal be with you.—Bible, 1551. 2 Cor. c. 13.

And we will also that you George Killingworth and Richard Gray doe in the fine of April next send either of you vnto Henry Lane a whole, perfit, and iust accompt firmed with your awne hands of all the goods you haue solde and bought vntill that time, and what remaineth vnsolde
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. p. 299.

Jesus sayd vnto thē, my meate is to do ye wyl of him that sente me. And to finishe hys worcke
Bible, 1551. John, c. 4.

And lyke as the smyth in his working vseth the hammer as a certayne tool or instrument towardes the finishyng of his worke euen so be we vnto God as instrumentes to worke his wyll, whensoeuer any thyng is well done by vs.
Fisher. On Prayer.

Also it is to be noted that ye aungell begineth his accompt at the Jewes ful lybertie & full finishment of their temple and cyte.—Joye Exposicion of Daniel, c. 9.

——— In fine,
Just or unjust, alike seem miserable,
For oft alike, both come to evil end.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

All th' unaccomplisht works of Nature's hand,
Abortive, monstrous, or unkindly mixt,
Dissolv'd on earth, fleet hither, and in vain
Till final dissolution, wander here.—Id. Par. Lost, b. iii.

—— When Paris brought his famous prize,
The faire Tindarid lasse, he him foretolde
That her all Greece with many a champion bold
Should fetche againe, and finally destroy
Proud Priam's towne.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv.

Iago. Poore, and content, is rich, and rich enough,
But riches finelesse is as poor as winter,
To him that euer feares he shall be poore.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act iii. sc. 3.

In death what can be, that I do not know,
That I should fear a covenant to make
With it, which welcom'd, finisheth my woe!
And nothing can th' afflicted conscience grieve,
But he may pardon, who can all forgive.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Christ is the author and finisher of our faith, and so of every grace: that is, he can only give it, and he only can take it away.—Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 1.

Men have their time, and die many times in desire of many things, which they principally take to heart; the bestowing of a child, the finishing of a worke, or the like Bacon. Ess. Of Friendship.

None must undertake this edifice, but after computation of the pertinences requisite for the finishment, lest they expose themselves to the reproach of having begun what they were not able to finish.
Montague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 18. s. 3.

——— Will he draw out,
For anger's sake, finite to infinite
In punisht man, to satisfie his rigour,—
Satisfied never? that were to extend
His sentence beyond dust and Nature's law,
By which all causes else, according still
To the reception of their matter act,
Not to th' extent of their own sphear.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

So likewise that excellent book of Job, if it be revolved with diligence, it will be found full and pregnant with the secrets of naturall philosophy, as for example, of cosmography, and the roundness of the earth in that place, Qui extendit Aquilonem super vacuum, et appendit terram super nihilum, where the pensilenesse of the earth, the pole of the North, and the finitenesse or convexity of heaven, are manifestly touched.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. i. c. 6.

Thus then the late creation, and finiteness of the world, seem to conflict with the undoubted oracle of truth as well as with mine argument.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 9.

In fine, nothing is more evident, then that the design, both of the Law and the Gospel, was to establish this great truth, and to root out creature worship.
Waterland. Works, vol i. pt. ii. p 171.

They are all created in and by him; not only so, but for him, or to him, he is the final as well as efficient cause; as much as to say, that they are made for his service and for his glory, the ultimate end of their creation.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 36.

When he [our Saviour] commands us to seek the kingdom of God, and directs us to seek it in the way of righteousness, and warns us that many who seek it shall not be able to find it, he cannot but be understood as exhorting us to seek it earnestly and effectually, and in such a manner, as that we may not finally fail to attain it.
Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

A faultless sonnet, finish'd thus, would be,
Worth tedious volumes of loose poetry.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Christ is the author and finisher of our faith; but it is we that believe: the spirit of Christ is the cause of our obedience, but it is we that obey; we are the next agents though he be the supreme cause.
Bates. The Everlasting Rest of the Saints, c. 8.

Let reason then at her own quarry fly,
But how can finite grasp infinity?
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Though all that we can possibly do, must needs fall infinitely short of our most perfect pattern, yet we are indispensably obliged to be like it in our proportion, and according to our capacity; and as a finite can resemble infinite, so we are to resemble God, by partaking of the same excellencies in kind, though they cannot but be infinitely inferior in degree.—Clarke, vol. v. ser. 8.

It is ridiculous unto reason and finiteless as their desires.
Brown. Vulgar Errours.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but finitely distant from us.—Stillingfleet.

And all the difference or distinction there is betwixt them, is only in our different apprehension of this one being; which acting severally upon several objects, we apprehend it as acting from several properties, by reason of the finiteness of our understandings, which cannot conceive of an infinite being, wholly as it is in itself, but as it were by piecemeal, as it represents itself to us.—Berkeridge, vol. ii. Ser. 115.

Man falls by man, if finally he falls;
And fall he must, who learns from death alone
The dreadful secret—That he lives for ever.
Young. The Complaint, Night 7

When in his finish'd form and face
Admiring multitudes shall trace
Each patrimonial charm combin'd,
The courteous yet majestic mien,
The liberal smile, the look serene,
The great and gentle mind.
Beattie. On Lord H.'s Birth-day.

God is our "light," as he showeth us the state we are in, and the enemies we have to encounter; he is our "strength," as he enableth, by his grace, to cope with, and overcome them; and he is our "salvation," as the author and finisher of our deliverance from sin, death, and Satan.
Horne. Commentary on the Psalms. Ps. 27.

To consider an averseness to improvement, the not arriving at perfection, as a crime, is against all tolerably correct jurisprudence; for if the resistance to improvement should be great, and any way general, they would in effect give up the necessary and substantial part, in favour of the perfection and the finishing.—Burke. Tracts on the Popery Laws.

For who shall dare, you argue, in this case,
To limit the omnipotence of grace!
As if a finite understanding knew
What the Almighty could, or could not do.
Byrom. On the Redemption of Mankind.

Finiteness, or what is resolvable into finiteness, in inanimate subjects, can never be a just subject of complaint, because if it were ever so, it would be always so: we mean, that we can never reasonably demand that things be larger or more, when the same demand might be made, whatever the quantity or number was.—Paley. Nat. Theology, c. 26.

FINE, v.
Fine, adj.
Fi'nely.
Fi'neness.
Fi'ner.
Fi'nery.
Fi'ning, s.

Ger. Fein; Dut. Vyn; It. and Sp. Fino; Fr. Fin. M. Guyet (says Menage) from the ancient Lat. Vinus, signifying bellus venustus. Du Cange (in v. finus) from finitus, (q. d.) finished, highly finished, polished. Res, cui nihil addi potest. See Finesse, and Finical.

To finish highly, to polish; to cleanse, to purify, to brighten, to embellish; to render or make clear, bright or brilliant, elegant or beautiful.

Upon the right hand went old Egeus,
And on that other side Duk Theseus,
With vessels in hire hond of gold ful fine,
All ful of hony, milk, and blood, and wine.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2909.

Margarite is ingendered by heauenly dewe, and sheweth in it self by fineness of colour, whether the engendrure were maked on morowe or on eue.—Id. Test. of Loue, b. ii.

[Gold] is assayed by the fire to thintente it may thenceforth bee had in so muche the more price as it is the more exactly fyned: much more will God haue your faith, wherunto so high honour of duetie belongeth, to be tried with soudry experimentes, to thintent that whan it shal glister out of these flames of sorowes and afflictions, and being farre more pure and more glittering than any golde though it be neuer so fyne, it may be precious in the sight of God &c
Udal. 1 Peter, c. 1.

For they that be clothed in fyne lynnen, and silkes, be in kynges palaces, who were commonly infected with excesse and ryot, and delicate lyuyng.—Id. Matt. c. 11

There was a certayne ryche man, whiche was clothed in purple and fyne bysse, and fared deliciously euerye day.
Bible, 1551 Matt. c. 26.

For in that poinct could be none other coloure, but to pretende that his awne mother was an auoutresse, but neuertheesse he would that poinct should be lesse and more fynely & closely handled.—Hall. Edw. V.

By fourme is vnderstand grossenesse, fynenesse, thicknesse, or thinnesse.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

To professe Christ, is not an ydle nor a delicate fine-fungred matter, it requireth watching, attendaunce, and dylygent cõtinuance.—Udal. Timothy, c. 4.

But commonly it is held, and for certaine affirmed, that the best Spodos for the eyes, is that which commeth in the furnaces where gold is fined.—Holland. Plin. b. xxxiv. c. 13.

This legal reason is summa ratio; and therefore, if all the reason that is dispersed into so many several heads were united into one, yet could he not make such a law as the law of England is, because by many successions of ages it hath been fined and refined by an infinite number of grave and learned men.—Hobbs. Dial. on the Laws of England.

——— 'Tis he our lambs doth reare,
Our flocks doth blesse, and from the store doth give
The warme and finer fleeces that we weare.
B. Jonson. Hymn to Pan.

Binde your fillets fast
And gird in your waste,
For more fineness, with a tawdrie lace.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calendar. April.

What they in largeness have, that bear themselves so high,
In my most perfect form, and delicacy, I
For greatness of my grain and fineness of my grasse;
This isle hath scarce a vale, that Ringdale doth surpasse.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

The beech serves for various uses of the house-wife—not to omit even the very shavings for the fining of wines.
Evelyn. Silva, c. 5.

Methinks I see thee, spruce and fine,
With coat embroider'd richly shine,
And dazzle all the idle faces
As through the hall thy worship paces.
Swift. Horace, b. ii. Ode 1.

Poor I, a savage bred and born,
By you instructed every morn,
Already have improv'd so well
That I have almost learnt to spell!
The neighbours who come here to dine,
Admire to hear me speak so fine.
Id. A Panegyrick on the Dean.

Here is the Majesty of the heroic finely mixed with the venom of the other; and raising the delight which otherwise would be flat and vulgar, by the sublimity of the expression.—Dryden. Origin and Progress of Satire.

Let him declaim as wittily and sharply as he pleases, yet still the nicest and most delicate touches of satire consist in fine raillery.—Id. Dedication to Juvenal.

The fine original of Thomas Howard Duke of Norfolk with the staves of Earl Marshall and Lord Treasurer, from whence the print is taken, is at Leicester-house.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

The character of his Majesty's bluff hautiness (by Hans Holbein) is well represented, and all the heads are finely executed.—Id. Ib.

I therefore must beg of you to procure me some Irish linen to make me four dozen of shirts, much about the same fineness and price of the last which you got me.
Chesterfield. Miscell. vol. iv. Let. 69.

Savage nations being passionately fond of show and finery, and having no object but their naked bodies, on which to exercise this disposition, have in all times painted, or cut their skins, according to their ideas of ornament.
Burke. Abridgement of English History, b. i. c. 11.

Should I be thought in some places to have run on too fine-spun argumentations or in others drawn too strong-coloured figures, for any body's liking let him be good natured enough to suppose, that were we to discourse over this subject in private, and he would let me know his taste, I should endeavour to conform myself thereto.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 30.

FINE, v. / FINE, n. / FI'NABLE. } Lat. Finis. Spelman (after enumerating the various legal usages of the word) says, "In none of these significations was the word known to our countrymen ante seculum Normanicum." See the first quotation from Rastall; and Finis in Du Cange.

Any thing (as a sum of money) paid at the end, to make an end, termination or conclusion of a suit, of a prosecution; a mulct or penalty.

Muche robberye me dude aboute in euerych toun
And bounde men & enprisonede, vorte hii funede raunson.
R. Gloucester, p. 463.

The whiche precept obseruyd, and a 12 or 16 of the chief of them sent vnto Newgate, the sayd rumour was anone ceasyd; of the whiche prysoners some were after fyned, and some punyshed by longe imprysonmet
Fabyan. Cronycle, vol. iv. an. 1541.

Which neuer asked litle, but euery thig was hawsed aboue the mesure, amercemẽtes turned into fines, fines into raũsomes, smal trespas to misprisiõ, misprisiõ into treson.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 62.

For as much as fines levied in our court ought & do make an end of al suites, and thereof are called fines, chiefly when after waging of battel, or the great assise in their cases, they holde the last and finall place for ever, &c.
Rastall. Statutes, fol. 173. Statute of Edw. V. c. 1.

And if he then confesse the treueth, & al that he shall be examined of and knoweth in that behalfe: that then the same offeces of hunting by him done, be against the king but trespasse finable.—Id. Ib. fol. 170. Stat. of H. VII. c. 7.

If one bee found dead in a street or house, the master of the house, or the parish, must find out the murtherer; otherwise he himself shall be accused of it, and the whole contado shall be fined, and likewise in case of robberie.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. iii. c. 10. s. 1.

Make him high, let him rule,
He'll be playing the fool,
And transgress, then we'll squeeze
Him for fines, and for fees.—Brome Royalist's Answer.

So, two years after, Tracy's heirs sued him for it, and he was turned out of his office of chancellor, and fined in four hundred pound.—Burnet. Hist. of Reformation, an. 1534.

But that also at length they unwillingly yielded unto: styling him in their submission by the title of "Protector and supreme Head of the English Church," and paying a lusty fine.—Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1532.

But in the case propounded by me, where it is possible in that special manner, the jury may find against the direction of the Court in matter of Law, it will not follow they are therefore finable.—State Trials. E. Bushell, an. 1670.

He ridiculed the three rights to fine the subordinate Princes that Mr. Hastings had, in his defence, laid claim to.
Fox. Speeches, June 13, 1786.

Some landlords, instead of raising the rent, take a fine for the renewal of the lease. This practice is, in most cases, the expedient of a spendthrift, who for a sum of ready money sells a future revenue of much greater value.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 2.

FINE'SSE. / FINE'SSING, n. } Fr. Finesse; It. Finezza. See FINE.

Fine-ness or re-fine-ment,—nicety, polish, policy, to an excess; and thus, guile or wiliness, cunning, subtilty.

Where unnecessary fynesse wanteth accept true meaning playnesse.—Udal. Prol. to the Ephesians.

These thinges he wrought with great sleyght and fynesse of wytte in suche sorte that he minished not any parte of his honour, estate, or reputacion.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 3.

Ever. (Aside to Meer.) You'll mar all with your fineness.
B. Jonson. The Devil is an Ass, Act iii. sc. 1.

This is the artificialest piece of finesse to perswade men to be slaves, that the wit of court could have invented.
Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Brevity and succinctness of speech, is that, which in philosophy or speculation we call maxim or first principle: in the counsels and resolves of practical wisdom, and the deep mysteries of religion, oracle; and lastly, in matters of wit, and finenesses of imagination, epigram.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

Scipio and Sertorius made some other God to be their councĩl of war, to encourage their soldiers in dangerous enterprises, but the mask only deceived the ignorant. The more intelligent discerned the finesse of their politic contrivance.—Bates. The Existence of God, c. 5.

With no reason on earth to go out of his way,
He [Garrick] turned and he varied full ten times a day:
Though secure of our hearts, yet confoundedly sick,—
If they were not his own by finessing and trick
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

And lest the colourable reasons, offered in argument against this Parliamentary procedure, should be mistaken for the real motives of their conduct, all the advantage of privilege, all the arts and finesses of pleading, and great sums of public money were lavished, to prevent any decision upon those practices in the Courts of Justice.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation

FI'NGER, v. / FI'NGER, n. / FI'NGERING, n. } A. S. Finger; Ger. Finger, Dut. Vinger; from A. S. Fengan; Ger. Fangen; Dut. Vingeren, capere, prehendere. Finger, quod prehendit; that which fangs, seizes, catches.

To fang,—take or catch, to hold or handle, to touch (with the finger;) to take or touch.

On alle hure fyve fyngres, rycheliche yrynged
And ther on rede rubies and oth' riche stones.
Piers Ploughman, p. 21.

She lette no morsel from hire lippes falle,
Ne wette hire fingres in hire sauce depe.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 123.

My word, my workes, is knit so in your bõd
That as an harp obeyeth to the hond
And make it soune after his fingering,
Right so mowe ye out of mine hart bring
Such voice, right as you list, to laugh or pain.
Id. The Legend of Good Women, Ptol

What should I stand vpon the rest or other partes depaint:
As little hand with fingers long!
my wits are all to faint.—Turbervile. Praise of a Lady.

Or els the minstrelsye of lutes, pypes, harpes, and all other that standeth by such nyce, fine minakin fingeringe is farre more fitte for the womanishness of it to dwel in the courte among ladyes, than for any greate thinge in it, which should help good and sad studye to abide in the university among scholers.—Ascham. The Schole of Shooting.

For so should every man's house equally feele the societie and part of that benefit, and the hands of idle persones remaining at home in the town, greedie now of rifling, and who would be fingring of pillage, should not pluck from the hardie warriors their due rewards.—Holland. Livius, p. 193.

That there was not a nymph to jollity inclin'd,
Or of the woody brood, or of the wat'ry kind,
But at their fingers' ends, thy Ribble's song could say
Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 21.

[So] the weak child, that from the mother's wing
Is taught the lute's delicious fingering
At ev'ry string's soft touch is mov'd with fear,
Noting his master's curious list'ning ear,
Whose trembling hand at ev'ry strain bewrays
In what doubt he his new-set lesson plays.
Id. Mrs. Shore to King Edward IV.

A certain minstrell or musician had plaid before him on a time ▪ he sate at supper, and the king would seem to correct him in some points, yea, and begin to reason and enter into sad disputation with him about the stroke and true fingering of certain instruments. now God forbid (quoth he) O king, that you should come to so low an ebbe and hard fortune ▪ to be more skilfull in these matters then I am.
Holland Plutarch, p. 338.

All the politicks of the great
Are like the cunning of a cheat,
That lets his false dice freely run,
And trusts them to themselves alone,
But never lets a true one stir
Without some fingering trick or slur
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

The goods and chattles of Colleges and Chantries, in considerable proportions, came into his hands for the King's use, which, it may be presumed, he having the fingering of might convert some part thereof to his owne use
Strype. Memorials. Edw IV. an 1551.

Hard as it was, beginning to relent,
It seem'd the breast beneath his fingers bent,
He felt again; his fingers made a print,
'Twas flesh, but flesh so firm, it rose against the dint.
Dryden Ovid. Metam. b. x.

Through every interval, now low, now high,
Swift o'er the stops his fingers seem'd to fly:
The youths, who heard such music with surprise,
Gaz'd on the tunefull bard with wandring eyes.
Jones. Arcadia.

FI'NGLE-FANGLE, i. e. fangle-fangle. See FANGLE.

And, though we're all so near of kindred
As th' outward man is to the inward,
We agree in nothing, but to wrangle
About the slightest fingle-fangle.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 3.

FI'NIAL. From the Lat. Finis, an end. In Suetonius it seems applied by Holland to the ridge; in Pliny, to a bounding or terminating edge. It is now chiefly used for the Gothic ornament which finishes a pediment, pinnacle, &c.

And among the enemies spoiles, hee set up a navall coronet, and fastened it to the finial [fastigio] of his house Palatine, hard by another civick guirland, in token and memoriall of the ocean by him sailed over and subdued.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 162.

His invention it was to set up gargils or antiques at the top of a gavill end, as a finiall to the crest tiles [personas tegularum extremis imbricibus] which in the beginning he called Protypa.—Id. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 12.

Another between the same persons, for making and setting up the finyalls of the buttresses of the church.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

FI'NICAL, adj. FI'NICALNESS. FI'NIKIN. } From Fine, (qv.) Too fine, too refined; too nice; effeminate.

Perhaps it would haply be objected, that these accurate designs of the pen were never esteemed among the nobler parts of drawing, as for the most part appearing too finical, stiff, and constrained.—Evelyn. Sculptura

Your congees and trips
With your legs and your lips,
Your madams and lords,
And such finikin words.—Brome. The Leveller.

Be not too finical; but yet be clean:
And wear well-fashion'd cloathes like other men.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love.

At nineteen he [Enoch Zeeman] painted his own portrait in the finical manner of Denner, and executed the heads of an old man and woman in the same style afterwards.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

Nor had Gribelin any thing of greatness in his manner or capacity: his works have no more merit than finicalness, and that not in perfection, can give them.
Id. Ib. vol. v. Engravers.

FI'NISH. See FINS.

FI'PPLE. Lat. Fibula, a clasp or fastener. A stopper, (sc.) of a wind instrument.

Note again that some kind of wind instruments are blown at a small hole in the side, which straitneth the breath of the first entrance; the rather, in respect of their traverse, and stop above the hole, which performeth the fipple's part; as it is seen in flutes, and fifes, which will not give sound, by a blast at the end, as recorders, &c.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 116.

FIR. A. S. Fuhr-wudu; Lat. Pinus, a pine tree. Somner, Skinner, and Junius, Abies; Dut. Vueren. Skinner says, Perhaps from Fire, (Dut. Vuyr;) wood which may easily be set on fire.

But how the fire was maked up on highte,
And eke the names how the trees highte,
As oak, fir, birch, &c.—Chaucer. Knightes Tale, v. 2923.

A huge horse made, hye raised like a hill,
By the diuine science of Minerua:
Of clouen firre compacted were his ribbs.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

And there wyll I cut downe the hye cedre trees & the fayrest fyre trees.—Bible, 1551. Of Esaye, c. 38.

There is great ods betweene fir trees, in regard of diverse countres and nations, where they grow. The best are those of the Alpes and Apennine hils.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 39.

With cord and canvass, from rich Hamburgh sent,
His navy's molted wings he imps once more
Tall Norway fir, their masts in battle spent,
And English oak, sprung leaks and planks restore.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

On Lebanon the sacred cedar waves
And spiry fir-tree, where the stork conceals
Her clam'rous young. Hart, Ps. 104.

FIRE, v. FIRE, n. FI'RELESS. FI'RER. FI'RING, n. FI'RY. FI'RINESS. } A. S. Fir, fyr; Dut. Vuyr, vier; Ger. Feuer; Gr. Πυρ, a Phrygian word, according to Plato. "Consider, says Socrates, whether this name, πυρ, is not of Barbaric origin; for it is by no means easy to adapt this to the Greek tongue; and it is manifest, that the Phrygians thus denominate fire, with a certain trifling deviation." (Plato, in Cratylo, by Taylor.) It is difficult to suppose that our northern progenitors had no name for the element of fire, until they borrowed it from the Greeks; it is more probable that there was some common origin for both the Greek and Saxon in the northern languages.

To ignite, to kindle, to burn; (met.) to warm, to heat, to inflame, to animate.

Fire, n. (met.) that which warms, inflames, heats, animates, inspirits; gives or causes life, vivacity, or liveliness, ardour, fervour, vigour.

Fire-new,—new from the fire or forge.

Fire is much used prefixed.

Seththe the luther emperour hadde in his herte joie,
To thenche on fyur, that was in the bataile of Troie,
Tho me harnde gret townes & courtes day & nygt,
And thogte yt was mury joie, to se so fair alygt.
R. Gloucester, p. 69.

In which eneti[d] (evening-tide) appered in the west ii. sterres of fuyry colour, on lite that other gret.
Id. p. 484 Note.

Wilde fire thei kast, the kyng to confound
R. Brunne, p. 170.

And then falleth the fur. on false menne houses.
Piers Ploughman, p. 43.

He that seith, fool, schal be gilty unto the fire of helle.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 5.

But whosoeuer sayeth thou foole, shall be in daunger of hell fyre.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And so I saygh horsis in visioun, and thei that saaten on hem hadden fyri harburiouns.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 9.

And thus I sawe the horses in a vysyon and them that sate on them, hauyng fyry habergions.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

If both the herte love hath fired
Joy and wo they shal depart
And take euenly ech his part.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

She was so ful of turment and of rage,
That wilfully into the fire she sterte,
And brent hireselven with a stedfast herte.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 13,373.

And with hire fire-brond in hire hond aboute
Danceth before the bride and all the rout.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9602.

Som sayd it was long on the fire-making:
Som sayd nay, it was long on the blowing
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,390.

A sompnour was ther with us in that place,
That hadde a fire-red cherubinnes face.
Id. The Prologue, v. 626.

And over all this, to slen me utterly,
Love hath his fyry dart so brenningly
Yetiked thurgh my trewe careful hert,
That shapen was my deth erst than my shert.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1566.

Symon, which was made their espie
Within Troie, as was conspired,
Whan tyme was, a token fired.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And for to wissen hem by nyght
A fyrie piller hem alight. Id. Ib. b. v.

Their heads aboue the streame they hold, their fierred manes they shake,
The salt sea waues before them fast they shouen, and after trailes
Their vgly backes.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. ii.

Others of them [the Spaniards] in that time, burned that fisher town Mowsehole, the rest marched as a gard for defence of these firers.—Carew. Survey of Cornwall, fol. 156.

The greatest inconuenience of their wodden building is the aptnesse for firing, which happeneth very oft & in very fearful sort, by reason of the drinesse and fatnesse of the fir, that being once fired, burneth like a torch, & is hardly quenched til all be burnt vp.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 480.

My chaunce was late to haue a peerlesse fire-lock peece,
That to my wittes was ney the like, in Turkie nor in Greece.—Gascoigne. Complaint of the Greene Knight.

And make his ashepannes, shouels, basons, fleshehokes, fyre-pannes, & al the apparell therof of brasse.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 27.

—— Thereof she countlesse summes did reare,
The whiche she meant away with her to beare;
The rest shee fir'd for sport, or for despight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

For when ye milaly looke with lowly hew
Then is my soule with life and loue inspired
But when ye lowre, or looke on me askew,
Then do I die, as one with lightning fired.—Id. son. 7

Or by collision of two bodies grinde
The air attrite to fire, as late the clouds
Justling or pusht with winds rude in the shock
Tine the slant lightning, whose thwart flame, driv'n down,
Kindles the gummie bark of fir and pine,
And sends a comfortable heat from farr,
Which might supply the sun: such fire to use,
And what may else be remedie or cure
To evils which our own misdeeds have wrought,
He will instruct us praying.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. x.

Besides the wasting of our fields, the driving away of booties, as well of people as cattell, the firing of villages, the ruine and havocke they made; and in euerie place nothing but fire and sword.—Holland. Livie, p. 269.

Tho' I've no bags, that are with child with gold,
And though my fireless chimneys catch the cold,
For want of great revenues, yet I find
I've what's as good as all, a sated mind.
Brome. Epistle to his Friend Mr J. B.

Legions of Loves with little wings did flie
Darting their deadly arrowes fiery bright
Spenser, son. 16

The Governor of Scotland hearing of the Protector's approach, and having no sufficient army ready to resist him, sent his heralds abroad into all parts of the realm, and commanded the fire-cross to be carried, (an ancient custom in cases of importance,) which was two fire-brands set in fashion of a cross, and pitched upon the point of a spear and therewith proclamation to be made that all above 16 years of age, and under 60, should resort forthwith to Musselborough, and bring convenient provisions of victuals with them.—Baker. Chronicles. Edw. VI. an. 1547.

Q. M. Peace, master Marquisse, you are malapert.
Your fire-new stampe of honor is scarce current.
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 3.

Let me put the reader in mind, how if ever he mark'd children when they play with fire-sticks, they move and whirle them round so fast, that the motion will cosen their eyes and represent an entire circle of fire to them: and were it somewhat distant, in a dark night that one play'd so with a lighted torch, it would appear a constant wheel of fire, without any discerning of motion in it.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 9.

Said Cymon overjoyed, "Do thou propose
The means to fight, and only show the foes
For from the first, when love had fired my mind,
Resolv'd I left the care of life behind."
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia

—— And as on high,
Those rolling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day.
Id. Religio Laici. An Epistle.

The ashes by their weight, their feriness, and their dryness, put it past doubt that they belong to the elements of earth.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 470.

The rest, so smooth, so suddenly she went,
Look'd like translation through the firmament,
Or like the fiery car on the third errand sent.
Dryden. Eleonora.

I [Maynard] think it is fitting that all Papists should resort to their own dwellings, and not depart without licences from the next justices; and another thing, that all those of that religion bring all their fire-arms in, unless for the necessary defence of their houses, to officers appointed.
Parl. Hist. an. 1688-9. Bill for Disarming Papists.

But Peidloe was so impatient that he would not hear him, and then he did the fact, which was, that he put a fire-ball at the end of a long pole, and lighting it with a piece of match he put it in at a window, and stood till he saw the house in a flame.
State Trials. Chas. II. Firing of London, an. 1666.

Fired at the sound, my genius spreads her wing,
And flies where Britain courts the western Spring;
Where lawns extend that scorn Arcadian pride,
And brighter streams than fam'd Hydaspes glide.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

The cruel laws of Scotland's realm decree
That every maid of high or low degree,
Accus'd of yielding to the luring fire
Of lawless love in torment shall expire.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. iv.

—— God bids a plague
Kindle a fiery boil upon the skin,
And putrefy the breath of blooming health.
Cowper. Task.

FIRK. Skinner refers to—to fig; but adds, that it may be from the Lat. Fericare, a frequentative of ferire, as fodicare of fodere. The It. Feza, or sferza, a rod or whip, Menage derives from ferire; feritus, feritius, ferita, feza.

Mr. Steevens truly says, that this word is so variously used by the old writers, that it is almost impossible to ascertain its precise meaning.

In the mean time I will firk your father whether you see or no.—Chapman. All Fools, Act iii. sc. 1.

She shall have bail.
Dash. And a firking writ
Of false imprisonment, she shall be sure
Of twelve pence damage, and five and twenty pound
For suits in law.—Barry. Ram Alley, Act iv. sc. 1

Just. Tutch. On on, I say.
Throate. Justice, the law shall firk you.—Id. Ib.

Musta. Stay, and stand quietly, or you shall fall else,
Not to firk your belly up, flounder like, but never
To rise again —Massinger. The Renegado, Act iii. sc. 1

Pist. M. Fer. Ile fer him, and firk him, and ferret him: discusse the same in French vnto him.
Shakespeare. Henry V. Act iv. sc. 4.

Grace. —— Out on him!
These are his megrims, firks, and melancholies.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 1.

W. Small-sh. Sir, leave this firk of law, or by this light I'll give your throat a slit.
Barry. Ram Alley, Act iii. sc. 1.

FI'RKIN, which Skinner writes Ferkin, and Minshew, Fircken; the latter derives it—a ferendo, quod facilè feratur. The former prefers the A. S. Feowerr; Ger. Wier, four, and the diminutive kin, (q.d.) feowerkin, or wierkin, that is, quadrantulus, respectu sc. majoris vasis; and in confirmation, he refers to tierce, qv. A firkin is—

A vessel containing nine gallons, i. e. the fourth of a barrel, or 36 gallons.

And there were standinge there, syxe water pottes of stone after the maner of the purifyinge of the Jewes, contaynynge two or thre fyrkins a pece.—Bible, 1551. John, c. 2.

You heard of that wonder, of the lightning and thunder,
Which made the lye so much the louder.
Now list to another, that miracle's brother,
Which was done with a firkin of powder.
Denham. A Second Western Wonder.

FIRM, v.
FIRM, n.
FIRM, adj.
FI'RMAMENT.
FIRMAME'NTAL.
FI'RMITUDE.
FI'RMITY.
FI'RMLY.
FI'RMNESS.

See AFFIRM, and CONFIRM. Fr. Fermer; It. Firmare; Sp. Firmar; Lat. Firmus, hoc est, stabilis, constans, a ferendo dictus quod constanter omnia ferat, (Perottus.) And see Martinius, and Vossius.

Firmament, — Fr. Firmamente; It. Firmamento; Lat. Firmamentum, so called a naturæ suæ soliditate et firmitate, (Minshew.) The Lat. Firmamentum, applied to the heavens, (firmamentum cæleste) is so used by Tertullian.

To strengthen, to give strength or support to, to fix steadily or strongly, to secure, to assure, to establish.

Sp. Firmar,—to confirm; (sc.) by writing; by signature to a writing: and firma, the signature: (sc.) of the person or persons confirming, giving validity to the instrument or document signed:—applied to the name or title under which any person carries, or more persons carry on trade or business.

Myn affiaunce and my faith, is ferm (in) hus by leuye.
Piers Ploughman, p. 318

As he wende, he bi huld toward heuene an hey,
And tho vp in the firmament an Angel he sey,
That huld a crovs, and ther on y write was lo! this,
"Constantyne thorg this signe thou schalt be maister iwis"
R. Gloucester, p. 85.

—— I wist vtterly
That your humble seruant, & your knight
Were in your harte yeet so formely
As ye in mine. Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

O firste moving cruel firmament,
With thy diurnal swegh that croudest ay,
And hurtlest all from est til occident,
That naturally wold hold another way.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4715.

—— Lo now how it stood
With him, that was so negligent,
That fro the highe firmament,
For that he wold go to lowe,
He was anon downe ouerthrowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And we will also that you George Killingworth and Richard Gray doe in the fine of April next send either of you vnto Henry Lane a whole, perfit, & iust accompt firmed with your awne hands of all the goods you haue solde and bought vntil the time, and what remaineth vnsolde.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 299.

Christ putteth us in remembraunce of thys, that no man is mete to preache the Gospell, but he that hath tryed hymself, and is firme and strong agaynst all worldly desyres, agaynst excesse and her companions.—Udal. Matt. c. 4.

And God sayde: let there be a fyrmamente betwene the waters, & let it diuide the waters a sonder.
Bible, 1551. Genesis, c. 1.

As touching the blessed sacrament of the altare, he sayde it is a necessary sacramēt but he belde yᵗ after the cōsecracō, there was none other thing therein but onely the very substance of materyal bread, and so he said he firmely beliened, and that he woulde holde that oppinion to the death.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 346.

But that constauncye and firmness of mind cā not be had, onles it be depeley fouded in a certaintie, & sure persuasiō of faith.—Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

Afterwards the stream of the river brought down continually such mud and gravell, that it ever increasd in the heap of corn more and more, in such sort, that the force of the water could no more remove it from thence, but rather softly pressing and driving it together, did firm and harden it, and make it grow so to land.—North. Plutarch, p. 65.

Of the death of the Emperour they advertised Solyman, firming those letters with all their hands and seals.
Knolles. History of the Turks.

A privilege [was] given to Athemeus, the Archbishop [of Cyprus] in that age, to subscribe his name to all publick acts in red letters, which was an honour above that of any patriarch, who writes his name or firm in black characters.
Rycaut. State of the Greek Church, p. 90.

So, earely, ere the grosse Earthes gryesy shade
Was all disperst out of the firmament,
They tooke their steeds, and forth upon thire journey went. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

—— What if all
Her stores were open'd, and this firmament
Of hell should spout her cataracts of fire?
Impendant horrors, threatning hideous fall
One day upon our heads.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. ii.

The lion's royal whelp does not at first
For blood of Basan bulls or tigers thirst,
In timorous deer he hansels his young paws,
And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. iii.

For if you speak of an acquired, rational, discursive faith, certainly these reasons which make the object seem credible, must be the cause of it, and consequently the strength and firmity of my assent must rise and fall, together with the apparent credibility of the object.
Chillingworth. Rel. of Prot. Ch. pt. i. c. 6.

It is Jehovah that is merciful; and as Jehovah signifies firmitude of being, and is therefore compared to a rock, &c., so these his mercies are liken'ned to things of longest duration, to those things which to us men are such in our account.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. p. 31.

His breast plate first, that was of substance pure,
Before his noble hart he firmely bound,
That mought his life from yron death assure,
And ward his gentle corps from cruel wound.
Spenser. Muiopotmos.

In pure and fruitfull water we may see
Your mind from darknesse cleare, in bounty free
And in the steddy resting of the ground,
Your noble firmenesse to your friend is found:
For you are still the same, and where you love
No absence can your constant mind remove Beaumont. To the Prince.

O thou, who freest me from my doubtful state
Long lost and wander'd in the maze of fate!
Be present still oh Goddess! in our aid
Proceed, and firm those omens thou hast made.
Pope. Statius. Thebaid, b. i.

Genius of Britain, spare thy fears,
For know, within, our sovereign wears
The surest guard; the best defence;
A firm untainted innocence.
Pitt. On his Majesty's Playing with a Tiger.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above,
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames that to their quarry drove.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Howe'er, I gave his wise proposal way,
Nay, urg'd him to go on; the shallow fraud
Will ruin him for ever with my enemies,
And make him firmly mine, spite of his fears,
And natural inconstancy.
Rowe. The Ambitious Step-mother, Act i.

Such heavenly beauty on thy face shall bloom,
As shall almost excuse the villain's crime;
But yet that firmness, that unshaken virtue,
As still shall make the monster more detested.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act v.

O! then be firm—in this, my friends, remain
Our dearest hopes, all other hopes are vain!
Like us the foes have but two hands to wield,
One soul to fire them, and one life to yield.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xviii.

Incessant rains had drenched the floated ground,
And clouds o'ercast the firmament around.
Fawkes. Descrip. of Winter. From G. Douglas.

These wind, by subtle sap, their secret way,
Pernicious pioneers! while those invest,
More firmly daring in the face of heaven,
And win by regular approach, the cane.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. ii.

O Fortitude! divinely bright,
O Virtue's child, and Man's delight!
Descend an amicable guest,
And with thy firmness steel my breast.
Blacklock. An Hymn to Fortitude.

FIRST.
FI'RSTLING, n.
FI'RSTLING, adj.
FI'RSTNESS.

A. S. First; Dut. Veurst; Ger. Erst. First, says Skinner, dicitur quasi forest, (i.e. fore-est,) from fore, ante. most afore or before.

Fore-most, in time or space; earliest; having precedence, (sc.) in rank or station; in estimation.

First is must used prefixed.

The furste age & tyme was from our firste fader Adam
To Noe, & seththe the other from Noe to Abraham.
R. Gloucester, p. 9.

Uttred in his firste gere messengers he sent
For kynges & barons vntille his parlement,
In stede ther he it sette, thei wist what it ment.
R. Brunne, p. 8.

Hit was the furste frut, that the fader of hevene blessede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 309.

And the clennest creature creatour ferste knowe
In kynges court and knyghtes.—Id. Ib.

And he sat and clepide the twelve, and seyde to him if ony mon wil be the firste among you he schal be the laste of alle, and the mynystre of all.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

And he sat downe and called the twelue vnto hym, and sayde to them: yf anye man desyre to be fyrst, the same shal be laste of all, and seruaunt vnto all.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

All the first-borne of thy sonnes thou muste nedes redeme
Id. Exodus, c. 31

The first of the first-fruites of thy lande, thou shalte brynge vnto the house of the Lord thy God.—Id. Ib.

Honoure the Lord with thy substaunce and with the firstlings of all thine encrease, so shal thy barnes bee filled with plenteousnesse and thy presses shall flowe ouer with swete wyne.—Id. Proverbes, c. 3.

So that in election Christ held the primacy, the first-hood, as in dignity, so in order, that we were ordained for him.
Goodwin. Works, vol. i. Ser. 6.

—— We are all, my lord,
The sons of Fortune, she hath sent us forth
To thrive by the red sweat of our own merits:
And since after the rage of many a tempest,
Our fates have cast us upon Britain's bounds,
We offer you the first fruits of our wounds.
Middleton. The Mayor of Quinborough, Act ii. sc. 1.

—— A shepherd next,
More meek, came with the firstlings of his flock
Choicest and best; then sacrificing, laid
The inwards and their fat, with incence strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rits perform'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi

And thus, readers, by the example which he hath set me I have given ye two or three notes of him out of his titlepage, by which his firstlings fear not to guess boldly at his whole lump, for that guess will not fail ye.
Id. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

All the firstling males that come to thy herd, and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God.
Deuteronomy, xv. 19.

When I give, (as he acknowledges) a firstness of precedency and presidency to the Pope, he tells me, he is confident I know not how much more is allowed him by the universal consent of all Catholicks, as of divine institution, whatever I may have read in particular authors.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 163

For joys so great we must with patience wait,
'Tis the set price of happiness complete.
As a first-fruit, Heaven claim'd that lovely boy
The next shall live, and be the nation's joy.
Waller. Loss of the Duke of Cumbridge.

I did yesterday complain to Mr. Secretary St. John, that Mr Harley had not yet got the letter from the Queen to confirm the grant of the first-fruits; that I had lost reputation by it, and that I took it very ill of them both, and that their excuses of Parliament business, and grief for the loss in Spain, were what I would bear no longer.
Swift. Letter to Dr. King

And often have you brought the wily fox
To suffer for the firstlings of the flocks;
Chas'd ev'n amid the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the murderous deed.
Dryden, Epistle 13.

To me more dear, congenial to my heart,
One native charm, than all the gloss of Art.
Spontaneous joys, where Nature has its play,
The soul adopts, and owns their first-born sway
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

For him our yearly wakes, and feasts, we hold,
And choose the fairest firstlings from the fold.
Philips, Pastoral 2

A seat in this House, for good purposes, for bad purposes, for no purposes at all (except the mere consideration derived from being concerned in the publick councils) will ever be a first-rate object of ambition in England.
Burke. On a Bill for Shortening the Duration of Parliament.

FIRTH. Scotch, an estuary; used by Douglas in his Virgil as Sinus, a bay. Su. G. Fiaerd; Isl. Fiora-r. Some, says Jamieson, have derived it from Lat. Fretum, which itself, more probably, is from the Gothic; others from Moes. G. Far-an, navigare, as it properly denotes water that is navigable. G. Andr. refers it to Isl. Fiara, pl. ferder, litus, or maris refluxus et ejus locus.

FISC. Gr. Φισκος; Lat. Fiscus; Fr. Fisque, a bag or purse. (See Confiscate.) As the French—
Fi'scal, n.
Fi'scal, adj.
Fisque,—the public purse; the public revenue or treasure; a treasury or exchequer.

Cæsar did with no lesse gratefull bountie, shew his liberalitie when he bestowed the goods of Aemilia Musa, a rich woman, falen to the fisque, vpon Aemilius Lepidus of whose house she seemed to have been.
Grenewey. Tacitus. Annales, p. 49.

Also seeing they may bee alienated, they may bee prescribed, especiallie (the kinges thus consenting whoe confirmed the same so long a time) which excludeth all right both fiscall and ecclesiasticall
Fox. Martyrs, p. 333. The B. of Eduens Oration.

War cannot be long maintained by the ordinary fiscal and receipt.—Bacon.

When they had resolved to appropriate to the fisc, a certain portion of the landed property of their conquered country, it was their business to render their bank a real fund of credit; as far as such a bank was capable of becoming so.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

They certainly never have suffered and never will suffer the fixed estate of the church to be converted into a pension, to depend on the treasury, and to be delayed, withheld, or perhaps to be extinguished by fiscal difficulties.—Id. Ib.

The fiscal is of an active enterprising genius.
Swinburne. Spain, Let. 42.

FIS-GIG. A kind of javelin with which sailors strike fish as they swim; from fish; Dut. Visch, and ghichten, torquere, (Skinner.)

There were some of those bonitos, which being gailed by a fis-gig, did follow our shippe, coming out of Guinea 500 leagues.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 520.

FISH, v.
Fish, n.
Fi'sher.
Fi'shery.
Fi'shful.
Fi'shify.
Fi'shing.
Fi'shy.
Fi'shiness.
A. S. Fiscian, fisc; Dut. Vischer, visch; Ger. Fisch; Sw. Fiska, fisk. Junius (Gloss. Goth. in v. Fisk) has no doubt that this word, common to almost all European languages, is of the same origin with the Lat. Pisc-is. But what that is, he acknowledges to be very obscure. Vossius presents three etymologies, with little confidence in any of them.
To fish for any thing, (met.) is to try to find out or discover, catch or obtain, by throwing out a bait or temptation; with a concealed design.

For ge ben men beter y tagt to schouele and to spade,
To cartestaf and to plowstaf, and a fischyng to wade,
To hamer and to nedle, and to merchandise al so,
Than with swerd or hauberk eny batail to do.
R. Gloucester, p. 99.

That fischid in Temse on the nyght, whan thei their nettes vp wond,
The body of Harald in a nette thei fond.—R. Brunne, p. 84.

Peter fyshed for hus fode, and hus fere Andreu
Som thei solde, and som thei sode, and so thei leveden bothe. Piers Ploukman, p. 286.

Right as fishes in flod, whanne hem falleth water
Dyen for dreuthe. Id. p. 83.

And whanne thei hadden do this thing thei closiden togidere a greet multitude of fisches and her net was brokun.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 5.

And when they had so done, they inclosed a great multitude of fishes. And their net brake.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And saygh two bootis standinge bisides the pool, and the fischeris weren gon doun, and waischiden her nettis.
Wiclif. Ib.

And saw two shyppes stande by the lake syde, but the fysher men were gone oute of them, and were washynge their nettes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Pipen he coude, fishe, and nettes bete,
And turnen cuppes, and wrastlen wel, and shete
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3925.

Ne that a monk, whan he is rekkeles,
Is like to a fish that is waterless,
That is to say, a monk out of his cloistre.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 180.

From this time forward we began to plie Northwards and the first of July fell with the land againe, where we fished, and found reasonable good store.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 778.

Most like a byrd that nere the bankes of seas his hunting keepes,
Among the fishfull rocks, and low byneth on water sweepes. Phaer. Virgill. Eneidos, b. iv.

Fynally, the fyshyng put them in remembraunce of the newe fyshyng, whiche serued not to take fishes with nettes, to feade the beaste, but with the nette of the Gospell to catche men drouned with worldly cares, vnto a desyre of the heauenly life.—Udal. Matthew, c. 4.

Behold, I will send for many fishers saith the Lord, and they shall fish them, and after I shall send for many hunters and they shall hunt them from every mountain and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks.
Bible. Jeremiah, xvi. 16.

Forthwith the sounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarme, and shoales
Of fish, that with thir finnes and shining scales
Glide under the greene wave, in sculles that oft
Bank the mid sea. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Yet Gwin and Nevern near, two fine and fishful brooks
Do never stay their course.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 5.

Britaine is watered with pleasant fishfull and navigable riuers, which yeeld safe havens and roads, and furnished with shipping and sailers that it may rightly be termed the Lady of the Sea.—Camden. Remaines. Britaine.

Ben. Here comes Romeo, here comes Romeo.
Mer. Without his roe, like a dried hering O flesh, flesh, how art thou fishified!—Shakes. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 4.

Cleopatra found it straight, yet she seemed not to see it, but wondered at his excellent fishing; but when she was alone by herself among her own people, she told them how it was, and bad them the next morning to be in the water to see the fishing. A number of people came to the haven, and got into the fisher-boats to see the fishing.
North. Plutarch, p. 764.

Where are the flowry fields, the fishy streames,
The pasturing mountaines, and the fertile plaines,
With shadowes oft, oft clad with Titan's beames
As of Heaven's pleasures types, and of Hell's paines!
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Third Houre.

Due sustinence was a mean to virtue, and to subdue men's bodies to their soul and spirit, and was also necessary to encourage the trade of fishing, and for saving of flesh.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1549.

Lie there, Lycaon; let the fish surround
Thy bloated corpse, and suck thy gory wound.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

As, from some rock that overhangs the flood,
The silent fisher casts th' insidious food,
With fraudful care he waits the finny prize,
And sudden lifts it quivering to the skies.
Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. xii.

Can it be expected, that Holland will suffer us to improve our fishery, which is to them a nursery for seamen, a livelihood to many families, and an immense treasure to the public.—Parliamentary History, vol. vi. App. p. 139.

The tow'ring eagles to the realms of light
By their strong pounces claim a regal right;
The swan contented with an humbler fate
Low on the fishy river rows in state.
Fenton. To Mr. Lambard.

Observe what you export thither; [Newfoundland,] a little spirits, provision, fishing lines, and fishing hooks.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

Nature the bull with horns supplies,
The horse with hoofs she fortifies,
The fleeting foot on hares bestows,
On lions teeth, two dreadful rows!
Grants fish to swim, and birds to fly,
And on their skill bids men rely.
Philips. Anacreon, Ode 2.

Once, some few hours ere break of day,
As in their hut our fishers lay,
The one awak'd and wak'd his neighbour,
That both might ply their daily labour.
Wilkie. The Fisherman, from Theocritus.

I need not, I am sure, sir, inform the house, that the fisheries of Newfoundland have been for a century the constant object of rivalship between France and England.
Mr. Pitt. Speech, 27th November, 1800.

Round the border,—representations in miniature of the customs, huntings, fishings, and productions of the country, all in the highest preservation, and so admirably executed, that it was believed of the pencil of Vandyck.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 1.

And those sequester'd shores,
Through which, the thirsty town to lave,
Smooth flow the watery stores
Of fishy Hipparis, profoundest stream.
West. Pindar, Olymp. 5.

Its [Bittern Heron] flesh has much the flavour of that of a hare: and nothing of the fishiness of that of the heron.
Pennant. Zoology.

FISK. Sw. Fiska, from Foesa, instigare, and this from A. S. Fys-an, agere, abigere, fugare, to drive, to drive about. To fisk the tail about, whiska rumpan, (Serenius.) And Cotgrave has Trotiere, a fisking huswife. In Gammer Gurton's Needle, Act i. sc. 2, the edition quoted by Mr. Todd reads, "Fisking with her tail." In the edition, 1575, reprinted in the A. B. Drama, vol. i. reads "Fryshing." See To Faisk.

FYSSILE.
Fissi'lity.
Fi'ssure, v.
Fi'ssure, n.
Fi'sipede.
Lat. Fissilis, that can or may be cleft, from findere, to cleave.
That can or may be cleft or split. Fisnipede, cloven-footed.

The fissures in the seat, as also the blind and swelling piles in the fundament and all superfluous excrescences of the bodie it cureth.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 20.

It is described like fissipedes, or birds which have their feet or claws divided, whereas it is palmipedes or fin-footed like swans and geese.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 2

By which it is evident, that diamonds themselves have a grain or a flaky contexture, not unlike the fissility, as the schools call it, in wood.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 521.

By a fall or blow the scull may be fissured or fractured, and the hairy scalp whole, and thus fracture or fissure may be under the contusion, or in some other parts.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. v. c. 9.

There are other subterraneous guts and channels, fissures and passages, through which many times the waters make their way.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iii. c. 2.

Siam's warm marish yields the fissile cane.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. ii.

Be her shining locks confin'd
In a threefold braid behind;
Let an artificial flower
Set the fissure off before.
Fawkes. Anacreon. Ode 27, Imitated.

Philosophers have long endeavoured to find out the causes of these perpendicular fissures in the earth, which our own countrymen, Woodward and Ray, were the first that found to be so common and universal.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, pt. i. c. 6.

FIST, v.
Fist, n
Fi'sty-cuff.
A. S. Fyst; Dut. Vuyst; Ger. Faust. Wachter and Minshew (optime, says Skinner) from Fassen, capere, prehendere, constringere, i. e. to hold fast, (A. S. Fæstnian.) And from the A. S. Fæst, firmus, Junius derives it; quod validissima sit manus, omnium digitorum nodis in unum pugnum veluti compactis atque arctissime complicatis.
To hold fast,—to gripe fast or firmly; also, to strike with the fist or hand fast closed.

——— He bygan gong ynou,
To cuthe wat he woulde be, that so gong hys fustes adrou.
R. Gloucester, p. 345.

For God that al by gan in gynnynge of the worlde
Perde furst as a fust with a fynger, yfolde togederes
Tu hym liked and luste, to unclose the fynger
And profrede hit forth as with the paume, to what place it sholde. Piers Ploukman, p. 327.

That on of hem the cut brouht in his fest,
And bad hem drawe and loke wher it wold falle,
And it fell on the youngest of hem alle.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,756.

And for men saine vnknowe vnkiste
Hir thome she holt in hir fiste
So close within hir owne horde
That there wynneth no man londe.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

——— I commaunde you not
Portune to trust, and eke full well ye wot,
I haue of her no brydle in my fist
She renneth loose, and turneth where she list.
Sir T. More. To them that seek Fortune.

Fang. If I but fist him once: if he come but within my vice.—Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

Blynfold he was; and in his cruel fist
A mortall bow and arrowes keen did hold,
With which he shot at random when him list,
Some headed with sad lead, some with pure gold.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Sam. No man with-holds thee, nothing from thy hand
Fear I incurable; bring up thy van,
My heels are fetter'd, but my fist is free.
Milton. Samson Agonistes, l. 1246.

Lew. O to revenge my wrongs at fists-cuffes.
Beaum & Fletch. The Little French Lawyer, Act iv. sc. 1.

This God of ours hath evermore loved those games of prize, yea and was desireous to win the victory, having strove personally himself in playing upon the harp, in singing, in flinging the cest of brasse: yea, and some say, at hurl-bats and fist fight.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 633.

Never a suit I wore to-day, but hath been soundly basted, only this faithful country case 'scaped fist-free.
Tomkins. Albumazar, Act v. sc. 9.

With rain his robe and heavy mantle flow
And lazy mists are low'ring on his brow:
Still as he swept along, with his clinch'd fist,
He squeez'd the clouds; th' imprison'd clouds resist.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. The Giant's War.

Q. The Lord Thanet having no stick, what assault did he make upon you?
A. With his fist, in this way, he shoved me down as I was going forward—he shoved me back.
Erskine. Speech. Trial of Earl of Thanet.

It is lucky for the women, that the seat of the fisty-cuff war is not the same with them as among men.
Fielding. Tom Jones, b. iv. c. 8.

FI'STULA. FI'STULARY. FI'STULATE. FI'STULOUS. } Lat. Fistula, quasi φυσηλλα, a φυσα-ειν, flatu distend-ere, to stretch out or distend by blowing, (Vossius.) And thus applied to—

A pipe of reeds, or other things having the hollowness of a pipe.

It is not the fistula, where against thou hast geuen cauterie.—Golden Boke, c. 43.

Moreover you shall not see a part of the bodie but it is subject to the fistulas, which creep inwardly and hollow as they go.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 14.

On th' other part; Apollo, in his friend
Form'd th' art of wisedome: to the binding end
Of his vow'd friendship, and (for further meede)
Gave him the farr heard fistularie reede.
Chapman. Homer. A Hymne to Hermes.

As for the flesh of the polype, it is to see to, fistulous and spongeous, like unto hony-combe.—Holland. Plut. p. 827.

It [the topaze] is found beyond the farthest parts of India, among the inhabitants of the mountaine Caucasus, to wit, the Phicarians and Asdates; they grow into a very great bignesse; but the same is fistulous and full of filth.
Id. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 8.

The beginnings or first stamina in animals are their tubes, pipes or ducts, fistulated or hollowed, to circulate the blood and juices.—The Student, vol. ii. p. 379.

FIT, n. FI'TFUL. } An ague coming by Fittes; febris per intervalla recurrens. It seems to be from the Dut. Vits, signifying swift, quick, (Junius.) Perhaps, says Skinner, so called, quasi fights, for they are conflicts and struggles of nature. It is not improbably the Fr. Fait; Lat. Factum, done. See Tooke, pt. ii. c. 2.

Dr. Percy remarks, that, "Our ancient ballads and metrical romances being divided into several parts, for the convenience of singing them at publick entertainments, were in the intervals of the feast sung by fits or intermissions." A fit is—

1. A fact, feat, or performance; and thus applied (as an act in a play) to parts or portions of a song or poem, of music or dancing. And see Steevens on Troil. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 1.

2. A fact or feat, an act, affect, or effect; and thus applied to particular acts or effects; to violent and sudden affections, to paroxysms of temperature or distemperature of mind or body.

And in those cares so colde I force myself a heate,
As sicke men in their shaking fittes procure themselfe to sweate.—Surrey. The Faithful Louer declareth &c.

Sainges there be, and sawes there be to cure thy greedie care:
To master thyne assaltynge fyttes,
to purchase thy welfare.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Mæcenas

What wold ye doe with my harpe, he sayd,
If I did sell it yee?
To play my wife and me a fitt,
When a bed together wee bee
Percy. Reliques, vol. i. King Estmere.

He, sitting me beside in that same shade,
Provok'd me to plate some pleasant fit,
And when he heard the musicke that he made
He found himself full greatly pleas'd at it
Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

His seruants fear his solemn fittes,
When if they ought did say,
He either answers not at all,
Or quite another way
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 2

——— Duncane in his grave
After life's fitful fever he sleepes well.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc 2.

Rais'd on his knees, he now ejects the gore,
Now faints anew, low sinking on the shore.
By fits he breathes, half views the fleeting skies,
And seals again, by fits his swimming eyes
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiv.

Antonius happened to be seized at that very time, with a fit of the gout, or pretended, at least to be so, that he might have no share in the destruction of an old friend [Catiline:] so that the command fell of course to a much better soldier and honester man, Petreius.
Middleton. The Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 3.

More near from out the Cæsar's palace came
The owl's long cry, and interruptedly
Of distant sentinels the fitful song
Began and died upon the gentle wind.
Byron. Manfred, Act iii. sc. 4.

FIT, v. FIT, adj. FI'TLY. FI'TMENT. FI'TNESS. FI'TTEDNESS. FI'TTER. FI'TTINOLY. FI'TTINONESS. } Kilian says,—Vitten. (Fland.) Convenire, quadrare, et accommodare; and this Junius would derive from Vits, frequens, citus, agilis. (See FIT.) Skinner, more reasonably, from the Fr. Fait, factum, q. d. factum, i.e. aptum ad hoc. And thus the Fr. Faictis is, neat, feat, comely, handsome, proper, well made, well featured, well set-together, (Cotgrave.) Will it do? Will it fit? Will it suit? are equivalent expressions.

To make or match, to suit; to adapt, to accommodate, to adjust, to conform.

To fit out,—to provide or furnish with things fit or suitable

That done, we had then time to view our prize, which we found of great defence, and a notable strong ship, almost two hundred tun in burden, very well appointed, and in all things fitted for a man of warre.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p 200.

Nothyng fayre apeared thys stones vnto thys worlde, when they that were hewen, squared, and made fyt foundation, by the manyfold persecutions of tyraunte
Bale. Image, pt. iii.

Such are not fit for Cupid's campe.
they ought no wages win.
Which faint before the clange of trump
or battel's broyle begin.
Turbervile. Lovers ought to shunne, &c.

Hir neck of so good size, hir plume of colour white,
Hir legs and fete so finely made, thou seldom seene in sight.
Eche part so fitly pight as none mought chaunge his place,
Nor any bird could lightly haue so good and braue a grace.
Id. The Complaint.

And lastly came cold February, sitting
In an old waggon, for he could not ride,
Drawn by two fishes for the season fitting,
Which through the flood before did softly slyde
And swim away.—Spenser. F. Queene. Of Mutabilitie

Then Paridel, in whom a kindly pride
Of gracious speech and skill his words to frame
Abounded, being glad of so fitte tide,
Him to commend to her, thus spake, of al well cide.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 9.

To her I sing of loue, that loueth best,
And best is loued of all aliue I weene:
To her this song most fitly is addreast,
The Queen of Loue, and Prince of Peace from heaven blest.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 1.

Let Aristotle, and others have their dues: but if we can make farther discoveries of truth and fitnesse then they, why are we envied?—Ben Jonson. Discoveries

Post. I am, sir,
The souldier that did company these three
In poore beseeming: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 5.

There is not an ampler testimony of Providence then the structure of man's body:—the safeness of the fabrick of the eyes:—their exquisite fittedness to their use, &c
H. More. Antid. against Atheism, b. ii. c. 12. Contents.

[Solitude and emptinesse] which being abstracted terms (as the schools call them) do very fittingly agree with the notion we have put upon this symbolical earth, affirming it no real actual subject, either spiritual or corporeal, that may be said to be void and empty; but to be vacuity and emptinesse it self, onely joined with a capacity of being something.
Id. Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala, c. 1.

He that sees all men almost to be Christians, because they are bid to be so, need not question the fittingness of godfathers promising in behalf of the children for whom they answer.—Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. Desc. 6

The meaning is, not, that God will act arbitrarily and without reason, as some have absurdly understood these words, but that he, and he only, is the competent, proper, and unerring judge, upon what persons, and on what conditions, 'tis fit for him to bestow his favours.
Clark. vol. i. Ser. 21

And to whom could I more fitly apply myself than to your lordship, who have not only an inborn but an hereditary loyalty.—Dryden. All for Love, Ded.

What things soe'er are to an end referr'd,
And in their motions still that end regard,
Always the fitness of the means respect,
These as conducive choose and those reject.
Must by a judgment, foreign and unknown,
Be guided to their end or by their own.
Blackmore. Creation, b. i.

Sowing the sandy gravelly land in Devonshire and Cornwall with French furze seed, they reckon a great improver of their land, and a fitter of it for corn.—Mortimer. Husb.

Every year he applied for fresh Parliamentary supplies, he fitted out squadrons; and took six thousand Danes into British pay, for the same useful purposes, which some years before, had occasioned the hiring of twelve thousand Hessians.—Chesterfield. Memoirs, s. 4.

I mean the charters (i. e. formal recognition by the sovereign power) of King John and King Henry the Third, the things secured by these instruments may, without any deceitful ambiguity, be very fitly called the chartered rights of men.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill

He who studies them [works of Nature] is continually delighted with new and wonderful discoveries, and yet is never perplexed by their multiplicity, because order, proportion, and fitness, prevail through the whole system.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 9.

——— And thus I
Still on thy shores, fair Leman! may find room
And food for meditation, nor pass by
Much, that may give us pause, if pondered fittingly.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3

FITCH. FETCH, or VETCH. } Fr. Vesse; It. Vezza, veccia; Lat. Vicia, which Varro derives—a vinciendo, because it has claspers like a vine, (De Re Rustica, i. 31.)

For he treadeth not the fytches out with a wayne, nether bryngeth he the cart here and there ouer the comyn, but he threseth the fitches onte with a flayle and the comyn with a rod.—Bible, 1551. Isaye, c. 28.

FITCHAT. FITCHEW. } Dut. Visse, fisse, vitsche; Fr. Fissau. A fitch or fulmart, Skinner says, the fœtid ferret, perhaps from Lat. Fœtere or putere, to stink. Lye,—from fiest, Fr. Vessir, which Cotgrave says is to fyste, to let a fyste. It. Vessare; Dut. Visten; Lat. Visire, which Vossius thinks may be formed from the sound, or be from the Gr. Βδεσις, (ejecto δ,) from Βδειν, flatum ventris silentio emittere. See To FIZZLE.

If I may descend to a lower game, what pleasure is it sometimes with guns to betray the very vermin of the earth: as namely, the fitchet, the fullmart, the ferret, the pole-cat, the mole-warp, and the like creatures that live upon the face and within the bowels of the earth.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 1.

FITCHING, i. e. Fixing. Nisi videro in manibus ejus fixuram clavorum. Fr. Ficheur, a fixing.

And he seide to hem but I se in hise hondis the fichyng of the nailis, and putte my fyngir into the place of the nailis, and put myn hond into hise side I schal not bileue
Wiclif. Jon, c. 20.

FITTERS. To beat or cut into fitters (says Skinner) frustulatim, seu minutatim concidere, comminuere, from the It. Fetta, a small segment: from the verb fendere, Lat. Findere, to cleave.

If you strike or pierce a solid body, that is brittle, as glasse, or sugar, it breaketh not only where the immediate force is, but breaketh all about in shivers and fitters.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, C. 1. s. 11

Sul. Where's the Frenchman?
Ja. He's all to fitters.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act iii. sc. 3.

None of your pieced-companions, your pind-gallants,
That flie to fitters, with every flaw of weather.
Id. The Pilgrim, Act i. sc. 1.

But so brittle withall, that if it chaunced to fall upon a thing harder than itself it would break into fitters like glasse, [citrà modo fragilem.]—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 13.

Other [gallies] being taken up with certain engines fastened within, one contrary from the other, made them turn in the air like a whirlegig, and so cast them upon the rocks by the town walls, and splitted them all to fitters, to the great spoil and murther of the persons that were within them.—North. Plutarch, p. 261.

FITTON, i. e. Fiction, (q. v)

These thinges considered, I doubte not, but of your courtesse, and ye wil take back your fittons vnto yourself.
Jewell. Defence, p. 180.

The title of Paul the Fift to the chaire of Peter in the lawfulnesse of his election, is diversely reported; hath hee therefore no true claime to his seate? But who ever proved Gregorie's pond in Sicily? This is one of the fittons of his Fitz-Simons.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergy. b. iii a 2.

He doth feed you with fittons.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act i. sc 1.

FIVE. Goth. Fimf; A.S. Fif; Dut. Vif; Ger. Funf; Sw. Fem. The etymologists are content with the Gr. Πεντε. Without doubt, says Wachter, from manta, because five fingers are all.

Five is frequently prefixed.

These fyue kynges were tho, se bute on now ther hys.
R. Gloucester, p. 6.

They haue all many wiues, and the Lords fiue-fould to the common sort.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 660.

And now he feasts them whom he formerly threatened; and turns their feare into wonder; all unequal love is not partial, all the brethren are entertained bountifully, but Benjamin hath a five-fold portion.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Of Joseph.

Five-leaved flowers are commonly disposed circularly about the stylus.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

As for cinque foile or five-leaved grasse, there is not one but knoweth it: so common it is, and commendable besides for the strawberries which it beareth.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxv. c. 9.

O check the foamy bit, nor tempt thy fate,
Think on the murders of a five-bar gate!
Gay. The Birth of the Squire.

In woods and fields their glory they complete,
There Master Betty leaps a five-barr'd gate.
Young. On Women, Sat. 5.

FIX, v.
FI'XABLE.
FIXA'TION.
FI'XEDLY.
FI'XEDNESS.
FIXI'DITY.
FI'XITY.
FI'XTURE.
FI'XURE.

Fr. Ficher; It. Ficcare, figgere; Sp. Fixar; Lat. Fig-ere, fixum, to fasten. See AFFIX.

To fasten, join or unite closely, inseparably; to connect or bind; to put or place, set or stick fast or firmly, immovably; to settle steadily.

And whanne the former part was fixid it dwellide vnmouable.—Wielif. Dedis, c. 27.

No, nyther our spirites ascentioun,
Ne our materes that lien al fix adoun,
Mown in our werking nothing us availle.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,247.

Do that there be fixacion,
With temperate hetes of fyre. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Of a trouthe, if the fathers be fathers, and the mothers mothers: as soone as the Goddes haue geuen theim a daughter, forthwith they ought to fix in theyr hertes a new remembrance, and not forgeat it tyll they haue prouided theyr doughtre an housebande.—Golden Boke, c. 38.

Auffid. We hate alike:
Not Affricke ownes a serpent I abhorre
More then thy fame and envy: fix thy foot.
Mar. Let the first budger dye the others slaue.
And the Gods doome him after.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 8.

——— I'le be at thy elbowe,
It makes vs, or it marre vs, thinke on that,
And fixe most firm thy resolution.
Id. Othello, Act v. sc. 1.

——— This act
Shall bruise the head of Satan, crush his strength,
Defeating Sin and Death, his two maine armes,
And fix farre deeper in his head their stings,
Than temporal death shall bruise the victor's heel,
Or theirs whom it redeems.—Milton. Par. Lost, b xii

Since they cannot then stay what is transitory, let them attend to arrest that which is fixable, which is a good degree of peaceable acquiescence of spirit, in all transitory events.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt i. Treat. 9. s 2.

So that there are three causes of fixation, the even spreading both of the spirits, and tangible parts; the closeness of the tangible parts; and the jejunenesse, or extreme comminution of spirits.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 799.

——— For two
Of our inferiour works are at fixation.
A third is in ascension.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act ii. sc. 3.

And when our hearts are once stript naked, and ratefully searcht, let our eyes be ever fixedly bent upon their conveyances and inclinations.—Bp. Hall. The Great Impostor.

How unexampled a favour is this, who ever but Hezekiah knew his period so long before? the fixednesse of his terme, is no less mercie than the protraction.
Id. Cont. Hezekiah & Sennacherib.

There are or may be some corporeal things in the compass of the universe that may possibly be of such a fixedness, stability and permanent nature, that may sustain an external existence, at least dependently upon the supreme cause.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, c 3. s. 1.

We may likewise without setting our thoughts to work upon temporall goods in hope to make our happynes by the fixure of them, wel derive great utility from them, by the infusion of some of their virtue, making thereof remedyes for the necessityes of our neighbours.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 6. s. 2.

And I presume to have cast the other sect by these two evidences brought against it, viz the unfaithfulnesse of all material goods, in point of duration and fixure, and the ficklenesse even of our own affections, in the esteeme of such fruitions.—Id. Ib. pt i Treat. 6. s. 3.

She in the midst began with sober grace,
Her servant's eyes were fix'd upon her face,
And, as she mov'd or turn'd, her motions view'd,
Her measures kept, and step by step pursued.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

My thoughts at present are fix'd on Homer and by my translation of the first Iliad, I find him a poet more according to my genius than Virgil, and consequently hope I may do him more justice, in his fiery way of writing.
Id. Prose Works, vol. i. Let. 36. October, 1690.

From this account of the causes or requisites of fixity, may be deduced the following means of giving or adding fixation to a body, that was before either volatile, or less fixed.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 307

But who settled that course of nature? If we ascend not to the original cause, the fixation of that course is as admirable and unaccountable, if we do, a departure from it is as easy.—Howe. Funeral Sermon on Dr. W. Bates.

My religion is the Roman Catholic religion, in it I have lived above forty years, in it I now die; and so fixedly die, that if all the good things in this world were offered me to renounce it, all should not move me one hair's breadth from my Roman Catholic faith.
State Trials, an. 1679. David Lewis.

Having given such proofs of the fixedness of its parts, as to have long endured the violence even of a glass-house fire, we can scarce imagine a body more unlikely to have any motion amongst its component particles.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 454.

So much do the fixidity and volatility of bodies depend upon texture.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 78.

I think I have brought a great many parts of crude gold to assume a metcurial form, and to cover over in that form by distillation (whatever divers learned men think of the insuperable fixity of gold.)—Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 634.

It was not night—it was not day,
It was not even dungeon-light,
So hateful to my heavy sight,
But vacancy absorbing space,
And fixedness—without a place.
Byron. The Prisoner of Chillon, ix.

In short, all the Franks who are fixtures, and most of the English, Germans, Danes, &c., of passage, came over by degrees to their opinion, on much the same grounds that a Turk in England would condemn the nation by wholesale, because he was wronged by his lacquey and overcharged by his washer-woman.—Id. Childe Harold, notes to c. 2.

FIZZ. } Or to Fiest, as Junius; to Feist, as FI'ZZLE. } Skinner; or to Fyste, as Cotgrave writes it. See FITCHAT, and FISK.

It is the easiest thing, sir, to be done:
As plaine as fizzling; rowle but wi' your eyes
And foame at th' mouth
B. Jonson. The Divell is an Asse, Act v. sc. 3.

FLA'BBY. Probably Flappy. See FLAP.

If a man not very fat sits resting his leg carelessly upon a stool his calf will hang flabby like the handkerchief in your pocket, let him stand upright with a burthen upon his shoulders as much as he can well bear, and you will find his calves hardened into very bones.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 21.

One reason of the difference may be, that animal bodies are, in a great measure, made up of soft, and flabby, substances, such as muscles and membrance.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

FLA'CCID. } Lat. Flaccidus, from Flaccere.
FLACCI'DITY. } The origin, says Vossius, is the Gr. Βλακια, (h. e.) mollities, softness.

Soft, loose, faint, relaxed, (lax, see Letter F.)

I do not see nor by any sense perceive the quiet, undisturbed air; yet because I do see that a bladder, that was before flaccid, doth swell by the reception of that which I see not, I do as truely and certainly conclude that there is such a subtil body which we call air, as if I could see it as plain as I see the water.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 19.

He (Solomon) grew not into utter prophaneness of spirit, to cast off all. Nor did David, his father, whilst yet his mouth was shut up to holy discourse; and his wonted fervent desires to turn others to God, grew flaccid, and were cooled in him.—Goodwin. Works, vol ii pt. iv. p. 350.

The external air, being permitted to flow back into the receiver, repulsed the air that had filled the bladder into its former narrow receptacle, and brought the bladder to be again flaccid and wrinkled as before.
Boyle. Works, vol i. p. 20.

The viscidity of the juices and the flaccidity of the fibres, would, in a great measure, and to some very tolerable degree, by proper remedies and a due regimen, be removed.
Cheyne. On Health, c. 7.

Which will render them feeble like a strained sinew, or flaccid like a paralytic muscle.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 21.

FLA'CKET. A.S. Flaxa; Dut. Flesche; Ger. Flasche. See FLASK, and FLAGON.

And Isai toke an asse laden with breade, & a flackat of wine, and a kydde, and sent them by Dauid his sonne vnto Saule.—Bible, 1551. 1 Samuel, c. 16.

FLAG, v.
FLAG, n.
FLA'GGY. } A. S. Fleog-an, volare, to fly; Dut. Vlagg-eren, volitare, and consequentially, flaccere, laxari, to fly or float about, to hang floating, loose, (sc.) in the wind.

To flacke (in Gower)—to move to and fro, (to flicker.)

Flag, the plant, so called, because on account of the slenderness of its leaves it is moved by any wind.

Flag (of a ship, &c.)—because it flies in the wind.

To flag, (consequentially,) from the loose or floating position of a flag, unless impelled by the wind, (see Skinner and Junius.)—

To hang loose, and drooping, to droop, to be or become flaccid, lax, languid or faint, weak or feeble.

Flekes, in R. Brunne, flags, twigs, (Hearne,) withies.

Botes and barges ilkon, with flekes mak tham tighte.
R. Brunne, p 321.

Hir cold breste began to heate,
Her herte also to flacke and beate.—Gower Con A. b viii

With hote alarmes I comforted my men,
In formost ranke I stoode before the rest,
And shooke my flagge, not all to shew my force,
But that thou mightst thereby perceiue my minde.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

But when my Muse, whose fethers, nothing flitt,
Doe yet but flagg and lowly learn to fly,
With bolder wing shall dare alofte to sty
To the last praises of this Faery Queene;
Then shall it make most famous memory
Of thine heroicke parts, such as they beene.
Spenser. To the Earl of Essex.

——— Not that thy Muse wants wing
To soar a loftier pitch, for she hath made
A noble flight, and plac'd th' heroic shade
Above the reach of our faint, flagging rhime.
Carew. To Aurelian Townsend

For if the words be but becoming, and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juyce but where that wanteth, the language is thinne, flagging, poore, starv'd: scarce covering the bone, and shewes like stones in a sack.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Hee (Scipio) was not far from thence, when there met him a ship of the Carthaginians, garnished with infules, ribbands, and white flags of peace, and beset with branches of olive, wherin were ten oratours embarked, the best men of the citie, sent by the advice and motion of Annibal to crave peace.—Holland. Livie, p. 765.

As swifte as swallowes on the waues they went
That their brode flaggy fannes no foame did reare
Ne bubling rowndell they behind them sent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii c 4

His flaggy winges, when forth he did display,
Were like two sayles, in which the hollow wynd
Is gathered full, and worketh speedy way.
Id. Ib. b. i. c. 11

Plantaines that haue a broad flaggie leafe growing in clusters and shaped like cucumbers.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. vi. c. 8

Whence spring those flowing rays of light
That pierce through War's obscurer night?
Or does the suppliant flag display
Its chearful beams of white?
Yalden. On the Conquest of Namur.

Already batter'd by his lee they lay,
In vain upon the passing winds they call:
The passing winds through their torn canvass play
And flagging sails on heartless sailors fall.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

The wounded bird, ere yet she breath'd her last,
With flagging wings alighted on the mast,
A moment hung, and spread her pinions there,
Then sudden dropt, and left her life in air.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lie,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry:
When, late returning home, the laden host
By raging winds is wreck'd upon the coast.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Thus Reputation is a spur to Wit,
And some wits flag through fear of losing it.
Cowper. Table Talk.

The notion that peace would hush up all our dangers had induced us to give up to Holland the honour of the flag; which though, perhaps, of itself of no essential importance, kept up the pride and spirit of the service, and has been maintained by us for a century and a half
Windham. Speech. Definitive Treaty. May 13, 1802.

FLAG. } Ray says, that the surface of
FLAG-STONE. } the earth, which they pare off to burn, the upper turf; and Mr. Moore, that the portion of clover land turned at once by the plough, is called flag. Woodward, in the passage quoted from him, tells us that flags of stone are no other than strata: whence the origin of the word appears to be the A. S. Fle-an; Dut. Vlaegh-en, deglubere, to flay: to strip off, to separate or divide into flakes. See FLAKE.

Flag-stone will not split, as slate does, being found formed into flags, or thin plates, which are no other than so many strata.—Woodward. On Fossils.

FLA'GELLE, v. } Fr. Flageller; It. Flagellare; Lat. Flagellare, to whip or scourge. The Flagellators (who are also called Flagellants) were sectaries and heretics, says Du Cange, about the year 1261. Cockeram has the verb, to flagellate,—To whip, to scourge, to lash. See DISCIPLINE.
FLAGELLA'TION.
FLA'GELLANTS.

Hys legates are so furious and ragynge mad, that a man would thinke, as they steppe forewardes, that Sathan wer sent from the face of God to flagelle the church.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

He underwent those previous pains which customarily antecede that suffering, as flagellation, and bearing of the cross.—Pearson. On the Creed, Art. 4.

This labour past, by Bridewell all descend,
(As morning prayer, and flagellation end)
To where Fleet-ditch with disemboguing streams
Rolls the large tribute of dead dogs to Thames.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

And these modern flagellants are sure, with a rigid fidelity, to whip their own enormities on the vicarious back of every small offender.—Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts.

History makes us acquainted with many curious instances in the heathen world, where the images of the Deities worshipped have been very roughly treated, and even suffered public flagellation, for not having averted the calamities, which had been deprecated.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. c. 1. s. 3.

FLA'GEOLET. Fr. Flageolet, which Menage derives from the Lat. Flare, to blow. Cotgrave calls it a pipe, whistle, flute.

First he that led the cavalcate
Wore a sow-gelder's flageolet,
On which he blew as strong a levet
As well-fee'd lawyer on his brev'ate.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

And there wanted no variety, for Banister, besides playing on the violin, did wonders on the flageolet to a thro' base, and several other masters likewise played solos.—Dr. Burney. From Mr. North's Manuscript Memoirs of Musick.

FLAGITIOUS. } Lat. Flagitium, from flagitare, to demand or require eagerly, idque cum clamore, aut convitiis: hence, flagitii, and flagitandi, were words which signified—ardentem amatoriam solicitationem ad stuprum; then applied—ad stuprum ipsum, omniaque ea quæ mollitie ac libidine committerentur, (Vossius.)
FLAGITIOUSLY.
FLAGITIOUSNESS.

Ardently lustful, libidinous; shamefully profligate, atrociously wicked.

He beynge blynded with the ambicious desyre of rule before this, in obteynyng the kyngdome, had perpetrate and done many flagicious actes and detestable tyrannies.
Hall. Rich. III. an 3.

These were artificers which wicked men make use of, to deter the best of men from punishing tyrants, and flagitious persons.—Milton. A Defence of the People of England.

If Amasa were now, in the act of loyalty, justly (on God's part) payd for the arerages of his late rebellion, yet that it should be done by thy hand, then and thus, it was flagitiously cruel.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Sheba's Rebellion.

——— This Age
Of a most flagitious note degenerates
From the fam'd virtue of our ancestors,
And leaves but few examples for their excellence.
Rowe. The Ambitious Step-mother, Act ii.

The whole verse hath apparently two propositions. the one denoting the folly of Atheism, The fool hath said in his heart, there is no God: the second declaring the Corruption and Flagitiousness of Life which naturally attend it.
Bentley, Ser. 1.

In short they were all of the same stamp and character; men whom disappointments, ruined fortunes and flagitious lives, had prepared for any design against the state; and all whose hopes of ease and advancement depended on a change of affairs, and the subversion of the republic.
Middleton. The Life of Cicero, s. 3.

It exhibits to him a life thrown away on vanities and follies, or consumed in flagitiousness and sin; no station properly supported; no material duties fulfilled.
Blair, vol. i. Ser. 2.

FLA'GON. Fr. Flacon, flascon; It. Fiasco; Sp. Frasco; Dut. Flesche; Ger. Flasche; A. S. Flaxe, a flask, (qv.) In Low Lat. Flasca. Hesychius has Φλασκων, a species of cup. Vossius, (de Vitiis,) thinks all are from the Ger. Flasche; not noticing the existence of the A. S. Flaxe; but the meaning of the word and the cause of the application are still wanting.

Cotgrave calls the "Fr. Flacon,—a great leathern bottle."

Agayne, that theyr flagons, theyr pottes, their vessels of brasse, their stooles, their beddes, and theyr other stuffe which was daily occupied, should be oftë washed.
Udal. Matthew, c. 15.

That is trewe, quod Roberte of Tulles, ye nede nat doute therin, nor haue no suspiciousnesse, for as yet there is of the same wyne in the flagons, wherof we wyll drinke and assaye before you.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 187.

Bring forth your flaggins (fill'd with sparkling wine)
Whereon swoln Bacchus, crowned with a vine, is graven. Drayton. The Sacrifice to Apollo.

——— I thirsty stand,
And see the double flagons charge their hand,
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

For with flame-darting eyes,
Around it roll a thousand sleepless dragons;
While from their diamond flagons
The feasting Gods exhaustless nectar sip.
Jones. A Hymn to Indra.

FLA'GRANT. } Fr. Flagrant; It. and Sp. Flagrante; Lat. Flagrans, from flagrare, to burn; and this from flare, to blow; incendium, quod flatu alitur.
FLA'GRANCE.
FLA'GRANCY.
FLA'GRANTLY.
FLAGRA'TION.

Flaming, ardent, burning, fiery; applied to any glaring crime or offence,—shameless or notorious.

As lovers of chastity, and sanctimony, and haters of uncleannesse they bring to him a woman taken in the flagrance of her adultery.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Woman taken in Adulterie.

Lust causeth a flagrancy in the eyes.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 722.

Cæsar's was not a smothered, but a flagrant, ambition, kindling first by nature, and blown by necessity.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 242.

And O let the sense of these my present indispositions cause me more vehemently to long after that free and blessed state, wherein, with fixt and steady thoughts, with flagrant love, and intire devotion of soul, I shall for ever worship, praise, and glorify thy name.
Scott. The Christian Life, pt. i. c. 5.

See! in this glad farewell he doth appear
Stuck with the constellations of his sphere,
Fearing, we—numb'd—fear'd no flagration,
Hath curled all his fires in this one one;
Which (as they guard his hallowed chaste urn)
The dull approaching heresies do burn.
Lovelace. On Fletcher's Comedy of the Wild Goose Chase.

Creatures that could vex, but not make you angry, such mean instruments of iniquity that the wickedness was disparaged by their managing it, and the flagrancy and dangerous consequence of what was doing was hidden by the inconsiderableness of the agents.—Steel's Apology, Pref.

Jesus had, as they conceived, committed a flagrant act of injustice, in assaulting the persons of men, who were under the protection of the state; and they call upon him only for a sign, since he did these things.—Hurd. A Discourse on Christ driving the Buyers and Sellers out of the Temple.

The mysteries of Bacchus were well chosen for an example of corrupted rites, and of the mischiefs they produced; for they were early and flagrantly corrupted.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

FLAIL. Fr. Flayau, fléau. Lacombe has, "Flaeller, battre avec un fléau." Roquefort has both the verb Flaeller, and noun flael. Dut. Vleghel; Ger. Flegel; from the Lat. Flagellare, to whip, to beat.

A beating or threshing tool.

Tho were faitours afered, and flowen to Peerses bernes
And flapten on whit flailes, fro morwe til evene.
Piers Ploughman, p. 137

Beholde I wyll make the a treadynge carte and a newe flayle, that thou maiest threshe and grynde the mountaynes, and bring the hylles to poulder.—Bible, 1551. Esaye, c. 41.

But, when as he would to a snake againe
Haue turn'd himselfe, he with his iron flaile
Gan driue at him, with so huge might and maine,
That all his bones as small as sandy graile
He broke. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

Where Policy is busied all night long
In setting right what Faction has set wrong;
Where flails of oratory thrash the floor,
That yields them chaff and dust, and nothing more.
Cowper. Expostulation.

A husbandman, or a gardener, will do more execution by being able to carry his scythe, his rake, or his flaile, with a sufficient despatch through a sufficient space, then if, with greater strength his motions were proportionably more confined and slow.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 9.

FLAKE, v. } Fr. noun Flaquet; It. Fiocco. The It. verb Fioccare; Dut. Vlocken, is, ningere, to snow. The Ger. Flock, Wachter says, is pars avulsa lanæ, nivis, &c., and he refers to the verb, plucken, pflucken, carpere, vellere, to pluck, pull, or tear away. Somner has Flacea, floccini, flocci nivis flakes of snow or such like. Junius seems inclineo to refer to the Dut. Vliegen, to fly. Skinner decides from the Lat. Floccus, Ihre, Flage, pars avulsa. Snoeflage, floceulus nivis, and he derives from Flaecka, dividere, partiri, to divide or separate: and this leads us to the Dut. Vlaeg-hen, A. S. Fle-an, (fle-ig-an,) to flay, to strip off, and thus to separate or divide, (sc.) into flakes or flags. See FLAG-STONE.
FLAKE, n.
FLA'KY.

To part, separate or divide; to form into flakes or flags, or separate parts or portions: generally applied to such as are broad, thin and flat.

As flakes fallen in great snowes.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

My morning minde which dwelt and dyed in dole,
Saught company for solace of the same:
My cares were cold, and craued comforts coale,
To warme my will with flakes of friendly flame.
Gascoigne. A Louer often warned.

Then can he term his dirty ill-fac'd bride
Lady and queen and virgin deify'd:
Be she all sooty black, or berry brown,
She's white as marrow's milk, or flakes new blown.
Bp. Hall, b. i. Sat. 7.

The Egyptian paper (of which ours made of rags hath still the name) was made of a sedgie reed, growing in the marishes of Egypt, called Papyrus, which easily diuides it selfe into thinne flakes; these layd on a table, and moistned with the glutinous water of Nilus were prest together and dried in the sunne.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. vi. c. 5. s. 2.

Afterwards, being reduced into bars and gads when it is red hot, it [steele] is spungeous and brittle, apt to breake or resolve in flakes.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 4.

Some part of the sperma-ceti found on the shore was pure and needed little depuration: a great part mixed with fetid oyl, needing good preparation, and frequent expression to bring it to a flaky consistency.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 26.

While from her tomb, behold, a flame ascends,
Of whitest fire, whose flight to heaven extends!
On flaking wings it mounts, and quick as sight
Cuts thro' the yielding air with rays of light.
Congreve. The Morning Muse of Alexis.

——— The bellying clouds
Burst into rain, or gild their sable skirts
With flakes of ruddy fire.
Somervile. To Sir Adolphus Oughton.

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind;
She bids the snow descend in flaky sheets;
And in her hoary mantle clothe the streets.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

The roof, though movable through all its length
As the wind sways it, has yet well suffic'd,
And, intercepting in their silent fall
The frequent flakes, has kept a path for me.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

——— Amazing scene!
What showers of mortal hail, what flaky fires
Burst from the darkness.—Watts. The Victory of the Poles.

FLAM, v. } Skinner says, I know not whether
FLAM, n. } from the A. S. Flyma, vagus, q.d. rumor vagus, a flying rumor; with us, it denotes a lying story or fable.—Flyma is from Fleam, flight, and this from the verb Flean, to fly. And thus, Skinner's explanation is correct.

A lying story or fable; a false pretext; a vagary. And—

To flam,—to put off, impose upon, cajole with such story or pretext.

Sus. ——— Till he and you be friends.
Was this your cunning?—and then flam me off
With an old witch, two wives, and Winnifrede?
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act ii. sc. 2.

But still when any hope was, as 'tis her trick
To minister enough of those, then presently
With some new flam or other, nothing to the matter,
And such a frown, as would sink all before her,
She takes her chamber.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Humourous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 1.

Ar. 'Tis a fool's indeed:
A very fool's: thou hast more of
These flams in thee, these musty doubts.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Loyal Subject.

I cannot (saith one) now attend to prayers, because I am not at liberty or at leisure, being urgently called away, and otherwise engaged by important affairs. How much a flamme this apology is, we shall presently descry, by asking a few questions about it.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 7.

Fair Isis, and ye banks of Cam!
Be witness if I tell a flam.
Swift. Directions for a Birthday Song.

For when a writer can furnish no better an entertainment than a parcel of groundless flams, he will be much subject to repetition.—Warburton. On Bolingbroke's Philosophy, Let. 3.

FLA'MBEAU. "Fr. Flambeau, is (generally) a light; or any thing that yields a flame, and is carried in the dark, for light," (Cotgrave.)

And I had a flambeau in my hand, and was going before the coach; and coming along, at the lower end of St. Alban's Street, I heard the blunderbuss go off.
State Trials. Count Conyngsmark and others, an. 1632.

All catch the frenzy, downward from her grace,
Whose flambeaux flash against the morning skies,
And gild our chamber ceilings as they pass,
To her, who, frugal only that her thrift
May feed excesses she can ill afford,
Is hackney'd home unlackey'd.—Cowper. The Task, b. ii.

The day following, Clodius attacked Milo's house, with sword in hand and lighted flambeaus, with intent to storm and burn it.—Middleton. Life of Cicero, c. 6.

FLAME, v. }
FLAME, n. }
FLA'MING, n. }
FLA'MELESS. }
FLA'MESHIP. }
FLA'MINGLY. }
FLAMMABI'LITY. }
FLAMMA'TION. }
FLA'MMEOUS. }
FLAMMI'VOMOUS. }
FLA'MY. }

Fr. Flamber; It. Flammare; Lat. Flammare, from flamma, and this from the Gr. φλεγ-μα, from φλεγ-ειν, ardere, urere, to burn.

Flame is applied to the blazing light thrown forth from a burning substance; (met.) to warmth or brightness of thought or feeling.

To throw forth or emit a flame or blazing light; and generally, to burn, to heat, to warm, to glow.

And the wicke and the warme fuyr. wol make a fayr flamme
For to murthen men with. that in meerk sytten.
Piers Ploughman, p. 331.

And he criede and seide, fadir Abraham haue mercy on me and sende Lazarus that he dippe the ende of his finger in water, to kele my tunge: for I am turmentid in this flaume.—Wiclif. Luke, c 16.

Father Abraham, haue mercye on me, and sende Lazarus that he maye dippe the typpe of his finger in water, and cole my tonge: for I am tormented in this flame.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Flūbe doun the doleful light of thyn influence
Remēbring thy seruants for thy magnificence.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie

And he wax wroth, and bade men shuld hire lede
Home til hire house, and in hire hous (quod he)
Brenne hire right in a bath, with flames red.
Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,943.

Then feleth he anon a flame of delit, and then it is good to beware and kepe him wel, or elles he wol fall anon to consenting of sinne.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Might I haue throwen into that nauy brandes,
And filled eke their deckes with flaming fire,
The father, sonne, and all their nacion
Destroied, and falln, my self ded ouer al!
Surrey. Virgine. Æneas, b. iv.

The lightninge that fell out of the ayre belnge in the sommer season semed like fier, & ye flames sodenly appearinge, were thought to come from Darius's campe.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 85.

About this time were many wōderfull thinges seane in diueres quarters of the worlde, specially a greate comete or blaisinge starre, whiche semed with flamynges of fyre to fall into the sea.—Bale. English Votaries, pt i.

Before the threshold, dreadfull Cerberus
His three deformed heads did lay along,
Curled with thousand adders venemous,
And lifted forth his bloudy flaming tongue.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

Much was he moued at that rufull sight;
And, flam'd with zeale of vengeance inwardly,
He ask't, who had that dame so foully dight,
Or whether his owne hand, or whether other wight?
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 1.

——— Belching outrageous flame
Farr into chaos, since the fiend past through,
Sin opening. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

Abdiel, than whom none with more zeale ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obeid,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeale severe
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Id. Ib. b. v.

Which honour I to fiery flames compare,
For when they flash and flourish most of all,
Then suddainly their flamings quenched are.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 228.

How massie and sententious is Solomon in his Proverbs! how quaint and flamingly amorous in the Canticles!
Feltham, pt. I. Res. 20.

Both king and priest, obnoxious to his hate,
Detests his sanctuary, and forsakes
His flameless altar. Sandys. Lament, p. 4.

I say, proceeding from the sulphur of bodies torrified, that is the oylie fat, and unctuous parts wherein consist the principles of flammability.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

White or christaline arsenic being artificial, and sublimed with salt, will not endure flammation.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 5.

For this flammeous light is not over all the body, but only visible on the inward side: in a small, white part near the tail (of the glow-worm.)—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 27.

As for living creatures, it is certain, their vitall spirits are a substance compounded of an airy and flamy matter; and though air and flame being free, will well not mingle; yet bound in by a body that hath some fixing, they will.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 30.

The first was Splendor, In a robe of flame-colour, naked-brested, her bright haire loose flowing.
B. Jonson. The Second Masque of Beauty.

Let Impudence lead Slander on, to boast
Her oblique look; and to her subtle side,
Thou, black-mouth'd Execration, stand apply'd.
Draw to thee Bitternesse, whose pores sweat gal;
She flame-ey'd Rage; Rage, mischiefe.
Id. Charmes from the Masques of Queens.

Pox on your flameship, Vulcan; if it be
To all as fatal as 't hath beene to me,
And to Paul's steeple; which was unto us
'Bove all your fire-workes had at Ephesus,
Or Alexandria. Id. An Execration of Vulcan.

——— Sure Vulcan's shop is here—
Hark, how the anvils thunder round the dens
Flammivomus! Thompson. Sickness, b. iii.

Around thy coast his bursting bombs he pours
On flaming citadels and falling towers;
With hissing streams of fire the air they streak
And hurl destruction round them where they break;
The skies with long ascending flames are bright,
And all the sea reflects a quivering light.
Addison. To the King.

Since the same flame, by different ways express'd,
Glows in the Hero's and the Poet's breast;
The same great thoughts that rouse you to the fight,
Inspire the Muse, and bid the Poet write.
Rowe. Prologue to the Royal Consort.

He cas'd his limbs in brass; and first around
His manly legs with silver buckles bound
The clasping greaves, then to the breast applies
The flamy cuirass, of a thousand dyes.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

Meanwhile they crown with cypress, sign of drear
And baleful yew, the flame devoted bier,
And infant's bed. Lewis. Statius. Theband.

Not more afraid the wond'ring swain descries,
Midst night's thick gloom a flaming meteor rise;
Sent by the Furies, as he deems, to sow
Death and diseases on the earth below.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. iii.

The wild confusion, and the swarthy glow
Of flames on high, and torches from below;
The shriek of terrour, and the mingling yell—
For swords began to clash, and shouts to swell—
Flung o'er that spot of earth the air of hell!
Byron. The Corsair, c. 2.

Mortals, believe, what my Urania sings,
For she has seen him rise upon his flamy wings.
Watts. To the Memory of the Rev. Mr. Gouge.

FLA'MEN. }
FLAMI'NICAL. }
FLA'MINESHIP. }

Lat. Flamen, so called, says Vossius, a flameo, (sc.) flameo colore velamenti capitis; from the flame colour of the covering of the head.

Their gownes long like flamine priestes.
Golden Boke, Let. 5

After this he set his mind about the creation of priests, albeit in his owne person he performed very manie sacrifices, especially those which at this day pertaine to the Priest of Jupiter, called, Flamen Dialis.—Holland. Livie, p. 14.

Now for their demeanour within the church, how have they disfigur'd and defac'd that more than angelic brightness, the unclouded serenity of Christian religion, with the dark overcasting of superstitious copes and flaminical vestures.
Milton. Reasons of Church Government, b. ii. c. 2

C. Claudius, the arch flamine of Jupiter, lost his flamineship and was deprived of that sacerdotall dignitie, because he had committed an error in sacrificing, when hee should minister and distribute the inwards of the beast.
Holland. Livie, p. 601.

Divers auncient ceremonies also, which by little and little were disused and abolished, he restored agayne, as namely the Augurie of Salus, the Flamineship of Jupiter, the secred Lupercal, the Sæculer playes, and the Compitality.
Id. Suetonius, p. 52.

Its [Religion] titles of pontiffs, augurs, and flamens were borne by Senators, Consuls, and Generals.
Paley. Evidences, pt. I. c. 1.

FLANK, v. }
FLANK, n. }
FLA'NKER, v. }
FLA'NKER, n. }

Fr. n. Flanc, v. Flanquer; It. Fianco, fiancheggiare; Dut. Lancke; Ger. Lank and flanke; from the Gr. Λαγων, ilia, says Menage; ingeniosius credo quam verius, adds Skinner. The Dut. Ger. and Eng. Lank, seem to direct us to the A. S. Leng-ian, to long or lengthen, to extend: the difficulty is to account for the F. Wachter says, præposito digamma Æolico;—perhaps b into p, and then into f: belank, pe, ph, lank, plank, phank, flank. See F.

Flank, the n. is applied generally to the long or lengthened side of any thing: particularly, to—

That part of an animal which extends from the ribs to the thigh.

To flank,—to be or lie, to stand or be stationed, on the side; and thus, to cover or protect, guard or defend it.

Our enemies made certain loope-holes in the wall, thorow the which they flancking and scouring all the ditch with their harquebussie, stopped our former course of carying, or going that way any more, without certaine and expresse danger.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 123.

In the castle was placed that famous gentleman Andrea Bragadino, who with a diligent gard had charge on that part of the castle principally, next vnto the sea side, trimming and digging out new flanckers for the better defence of the arsenal.—Id. Ib. p. 122.

Some had the mainferres, the close gantlettes, the guissettes, the flancardes droped & gutted with red, and other had thē spekeled grene.—Hall. Henry IV. an. 1.

Next these came Tyne, along whose stony bancke
That Romaine monarch built a brasen wall,
Which mote the feebled Britons strongly flancke
Against the Picts, that swarmed over all.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11

The sides, flankes, and bellie [of the chameleon] meet togither, as in fishes.—Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 33.

At daie breaking, the legions appointed for the flankes, either for feare, or contempt, abandoned their standings; and seased on the fielde adioining, beyond the marshes.
Greneway. Tacitus, Annales, p. 26.

§ There are other rules concerning the situation of trees; the former author commending the north-east wind both for the flourishing of the tree, and advantage of the timber; but to my observation, in our climates, where those sharpe winds do rather flanker then blow fully opposite upon our plantations, they thrive best.—Evelyn. Silva, c. 3.

By the rich scent we found our perfum'd prey,
Which, flanck'd with rocks, did close in covert lie,
And round about their murdering cannon lay,
At once to threaten and invite the eye.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 26.

And yet in town and country prospects please
Where stately colonades are flank'd with trees.
Pitt. Epistle to J. Pitt, Esq.

In order just the ready squadrons ride,
Then wheeling to the right and left divide,
To flank the foot, and guard each naked side.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

The French infantry, posted at Blenheim, [made] at the same time a terrible fire from behind some hedges on their flank which were advanced too near the village, so that the first line was put into such disorder, part of them retired beyond the rivulet.
Tyndall. History of England. Anne, an. 3, 1704.

By great Antilochus, Atymnius dies,
Pierc'd in the flank, lamented youth, he lies.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

For this assault should either quarter feel
Again to flank the tempest she might reel.
Falconer. The Shipwreck.

Would an officer employ one of those corps [the volunteer] to cover his flank, or to maintain an important post.
Windham. Speech. Local Militia, April 12, 1808.

FLA'NNEL. Pannus spongiosus, bibulus et mollis; perhaps, says Skinner, from Lanula, dim. of lana, wool.

There the Generall went on shore in his barge, and by chance met a canoe of Dominicans, to the people whereof he gaue a yellow waistcoate of flannell and an handkerchief; and they gaue him such fruits as they had.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 384.

Fal. Well, I am your theame, you haue the start of me, I am detected: I am not able to answer the Welsh flannell.
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band,
Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

FLAP, v. }
FLAP, n. }
FLA'PPER. } Skinner thinks with Dr. Th. H., that the verb is from the It. Flappare, flaccescere; and this either from the Lat. Flabrum, or flaccescere. The noun, (sc.) a fly-flap, from the Dut. Flabbe, muscarum colaphus, which Minshew says, is from the sound made in striking at flies. The similarity observable in the applications of the words, lap, (qv.) and flap, leads to a suspicion that they have the same origin; f prefixed to the latter—perhaps b into p, and then into f. (See F.) Junius says—

Flap,—is the extremity of any thing soft and pendulous, and which is shaken by any slight motion. To flap is—

To move, fall or strike with a flap; that is, with the motion of such soft and pendulous substance.

A flap-dragon is a small inflammable substance set on float in a glass of liquor. To swallow this unhurt while flaming was a proof of dexterity in a toper, and candle ends were sometimes used as the ne plus ultima of the exercise. In our times, raisins in hot brandy form one of the Christmas gambols of children.

A flap-jack, from a quotation produced by Archdeacon Nares, appears to have been a kind of pancake.

Tho were faitours a fered and flowen to Peerses pernes
And flapen on white flailes, fro morwe til evene.
Piers Ploughman, p. 137.

For (quoth he) when many flies stoode feeding vppon his rawe flesh, and had well fed themselues, he was contented at another's perswasion to haue them flapt awaie.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 201.

Cred. With what a lye you'd flap me in the mouth!
Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act ii. sc. 5.

With the rest of his tail he flapped and beat her legs.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 792.

They will flap the lye in Truth's teeth, tho she visibly stand before their face without any vizard.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 23.

Thou greene sarcenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassell of a prodigal's purse thou.—Shakes. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 1.

But to make an end of the ship, to see how the sea flap-dragon'd it.—Id. Winter's Tale, Act iii. sc. 3.

Ana. From stabbing of armes, flap-dragons, healths, whiffes and all such swaggering humours.
Chorus. Good Mercury defend us.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 3.

Vas. I'le go afore, and have the bon-fire made,
My fire-works, and flap-dragons, and good back-rack,
With a peck of little fishes, to drink down
In healths to this day.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Beggar's Bush, Act v. sc. 2.

In the last place, for the Dira, or flying pest, which flapping on the shield of Turnus, and fluttering about his head, disheartened him in the duel, and presag'd to him his approaching death, I might have plac'd it more properly amongst the objections.—Dryden. Dedication to the Æneid.

I spoke with him, and took much notice of him, he had an old black hat on, that flapped, and a pair of Spanish leather shoes.—State Trials, an. 1679. T. Whitebread and others.

Did not the tender nonsense strike,
Contempt and scorn might look dislike;
Forbidding airs might thin the place,—
The slightest flap a fly can chase.
Gay. The Lady and the Wasp.

Oh! grievance sore, and listless dull delay,
To waste on sluggish hulks the sweetest breeze!
What leagues are lost before the dawn of day,
Thus loitering pensive on the willing seas,
The flapping sail haul'd down to halt for logs like these.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 2.

Q. Did you see any body, before that, have hold of the flap of Mr. O'Connor's coat?
Erskine. Speech. Treat of the Earl of Thanet, 1799.

FLARE. Skinner says, Flare in one's eyes, oculis instar lucis obversari; I know not whether from the Dut. Flederen, volitare, vagari, q. d. oculos circumvolitare, circa oculos vagari: to flit or fly before or around the eye, glaring light.

To feel, or cause to feel, to throw forth or emit, a broad, dazzling, glaring light.

——— But quaint pride
Hath taught her sons to wound their mother's side,
And gage the depth, to search for flaring shells,
In whose bright bosome spumy Bacchus swells.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

——— For all the fights
I have fought for you on land, the fears at sea,
Where I have tugg'd with tempests, stood storms a midnight;
Out-star'd the flaring lightning, and the next morning
Chas'd the unruly stubborn Turk with thunder.
Davenport. The City Night-Cap, Act iii. sc. 1.

Her chaste and modest vail, surrounded with celestial beams, they over-laid with wanton tresses, and in a flaring tire bespeckl'd her with all the gaudy allurements of a whore.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. i.

Thy way unhappy shouldst thou take
From Tyber's bank to Leman lake,
Thou art an aged priest no more
But a young flaring painted whore:
Thy sex is lost, thy town is gone;
No longer Rome, but Babylon. Prior. Alma, c. 2

Now the shrill lark in ether floats,
And carols wild her liquid notes;
While Phœbus, in his lusty pride,
His flaring beams flings far and wide.
Lloyd. To the Moon.

Have we not seen round Britain's peopled shore,
Her useful sons exchang'd for useless ore?
Seen all her triumphs but destruction haste,
Like flaring tapers bright'ning as they waste.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

FLASH, v. }
FLASH, n. }
FLA'SHING, n. }
FLA'SHY. } Junius, from the Gr. Φλοξ, flame; Skinner, from the verb to blaze. It is not improbably from the verb to fly, to flit, to flicker, A. S. Fliccerian.

To have or give a dazzling, glittering or shining appearance; to throw forth or emit a sudden and transient blaze or flame; and, generally, (lit. and met.) to throw or rush forth suddenly, so as to produce a shining or showy appearance.

"A flash," Grose says, "is a supply of water from the locks on the Thames, to assist the barges." And Pegge, in his Supplement, "Any pool of water." See the quotation from Drayton.

Flashy, the adjective, Skinner is inclined to derive from the Lat. Flaccidus; but it appears merely a consequential usage of the verb; showy, vain, spiritless; and thus, tasteless, insipid.

Wherof cometh that horible and broade flashing flame of fyre? It sprong of one litel sparke.—Udal. James, c. 3.

When loe the flashinge flames aloft the battlements had caught
Of Turnus noble tower, and vp to heauen they cracklinge raught. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xii.

So did Sir Artegall upon her lay,
As if she had an yron andvile beene,
That flakes of fire, bright as the sunny ray,
Out of her steely armes were flashing seene
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5

Yet will a many little surges be
Plashing upon the rocke full busily,
And doe the best they can to kisse her feet
But that their power and will not equal meet.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Lin. Oft have I seasoned savoury periods
With sugar'd words, to delude Gustus' taste,
And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase,
With smelling flowers of vernant rhetoric,
Limning and flashing it with various dyes
To draw proud Visus to me by the eyes.
Brewer. Lingua, Act i. sc. 1.

Yet still the dangerous dykes, from shot do them secure,
Where they [mallards, &c.] from flash to flash like the full epicure
Waft, as they lov'd to change their diet every meal.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

And so, whilst I cast on thy funeral pile
The crown of bays, O let it crack awhile,
And spit disdain, till the devouring flashes
Suck all the moisture up, then turn to ashes.
Carew. An Elegy upon the Death of Dr. Donne.

Some books also may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others: but that would be, onely in the lesse important arguments, and the meaner sort of books: else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things.—Bacon. Ess. Of Studies.

At last, in a good hour, we are come to his farewel, which is to be a concluding taste of his jabberment in law, the flashiest and the fustiest that ever corrupted in such an unswill'd hogshead.—Milton. Colasterion.

But sometimes so shaken be these shell-fishes with the feare of flashie lightenings, that they become emptie or bring forth feble young ones, or at leastwise by some abortive defects they slip and run on.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 229

So much the greater is their sinne, that seek to flash out these flashings.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. i. c. 5.

The arguments of the Grecian, drawn from reason, work themselves into your understanding, and make a deep and lasting impression in your mind; those of the Roman, drawn from wit, flash immediately on your imagination, but leave no durable effect.—Dryden. The Life of Plutarch.

Wit shoots in vain its momentary fires,
The meteor drops, and in a flash expires.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv

Hart. Yet it is sometimes too late with some of your young, termagant, flashy sinners—you have all the guilt of the intention, and none of the pleasure of the practice
Congreve. The Old Bachelor, Act i.

From amidst this thick darkness the lightnings, those swift executioners of divine vengeance, shall flash abroad over the earth, while ten thousand thunders, rolling from the glorious God that maketh them shall at once utter their tremendous voices; as it is written again in the same book of Psalms; "Our God shall come and shall not keep silence."—Horne. Works, vol. v. Dis. 5

Now flashing wide, now glancing as in play,
Swift beyond thought the lightnings pass away.
Cowper. Truth

Those sallies of jollity in the house of feasting are often forced from a troubled mind; like flashes from the black cloud, which, after a momentary effulgence, are succeeded by thicker darkness.—Blair, vol. ii. Ser. 13.

At the same moment that he asserts the high bailiff was intimidated [Lord Mulgrave] pronounces a flashy panegyric upon the firmness and intrepidity of the very man he affirms to be thus terrified.
Fox. Speech. Westminster Scrutiny, June 8, 1784.

The very attempt towards pleasing every body, discovers a temper always flashy, and often false and insincere.
Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election.

FLASK. }
FLA'SKET. } A. S. Flaxa; Ger. Flasche; It. Fiasco; Sp. Flasco, fiasco. See FLAGON.

Ray calls a flasket, a bottle made in fashion of a barrel; and Grose, flasket, a long, shallow basket.

This sulphurous flask, therefore, dyes in his own smok: onely leaving an hatefull stench behind.
Bp Hall. Cont. Hezekiah & Senacherib.

Where also there is one Canephoros, to wit, a virgin bearing upon her head a flasket of holy reliques, all of Scopas his making.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 5.

They [good qualities] have all a tang of his testy humour, that shows itself in all he says and does: like a drop of oil left in a flask of wine, in every glass you taste it.
Southerne. The Maid's Last Prayer, Act ii. sc. 1.

The argument proves too much, for, by the same argument, a flask of air would have more intrinsic value than all the rest put together; since air is absolutely necessary to support life; which none of the rest are.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 186.

The Fauns through every furrow shot
To load their flaskets with the fruit.—Parnell. Bacchus.

FLAT, v.
FLAT, n.
FLAT, adj.
FLA'TLY.
FLA'TNESS.
FLA'TTEN, v.
FLA'TTISH.

Dut. Plat; Ger. Flach; Fr. Plat; It. Piatto; Gr. Πλατυς, platus, piatto, (Menage.)

Flat, is (by usage at least) opposed to round; and thus, having a plane superficies; level, extended, prostrate; and also, to eminent or elevated, or projecting; and thus, low, depressed, dejected, sunk;—also, to deep; and thus, shallow.

(Met.) 1. Downright, positive.

2. Depressed or dejected, spiritless, inanimate, lifeless, tasteless, dull, stupid. A flat, one easily gulled or deluded.

And betimes in the morning we were altogether runne and folded in amongst flats and sands, amongst which we found shoale and deepe in euery three or foure shipes length, after we began to sound.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 156.

Towards the northe lieth a nacion called Nasamons, who inhabitting vpon a flatte shore, be accustomed to liue on spoiles of the sea, & lye alwayes in a wayte vpon the coast to spoyle such ships as suffer wreck.
Brende. Quintius Curtius, fol. 71.

They fell downe flatte on theyr faces before the throne.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

Wherfore they stood most in doubt of the Duke of Parma his small and flat-bottomed ships.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 596.

Their houses are flat-roofed and built of lime and stone.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 391.

When like a Phœbean champion, she [Vertue] hath routed the army of her enemies, flatted their strongest forts, brought the mightiest of her foes, in a chained subjection, to humour the motions of her thronged chariot, and be the gaze of the abusive world.—Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 4.

It may be apprehended that the retrenchment of these pleasant libertics, may flat and dead the taste of conversation.—Mountagus. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 12. s. 3.

After this the Britains drew back toward the mouth of the Thames, and acquainted with those places, cross'd over; where the Romans following them through bogs and dangerous flats, hazarded the loss of all.
Milton. History of England, b. ii.

This is monte potiri, to get the hill. For no perfect discovery can be made upon a flat or a levell.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Ant. What a blow was there given!
Seb. And it had not falne flat long.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act ii. sc. 2.

Isab. That in the captaine's but a chollericke word,
Which in the souldier is flat blasphemie.
Id. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 2.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear vs Lorenzo, Launcelot and I are out, he tells me flatly there is no mercy for me in heauen, because I am a Jew's daughter.
Id. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— Vnjust thou saist,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free,
And equal over equals to let reigne,
One over all with unsucceeded power.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Wherof to help those many infirmities, which he reckons up, rudeness, impertinency, flatness, and the like, we have a remedy of God's finding out, which is not Liturgy, but his own free spirit.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

Howbeit, wonderful it remaineth still, how it should become a globe, considering so great flatnesse of plaines and seas.—Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 65.

Leo. The prince has been upon him,
What a flatten face he has now? it takes, believe it;
How like an ass he looks.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act iii. sc. 5.

Just as in our streets, when the people stay
To see the prince and so fill up the way
That weesels scarce could passe, whē she comes nere
They throng, and cleave up, and a passage cleare,
As if for that time their round bodies flatned were.
Donne. The Progresse of the Soule, s. 1. v. 14.

Whilst they, sir, to relieve him in the fable,
Make their loose comments upon every word,
Gesture, or look, I use; mock me all over;
From my flat cap unto my shining shoes.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act ii. sc. 1

——— A sharp pointed hat,
(Now that you see the gallants all flat-headed,)
Appears not so ridiculous, as a yonker,
Without a love-intrigue. Dryby. Elvira, Act iii.

After which commeth the broad bit of the plough sheare indeed, lying flat wise, and in earing casteth up all before it, and clenseth the furrow.—Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 18.

——— Still over head
The mingling tempest weaves its gloom, and still
The deluge deepens: till the fields around
Lie sunk, and flatted, in the sordid wave.—Thomson. Aut.

It is true, he runs into a flat of thought, sometimes for a hundred lines together, but it is when he has got into a track of Scripture.—Dryden. Origin and Progress of Satire.

To serve all times he could distinctions coin,
And with great ease flat contradictions join.
Id. Tarquin & Tullia.

A real presence all her sons allow,
And yet 'tis flat idolatry to bow,
Because the Godhead's there they know not how.
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

He was so far from spreading copies of his explanation, at taking the oath, that he flatly refused to give a kind, and discreet friend, then in his chamber, a copy of it, lest it might go abroad.—State Trials, an. 1681. Earl of Argyle.

The poet could not keep up his narration all along in the grandeur and magnificence of an heroic style. he has here sunk into the flatness of prose.
Addison. Notes on Ovid. Metam. b. iii.

These worms are small and black, lodging in a greyish shell, they have large flattish heads, a large mouth, with four black jaws.—Denham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 11. N. 22.

The pods (cocos and cocō) which seldom contain less than thirty nuts of the size of a flatted olive, grow upon the stem and principal branches.—Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

This Saxon style begins to be defined by flat and round arches, by some undulating zigzags on certain old fabricks, and by a very few other characteristics, all evidences of barbarous and ignorant times.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 5.

But it is certain, from Cicero's account, that he was admitted to an audience; and when he began to press, and even supplicate him in a manner the most affecting, that Pompey flatly refused to help him.
Middleton. The Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 4.

The truth is, that many minds are not so indisposed to any thing which can be offered to them, as they are to the flatness of being content with common reasons: and what is most to be lamented, minds conscious of superiority are the most liable to this repugnancy.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

The ordinary shape of the fish's eye being in a much larger degree convex than that of land-animals, a corresponding difference attends its muscular conformation, viz that it is throughout calculated for flattening the eye.—Id. Ib. c. 3.

Others say that this event happened in the palace of the Cardinal de Medici, Torreggiano being jealous of the superior honours paid to Michael Angelo, whose nose was flattened by the blow.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

Whilst our heroes from home
For laurels thus roam,
Should the flat-bottom'd boats but appear,
Our militia shall show
No wooden-shoed foe
Can with freeman in battle compare.
P. Whitehead. An Occasional Song.

FLA'TIVE.
FLA'TULENCY.
FLA'TULENT.
FLATUO'SITY.
FLA'TUOUS.
FLA'TUS.

Lat. Flare, to blow, which, with the Gr. Φλαω, Vossius thinks—a sono factum.

That can or may blow; blowing, windy, swollen with wind, puffy, vain.

Gus. Eat not too many of these apples, they be very flative.
Brewer. Lingua, Act iv. sc. 17.

The pure, light, and piercing substance of the fire, being now converted into lightning, is gone and passed away; but the more weighty, gross, and flatulent part remaining behind, enwrapped within the cloud, altereth and taketh quite the coldnesse away, and drinketh up the moisture, making it more flatuous and windy.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 577.

We see also that corn newly inned, and all fruits of trees presently upon their gathering, are plump, full and swelled again, untill such time as they have exhaled forth all that is flatuous, and breathed out the crudities thereof.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 642

The cause is for that rhubarb is a medicine which the stomack in a small quantity doth digest and overcome, being not flatuous or loathsome.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. s. 44

Chrysippus writeth, that it is a soveraigne medicine for flatuosities, and such as be oppressed with melancholy.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 9.

In this disease it were better for to represse the said windinesse and flatuositie.—Id. Ib. b. xxviii. c. 19.

The fourth cause is flatuosity: for wind stirred moveth to expell.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 39.

I was assailed by that splenetic passion which a country good fellow that had been a piece of a grammarian meant, when he said he was sick of the flatus, and the other hard word, for hypochondriacus stuck in his teeth.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 467

The most sure sign of a deficient perspiration is flatulency or wind.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 5.

Vegetables abound more with aerial particles than animal substances, and therefore are more flatulent.—Id. Ib. c. 6.

His story is not so pleasing as Ariosto's; he is too flatulent sometimes, and sometimes too dry.
Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

The painfull and comfortless sensations produced by flatulencies and indigestions, in hypochondriac temperaments, have sometimes been mistaken for an anxious state of mind; and the medicines which relieve the one will administer comfort to the other.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 2.

FLA'TTER, v.
FLA'TTERER.
FLA'TTERING.
FLA'TTERINGLY.
FLA'TTERY.

Dut. Fletsen, flatteren; Fr. Flater; which Menage, supported by various preceding etymologists, derives from Flatare, a frequentative of flo, flare, to blow. Flare, flatum, flatare, flater. Junius thinks that it may have been formed from flat, because it is peculiar to flatterers, planâ explicatâque manu (with a flat hand) demulcere caput aut genas eorum, (or, according to the common phrase, to smoothen down those) into whose favour they would insinuate themselves. The Lat. Palpare is to touch or stroke gently and softly, and thus, to caress, to flatter; and palpum, a gentle stroke; flattery. According to the etymology of Menage,—

To breathe or whisper (sc.) praise or pleasing words into the ear;—(of Junius) to smoothen or soften down, to soothe or lull, to please or gratify, (sc.) by praise or pleasing words, or actions.

Holland has coined the n. Flatteress, and Boyle the ad. Flatterously.

For thees frerere flaterede me. while he fond me riche.
Piers Ploughman, p. 202.

Rygt so flaterere and foles. aren the fend procuratores.
Entysen men thorgh here tales. to synne and to harlotrie
Id. p. 114.

Fortune gan flaterie thenne. thaym fewe that were alyve.
Id. p. 397.

O sodeu hap, O thou fortune unstable
Like to the scorpion so deceivable,
That flatrest with thy hed whan thou wolt sting.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9933.

Thou shalt eke eschue the conceilling of all flatterers, swiche as enforcen hem rather to preisen youre persone by flaterie, than for to tell you the sothfastnesse of thinges.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

And thus with fained flattering and japes,
He made the persone, and the peple, his apes.
Id. The Prologue, v. 707.

Som saiden, that we ben in herte most esed
Whan that we ben yflatered and ypreised:
He goth ful nigh the sothe, I wol not lie;
A man shal win us best with flaterie.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6514.

The kynde flatterour can not loue,
But for to bryng hym selfe aboue,
For howe that euer his maister fare,
So that hymself stonde out of care,
Him retcheth nought. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

And thus they werchen treble sinne,
That ben flatours about a kynge. Id. Ib.

There might be no werse thynge
About a kynges regalie,
Than is the vice of flaterie. Id. Ib.

The vaine excesse of flattering fortunes giftes,
Enuenometh the minde with vanitye,
And beates the restelesse braine with endlesse driftes,
To staye the staffe of worldly dignitie.
Gascoigne. Memories.

He likeneth God to worldly tyrauntes, at whom no man may come, saue a few flatterers whiche minister vnto them all voluptuousness, & serue their lustes at all pointes.
Tyndall. Workes, p 297.

That is to saye, peruerse and cursed folkes to whom euery thynge well done is odyous and hatefull, namely, whan they see any person that hath dispyed wycked conuersacion, worldly gloses or flatterynges; and by holy penaunce is become a newe man.—Fisher. The Seven Psalmes, Ps. 38.

This pestilēt vermine God hath suffred for the wyckednesse of his people, first flatteringly to crepe, to dissemble, glose, and speake fayre, promysynge prosperitie, victorie, long life, and heauen, after this departinge
Bale. Image, pt. i.

Johannes Casa being yet a younge springall before he came to be a clerke and longe before he was a bishop or legate, made certaine amorouse sonnettes in Italian rime folowinge the Italian poete Petrarcha, to whiche kinde of exercise the good wittes of Italy in youth are much giuen and without naminge any persone, flatteringly smoothed that heinous facte rather then praised.—Hardinge, in Jewell. Def. p. 382.

And [Darius] puffed vp with the vanitie, & flattery of the greate mē which were about him, turned to Charidemus of Athens an expert man of warre (which for the displeasure that Alexander did beare him, was banished the country,) & asked him if he thought not that copanye sufficient to ouerthrowe the Macedones.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 21.

This is it that giveth unto a flatterer that large field, under pretence of friendship where he hath a fort (as it were) commodiously seated, and with the vantage to assail and endammage us, and that is, self love; whereby every man being the first and greatest flatterer of himself, he can be very well content to admit a stranger to come neere and flatter him, namely, when he thinketh and is well willing withall to witness with him, and to confirme that good self conceit and opinion of his own —Holland. Plutarch, p. 69.

With flattering wordes he sweetly wooed her,
And offered faire guiftes t' allure her sight;
But she both offers and the offerer
Despyde, and all the fawning of a flatterer.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

There is no such flatterer, as is a man's selfe: and there is no such remedy, against flatterie of a man's selfe, as the libertie of a friend.—Bacon. Ess. Of Friendship.

Those women who in times past were called in Cypres, Colacides, i. e. flatteresses.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 71.

Flattery is a fine picklock of tender eares, especially of those, whom fortune hath borne high upon their wings, that submit their dignity and authority to it, by a soothing of themselves.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

The publick having once suffered 'em [authors] to take the ascendent, they become, like flattered princes, impatient of contradiction or advice.
Shaftesbury. Miscell. Refl. misc. 5. c. 1.

The person that hath the sheep's blood in his veins, is still very well, and like to continue so. If we durst believe himself, who is flatterously given, he is much better than he was before, as he tells us in a later account he brought into the society.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 253.

We may be hypocrites to others and base flatterers, but our consciences whenever they are throughly awakened are always sincere and deal truly with us, and speak to us as they think.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 38.

Let these considerations prevail with us always to live, not with regard to the opinion of others, which may be grounded upon mistake, or may not indeed be their own opinion, but their flattery; but with regard to the judgment of our own conscience, which though it may sometimes be mistaken, can never be bribed and corrupted.—Id. Ib.

On the rising of the Carews in Devonshire, who were flattered with the hopes of this match, the princess [Elizabeth] and he [the last Earl of Devonshire] were committed to the Tower, and accused by Wyat as his accomplices.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 6.

Here Cumberland 'lies, having acted his parts,
The Terence of England, the mender of hearts;
A flattering painter, who made it his care,
To draw men as they ought to be, not as they are.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

He [Lord Rockingham] had flatteringly told me that he was so perfectly satisfied with my public conduct, that he should be glad of an opportunity of serving the country in serving me.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 149.

——— Wouldst thou then exchange
Those heart-ennobling sorrows for the lot
Of him who sits amid the gaudy herd
Of silent flatterers bending to his nod.
Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. iii.

Flattery, if its operation be nearly examined, will be found to owe its acceptance, not to our ignorance, but knowledge of our failures, and to delight us rather as it consoles our wants than displays our possessions —Rambler, No. 155.

FLAUNT, v. }
FLAUNT, n. } In Cotgrave, in v. Goryiaser, but (not in our lexicographers, Minshew, Skinner, or Junius.) It is probably from Fle-an, to flee or flie. Fle-aned, flean'd, fleant, flant or flaunt.

To move with an airy, flying motion; in a gaudy, giddy, showy, ostentatious or daring manner.

Yield me thy flaunting hood,
shake off those bells of thine,
Such checking bussards yll deserves
or bell or hood so fine
Turbervile. To his Friend that refused him, &c.

Lod. How she goes flaunting too' she must have a Feather in her head, and a cork in her heel.
Davenport. The City Night-cap, Act ii. sc. 1.

When's understanding wav'd in a flaunting feather, and his best contemplation look'd no further than a new-fashion'd doublet.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act v. sc. 1.

Dost thou come hither with thy flourishes.
Thy flaunts, and faces to abuse men's manners?
Id. The False One, Act iii. sc 3.

Mor. Pray tell me,
Is this stern woman still upon the flaunt
Of bold defiance? Id. The Tamer Tamed, Act ii. sc. 2.

Those gaudy garish flowers you choose,
In which our nymphs are flaunting,
Which they at feast, and bridals use,
The sight and smell enchanting.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6.

I never grudg'd, whate'er my foes report,
Your flaunting fortune in the Lion's court.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. iii.

There, flaunting in immortal bloom,
The musk-rose scents the verdant bloom.
Fenton. Secundus Bas. 2.

Few earthly things found favour in his sight
Save concubines and carnal companie,
And flaunting wassailers of high and low degree.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1 s. 2.

FLA'VOUR, v. }
FLA'VOUR, n. }
FLA'VOROUS. } Not in our early lexicographers. Perhaps from the "Fr. Flairer, — to scent, smell; also, to perfume, cast a smell, yield a savour, breathe out a scent," Cotgrave. Also applied to the taste.

——— Nor did the dancing ruby
Sparkling, out pour'd, the flavor, or the smell,
Or taste that cheers the hearts of Gods or men,
Allure thee from the cool chrystalline stream.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Wine wets the wit, improves its native force,
And gives a pleasant flavour to discourse.
Pomfret. The Choice.

Temper'd in this, the Nymph of form divine
Pours a large portion of the Pramnian vine;
With goat's milk cheese a flavorous taste bestows,
And last with flour the smiling surface strowes.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

There casks of wine in rows adorn'd the dome
(Pure flavorous wine, by Gods in bounty given,
And worthy to exalt the feasts of heaven.)
Id. Ib. Odyssey, b. ii.

Had there been a taste in water, be it what it might, it would have infected every thing we ate or drank with an importunate repetition of the same flavour.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 21.

And see, my friends, this garden's little bound,
No small the wants of nature, well supplies
Our board with plenty; roots or wholesome pulse
Or herbs, or flavour'd fruits.—Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 2.

The fruit produced by the righteous, through grace, copious, fair, and well flavoured, like that which once grew upon the tree of life, invites all beholders to come and partake, with its owner, of that glory and immortality with which it shall one day be crowned.
Horne. Works, vol. iv. Dis. 3.

FLA'VOUS. Lat. Flavus, yellow, from the Gr. Φλεγ-ειν, to burn.

The membrane itself is somewhat of a flavous colour, and tends more towards that of gold, than any other part whatsoever.—Smith. Portraiture of Old Age, (1666.)

FLAW. Lat. Flavus, yellow.

And lilly forhed had this creature
With liuelish browes, flawe of colour pure,
Betwene the which, was meane disseuerance
From euery browe, to shew a distance.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

FLAW, v. }
FLAW, n. }
FLA'WLESS. } Junius, from the Gr. Φλα-ειν, to break or bruise; Skinner.—from A.S. Fleah, albugo, a white spot in the eye. Tooke.—that it is the past part. of the A.S. verb Flean, to flay, (qv.) In Hackluyt, Drayton, &c. it is applied to a blast, a gust, from the Lat. Flare, to blow, say some etymologists.

Any thing flayed or excoriated; and thus, a defect, a defeazance, imperfection, fault, a weakness. Sods, flayed or stripped, from the top or surface of the earth, are in the North called flaws. And further,—

Any thing flayed, stript, rent, or torn off; a rent;—a rush, a gust, a blast, a torrent, a tumult, a storm.

He would maintaine my right
and further aye my cause,
And bannish all dispaire that grewe
by frowarde fortune's flawes.
Turbervile. The Louer to Cupid for Mercie.

Passing vp a very large riuer, a great flaw of winde tooke me whereby wee were constrained to seeke succour for that night.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 105.

It is a cape subiect much to flawes, by reason it is a very hie land.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 586.

——— As I question'd
His tenure in particulars, he answer'd,
My worship needed not to flaw his right,
For if the humour held him, he could make
A jointure to my over-living niece,
Without oppression.—Ford. The Lady's Trial, Act ii. sc 2

You shall, in faith, my scirvie baboon Don,
Bee curried, claw'd, and flaw'd, and taw'd, indeed.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act iv. sc 3

When with his folk but few, not passing two or three,
Put forth again to sea, where after many a flaw,
Such as before themselves, scarce mortal ever saw.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 19.

And when at length her flagging pinion fails,
Panting she hangs upon the rattling sails,
And being forc'd to loose her hold with pain,
Yet beaten off, she straight lights on again,
And toss'd with flaws, with storms, with wind, with weather,
Yet still departing thence, still turneth thither.
Id. Surrey to Lady Geraldine.

When as it could not be found how hardness of heart should be lessened by liberty of divorce, a fancy was devised to hide the flaw, by commenting that divorce was permitted only for the help of wives.
Milton. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii. c. 15

The Bishop of the Diocese, who was the founder of the Priory in succession, had not given his consent to the translation of the said Priory into a Dean and Chapter which flaw afterwards caused great trouble to this church under Queen Elizabeth.—Strype Memorials. Edw. VI. an 1547.

But the diamond being fair and flawless, and so thick, that the merchant told me it would be too deep for one ring, and therefore that he meant to split it into two: I had it weighed, and found it to amount to ten carats (or 40 grains.)—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p 577.

No, the decree was just and without flaw:
And he, that made, had right to make, the law;
His sov'reign pow'r and pleasure unrestrain'd,
The wrong was his who wrongfully complained.
Cowper. Hope.

FLAWN. Fr. Flans; Ger. Flader; Dut. Vlaede. Of unknown etymology. Cotgrave says,—Flans;—flawns, custards, egg-pies.

With delitie flaunes brode and flat.
Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

Fall to your cheese-cakes, curds and clouted cream,
Your fools, your flawns.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 2.

FLAX. }
FLA'XED. }
FLA'XEN. }
FLA'XY. } A. S. Fleax; Dut. Vlas, vlasch; Ger. Flachs. Junius, from Φλα-ειν, to beat or bruise. Skinner, from Lat. Villus. Wachter, from Πλεκ-ειν, to weave, or πλοκος, ceesaries.

Wyves and widoes, wool and flax spynneth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 128

A bresid reed he schal not breke, and he schal not quench smokynge flax til he caste out doom to victorie.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 12.

A brosed reede shall he not brake, and flaxe that begynneth to burne, he shall not quenche tyll he send forth iudgement vnto victorye.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

This pardoner had here as yelwe as wex,
But smooth it hong, as doth a strike of flax
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 679.

For (cosin) it is a thing right hard, to touch pitch, & neuer fyle ye fingers, to put flaxe vnto fyre, & yet kepe thē fro burning.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1200.

Ubald. I am so dry
I have not spittle enough to wet my fingers
When I draw my flax from my distaff.
Massinger. The Picture, Act v. sc. 1.

But to returne againe to our flax of Italie, that which groweth in the Peligmans country, is at this day in great account and request; howbeit, none use it but the fullers. There is not a whiter flax to be found, and indeed resembling wooll nearer than this flax.

Holland. Plinie, b xix. c. 1.

She as the learned'st maide was chose by them,
(Her flaxed hair crown'd with an anadem)
To judge who best deserv'd, for she could fit
The height of praise unto the height of wit.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

The nectar which the Gods do troll,
Is frozen i'th celestial bowl;
And the cup-bearer, Ganimede,
Has capp'd his frizzled flax head. Cotton. Winter.

Her flaxen haire, insnaring all beholders,
She next permits to wave about her shoulders.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

But of all others, the toile made of cumes, flaxen cords, are so strong, that the wild bore falling into it will be caught and no maruaile, for these kind of nets will checke the very edge of a sword or such like weapon.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 1.

The four colours signify these four virtues. The flaxey, having whiteness, appertains to temperance, because it makes candidam et mundam animam.

Sir M. Sandys. Essays, (1634.) p. 16.

——— [She] deserues a name
As ranke as any flax wench, that puts to
Before her troth-plite.

Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

She seeketh wooll and flax, and worketh willingly with her handa.—Bible. Proverbs, xxxi. 13.

Inferior diets had Holland or flaxen table-cloths, but no napkins.

Parl. Hist. 12 Char. II. Prov. for the King's Household.

Adown the shoulders of the heavenly fair
In easy ringlets flow'd her flaxen hair;
And with a golden comb, in matchless grace
She taught each lock its most becoming place.

Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. The Argonautics, b. iii.

They were never so stupid as not to understand that human laws, like a thread of flax before a flame, vanish and disappear before popular commotions.

Warburton, vol. x. Ser. 31.

——— Our happy swains
Behold arising, in their fattening flocks,
A double wealth; more rich than Belgium's boast,
Who tends the culture of the flaxen reed.

Dyer. The Fleece, b iii.

FLAY, or FLEA. FLA'YER. } A. S. Flean, excoriare, deglubere, to fley, to pull, to pull off the skin or rind, (Somner.) Dut. Vlaen, vlaeghen.

To strip, pull, rend or tear off—the rind, skin, or other superficial coating.

And moreouer the wretched swollen membres that they shewe thurgh disguising, indeparting of hir hosen in white and rede, seemeth that half hire shameful privee members were flaine.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

There dyd I see such sightes, as yet my heart do pricke,
I saw the noble Bragandine, when he was fley'd quicke.

Gascoigne. A Deuise of a Maske.

When his friend dieth, he killeth his best horse, and hauing flayed off his skinne hee carieth it on high vpon a long pole before the corpse to the place of buriall.

Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 490.

Hus. Why, he can have no more of us than our skins.
And some of them want but flaying.

Anonymous. A Yorkshire Tragedy, Act i. sc. 3.

A prince is the pastor of the people. Hee ought to sheere, not to flea his sheepe; to take their fleeces, not their fels.

B Jonson. Discoveries.

Mos. No, sir, nor their fees
Hee cannot brook: hee sayes, they (physicians) flay a man,
Before they kill him. Id. The Fox, Act i. sc. 4.

Euery fox must yeeld his owne skin and haires to the flayer.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ii. c. 13, s. 1.

Could not the whipping post prevail,
With all its rhetoric, nor the gaol,
To keep from flaying scourge thy skin
And ancle free from iron gin. Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

It will be hereafter with a wicked man, when he is punished for his sins, as it was with Apollodorus, when he dreamed that he was flayed and boyled by the Scythians, and his heart spoke to him out of the caldron, Ἐγώ σοι τούτων αἴτιος.—I am the cause of these thy sufferings.

Bp. Horne. Essays and Thoughts on several Occasions.

FLEA. FLEA-BITE. FLEA-BI'TING, n. } A. S. Fleah; Dut. Vloy, vloo; Ger. Floh; which Skinner, Junius, and Wachter think is so called from the nimbleness of its flight from the fingers of those who would catch it. A. S. Flean; Ger. Fliehen, to fly. It is more probably from the A. S. Flean, to flea or flay; from the effect of its bite upon the skin.

Flea-bite,—Any trifling wound or pain; any thing minute or trifling.

And after they bee washed, it was not lawfull for any man or woman to kill either flea or lowse with their handes, neither yet to take them with their nailes, vntill they haue accomplished their vowed orations in the mountayne of pardons abouesayd.—Hackluyt Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 207.

You haue heard a whole court role of ribaudrie, and yet all these are but flea-bitings in respect and comparison of that, which I shall now shew you.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p 128.

But if you let them sucke their fill, and to go away of themselues, then they doe no other hurt, but leaue behinde them a red spot somewhat bigger then a flea-biting

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 475.

Marke but this flea, and marke in this
How little that which thou deny'st me, is;
It suck'd me first, and now sucks thee,
And in this flea our two blouds mingled be.

Donne. The Flea.

When Cleomenes had heard their answer, he told them they had done him great wrong; for they should have advertised him before he had taken his journey, and not now when he was almost hard at their gates, to send him back again with a flea in his ear.—North. Plutarch, p. 673.

She was continually exercised with the affliction of a weak body, and of a wounded spirit, the agonies whereof she would oft recount with much passion, professing that the greatest bodily sicknesses were but flea-bites to those scorpions.—Bp. Hall. Specialties of his Life.

You have acted certain murders here in Rome
Bloody and full of horrour.
Lod. 'Las they were flea-bitings.

Webster. The White Devil, Act i.

Thus spoke the proud hussey and view'd me all round
With an eye of disdain, and thrice spit on the ground;
Then mimick'd my voice with satyrical sneer,
And sent me away with a flea in my ear.

Fawkes. Moschus, Idyl. 9.

Winchester replied to this, with seemingly much satisfaction, how himself was arrived at that haven of quietness without loss of any notable tackle, as the mariners say, which (he said) was a great matter as the winds had blown; and with little flea-biting conveyed to an easy estate.

Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1555.

We wonder at the ingenuity displayed in harnessing a flea to a microscopic chariot, but the genius of the artist we do not admire, because it exerts itself in nothing that can be called either great or good; and because, though at first view it may yield a slight gratification, one is rather vexed than pleased to think that so much skill and time should be thrown away upon such a trifle.

Beattie. Elements of Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5.

FLEAK, or FLAKE. } See FLAKE. An occasional gate or hurdle, set up in a gap. North.—Grose.

A rack for bacon, &c. York.—Pegge. Probably both so called because made of flakes of wood.

FLEAM. Dut. Vlieme; Fr. Flammette, or A. S. Fla, an arrow. Skinner says, from the Gr. and Lat. Phlebotomum, Cotgrave explains—

A kind of launcet, pointed like a broad arrowy head, wherewith chirurgeons use to open a vein.

FLEAR, or FLEER, v. FLEAR, n. FLE'ARER. FLE'ARING, n. } Junius thinks of kin to the A. S. Fleared-ian, nugari; fleard, nugæ, toyes, trifles. Skinner, that it is from the verb to leer, (f prefixed.) Mr. Brocket has "Flire, to laugh, or rather to have a countenance expressive of laughter without laughing out. Isl. Flyra, subridere." And Dr. Jamieson, to Flyre. Isl. Flyra, subridere, sæpius ridere; Su. G. Flir-a, oculis petulanter ludere. So also Serenius. But the origin of the word and its meaning, consequently, are still unknown. See FLIRT.

To express mockery or scorn; also, assumed civility.

The second man was, fleering Flattery
Brethren by like, or very near of kin,
Then followed them Detraction and Deceite.

Gascoigne. The Steel Glas.

Ama. I was fain to drive him like a sheep before me,
I blush to think how people fleer'd, and scorn'd me.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Spanish Curate, Act iv. sc. 7.

——— I shall have
Another sword, I shall, ye fleering puppy.

Id. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 5.

Thus was Aristides therefore justly honoured, praised, and esteemed above all others for his just imposition of taxes, saving only of Themistocles, who went up and down fleering at the matter, saying it was no meet praise for an honest man, but rather for a coffer well barr'd with iron, where a man might safely lay up his gold and silver.

North. Plutarch, p. 285

Like a cunning curtizan, that dallies the ruffian to undoe himself; and then pays him with a fleer, and scorn.

Feltham, pt. i. Resolve 25.

Pas Democritus, thou ancient fleerer,
How I miss thy laugh, and ha' since.
Bas. There you nam'd the famous jeerer,
That ever jeer'd in Rome, or Athens

Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act v. sc. 1.

———Your whootings and your clamours,
Your private whispers, and your broad fleerings.

Id. Philaster, Act ii. sc. 1

Says then the fleering spark, with courteous grin,
By which he drew his infant cullies in;
"Nothing more easy; did you never see
How in a swarm, bees, hanging bee by bee,
Make a long sort of rope below the tree."

King. Hold Fast Below.

I pass now where you fleer and laugh,
Cause I call Dan my better half!
Oh there you think you have me safe!
But hold, sir!

Swift. A Rejoinder by the Dean to Jackson's Name.

FLECK, v. FLE'CKER. } Skinner says, Flecked, maculatus, (spotted,) from Ger. Fleck; Sw. Fleck, a spot. It is probably no other than flaked, i. e. having flakes, (sc.) of various colours. Flekering is, flickering, (qv.)

To mark or cover with broad spots; to variegate with spots.

——— And wonderful fowles
With fleckede fetthers.—Piers Ploukman, p. 222.

He was al coltish, full of ragerie,
And full of jargon, as a flecked pie.

Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9522

About the peytrel stood the fome full hie
He was of fome as flecked as a pie.

Id. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,033.

A rose gerlond freash, and wel smelling,
Above hire hed hire doves fleckering.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1964.

For though the friendly wordes therein were good,
Yet many a thought they moued in his moode,
As well appeared by his flecked cheeks,
Nowe chaunge redde, now pale and greene as leekes.

Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

Tur. Brave lords, our conquests will be honourable,
Because we have to deal with honoured foes;
Our pikes stand to receive you like a wood,
We'll fleck our white steeds in your Christian blood.

Heywood. The Four Apprentices of London.

It riddeth freckles, moles, and generally any spots or flecks that marre the beautie or favour.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 8.

The grease of a swan is commended both for to cleanse the skin of the face from all flecks and freckles, and also to take away wrinkles.—Id. Ib. b. xxx. c. 4.

——— His ears and legs
Flecki here and there, in gay enamell'd pride,
Rival the speckled pard. Somervile. The Chase.

FLEDGE, v. FLEDGE, adj. } Dut. Fledderen; Ger. Fliegen, volare, to fly; and consequentially, Plumescere, to be or become feathered or able to fly.

To feather; to clothe or cover with feathers.

Whose tender pinions, scarcely fledg'd in show,
Could make his way with whitest swans in Po.

Browne. Brooke and Davis to Browne.

Ant. These are poore men,
(Which have got little in your service,) vow
To take your fortune; but your wisest buntings,
Now they are fledg'd, are gone.

Webster. The Duchess of Malfy, Act iii. sc. 5.

Die. You may do so: your sprightly love has wings,
And 's ever fledge; 'tis moulting time with mine.

Tuke. The Adventures of Five Hours, Act iii.

This she doeth so long, until the young cuckow being ones fledge and readie to flie abroad, is so bold as to seize upon the old titling and to eat her up that hatched her.

Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 9.

Some unhatch'd, some form'd in part,
Lie close nestling at my heart,
Chirping loud; their ceaseless noise
All my golden peace destroys:
Some, quite fledg'd and fully grown,
Nurse the younglings as their own.

Fawkes. Anacreon, Ode 33.

——— The bents
And coarser grass, upspearing o'er the rest,
Of late unsightly and unseen, now shine
Conspicuous, and in bright apparel clad,
And, fledg'd with icy feathers, nod superb.
Cowper. Task, b. v.

FLEE, v. FLE'ER. FLE'EING, n. } A. S. Fle-an, (see to FLY,) fugere, evadere, to flee, to runne away, to avoid, to escape from, (Somner.)

To flee, and to fly, are by usage distinguished; the latter implying the motion of wings; the former, not.

To run away quickly, speedily, with the swiftness of flight; to go or pass away swiftly.

So that Hengist bigan atte laste to fle.
R. Gloucester, p. 122.

Tho Guanwaur, the luther quene, hurde of thys cas,
Fram Lucrwick to Carleon heo flew myd quyc pas.
Id. p. 221.

Malcolme, whan he it herd, fled for ferd
R. Brunne, p 88.

Alle fledden for fere, and flowen in to hernes
Save Mede that Mayde. Piers Ploughmen, p. 36.

But whanne ye schulen se the abomynacioun of discoumfort stondinge where it owith not, he that redith undirstonde, thanne thei that ben in Jude flee into hillis.
Wiclif Mark, c. 13.

Moreouer when ye see the abhomynacion that betokeneth desolacyon wherof is spoké by Daniel the Prophet, stand where it ought not, let hym that readeth vnderstand. Then let them that be in Jury flé to the mountaynes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Preye ye that youre fleyng be not maad in wynter, or in the Sabotis, for then schal be greet tribulacioun what manere hath not be fro the bigynnyng of the world til now, neither schal be mad.—Wiclif Matthew, c. 24.

Sore after the midnight, Palamon
By helping of a frend brake his prison,
And fleeth the cite faste as he may go.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1471.

For if I were of suche a fourme,
I sey than I would flee
In to hir chamber for to see
If any grace would falle.—Gower Con. A. b v.

Than Peter de Bovse had dyuers imaginations other to go forwarde, and to retourne agayne the fleers, and to fight with theyr enemies, who chased them, or elles to drawe to Courtray.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol i. c. 375.

Malef. Take not thy flight so soon immaculate spirit:
'Tis fled already.—How the innocent,
As in a gentle slumber, pass away.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act v. sc. 2.

He [Jonah] considering the ungratefulness of the message, and doubting what entertainment he was like to have from a proud, and (as he might think) an obdurate city, diverts another way, and flees toward Tarshish
Glanvill. Discourses, Ser. 9.

Which fear of the fleers away was no less ignominious, then if in sight they had turned their backs to the enemie.
Greneway Tacitus. Annales, p 227.

With flashing flames his ardent eyes were fill'd,
And in his hand a naked sword he held:
He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled.
Dryden. Theodore & Honoria.

These were thy charms, sweet village! sports like these,
With sweet succession, taught e'en toil to please;
These round thy bow'rs their cheerful influence shed;
These were thy charms—but all these charms are fled.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

The voice that made those sounds more sweet
Is hush'd and all their charms are fled:
And now their softest notes repeat
A dirge, an anthem, o'er the dead!—Byron. Stanzas.

FLEECE, v. FLEECE, n. FLE'ECER. FLE'ECING, n. FLE'ECY. } A. S. Fleos, fleese, flyse; Dut. Vlies; from the A. S. Fle-an; Dut. Vlaen, excoriare, deglubere, to flea or flay. Lat. Vell-us, from vell-ere, to pluck. In all places they use not to sheare sheepe; for the manner of plucking their fells continueth still in some countries, (Plin. b. viii. c. 48.)

To flea or flay, and to fleece (by usage) are distinguished: to flea is to strip off the hide or skin; to fleece, to strip off the wool only; and (met.) to strip or despoil of wealth or property.

To fleece is also, to cover with fleece, (sc.) of wool; and (met.) to form into, to overspread with, the resemblances of such fleeces.

And ful meny fayre fles [fleece] falsliche wasshe.
Piers Ploukman, p. 161.

Ne they could not medle the bright fleeces of the country of Sirenis, with the venime of Tiry, this to sain, they could not dien white fleces of Sirien coiltry, with the blood of a maner shelfish, that men finden in Tiry, with which blood menne dien purple.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. ii.

There was a shepe, as it was tolde,
The whiche his fleese bare all of golde,
And so the Goddes had it sette,
That it ne might awaie be fette.—Gower. Con. A. b v.

And thus was peace concluded, and our Englishmen or rather sheep, came home against winter, and left their fleeces behind them.—Tyndall. Workes, p 369.

Thou must retaine thy bookishe charge
In hansum ciuil sorte:
Not as the lambe vnder the arme
the sheppard doth reteine
Or drunken Pyrrhe beares her wool her fleeces filched gaine.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Vinnius Asella.

Those clergymen were not to be driven into the fold like sheep, as his simile runs, but to be driven out of the fold like wolves or thieves, where they sat fleecing those flocks which they never fed.—Milton. Answer to Eikon Basilike.

Fleec'd the flocks and bleating rose,
As plants. Id. Paradise Lost, b vii.

Had this [Lemster] our Colchos been unto the ancients known,
When honour was herself, and in her glory shown,
He then that did command the infantry of Greece,
Had only to our Isle adventur'd for this fleece
Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 7.

And though hee now present you with such wooll,
As from meere English flocks his Muse can pull,
He hopes when it is made up into cloath;
Not the most curious head here will be loath
To weare a hood of it; it being a fleece,
To match, or those of Sicily or Greece
B. Jonson. Prologue to the Sad Shepherd.

Not fleecers, but feeders; not butchers, but shepherds
Huntley, (i. e.) Prynne. Brev of the Prel. (1637.) p. 262.

They pray us that it would please us to let them still haie us, and worry us with their band dogs and pursevants, and that it would please the Parliament that they may yet have the whipping, fleecing, and fleaing of us in their diabolical courts.—Milton. Of Reformation in England, b. ii.

And eke the gentle shepherd swaynes, which sat
Keeping their fleecy flockes as they were hyrd,
She sweetly heard compaine, both how and what
Her sonne had to them doen, yet she did smile thereat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

A body long and large, the buttocks equal broad
As fit to undergo the full and weighty load
And of the fleece's face, the flank doth nothing lack,
But everywhere is stor'd.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 14.

Nor wonder how his fortune's sunk;
His brothers fleece him when he's drunk
Swift. The Beast's Confession to the Priest.

Meantime, light shadowing all, a sober calm
Fleeces unbounded ether; whose least wave
Stands tremulous, uncertain where to turn
The gentle current. Thomson. Autumn.

How, if on Swithin's feast the welkin loure,
And every penthouse streams with hasty showers,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain,
And wash the pavements with incessant rain.
Gay. Trivia, b. i.

'Twas at the time, when new returning light
With welcome rays begins to cheer the sight;
When grateful birds prepare their thanks to pay,
And warble hymns to hail the dawning day;
When woolly flocks their bleating cries renew,
And from their fleecy sides first shake the silver dew.
Congreve. On the Death of the Marquis of Blandford.

With awe he now takes from her hand
That fleece-like flow'r of fairy land:
Less precious, whilom, was the fleece
Which drew the Argonauts from Greece.
Id. An Impossible Thing. (A Tale.)

In yonder aged dames the Parcæ know,
Who weave the thread of human life below:
Long as the fleeces last, so long extend
The days of man, but with the fleece they end.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxiv.

For this purpose, the poor unhappy natives must undergo a second fleecing for the benefit of the proprietors: so that they were to be robbed first, to enrich their governor, and afterwards they were to be plundered to furnish means to prevent a discovery of peculations.
Fox. Speech. East India Bills, Nov. 18, 1783.

With him two gay Arcadian swains reclin'd,
Who in the neighbouring vale their flocks had join'd,
Thyrsis, whose care it was the goats to keep,
And Corydon, who fed the fleecy sheep.—Beattie, Past. 7.

FLEET, n. FLEET-PRISON. } Fr. Flotte; It. Flota; Sp. Flota; Dut. Vlote; A. S. Fleotan, Fr. Flotter; It. Fottar; Sp. Flotar; Dut. Vlieten; to flote. The A. S. Fleotan, Junius adds, is the frequentative from flow-an, fluere. Hence the noun is applied to an estuary, into which the tide floats or flows. The Fleet-Prison, so called, because situated upon the side of the water that floated in from the river Thames, called Fleet-ditch. See To FLOAT.

That which floateth; a collected number of ships.

Toward the south side turned thei thar flete,
Thar fader & thei o chance togider gan mete.
R Brunne, p 59.

Phillip therefore when he understode that the Carthaginencis hadde vanquished the Romaines againe, sent his open defiaunce vnto them and began to builde a fleet wherin to transport his armye into Italy.—Goldyng. Justine, fol 120

The same day the Generals seeing what weake estate our army was drawen into by sicknesse, determined to man and victuall twenty of the best ships for the Ilands of Acores, with Generall Drake to see if he could meet with the Indian fleet, and Generall Norris to returne home with the rest
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. pt ii. p 150.

Then they commaunded the warden of the Fleete to carye him with other of the Studard that then were in like trouble with him vnto the Fleete from whence they came, and to keepe close prisoners, and in the morning to prouide v faggots for Doctour Barnes and iiii Studard men, the which was readely done the next day by viii of the clock in the morning.—Barnes. The Life of, by Fox.

But for all these excuses, Grafton was sent to the Fleete, and there remained vi. weekes, and before hee came out, was bound in cec li. that he should neither sell, nor imprint, or cause to be imprinted any mó Bibles, vntill the King and the Clergy should agree vpon a translation
Fox Martyrs, p. 1057. R Grafton Imprisoned for Printing the Bible.

This point of the vtmost sea the Roman fleet then first of all doubling discouered Britannie to be an Iland, and withall found out and subdued the Iles of Orkney before that time neuer knowen.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 188.

Hee exhibited navall battailes performed in manner by full fleets and compleat navies; having digged out a great pit for a lake, and built a stone wall round about it neere vnto Tiberis and those he would behold in the greatest stormes and showers that were.—Holland. Ammianus, p 261.

It was that memorable day, (June 3rd, 1665,) in the first summer of the late war when our navy engaged the Dutch, a day wherein the two most mighty and best appointed fleets which any age had ever seen, disputed the command of the greater half of the globe, the commerce of nations, and the riches of the universe.
Dryden Essay of Dramatick Poesy.

As it was Henry's chief object to render his discoveries usefull to his country, he immediately equipped a fleet to carry a colony of Portuguese to these islands (Madeira)
Robertson. History of America, vol i b. i.

FLEET, v. FLEET, adj. FLE'ETNESS. } To fleet or flit, (see FLIT,) fluere, fluitare, says Skinner; from "A. S. Fleohtan, fluctuare, to float, to swim, to wave up and down, or to and fro," (Somner.) See To FLOAT.

To swim, to skim along the surface; and thus, to move along swiftly; to pass away suddenly; to pass away.

Mr. Grose says, "Fleet, to skim or take off the surface or cream; whence fleet or fleeted milk, (North.") See also Mr. Moore's Suffolk words, and the quotation from the Collier of Croydon in v. Flitch.

Of which shrewes all be the hoost neuer so great, it is to displise, for it is not gouerned with no leader of reason, but it is rauished onely by fleyng errour, folily and lightly
Chaucer Boecius, b i

So stands the foole by fleeting floud
and looketh for a turne:
But riuer runnes and still will runne
and neuer shape returne.
Turbervile. That it is Hurtfull to Conceale, &c.

The Sycambres from that time that the bridge was begon to be builded, preparing themselues to fyght, had by the counsell of such of the Usipits & Teuctheis as they had with them, fleeted out of their country.—Goldinge Cæsar, p 96.

They say many yong gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time away carelessly as they did in the golden world.—Shakespeare. As You Like it, Act i. sc. 1.

In mail thir horses clad, yet fleet and strong,
Prauncing their riders bore, the flower and choice
Of many Provinces from bound to bound.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b iii

——— Here be woods as green
As any, air likewise as fresh and sweet,
As where smooth Zephyrus plays on the fleet
Face of the curled streams.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Faithful Shepherdess, Act i. sc. 1.

'Tis sooner past, 'tis sooner done
Then summer's rain, or winter's sun;
Most fleeting, when it is most dear,
'Tis gone, while we but say 'tis here.
Carew. To a Lady. Persuasions to Love.

Moreouer in ciuill dissensions the faith of the souldier was fleeting; and that there was perill to be feared from euery particular man.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p. 87.

Or as the fleet-foot roe, that's tir'd with chasing.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

When, as from snow-crown'd Skidow's lofty cliffs,
Some fleet-wing'd haggard, towards preying hour,
Amongst the teal and moor-bred mallard drives,
And th' air of all her feather'd flock doth scour.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

Not so, swift Nisus, who the foes declin'd,
Nor knew th' endanger'd boy was left behind;
Beyond the once fam'd Alban fields he fled,
Where the fleet coursers of Latinus fed.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ix.

Hail, Rivers! hallow'd shade! descend from rest!
Descend and smile, to see thy Rochford blest:
Weep not the scenes through which my life must run,
Though fate, fleet footed, scents thy languid son.
Savage. To Bessy, Countess of Rochford.

The drifts of Thracian snows were scarce so white,
Nor Northern winds in fleetness match'd their flight.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

Before my tale were done, the rising light
Must often chase the fleeting shades of night.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso.

But fame, unrivall'd in the dusty course,
In fleetness far outstrips the vig'rous horse.
Lewis. Statius. Thebaid, b. v.

FLEGM, or FLEAME. FLE'GMATICK. } Also written phlegm. Fr. Flegme; It. Flemma; Sp. Flema; Dut. Fluyme; Lat. Phlegma; Gr. φλεγ-μα, φλεγ-ειν, to burn: not so called, Vossius thinks, because it is per se igneum, but because per accidens causat febres. See DEPHLEGM, and PHLEGM. See also the quotation from Sir T. Elyot.

The moyst fleume, with the colde
Hath in the longes for his holde
Ordeined him a propre stede
To dwell there as he is bede. Gower. Con A. b. vii.

The water, which is moyste and colde,
Maketh fleme. Id. Ib.

Natural fleume is a humour cold and moyst, white and swete, or without tast, ingendred by insufficiēt decoctiō in the second digestiō of ye watry or raw partes of the matter decoct called chilus —Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. i.

Contrarywise in a cold or fleumatyke stomake, grosse meate abydeth longe vndigested, and maketh putrified matter.—Id. Ib. b. ii.

——— So in every humane body,
The choller, melancholy, fleame, and blood,
By reason that they flow continually
In some one part, and are not continent,
Receive the name of humours.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Ind.

He shall find himself bound fast to an uncomplying discord of nature, or, as it oft happens, to an image of earth and fleam, with whom he lookt to be the co-partner of a sweet and gladsome society, and sees withal that his bondage is now inevitable.—Milton. Doct. of Divorce, b. i. c. 5.

Some flegmatick sea captain would have staid
For money now, or victuals; not have weigh'd
Anchor without 'em.—Suckling. To my Friend W. Davenant.

The Satyres, and Sileni, are perpetuall followers of Pan, that is old age and youth. for of all natural things, there is a lively, jocund, and (as I may say) a danceing age; and a dull flegmatique age —Bacon. On Learn. by G Wats, b.ii c 13.

These things operate strongest upon the flegmatic, the weakly and low spirited, who want encouragements rather than terrors —Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 29.

FLEM, v. FLE'MER. FLE'MING, n. } Mr. Tyrwhitt says, Fleme, Sax. to banish; Flemer, banisher. In A. S. Fleam, fuga; flema; flyma, flyming; exul, profugus. Flyman, in exilium mittere, exlegem reddere, (Lye.) Skinner explains flemed, daunted; fleming, conquest; flemer, expeller. Flym-an, is to cause to fly, and thus—
To banish.

Now helpe, thou meke and blisful faire maide,
Mo flemed wretch, in this desert of Galle.
Chaucer The Second Nonnes Tale, v 15,526.

Lo, here hath kind hire domination,
And appetit flemeth discretion.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,131.

(Quod Pandarus) ye nece woll ye here
Dulcarnon is called fleming of wretches
It seemeth herd, for wretches wol nought lere
For very slothe. Id. Troilus, b. iii.

Flemer of fendes, out of him and here
On which thy limmes faithfully extenden,
Me kepe, and yeve me might my lyf to amenden.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4880.

FLESH, v. FLESH, n. FLE'SHY. FLE'SHINESS. FLE'SHLESS. FLE'SHLY. FLE'SHLINESS. FLE'SHLING, n. FLE'SHMENT. } Perhaps (says Skinner) from the verb to flea or flay; because the flesh is not placed upon table unless with the skin flayed or stripped off.

A. S. Flæsc; Dut. Vleesch; Ger. Fleisch. In A. S. are also found various immediate derivatives, Flæsclic, fleshy, flæsc-nesse, fleshliness, flæsc-met, flesh-meat. In Goth. Leik, and in A. S. Lic, are caro, corpus, cadaver. Hickes (Gram. A. S. p. 191) and Lye think that Lic (according to the earliest usage) denoted corpus inanimatum; but go no further than the Goth. Leik, having the same usage, for the origin. Junius (Gloss. Goth.) says, Leik, caro, item corpus, ac denique etiam cadaver. Wachter declares the word to be difficult and abstruse, and that the cause of obscurity is to be found in the many changes which it underwent before it received its present form. First, he adds, it was (Belgis) Lyf, substantia viva, from Leeven, vivere, to live. 2dly, Lich, and Leich, (Germanis) corpus animatum. 3dly, Gothis, Leik. 4thly, The A. S. Lic, agreeing with the Goth. Leik; and which afterwards, with the Æolic digamma prefixed, was written Flæc, and, with the sibilant s inserted, flæsc. He concludes that Lyf, caro viva, subsequently applied to caro mortua, was the original of the Ger. Fleusch; Eng. Flesh. After all, the obscurity remains undiminished.

Flesh is applied to the component substance of animals, (beasts, birds, and fishes,) distinguished from their bones, muscles, vessels, &c.

To the body, as distinguished from the spirit.

To animal food, as distinguished from that of fish or vegetables.

To corporal or bodily sensations or desires, carnal or sensual appetites or passions.

To flesh is, to train or invite to or by an appetite for, or love of flesh; to inure to, to indulge in fleshly appetites; and thus, generally, to train, to invite, to inure, to indulge, to glut or satiate.

So muche honger hii hade there, ar hii the toun lete
That hii sode (seethed) the Saracens, and that flesce ete.
R. Gloucester, p. 408.

The comon of the oste bouht them hors flesch,
Or mules or assis roste, or haf bein mete lesse.
R. Brunne, p. 175.

For the fend and the flesch folwen to gedres.
Piers Ploughman, p. 14.

And wortes fleshles wrought, and water to drynken.
Id. Crede.

And took Thomas by the hand, and tauhte hym tho grepe
And fele with hus fyngres, hus fleshliche heorte.
Id. Vision, p 375

The lengthe of a lenton, flesh moot I leue
After that Esture is ycome, and that is hard fare
And Wedenesday iche wyke withouten fleshmete.
Id. Crede.

But and I wot that in me, that is in my fleisch dwellith no good.—Wiclif. Romayns, c. 7.

For I knowe that in me (that is to saye in my flesshe) dwelleth no good thing.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Moost dere I biseche you as comelingis and pilgryms to absteine you from fleischli desires that fighten agens the soule.—Wiclif. 1 Peter, c 2.

Derely beloved, I beseech you as strangers and pilgrimes, absteyne from fleshlye lustes, which fyght agaynst the soul.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Of smale houndes hadde she, that she fedde
With rosted flesh, and milk, and wastel brede
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 147.

Certes sinful mannes soule is betraied of the Divel, by coveitise of temporal prosperitie, and scorned by disceite, whan he cheeseth fleshly delites —Id. The Persones Tale

And euer amonge mercy she cride
That he ne shulde his counseile hide
From hir, that so wolde him good,
And was so nigh flesshe and bloud.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Kynge Dauid had many a loue.
But natheless alwate aboue
Knighthode he kept in such a wise
That for no fleshely couetise
Or lust to ligge in ladies armes,
He left not the lust of armes. Id. Ib. b. vii.

The bodye, where heate and moysture haue soueraynte, is called sanguine, wherin the ayre hath preeminence, and it is percevued and knowen by these sygnes which do folowe, carnositie or fleshynesse, &c.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. i.

Their entente was to set forthe the justice of God, which is to rewarde the spirituall, his electe with the blessynges promised. and the fleshlynges, the reprobate, with the plagues thret'ned.—Confutation of N. Shaxton, (1546.) sig L 5.

Tyndall answereth me with an hedious exclamacion and crieng oute vppon my fleshelynesse and foly, formeth his high spirituall sentence after this fashion.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 860.

And make his ashepannes, shoules, basens, flesshe-hokes, fyrepannes, and al the apparell therof of brasse.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 27.

Christes naturall presence in the eucharisticall breade, he had in open preachynge and disputacyon denyed, calling bothe hym & his masmōgers pulpitees, that is to saye, flesshe-makers, in hys boke de Eucharistia.
Bayle. Englishe Votaries, pt. ii.

Wolde God we had dyed by the hande of ye Lorde, in the lande of Egypte, when we sat by the flesh-pottes, ate bread our belyes full, for ye haue brought vs out into thys wyldernesse, to kyll thys whole multitude for hunger.
Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 15.

Our wantons, and flesshe-woormes, for so it liketh you to cal them, haue beene contented to forsake fathers, mothers, wiues, children, goodes, and huinges, & meekely to submit themselues to the extreme terroure of al your cruelties, and to yelde theire bodies vnto the deathe: to be sterued for hunger: and to be burnte in here: onely for the name, and Gospel of Jesus Christe.—Jewell. Def. of the Apologie, p 335.

But as for Epaminondas, some say he returned willingly out of Asia, and the isles without any exploit done, because he would not have his countreymen fleshed with spoil by sea, as fearing lest of valiant souldiers by land, they would by little and little (as Plato said) become dissolute mariners by sea.—North. Plutarch, p. 311.

For when they had vanquished the first they had fought withall, and goten great riches also they were so fleshed by this, that they determined to stay no where, before they had destroyed Rome, and sacked all Italy —Id. Ib. p. 354.

——— Shall a beardless boy,
A cockred silken wanton, brave our fields,
And flesh his spirit in a warre-like soyle,
Mocking the ayre with colours idly spred,
And find no checke?—Shakespeare, K. John, Act v. sc. 1.

Bast. How the young whelpe of Talbot's raging wood,
Did flesh his punie sword in French mens blood.
Id. 1 Part Henry VI. Act iv. sc. 7.

When this stout Duke, who in his castle stood,
With Sal'sbury, who beat them all at Blore,
Both which were flesht abundantly with blood,
In those three battles they had won before,
Thought in their pride it would be ever flood;
Nor 'gainst Queen Margaret that they needed more.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

The Asturians growne insolent by reason of this two-fold successe, like unto ravening foules made more cruell and eagre with the taste of blood that had so fleshed them, flew upon the inhabitants.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 340.

Lam. Prethee leave me:
Had I my page, or footman here to flesh thee,
I durst the better hear thee.
Luc. This scorn needs not:
And offer such no more.
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act v. sc. 1.

Galley-slaves are fat and fleshie, because they stirre the limbs more and the inward parts less.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 877.

We say it is a fleshy style, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when with more than enough, it growes fat and corpulent; Arvina orationis, full of suet and tallow.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

So little aims the minister at his intended scope, to procure the much prosperity of this life, that ofttimes he may have cause to wish much of it away, as a diet puffing up the soul with a slimy fleshiness and weak'ning her principal organic parts.—Milton. Reason of Ch. Government, b. ii. c. 3.

Sithens it hath infixed faster hold
Within my bleeding bowells, and so sore
Now rankleth in this same fraile fleshly mould,
That all mine entrailes flow with poisonous gore,
And th' ulcer groweth daily more and more.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2

But as one toyld with trauaell, downe she lay,
So lay she down; as if to sleepe she went,
And closde her eyes with careleasse quietness;
The whiles soft death, away her spirit hent,
And soule assoyld from sinfull fleshlinesse.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

And in the fleshment of this dread exploit,
Drew on me here againe.—Shakes. Lear, Act ii. sc. 2.

Each Greek was an Ulysses; such a dread
Th' approach, and ev'n the sound of Hector bred;
Him fleshed with slaughter and with conquest crown'd,
I met, and overturn'd him to the ground.
Dryden. Ovid. Met b xiii.

Disapproving the opinions of those whom a man sincerely thinks to be in the wrong is not a work of the flesh, but the necessary duty of a Christian.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 40.

The sensual heat is a perpetual furnace, whose smoke darkens the mind, that it cannot discover sublime and heavenly excellencies, and whose impure heat fires the will, that it is earnest in the pursuit of fleshly pleasures.
Bates. The Danger of Prosperity.

This, as they drew it forth, his midriff tore,
Its barbed point the fleshy fragments bore,
And let the soul gush out in streams of purple gore.
Crozall. Ovid. Met. b. iv

——— But should his inward grief
Too feeble prove to work its own relief,
Himself can free with predetermin d hand
His tortur'd spirits from her fleshly band.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xlv.

Joas van Cleeve, or Sotto Cleefe, an industrious painter of Antwerp: his colouring was good, and his figures fleshy and round.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i c. 6.

FLETCH, v. } Fr. Flèche; Sp. Flecha; It.
FLE'TCHER. } Freccia, frezza, sagitta;—all (says Skinner) from the verb to fledge, volitare, plumescere, to fly about; to feather. The Low Lat. Flecharius, from flecha, was the name given to him who made the arrows, not who merely fledged or prepared them with feathers, (Du Cange.) See To FLEDGE. To fletch, is to—

Fledge, or supply with feathers.

The care which the fletcher should take in the choice and preparation of his feathers is minutely described by Ascham.

In so doinge, thei declare themselues to be magnified & exalted aboue him, if thei graunt the creator beter then the creature, & the fletcher beter then his bolt.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

The fletcher draweth a feather when it hath but one swappe at it with his knife, and then playnith it a little, with rubbing it over his knife. He pareth it when he taketh leysure and heede, to make everye part of the rybbe apt to stand straight and even on upon the stele.—Ascham. Toxophilus.

Thomas Scarden, and John Stodder the king's Majesties bowyer and fletcher, doo presently repayre into those parties for the putting in ordre of the bowes and arrowes as well at Barwike as other places theire; and, for their helpe, have also with them three other bowyers and five fletchers.—Lodge. Illustrations, vol. i. p. 79. Lords of the Council, to the Earl of Shrewsbury.

Thy darts are healthful good, and downwards fall,
Soft as the feathers that they're fletch'd withall.
Cowley. The Davideis, b. ii.

By the most unregenerate malice in the world, he (John Wesley) dips his curses in the gall of irony; and that they may strike the deeper, fletches them with a profane classical parody.—Warburton. Doctrine of Grace, b. ii. c. 10.

FLE'WED. Not in our early Lexicographers. Perhaps from the Dut. Flauw, languidus, remissus.

Sir Thomas Hanmer remarks, that flews are the large chaps of a deep-mouthed wound, (T. Warton.)

The word is used by Golding, quoted by Warton.

With other twaine that had a syre of Crete
And dam of Sparta; tone of them call'd Jollyboy, a great
And large-flew'd hound.—Golding. Ovid. Met. b. iii.

Thes. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kinde,
So flew'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung
With eares that sweepe away the morning dew.
Shakespeare. Mids. Night's Dreame, Act iv. sc. 1.

FLE'XIBLE.
FLEXIBI'LITY.
FLE'XIBLENESS.
FLE'XILE.
FLE'XION, or FLE'CTION.
FLE'XOR.
FLE'XUOUS.
FLE'XURE.
FLEXA'NIMOUS.

Fr. Flexible; It. Flessibile; Sp. Flexible; Lat. Flexibilis, from flectere, flexum, to bend.

That can or may be bent; opposed to, stiff or rigid; (met.) that can or may be (easily) inclined, or induced, or persuaded: pliant, inconstant, unsteady, infirm.

Wherfore when we be so tender and flexible yt there apear in vs no power of firme and constant minde, we signifie and declare plainly that we be vtterly ignorant of God and his kingdom.—Calvine. Foure Godlie Sermons, Ser. 2.

Their origination may be either from the back, inwardly, as the chief flector, the psoas, &c.
Smith. Portraiture of Old Age, p. 65.

I received those sparcles of piety you pleas'd to send me in a manuscript; and whereas you favour me with a desire of my opinion concerning the publishing of them, sir, I must confess that I found among them many most fervant and flexanimous strains of devotion.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 67.

He shall heare these beastly sinnes applauded, varnished, and set out to sale with the most elegant expressions; the most rhetoricall, pathetica l, flexanimous, encomiums.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc. 3.

His fore-alleadged words to this purpose, are so emphaticall and flexanimous, that they might even move an heart of adamant, and cause the most obdurate stage-hunters for to tremble.—Id. Ib. pt. i. Act vi. sc. 12.

Yet besides the general carelessness; the authority of the teachers, the flexibility of the taught, and the smalness of the things themselves at the beginning, even interest itself (which consists of two parts, fears and hopes) is able to produce great effects.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 664.

——— They saw
That others, favour'd, did aspiring seek
Their nephew from their counsels to withdraw,
(Seeing him of a nature flexible and weak.)
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

She [the soul] is a perpetuall agent, prompt and subtile; but often flexible, and erring, intangling herselfe like a silke-worme.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

If this son of Chendanah had not a fore-head of brasse for impudency, and a heart of lead for flexiblenesse to humours and times, he had never devised these horns of iron, wherewith his king was goared unto blood
Bp. Hall. Cont. Ahab & Michaiah.

Few will protest against flexibleness, under the depression of God's hands, but most would fain hold the screw themselves, whereby they are let down, for fear of falling too violently or too low.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 15. s. 5.

There be three kinds of tunes and measures in musick according to Polymnestus Sacadus, to wit, the Phrygian, Dorian, and the Lydian, they say that in every one of them Sacadus made a certain flection or tune called strophe
Holland Plutarch, p 1019

The different conjugations in Greek are not varied in the flexion, as the Latines are, but only in the characteristick.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 70.

We know our declining nature does not so much as fall perpendicularly into extremities of vice, but commonly sinks and slides downward by flexious and oblique descents.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. ii. Treat. 6. s. 3.

But we know who changed this course of the soul of man and taught her this flexuous serpentine motion of self-love in which she seemeth now to revert to God.
Id. Ib. pt. i. Treat. 14. s. 2.

Wherefore the Devil does not undertake to throw any down perpendicularly into hell, but leads them by winding and turning descents: the motion of the serpent being flexuous and crooked, the subject mooved must needs follow the manner of the moover.—Id. Ib. pt. ii. Treat. 6. s. 2.

Thinks thou the fierie Feuer will go out
With titles blowne from adulation?
Will it giue place to flexure and low bending?
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act iv. sc. 1.

Fit. Remember kissing of your hand, and answering
With the French time in flexure of your body.
B. Jonson. The Deuelle is an Asse, Act iii. sc. 5.

Set him betimes to school, and let him be Instructed there in rules of husbandry:
While yet his youth is flexible and green,
Nor bad examples of the world has seen.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

True health consists in such a flexibility of fibres, as yield to the force of the heart, so as to admit the influent fluid, and then such a due spring to restore themselves so as to drive it forward.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 6.

Those slender aerial bodies separated and stretched out (at least, as far as the neighbouring ones will permit) otherwise, by reason of their flexibleness and weight, would flag or curl.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 12.

——— Now prepare
Materials for thy mill: a sturdy post
Cylindric, to support the grinder's weight
Excessive; and a flexile sallow, entrench'd,
Rounding, capacious of the juicy hoard.
J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

Which flexibility [of the spine] we may also observe varies in different parts of the chain; is least in the back, where strength, more than flexure, is wanted; greater in the loins, which it was necessary should be more supple than the back; and greatest of all in the neck, for the free motion of the head.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

Supple and flexible as Indian cane,
To take the bend his appetites ordain.—Cowper. Charity

This done; ye Nine, here ends your Poet's strain
In pity sung to soothe his Gallus' pain.
While leaning on a flowery bank I twine
The flexile osiers, and the basket join.
Beattie. Virgil, Past. 10.

They throw the change and the pressure, produced by flexion, almost entirely upon the intervening cartilages.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

It is evident that the reciprocal energetick motion of the limbs, by which we mean motion with force in opposite directions, can only be produced by the instrumentality of opposite or antagonist muscles; of flexors and extensors answering to each other.—Id. Ib. c. 9.

Let us suppose, that he moves a limb by instinct, without having had any previous notion of space or motion. He has here a new sensation, which accompanies the flexure of joints, and the swelling of muscles.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 5. s 6.

FLI'CKER, v. } A. S. Flicer-ian; Dut.
FLI'CKERING, n. } Fliggeren; Gr. Flickem; Sw. Flecka.

To fly or flutter about; to move flutteringly. to have or use an unsteady motion.

Take her in armes two and kist her oft
And her to glad, he did all his intent
For which her gost, that flikered aie aloft
Into her woful hart ayen it went.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

And namely thise olde dotards holours, which wol kisse, and flicker, and besie hemself, though they may nought do.
Id. The Persones Tale.

He [Tindall, our yong egle] was not so hygh flykered in ye ayer aboue at our heddes to learne it of his father the old egle heretike.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 684.

The flickering fame that flieth from ear to eare,
And aye her strength encreaseth with her flight,
Gives first the cause why men to heare delight
Of those whom she doth note for beautie bright.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Choice of a Wife.

Pot. Alas! I am not any flickering thing:
I cannot boast of that slight fading gift
You men call beauty; all my handsomeness,
Is my good breeding, and my honesty.
Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act iii. sc. 1.

You shall heare the mountaine and forests both, keep a sounding and rumbling noise, and then do they foretell some change of weather; nay, you shall marke the leaves of trees flicker and play themselves, and yet no wind at all stirring, but be sure then that you shall not be long without.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 35.

The tuneful lark already streach'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest, made short essays to sing.
When wakeful Palamon, preventing day,
Took, to the royal lists, his early way.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Even as a flame unfed, which runs to waste
With its own flickering, or a sword laid by
Which eats into itself, and rusts ingloriously.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3.

FLIGHT, v. }
FLIGHT, n. }
FLI'GHTY. }
FLI'GHTINESS. }

A. S. Fliht, that which fle-eth or flieth; the third person singular of the indicative of fleog-an, to fly, (the terminating th, changed into ht.)

That which flieth; as a flight of birds: also applied to the motion or action itself; as the flight of the birds; also to a motion, equalling, or endeavouring to equal, the flight of birds; (met.) to the mind; as the flights of fancy, &c.

To flight,—to put to flight, to cause to fly.

In the quotation below from B. Jonson, flights is a name used in archery, for long and light arrows employed in shooting rovers, i. e. uncertain lengths. See Bow.

Hym thogte he sey a grysiych beore fle in the eyr anhey,
That alle thauenes quakede of the fyyt hym thorgte he sey.
R. Gloucester, p. 202.

That the fayrest fowel. foulest engendreth
And feblest fowel of flicht is.—Piers Ploughman, p. 239.

He fought, and slew him manly as a knight
In plaine bataille, and put his folk to flight.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 990.

To woodde cometh this Philomene,
And maketh her first yere flight,
Where as she singeth daie and night.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Darius's kynsmen and the squyers for his bodye that were on his left hand, left him and fledde awaye wyth a maine flight.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 97.

After, descending other fiue steps, and proceeding the space of a flight shot, they find another arche like vnto the first.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 208.

The monster, ready on the pray to sease,
Was of his forward hope deceiued quight;
No durst assay to wade the perlous seas,
But greedily long gaping at the sight,
At last in vaine was forc't to turne his fight,
And tell the idle tydings to his dame.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

Cup. O yes, here be all sorts, flights, rovers, and butt-shafts.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 10.

But (2) 'tis alledg'd by some, philosophy disposeth man to despise the Scriptures; or at least to neglect the study of them; and therefore it is to be flighted, and exploded among Christians.—Glanvill, Ess. 4.

And some say also, that the Goddess Latona was not brought to bed between two trees, but between these two springs. For Mount Ptoum is hard by it also, from whence the wild bore came of a sudden that flighted her.
North. Plutarch, p 245

At which I ceas'd, and listen'd them awhile,
Till an unusual stop of suddain silence
Gave respit to the drowsy-flighted steeds,
That draw the litter of close-curtain'd Sleep.
Milton. Comus.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits
The flighty purpose neuer is o'ertooke,
Vnlesse the deed go with it.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 1.

And the expiration or breathing forth doth not only produce a noise, but the inspiration or haling in of the ayre affordeth a sound that may be heard almost a flight-shot.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

Now the fabulous antiquitie therefore fitted wings to her, that by her flight-swiftness she might be thought present in all places.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 27.

This man, a certain twofold fortune (as the poets faine) carrying with her flight wings showed unto the world one while a bountifull benefactor and advauncer of his friends to great fortunes, other whiles againe a vengible wayt-layer, and by bloudye grudges and displeasures doing much mischief.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 321.

Me dost thou bid to shun the coming fight!
Me would'st thou move to base inglorious flight!
Know, 'tis not honest in my soul to fear,
Nor was Tydides born to tremble here.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Thoas with grief observ'd his dreadful course;
Thoas, the bravest of th' Ætolian force:
Skill'd to direct the javelin's distant flight,
And bold to combat in the standing fight.—Id. Ib. b. xv.

So when a Muse propitiously invites,
Improve her favours, and indulge her flights;
But when you find that vigorous heat abate,
Leave off, and for another summons wait.
Roscommon. An Essay on Translated Verse.

If, after descending a flight of stairs, we attempt inadvertently to take another step in the manner of the former ones, the shock is extremely rude and disagreeable; and by no art can we cause such a shock by the same means when we expect and prepare for it.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iv. s. 17.

The flighty gambols of chance are objects of no science, nor grounds of any dependance whatever.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. iii. pt. ii. c. 26.

I cannot yet be quite out of conceit with my flightiness, because but for that perhaps I had not enjoyed the pleasure of your conversation here.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 24.

FLIM-FLAM, i. e. Flam-flam. See FLAM.

Aer. This is a pretty flim-flam.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Little French Lawyer, Act ii. sc. 1.

Most think what has been heap'd on you,
To other sort of folk was due:
Rewards too great for your flim-flams.
Swift. A Christmas Box for Dr. Delany.

FLI'MSY. } Perhaps from Flim or Flam,
FLI'MSINESS. } (qv.) And thus—
Having the slightness, the weakness, of a mere flam or fable: slight, weak, forceless.

Destroy his fib or sophistry, in vain,
The creature's at his dirty work again,
Throw'd on the center of his thin designs,
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines.
Pope. Prologue to the Satires.

But if an insect of renown,
Hornet or beetle, wasp or drone,
Be caught in quest of sport or plunder,
The flimsy fetter flies in sunder.
Beattie. The Wolf & Shepherds.

In general, his [Jervas] pictures are a light flimsy kind of fan-painting, as large as the life.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

There is a certain flimsiness of Poetry, that seems expedient in a song.—Shenstone.

FLINCH, v. }
FLI'NCHER. }
FLI'NCHING, n. } Either, says Skinner, from the verb to Fling, q.d. to toss himself this way and that, as he usually does who wishes to free himself from the grasp of an enemy; or from the A. S. Flicerian, to move quickly, to move or shake the wings, as birds do when struggling to free themselves from the net. It is (as fling also is) more probably from the A. S. Fleon, to fly from, i. e. to evade or endeavour to escape from.

To shrink or draw back from, out of the reach of; to withdraw or retreat; to give way, to fail.

He is estemed a joly ruffler, that geueth himselfe to excessyue ryot: and he is counted a flyncher that foloweth sobrietie.—Udal. James, c. 2.

Well, I shall catch him in a narrow-room,
Where neither of us can flinch. If I do,
I'll make him dance a trenchmore to my sword.
Barry. Ram Alley, Act iii. sc. 1

P. Sure. Hang'em, flinchers, they slunk away as soon as they had drank as much as they were able to carry, which no generous spirit would ha' done indeed.
Tailor. The Hog hath Lost his Pearl, Act v.

Yeo. Believ't, sir;
But make this good upon us you have promis'd,
You shall not find us flinchers.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act i. sc. 1.

But the tribunes of the commons thought they would prevent and meet with this flinching of his and absenting himself, by intimation of another act and law provided in that behalf, namely, that if he entred not into the cittie of Rome before the ides of November immediately following, it should be lawfull for C. Licinius to proceed in judgment, and give sentence against him in his absence.
Holland. Livius, p. 1127

Glos. Upon the instant,
Lord Hastings will be here: this morn I mean
To prove him to the quick, then if he flinch
No more but this, away with him at once,
He must be mine or nothing.—Rowe. Jane Shore, Act iii.

The grave abhor the gay, the gay the sad,
And formalists pronounce the witty mad,
The sot, who drinks six bottles in a place,
Swears at the flinchers who refuse their glass.
Pitt. Epistle to Mr. Spence.

Those to whom terrors would be most serviceable, being persons of strong spirits, sanguine complexions, and hardy constitutions, able to bear a bang or burn without flinching, are litte touched with bodily pains
Search. The Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 29.

FLING, v. }
FLING, n. }
FLI'NGING, n. } From the A. S. Fleon, to fly or cause to fly. Though Skinner thinks from the Lat. Fugere, to strike, to dash, (existing in the compounds affligere, confligere.) And Vir. Rev. (he adds) from Flying, q.d. to set a thing flying. Serenius says, "Sueth. Flenga, jacere, item cum præcipitantiâ ferri."

To cause to fly, to throw, to cast; (met.) to throw or cast, a sarcasm, a scoff, a taunt.

The buck in brake his winter coate he flings.
Surrey. Description of Spring.

Then dartes we gan to fling
In wide and weightless skies:
And then the fiercest fight of all
and combat did arise.
Turbervile. An Aunswere in Dispraise of Wit.

Not one kynge hath bene in Englande sens the conquest, but they haue twygged hym one way or other, and had theyr false flynges at him.—Bale. Apology, fol. 142.

The naked nymphs, some up some down descending,
Small scatt'ring flow'rs at one another flung,
With nimble turns their limber bodies bending,
Cropping the blooming branches lately sprung.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

——— On thir heads
Main promontories flung, which in the air
Came shadowing, and oppress whole legions arm'd.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

——— Fresh gales and gentle aires
Whisper'd it to the woods, and from their wings
Flung rose, flung odours from the spicy shrub,
Disporting. Id. Ib. b. viii.

Quart. If I had staid, they had paid me for a captain.
Sole. They had a fling at me.
Mayne. The City Match, Act iii. sc. 2.

But so dissolute they [Persian] be and with the looseneese of their joynts and wandering pace they keepe such a flinging of themselves, and jetting in their gate, that a man would take them to be meere effeminate, whereas indeed they be most fierce warriors, but rather wylie in cunning fight, than hardie in manly fight.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 217.

To brave Laodocus his arms he flung,
Who near him wheeling, drove his steeds along.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Nay if that had been the worst, I could have borne. but he had a fling at your ladyship too; and then I could not hold. but, 'faith, I gave him his own.
Congreve. The Way of the World, Act iii.

The emperour laughed much, but though a lover of the art, seems to have taken no other notice of Mabuse: whose excesses sometime after occasioned his being flung into prison at Middleburgh.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

FLINT. }
FLI'NTY. }
FLI'NTINESS. } A. S. Flint; Dut. Vlinte; Ger. Flint, Sw. Finta: which Wachter derives from the Gr. Πλητ-ειν, to strike, because stricken to produce fire. Ihre does not agree with this, but has nothing better to propose. Flinty (met.) is—

Very hard, excessively hard or rugged; and thus, cruel, unfeeling, without sympathy or compassion.

And out of flent sprange flod, that folke and bestes dronken.
Piers Ploughman, p. 257.

Which when I heard, and saw how he himself fordid
Against the ground with bloody strokes himself euen there to rid:
Had ben my heart of flint it must haue melted tho,
For in my life I neuer saw a man so full of wo.
Surrey. The Complaint of a Dying Lover, &c.

The firmest flint doth in continuance weare:
Yet cannot I, with many a dropping teare
And long intreatie, soften her hard heart;
That she will once vouchsafe my plaint to heare
Or look with pity on my paineful smart.—Spenser, s. 18.

From those two stars such streams of lightning glide,
As through men's eyes do pierce the flintiest heart,
Which thou by closing striv'st in vain to hide,
For through their lids their subtle rays do dart.
Drayton. The Legend of Matilda the Fair.

Pas. The more I admire your flintiness:
What cause have I given you, illustrious madam,
To play this strange part with me.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Nice Valour, Act i. sc. 1.

Under the conduct of Great Soliman,
Have I been chief commander of an host,
And put the flint-heart Persians to the sword.
Tragedy of Soliman & Perseda.

Or wherefore did not thankfulness step forth,
To urge my many merits, which I may
Object unto you, since you prove ungrateful,
Flint-hearted Charalois.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act iv. sc. 4.

Shake earth, and at the presence be aghast
Of him that ever was, and ay shall last,
That glassy floods from rugged rocks can crush,
And make soft rills from fiery flint-stones gush.
Milton, Psalm 114.

So stubborn flints their inward heat conceal
Till art and force th' unwilling sparks reveal,
But thro' your skill, from those small seeds of fire
Bright flames arise, which never can expire.
Congreve. To Mr. Dryden on his Translation of Persius

——— My flinty heart,
That barren rock on which thy father starv'd,
Opens its springs of nourishment to thee.
Southerne. The Fatal Marriage, Act v. sc. 1.

If it be certain the gun I make tryal of will go off, then the flint will certainly strike fire; and in general the certainty of events infers the certainty of all causes operating to produce them.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

Is the poor labourer to be abandoned to the flinty heart and griping hand of base self-interest, supported by the sword of law, especially when there is reason to suppose that the very avarice of farmers themselves has concurred with the errors of government to bring famine on the land.
Burke. Thoughts and Details on Scarcity.

Where glossy pebbles pave the varied floors,
And rough flint walls are deck'd with shells and ores.
Scott, Epistle 1. The Garden.

FLIP, i. e. FILLIP, (qv.)

——— As when your little ones
Doe 'twixt their fingers flip their cherry stones.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3

When its under question, 'twere as good flip cross and pile, as to dispute for't: and to play a game at chess for an opinion in philosophy (as myself and an ingenious friend have sometimes sported) is as likely a way to determine.
Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 16.

FLI'PPANCY. }
FLI'PPANT. }
FLI'PPANTLY. } Not in our older Lexicographers. Perhaps from filliping; having the nimble motion of any thing filliped.

Nimble, quick, pertly heedless.

As for your mother, she was wise, a most flippant tongue she had.—Chapman. All Fools, Act v. sc. 1.

It very ill becomes this gentleman, when he has such large scores of his own, and while he bends under the weight of many insuperable objections, to grow so exceeding flippant, and above measure assuming, upon the strength only of two or three stale cavils, borrowed from ancient heresies.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 12.

But this flippancy of language proves nothing but the passion of the men who have indulged themselves in it.
Hurd. Works, vol. v. Ser. 7.

I should have considered all this as no more than a sort of flippant vain discourse, in which, as in an unsavoury fume, several persons suffer the spirit of liberty to evaporate, if it were not in support of the idea, and a part of the scheme of "cashiering kings for misconduct."
Burke. On the French Revolution.

FLIRT, v.
FLIRT, n.
FLIRT, adj.
FLIRTA'TION.

See To FLERR; from which Flirt or Flurt is probably derived. Fleer, fleered, fleer'd, flirt, and the verb formed upon the past part.: Skinner thinks it vox a sono ficta.

To toss or throw; to use a quick short action of tossing or throwing; (met.) to cast or throw a taunt or scoff; to act with giddiness, with wantonness.

Doe you make a flirte at the hating of your brother, as though it were a light faulte? He that hateth his brother is a manslear.—Udal. 1 John, c. 3.

By how much I saw them taking little thought for their own injuries, I must confess I took as my part the less to endure that my respected friends through their own necessary patience, should thus lie at the mercy of a coy flurting stile; to be girded with frumps and curtail gibes, by one who makes sentences by the statute, as if all above three inches long were confiscate.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

Sane. Is this the fellow
That had the patience to become a fool,
A flurted fool, and on a sudden break,
As if he would shew a wonder to the world,
Both in bravery and fortune too?
Beaum. & Fletch. Rule a Wife, &c. Act iii. sc 2.

Bed. Ye brought me on, ye forced me to this foolery;
I am asham'd, I am scorn'd, I am flurted; yes, I am so
Id. The Wild Goose Chase, Act ii. sc. 1.

I'le not be fool'd, nor flurted.—Id. The Pilgrim, Act i. sc 1.

See. You are a scurvy fellow, and I am made a cokes, an ass; and this same filthy crones a flirt.
Ford. The Fancies Chaste and Noble, Act iii. sc. 3.

I'le follow her, but who shall vex her father then:
One flurt at him, and then I am for the voyage.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 1.

Thou takest me up at every word I spoke,
As I had been a mewkin, a flurt gillian;
And thou think'st because thou canst write and read,
Our noses must be under thee.
Id. The Chances, Act iii. sc. 1.

Scurule knave, I am none of his flurt girls.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 4.

His personal gravity and virtue was great, and he [Sir William Jones] could not bear such a flurting wit and libertine as the other was.—Roger North. Examen.

From a grave thinking mouser, she was grown
The gayest flirt that coach'd it round the town.
Pitt. Fable. The Young Man and his Cat.

Let me die if I don't think a muslin flounce, made very full, would give one a very agreeable flirtation.
Pope. Let. In the Style of a Lady.

The trembling family they daunt,
They flirt, they sing, they laugh, they tattle,
Rummage his mother, pinch his aunt,
And up stairs in a whirlwind rattle.
Gray. A Long Story.

Ye belles, and ye flirts, and ye pert little things,
Who trip in this frolicsome round,
Pray tell me from whence this impertinence springs,
The sexes at once to confound.
Whitehead. Song for Ranelagh.

I assisted at the birth of that most significant word flirtation, which dropped from the most beautiful mouth in the world, and which has since received the sanction of our most accurate Laureate in one of his comedies.
Chesterfield. The World, No. 101.

FLIT, v.
FLI'TTING, n.
FLI'TTER, v.
FLI'TTY.
FLI'TTINESS.

See To FLEET. A common word still in the North of England. Skinner quotes from Chaucer, "That by no craft I might it flit," and explains, "to move, remove, or take way." Materiæ fluitantis opus, in Boethius (b. iii. met. 9) is by Chaucer rendered "Work of flitering mater." And in b. iii. pr. ix. fluitabunt, flotteren.

"To flit,—to remove. Two flittings are as bad as one fire, i. e. household goods are as much injured by two removals as by one fire. North." (Grose.) See also Mr. Brockett.

And flittynge fond ich the frere. that me confessede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 201.

So sore it sticked whan I was hit
That by no craft I might it flit.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

How passing is the beauty of fleshly bodies! more flitting than mouable floures of sommer.
Id. The Testament of Loue, b. ii.

So that his skin was shape all mete
And nailed on the same sete
Where that his sonne shulde sitte,
Anise him if he woulde flitte
The lawe for the couetise,
There sawe he redie his Juise.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

He that ofte tymes flitteth, is lyke a byrde that forsaketh her nest.—Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 27.

And (but his learned guide instruct him did, to let go by
Those flitting tender formes, and not to touch those shappes that flye,
Which nothing ben but life, and substance none but likenes thinne)
He would with them haue fought, and did in vaine to beat beginne.—Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. vi.

For this worde [Galilee] in the Sirian tongue, signifieth a flyttyng or chaungyng of habitacion.—Udal. Mark, c. 1.

Yet will he rather abide it and suffer, then by the flyttynge from it, fall in y^e dyspleasure of God, or leaue Goddes pleasure vnprocured.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1177.

Thou tellest my flyttinges, thou puttest my teares in thy bottel and nōbrest them.—Bible, 1551. Psalm 56.

Thou hast counted my wandrings, put my teares, &c.
Geneva Bible, 1561. Ib.

But I in armes, and in atchievements brave,
Do rather choose my flitting houres to spend,
And to be lord of those that riches have,
Than them to have my selfe and be their servile sclave
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

And therein all the famous history
Of Jason and Medæa was ywrit;
Her mighty charmes, her furious loving fit,
His goodly conquest of the golden fleece,
His faised faith, and loue too lightly flit.
Id. Ib b. ii. c. 12.

Vnder such props, false Fortune builds her bowre,
On sudden change, her flittering frames be set,
Where is no way, for to escape the net.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 502.

Neither can they any long time endure the same aire, nor the tract of one, and the same soile ever pleaseth them, the manner of their life is always in flight and flitting
Holland. Ammianus, p. 7.

——— They philosophize
Busying their brains in the mysterious toyes
Of flitting motion.
More. Song of the Soul. Psychathanasia, b. i. c. 1. s. 11.

Had we but the same delight in heavenly objects, did we but receive the truth in the love of it, and mingle it with faith in the hearing, this would fix that volatileness and flittneese of our memories, and make every truth as indelible as it is necessary.—Bp. Hopkins. Of the Lord's Prayer.

Then Mnestheus to the head his arrow drove
With lifted eyes, and took his aim above;
But made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
Yet miss'd so narrow, that he cut the cord
Which fastened by the foot the flitting bird.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

The rest are forms, of empty ether made;
In passive semblance, and a flitting shade.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. x.

My undulating life was as
The fancied lights that flitting pass
Our shut eyes in deep midnight, when Fever begins upon the brain. Byron. Mazeppa.

FLITCH. A. S. Flicce; Fr. Flèche de larde; a flich or side of bacon. Perhaps from Flake in its consequential application to a broad, flat piece or portion, separated from a solid body. Hall speaks of a flitch of a beeve.

Thauh thei don hem to Donemowe. bote the devel hem helpe
To folwen for the flitche, fetcheth thei hit nevere.
Piers Ploughman, p. 180.

Another brought a spycke
Of a bacon flytche. Skelton. Elinour Rumming.

But woe betide the silly dairy-maids,
For I shall fleet their cream-bowls night by night,
And slice the bacon flitches as they hang.
Anonymous. Grim, the Collier of Croydon, Act iv. sc. 1.

And warn him not to cast his wanton eyne
On grosser bacon, or salt haberdine,
Or dried flitches of some smoked beeve,
Hang'd on a wrythen wythe since Martin's eve.
Bp Hall, b. iv. Sat. 4.

While he [Philemon] from out the chimney took
A flitch of bacon off the hook,
And freely from the fattest side
Cut out large slices to be fry'd.—Swift. Baucis & Philemon.

FLIX, i.e. Flux, (qv.)

There was amōg the great multitude of people a certayne woman, which had been diseased with the bluddy flixe for the space of twelue yeares, and had spent her whole substaunce vpon physicians, and yet founde she none that couide heale her disease.—Udal. Matthew, c. 9.

FLIX, i.e. Flux, (qv.)

No locks Coromandel's, none Malacca's tribe
Adorn; but sleek of flix, and brown-like deer,
Fearful and shepherdless, they bound along
The sands. Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

FLO. A. S. Flu, flan, from Fle-an, to fly. That which fleeth; an arrow.

This Phebus gan awayward for to wrien:
Him thought his woful herte brast a'two,
His bowe he bent, and set therin a flo;
And in his ire he hath his wif yslain.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,144.

In his shoting it happeth oft so
To hurt his frend rather than his fo,
So doeth this God with his sharp flone
The trew sleeth, and letteth the false gone.
Chaucer. The Complaint of the Black Knight.

FLOAT, v.
FLOAT, n.
FLO'ATER.
FLO'ATERY.

A. S. Flot-an; Dut. Vlieten; Fr. Flotter; It. Frottare; Sp. Flotar. The A. S. Fleohtan, from flow-an; whence fluere, fluitare, to flow, to float, or, as sometimes written, to fleet.

To flow or swim, keep or support, upon the surface; to buoy, raise or rise upon, to flow over, or overflow the surface; to move as if supported by fluid substance; as to float in the air: (met.) to float in the mind.

Now er alle on flote, God gif tham grace to spede.
R. Brunne, p. 169.

For she, that doth me all this woe endure,
Ne receeth never, whether I sinke or flete.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1759

Tho came this woful Theban Palamon
With flotery berd, and rugey ashy heres,
In clothes blake, ydropped all with teres.—Id. Ib. v. 2855.

But sens thus sinfully ye me beglle
My bodie mote ye seen, within a while
Right in the hauen of Athenes flotyng
Withouten sepulture and buryng.—Id. Legend of Phillis.

On this west shore we found a dead fish floating.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii.

And for the space of fifty leagues before we came hither we alwayes found swimming on the sea flotes of weedes of a ship's length, and of the bredth of two ships.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 415.

And the yere folowyng that sayde yere, a parte of the sayd Danys takyng shyppynge in the northe, entendynge to sayle towarde easte Englond, met in the see with a flote of Danys, wherof the captaynes, or ledars, were named Hynguvar and Hubba.—Fabyan. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 169.

There did a loftie mount at first us greet,
Which did a stately heap of stones upreare,
That seem'd amid the surges for to fleet,
Much greater than that frame, which us did beare.
Spenser. Colin Clout's come Home again.

The fish, still floting, doe at random range,
And neuer rest, but euermore exchange
Their dwelling places, as the streames them carrie.
Id. Faerie Queene, c. 7.

The river Atax springing out of Pyrenæus runneth through the lake Rubrensis and floteth over it.
Holland. Plinie, b. iii. c. 4.

Vitellius had a quiet beginning of his iourney, a drie shore, and small flote: but by and by through a gale of northern winde, the æquinoxe falling out the same time, and the sea swelling extraordinarily; his armie was tossed hither and thither the face of the earth was covered with waters, the sea, the shore, the fields, were all but one
Greneway Tacitus. Annales, p. 28

Of which kind we conceive the main float and refloat of the sea is, which is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 907.

At this men did startle the more at this time, because it appeared plainely to bee in the King's nature, and not out of his necessitie, hee being now in float for treasure
Ld. Hen. VII p. 139.

—— And for the rest o' th' fleet
(Which I dispersed) they all haue met againe,
And are vpon the Mediterranian flote
Bound sadly home for Naples.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act I. sc. 2.

This set them so a flote, that they were readie, as it seemed, to follow him as the onely protectour of their liberties, in any action, were it right or wrong, they cared not which way, all was one with them.—Holland. Livius, p. 226.

In some countries the overflow of rivers engenders mushromes, and namely, at Mytilene, where (by report) they will not otherwise grow but upon flotes grounds.
Id. Plinie, b. xix. c. 3.

While these vast floating bodies, on either side, moved against each other in parallel lines, and our countrymen, under the happy conduct of his royal highness (James, Duke of York, afterwards James II.) went breaking, by little and little, into the line of the enemies; the noise of the cannon from both navies reached our ears about the city.
Dryden. On Dramatic Poesy.

Great God of Waters, whose extended sway
Is next to his whom Heaven and Earth obey:
Let not the suit of Venus thee displease—
Pity the floaters on th' Ionian seas.
Euseden. Ovid. Metam. b. iv.

Every thing floats loose and disjointed on the surface of their mind [the vulgar and trifling], like leaves scattered and blown about on the face of the waters.—Blair, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

When we reflect on our past behaviour, we have not in view before us the state of mind we were actually in at the time of acting, which is gone and over, but its representative idea; and our ideas being perpetually upon the float, leave room for another representation to slip in, such aims as bear an unfavourable aspect hiding themselves or taking shelter under others more reputable
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 16.

FLO'CCIPEND. Lat. Flocci, and pendere, to weigh, estimate or value, not a hair.

A Latinism in which the old Chronicler Hall indulged.

Many other ridiculous articles they layde to hym, whiche the eares of euery honest creature knowynge the duetie of the subiect to his Prynce, would abhore and flocccipend.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 4.

By reason wherof he should be flocccipended and had in cõtempt & disdeygne of the Scottish people.—Id. Ib. an. 11.

FLOCK, v. FLOCK, n. FLOCK-MELE. } By transposition of the letter l, from folk; and folk, in A. S. Folc; Dut. Volck, from A. S. Folg-ian; Dut. Volg-hen, to follow. See FOLK. And see Flock, and Folk, in Junius.

Flock-mele,—A. S. Flock-mælum, gregatim, (in herds or flocks,) from floc, grex, and mæl, a part or portion.

To follow, (sc.) in numbers or multitudes, in crowds. To collect or assemble, in multitudes; to crowd together or move in crowds.

Fynd foure freres in a flok, that folweth that rewle
Than haue I tynt al my test, touche, and assaye.
Piers Ploukman. Crede.

Only that point his people bare so sore,
That flock-mel on a day to him they went.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 7962.

Lo thus to broke is Christes folde,
Wherof the flocke without guide
Deuour'd is on euery side.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Porus being forsaken of the more parte of his mẽ ceased not to cast dartes, whereof he hadde plentie prepared vpõ his elephant, emongest them that flocked about hym.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 250.

Then thought I thus, one day the Lord shall sit in dome
To view his flock, and chose the pure; the spotted haue no rome.—Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 3.

But it is a dampnable dede to geue so greate wages to maintayne the superfluouse excesse and viciouse lyuynge of ydle bysshops) priests and monkes) the trewe flok feders neglected) studyes and scoles not conserued.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

And some lords, knightes, and gentlemenne, either for fauore of the queene, or for feare of themselfe assembled in sundry coumpanies, and wente flock-mele in harneis.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 43.

By this meanes thire flocked multitudes, every day more than other, to Syracusee: whose eares were tickled, and itched still to heare such surmises, and were apt ynough to give credit thereto.—Holland. Livius, p. 525.

As thou our folds dost still secure,
And keepst our fountains sweet and pure,
Driv'st hence the wolf, the tode, the brock,
Or other vermine from the flock.
B. Jonson. Hymn 4. To Pan.

About the latter end of July, 1553, she [the Queen] was arrived as near as Wanstead house, in Essex, (which then belonged to the Lord Rich) where she took up her rest for a few days, in order to her entrance into the city; and there flocked unto her there great numbers of her nobility and gentry.—Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1553.

He next betakes him to his evening cares
And, sitting down, to milk his flocks prepares;
Of half their udder eases first the dams,
Then to the mother's teats submits the lambs.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

Philo describing the conduct of the Jews of Alexandria, on a certain publick occasion, relates to them, that "early in the morning, flocking out of the gates of the city, they go to the neighbouring shores (for the προσευχαι were destroyed,) and, standing in a most pure place, they lift their voices with one accord."—Paley. Evidences, vol. ii. c. 6.

The swains with Daphne's name this tomb adorn,
Whose high-renown above the skies is borne;
Fair was his flock, he fairest on the plain,
The pride, the glory of the sylvan reign.
Beattie. Virgil, Past 5.

FLOCK. FLOCK-BED. } Fr. Floc; Dut. Vlocke, a flocke or lock of wool, (Minshew.) The Fr. Floc, Menage derives from the Lat. Floccus. In A. S. Flac-ea is, as rendered by Somner, Flocceini, flocci nivis; flakes of snow or such like. See FLAKE.

And you have fastened on a thick quilt, or flock-bed, on the outside of the doore.
B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act ii. sc. 1.

O my dear Thrasherwell, you're gone to sea,
And happiness must ever banish'd be
From our flock-bed, our garrat, and from me!
King. The Soldier's Wedding.

On once a flock bed, but repair'd with straw,
With tape-ty'd curtains, never meant to draw,
The George and Garter dangling from that bed,
Where tawdry yellow strove with dirty red,
Great Villiers lies. Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 3.

FLOG. From the Lat. Flag-ellare. See FLAGELLATE.

To lash or scourge, to strike, to beat.

Then turning, he regales his list'ning wife
With all th' adventures of his early life;
His skill in coachmanship, or driving chaise,
In bilking tavern bills, and spouting plays;
What shifts he us'd, detected in a scrape;
How he was flogg'd, or had the luck t'escape.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

Reason him by fair means out of all those things, for which he will not be the worse man; and flog him severely for those things only, for which the law would punish him as a man.—Chesterfield. Misc. Works, vol. iv. b. ii. Let. 75.

By foisting in the word little, they can reduce any pain to a bearable size: for what signifies a little scorching or a little flogging.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 29.

As for their intimation, that because Egypt was a country intersected by canals, there never were any horses or chariots in it, they ought for this to take their part in the next general flogging, at Westminster school.
Bp. Horne. Works, vol. iv. Let. 14.

FLOIT. From A. S. Flit-an, contendere, rixari, to contend, to strive.

The Duke of Bedforde, accompanyed with the Erle of Marche and other Lordes, had a great floyt and batayll with dyuers carykkes of Jeane and other shyppes, were after longe and sore fyght, y^e^ honour fyll to hym and his Englysshemen.—Fabyan. Cronycle, vol. i. an. 1516.

FLOOD, v. FLOOD, n. } A. S. Fleu-an, to flow. Flow-ed, flow'd, flood. Dut. Vloed; Ger. Fluss.

That which has flow'd; opposed to ebb: applied to a mass of water; also (emphatically) to the general deluge; a deluge, an inundation; (met.) abundance, profusion.

Up a cheare he [Knout] sat adoun, al vp the see sonde,
An enresonde hys men, as hii byuore hym stonde,
So that the tyme com of the see flode,
That yt bygan to waxe vaste, as yt deth atte tyde,
R. Gloucester, p. 321.

The bodies with ther godes wer costen vp on the sond,
After an ebbe of the flode, euer ilkon thei fond.
R. Brunne, p. 106

And out of stent sprange flod, that folke and bestes dronken.—Piers Ploukman, p. 257.

And in the day of Sabotis we wenten forth without the ghate besidis the flood where preiere semede to be, and we saten and spaken to wymmen that camen togidre.
Wiclif. Dedis, c. 16.

And Tantalus, that was distroied by the woodnes of long thurst dispised the floods to drincke.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

After the flood, for whiche Noe
Was saufe, the worlde in his degree
Was made as who seith newe ageyn.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

With which wordes the mortal syghes renewed in Titus, and the saite teares braste out of his eyen, in such abundaunce, as it had ben a lande flode runnyng downe of a moutayne after a storme.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii. c. 12.

Surely, we nickname this same floodding [i. e. profuse] man, when we call him by the name of brave.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 53.

Who first did found the dungeons of the deep?
But one in all, o'er all, above, about:
The flouds for our delight, first calm were set,
But storme and roare, since men did God forget.
Stirling. Domes-day. The first Houre

Out of her gored wound the crewell steel
He lightly snatcht, and did the flood-gate stop
With his faire garment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

When at any time the waters seem to stand and cover the ground still, they are let out at certain sluices or floud-gates drawne up and set open.—Holland. Plinie, b. v. c. 9.

What has hind'red me from writeing to you, was neither ill-health, nor a worse thing, ingratitude; but a flood of little businesses which are necessary to my subsistence, and of which I hop'd to have given you a good account before this time.—Dryden. Prose Works, Let. 37. To Mrs. Seward.

And this much for the first sort of doctrines, which once believed, like the flood-gates of hell pulled up, lets in a deluge and inundation of all sin and vice upon the lives of men.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

Here, as the virgin turn'd her eyes aside,
On the fair bank a comely youth she spy'd,
Fast by the margin of the flood he lay,
The margin with a thousand colours gay.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. ii.

They [the fair sex] dare not wait the riotous abuse
Thy thirst-creating streams at length produce;
When wine has giv'n indecent language birth,
And forc'd the flood-gates of licentious mirth.
Cowper. Conversation.

FLOOK. FLO'OKY. } Also written Fluke. Skinner calls it vox nautica, the crooked part of the anchor which is infixed into the earth; I know not (he adds) whether from Ger. Pflug; Dut. Ploegh, a plow, from its manifest resemblance to a plow, both in form and in action, (sc.) the action of cutting into the earth.

For having with her picked beak-head stricken a Sidonian ship, with the violence of the blow shooke out her owne anker, which by one of the flookes [unco dente] tooke fast hold as if it had beno a grapling hooke by the pro of the other ship.—Holland. Livius, p. 962.

For many a fathom down he had explor'd,
For treasures lost, Old Ocean's oozy hoard,
Oft when the flooky anchor stuck below,
He sunk, and bade the captive vessell go.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iii.

Then hushed in silence deep they leave the land:
No loud mouth'd voices call with hoarse command,
To heave the flooky anchors from the sand.—Id. Ib.

FLOOR, v. FLOOR, n. FLO'ORING, n. } A. S. Flor, wore, were, wering; Ger. Flor; Sw. Flo, wor; Dut. Vloer, vloeren, pavimentare; Skinner suggests, so called because, at least in the season of spring, they were strewed with flowers, (floribus.) Applied to—

The base or basis (within a room or building) upon which we stand, tread or go.

Ryght as som man gyveth me mete, and sette me amidde the floor.—Piers Ploukman, p. 237.

And he schal fully cleuse his corn floore, and he schal gadre his whete into his berne.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

& wyl pourge his floure, & gather the wheat into his garner.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

The flore & bench was paued faire and smothe
With stones square, of many diuers hewe
So wel loyned, that for to say the soth
Al semed one. Chaucer. The Assembly of Ladies

For whan I maie hire hond beclip,
With suche gladnes I daunce and skip.
Me thinketh I touche not the floor.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

These chappels haue their floores couered, and their walles hanged with tapistrie of great price.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. i. p. 169.

Ye sayd Goothis, by crafty and false meanes, caused the floricz of the sayd chambre to falle, by whiche mesne ye sayd Paterne was greuously hurte.—Fabyan. Cron. vol. i. c. 99.

And it was sayd, he had taken on hym to passe through Auuergne, to go see the Pope and Cardinallis at Auygnone, and to haue some of their floring, as well as the Archpreest had doue.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 203.

And under foot floor'd all about with drums [in the Palace of Fame]
The rafters trumpets admirably clear,
Sounding aloud each name that thither comes,
The crannies tongues, and talking ev'ry where,
And all things past in memory to bene.
Drayton. Robert, Duke of Normandy.

And soone after, when they were come to the place aforesaid, they passed over the riuer upon a floored bridge of ships, and possessed themselves of the enemies land.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 79.

To rest, he layd him downe vpon the flore,
(Whilome for ventrous knights the bedding best)
And thought his weary limbs to haue redrest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Both of them [visibles and audibles] spread themselves in round, and fill a whole floare or orbe into certain limits.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 225.

And let it onely have opening and windowes towards the garden, and be levell upon the floare, no whit sunke under ground, to avoid all dampishness.—Bacon. Ess. Of Building.

Mosaique, is an ornament in truth, of much beauty, and long life; but of most use in pauements and floorings.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 63.

These considerations made the lord mayors be very solicitous to have able sheriffs chosen, and that created differences between him and the aldermen on the one side, and the floor or livery men on the other.
State Trials, an. 1683. T. Pilkington & Others.

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half hung,
The floors of plaster, and the walls of dung;
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 3.

I sit in my room, and direct my eyes to the door, which appears to be about sixteen feet distant: at the same time I see many other objects faintly and obliquely; the floor, floor-cloth, the table which I write upon, papers, standish, candle, &c. Now, do all these objects appear at the same distance of sixteen feet? Upon the closest attention, I find they do not.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 18.

FLOP, i. e. Flap, (qv.)

[Panny] during the examination had flopped her hat over her eyes, which were also bathed in tears.
Fielding. Joseph Andrews, b. iv. c. 5.

FLO'RAL. } Lat. Flos, floris. (See FLOWER.)
FLO'RY. } And see below the quotations
FLO'RIAGE. } from Pliny, and also FLOUR.
FLO'RID. } Floral,—of or pertaining to
FLO'RIDLY. } flowers
FLO'RIDNESS. } Florid,—bearing flowers;
FLO'RIST. } having the bloom of flowers;
FLO'SCULOUS. } blooming; having the beauty, the gaiety of flowers; showy, highly adorned or decorated.

The very froth and scum, in manner of a floris [flos quidam] that casteth up, some use to put into colyries and medicines for the eies.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxiv. c. 14.

In which furnace a man shall perceive these different matters, to wit, the brasse itselfe, which being melted, runneth into pans and vessels readie for to receive it; the refuse, called scoria, which flieth out of the furnace; the flowre that floteth aloft [flos supernatat;] and the diphryges or drosse which remaineth behind.—Id. Ib. b. xxxiv. c. 13

How first began this Heav'n which we behold
Distant so high, with moving fires adorn'd
Innumerable, and which yields or fills
All space, the ambient aire wide interfus'd
Imbracing round this florid earth.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

—— The crested cock whose clarion sounds
The silent hours, and the other whose gay traine
Adorns him, coloured with a flored hue
Of rainbows and starrie eyes. Id. Ib.

And indeed how oddly would the Tuscan or Dorie become the Corinthian coifure, or the spruce and flored Corinthian a Tuscan entablature.—Evelyn. Of Architects & Architecture.

We need therefore the lesse wonder, that some of the antient Grecians should so much extol it, deriving it not only from the amœnity and floridness of the warm and spirited bloud; but deducing it from heauen itself as being practized there by the stars.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 70.

In a late letter from your lordship by my servant, I have besides your own favours, the honour of imployments from the King, in a piece of his delight: which doth so consort with the opportunity of my charge here, that it hath given me acquaintance with some excellent florists, (as they are stiled;) and likewise with mine own disposition, who have ever thought the greatest pleasure to consist in the simplest ornaments and elegances of nature.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 317.

For vertue, though a rarely planted flowre,
Was in the seed by this wise florist known;
Who could foretel, even in her springing houre,
What colours she shall wear when fully blown.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 7

The antients venially delighted in flourishing gardens; many were florists that knew not the true use of a flowre, and in Plinie's dales none had directly treated of that subject.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, Epis. Ded. to pt. ii.

The second a dry and floculous root, commonly called mace.—Ib. Ib. b. ii. c. 6.

The spumous and florid state, which the bloud acquires in passing through the lungs, is easily accounted for, from its own elasticity, and the violent motion before described; the aerial particles in the blood and chyle expanding themselves.
Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 2.

Some, deep Free Masons, join the silent race,
Worthy to fill Pythagoras's place.
Some Botanists, or Florists at the least
Or issue members of an annual feast.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iv.

Mr. Burt assures me, that the four radical leaves [of the Indian spikenard] are hearted and petioled; and it is most probable that the cauline and floral leaves would have a similar form in their state of perfect expansion, but unfortunately, the plants at Guya are now shrivelled.
Sir W. Jones. Of the Spikenard of the Ancients.

And where the trees unfold their bloom,
And where the banks their florage beat,
And all effuse a rich perfume
That hovers in the soft calm air. Scott, Ode 20.

Kingdoms by thee, to sickly greatness grown,
Boast of a florid vigour not their own.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

When the ornaments, applied to style, are too rich and gaudy in proportion to the subject, when they return upon us too fast, and strike us either with a dazzling lustre or a false brilliancy, this forms what is called a florid style, a term commonly used to signify the excess of ornament.
Blair, Lect. 18.

FLO'REN. } A piece of gold, first coined
FLO'RENCE. } by the Florentines, and adorned
FLO'RENTINE. } with the figure of a flower; and hence its name. (Vossius, de Vitiis, lib. iii. c. 12.) See the quotation from Camden. Cloths called Florences are mentioned in Statute 1, Richard III. c. 8. See Rastall, fol. 125, c. 4.

And folle falsenesse, wit floreynes yoowe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 32

And everich of thise riotoure ran,
Til they came to the tree, and ther they found
Of florens fine of gold ycoined round,
Wel nigh an eighte bushels, as hem thought.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 13,704.

But here I fynde the so bad,
That the ne list to speake o worde
Thyne own mouthe, or of thyn horde
To yeue a florryn me to help. Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Here is to be noted, that a florene is an Italian crowne, of the valewe of four shillinges and sixpense sterlinge.
Jewell. Defence, p. 735.

The first gold that King Edward III. coyned, was in the year 1343, and the peeces were called florences, because Florentines were the coyners, as Easterlings of sterling money.—Camden. Remaines. Money.

If stealing custards, tarts, and florentines
By some late statute be created treason:
How many fellow-courtiers can I bring,
Whose long attendance and experience,
Hath made them deeper in the plot than I?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater, Act v. sc. 1.

The Lord of Walberg paid an hundred florens to the monastry of Saint Catherine for a large picture of the Salutation painted by him.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

FLO'TA, Sp. a fleet. See the quotation from Swinburne.

The flota is a fleet of large ships, which carry out the goods of Europe to the ports of America, and bring back the produce of Mexico, Peru, and other kingdoms of the New World.—Swinburne. Travels through Spain, Let. 28.

While Grenville's breast could virtue's stores afford,
What envied flota bore so fair a freight?
The mine compar'd in vain its latent hoard,
The gem its lustre, and the gold its weight.
Shenstone. Elegy 16. To Lord Temple.

She [France] will fit out armaments upon the ocean by which the flota itself may be intercepted, and thus the treasures of all Europe, as well as the largest and surest resources of the Spanish monarchy, may be conveyed into France and become powerful instruments for the annoyance of all her neighbours.—Burke. On the Present State of Affairs.

FLOTE. See To FLEET.

Such cheeses, goody Cisley, ye floted too nigh.
Tusser. A Lesson for Dairy Maid Cisley.

FLOTSAM. Flotsen, flotzam, or flotzon, (says Minshew,) be any goods that by shipwracke be lost, and lie floting or swimming upon the top of the water.

Flotsam is where they [goods] continue swimming [i. e. floating] on the surface of the waves.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

FLOUNCE, v. } Sw. Flunsa, immergere.
FLOUNCE, n. } From Dut. Plonssen, to plunge, to dip; a word, Skinner thinks, formed from the sound.

To plunge, to dash or throw about; to move with a tossing, dashing air or action.

Also, to dress with flounces; to affix a flounce, i. e. a flouncing appendage to the dress.

Now, when hee drew near unto the banks of the river, going about a certaine ditch standing full of moorish water, to see where he might pass over, he ventured upon it, and after his horse had flounced and floundered with his heeles in the soft and clammie mud, hee got out of it at length.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 77.

Old Lady Meanwell's chamber-door,
Just on the stairs of the first floor
Stood open: and pray who should come,
But Knowall, flouncing in the room.—King. Art of Love.

She was flounced and furbelowed from head to foot; every ribbon was crinkled, and every part of her garments in curl.
Spectator.

Nor undelighted by the boundless Spring
Are the broad monsters of the foaming deep:
From the deep ooze and gilded cavern rous'd
They flounce and tumble in unwieldy joy.
Thomson. Spring.

Her keys he takes; her doors unlocks;
Through wardrobe and through closet bounces,
Peeps into every chest and box;
Turns all her furbelocs and flounces.—Prior. The Dove.

But thou, vain man! begull'd by Popish shows,
Doatest on ribands, flounces, furbelows.
Gay. Eclogues. The Exposal.

FLOUNDER, v. Perhaps immediately from flounce; Dut. Plonssen, to plunge. See the first citation in v. FLOUNCE.

To move with large and clumsy action; to throw about the limbs awkwardly and violently; to plunge or struggle without aim or object.

Soph. Then if she flounder with you,
Clap spurrs on, and this you'll deal with temperance.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act ii. sc. 3.

Then gnaw'd his pen, then dash'd it on the ground,
Sinking from thought to thought, a vast profound!
Plung'd for his sense but found no bottom there,
Yet wrote and flounder'd on in mere despair.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. i.

But he sinks and flounders under this false bottom, that whatever was clearly revealed to the Prophets, was so revealed, in order to be communicated to others.
Warburton. Rem. on Occasional Reflections.

FLOUNDER, n. Sw. Flundra.

A flat fish found in most of the European seas, and entering rivers.

—— Quick, girl,
Let us consult, and thou shalt find what silly snipes,
These witty gentlemen shall prove, and in
Their own confession too, or I'll cry flounders else.
Davenant. The Wits, Act ii.

Musta. Stay and stand quietly or you shall fall else,
Not to firk up your belly flounder-like, but never
To rise again.—Massinger. The Renegado, Act iii. sc. 1.

The flounder inhabits every part of the British sea, and even frequents our rivers at a great distance from the salt waters.—Pennant. British Zoology. Common Flounder.

FLOUR, or } Skinner says, Flower, pro farina, q.d. flos farinæ, (i.e.) farina
FLOWER, n. } purissima, vel potius, q.d. flos frumenti (i. e.) purissima ejus pars, glumis et furfure purgata; the flower of the corn, i. e. the purest part of it, after the husk and the bran are cleansed away. And see the quotations from Pliny in v. Floret.

Breadde of fyne floure of wheate, havynge no levyn, is slowe of digestion, and makethe alymy humours, but it nouryaheth moche; if it be levyned, it digesteth sooner.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7.

He that is thanckfull and recompenseth, offreth fyne floure.—Bible, 1551. Ecclesiasticus, c. 35.

—— The matron with uplifted eyes
Attests th' All-seeing Sovereign of the skies;
Then studious she prepares the choicest flour,
The strength of wheat, and wines an ample store.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

In the price of flour or meal we must add to the price of the corn, the profits of the miller and the wages of his servants.—Smith. The Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

FLO'URISH, v. FLO'URISH, n., FLO'URISHER. FLO'URISHING, n. FLO'URISHINGLY. } Fr. Flourir; It. Fiorire; Sp. Florecer; Lat. Florere: flos, from the Gr. Χλοος, a flower, (qv.)

To have the vigorous growth, the bloom or beauty, the showiness or gaudiness, the elegance or splendour of flowers; and thus, generally, to be in vigour or prosperity; to embellish, decorate or adorn; to move in a showy, wanton, vaunting manner.

Dere brother, quath Peres, the Deuil is ful queynte,
To encombren Holy Chirche, he casteth ful harde
And flurycheth his falsnesse.—Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Afterward speke we of scorning, which is a wicked sinne, and namely, whan he scorneth a man for his good werkes, for certes swiche scorners faren like the foule tode that may not endure to smell the swete savour of the vine whan it flourisheth.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

It needeth not you more to tellen
To make you to long dwellen
Of these yates florishinges,
Ne of compaces, ne of karuings
Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

Then let al that be in Jury, the flourishingest, and moost famous parts of the countrey, flye vnto the deserte and wylde mountaynes.—Udal. Marke, c. 13.

She is in lyke case flourishinglye decked wyth golde, precIouse stone, and pearles, not only in her many fold kyndes of ornaments as in her coopes, corporasses, chesybles, tunicles, stooles, fannons and miters, but also in misterie of counterfiete godlinesse.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

He, noble bud, his grandsire's livelie heyre,
Under the shadow of thy countenaunce
Now ginnes to shoote up faste, and flourish fayre
In learned arten, and goodlie gouernaunce.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

Sir, you find
By these gay flourishes how wearied travail
Inclines to willing rest.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 2.

Like a mountebank's jugler, with big swelling words in your preface, you raised our expectation, as if some mighty matter were to ensue; in which your design was not so much to introduce a true narrative of the King's story, as to make your own empty intended flourishes go off the better.
Milton. A Defence of the People of England, c. 1.

Also when they would cloake and extenuate the imperfection of other passions, by calling lust a promptitude or forwardness to a thing: it seemeth, that by a flourish of fine words they devise shifts, evasions, and justifications, not philosophicall but sophisticall.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 62.

He [North] was not an orator, as commonly understood, that is, not a flourisher, but all his speech was fluent, easy, and familiar, and he never used a word for ornament but for intelligence only.—R. North. Life of the Ld. Keeper North.

This is the true flourishing of a land, other things follow as the shadow does the substance; to teach thus were mere pulpitry to them.—Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

Though wild Ambition her just vengeance feels,
She wars to save, and where she strikes, she heals.
So Pallas with her javelin smote the ground,
And peaceful olives flourish'd from the wound.
Broome. On the Seat of War in Flanders.

Patriots, alas! the few that have been found,
Where most they flourish, upon English ground,
The Country's need have scantily supplied,
And the last left the scene, when Chatham died.
Cowper. Table Talk.

By continual meditations in sacred writings, a man as naturally improves and advances in holiness, as a "tree" thrives and flourishes in a kindly and well watered soil.
Bp. Horne. Com. on the Psalms, Ps. 1.

FLOUT, v. FLOUT, n. FLO'UTER. } Flout, the noun, Tooke says, is the past part. of the A. S. Flitan, jurgari, contendere, to chide, to quarrel. Skinner says, Flight or flite, to chide.

Ray (in his N. C. words) to flite, to scold or brawl.
Grose, flight, a scolding match.
To chide, to rebuke, to scoff at.

For three dayes [he] suffered with lamētable miserie to be laughed at, and flouted by Hildebrand among his paragons and monkes.—Bale. Pageant of Popes, b. v. p. 84.

Vouchsafe (my friend) therin for to amend
That is amisse, remember that our sect
Is sure to be with floutes always infect.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

But such was the disdaine of the Frenchmen against this William Longspee and the Englishmen that they could not abide them, but flouted them after an opprobrious maner with English taules.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i p. 34.

At length, when they had flouted him their fill,
They gan to cast what penance him to give.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Mutabilitie, c. 6.

For all this foul stirre they kept flouting and reviling them under their very trench and hard at their gates.
Holland. Livie, p. 71.

And not as some (whose throats their envie fayling)
Cry hoarsely, all he writes, is raylingr.
And, when his playes come forth think they can flout them,
With saying, he was a yeere about them.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Prol.

If you observe the purport and occasion of the promise of this spirit, in the 4th of John, it was when our Saviour was treating with the woman of Samaria, a great sinner, v. 18, utterly ignorant, v. 10, 23, a flouter of him, v. 15, and as yet (when Christ spake these words) purely in her natural estate.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. p. 36.

Cler. And now you have found him,
Declare what business, our embassadour.
O. Lady. What's that to ye good man flouter.
Beaum. & Fletch. Little French Lawyer, Act ii sc. 1.

They were men, it is true, but they were withal great and good men, a character which these will never arrive to, who presume to flout or despise them.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 429.

Tho' the new practising criticks are of a sort unlikely ever to understand any original book or writing; they can understand, or at least remember, and quote the subsequent reflections, flouts, and jeers which may accidently be made on such a piece.
Shaftesbury. Miscellaneous Reflections, Misc. 5. c. 2.

With whom I feast I do not fawn,
Nor if the folke should flout me, faint;
If wonted welcome be withdrawn,
I cook no kind of a complaint.
Byrom. Careless Content.

FLOW, v. FLOW, n. FLO'WING, n. FLO'WINGLY. FLO'WINGNESS. } A. S. Floo-an; Ger. Fliessen; Dut. Vlieten; Sw. Flyta. Skinner thinks from the Lat. Fluere. Wachter seems to think a foreign origin not necessary, and Tooke is decisive that the Lat. is from the A. S.

To move as water from its spring or source; to issue; to move or glide equably, smoothly, without stop or stay; to rise to fulness; and thus, to abound; applied (met.) to a style of writing, smooth, easy, and copious.

The sea eke, with his sterne wawes
Ech day floweth new againe
And by concours, of his lawes
The ebbe floweth in certaine.—Chaucer. Balades

And there went longe fyery beames lyke a floude of fyer flowing out of him.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

It is a prouerbe, by which is signifyed that in this worlde is nothing stable, permenāt nor durable, but like as the see dooth continually flowe and ebbe.
Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 49.

If God had not sent vs another helpe, we might haue wandred a whole yere in that labyrinth of riuers, yer [ere] we had found any way, either out or in, especially after wee were past ebbing and flowing, which was in foure days.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 843.

Ne is the water in more constant case;
Whether those same on high, or these belowe.
For th' occasion moveth still from place to place;
And every river still doth ebb and flowe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Mutabilitie, c. 7.

So lovely fair thou art, that sure dame Nature
Meant thee the pattern of the female creature:
Besides all this, thy flowing wit is such,
That were it not in thee 't had been too much
For woman kind. Suckling. Upon Mrs. A. J.

Now my wanton pearls I show
That to ladies fair necks grow.
Now my gold
And treasures that can ne're be told,
Shall bless this land, by my rich flow.
Beaum. & Fletch. The False One, Act iii. sc. 2.

—— I doe love
To note, and to observe: though I live out,
Free from the active torrent, yet I'ld marke
The currents, and the passages of things,
For mine oune private use, and know the ebbs,
And flows of State.—B. Jonson. The Fox, Act ii. sc. 1

And this (you will see) will in so great a person amount to, and become the matter of a full and just satisfaction indeed, even to a flowing over.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iii pt. ii. p 110

His graces are said to be, and to dwell in our hearts; because the Spirit first and primarily, who is the author of them, doth so: As the beams do therefore dwell in this visible world, or the heavens, because the sun doth first and originally dwell there, whose emanations and flowings forth they are —Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 57.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy streame,
My great example, as it is my theme!
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull:
Strong without rage, without o'er flowing full.
Denham Cooper's Hill

The winds were hush'd, the waves in ranks were cast,
As awfully as when God's people pass'd:
Those, yet uncertain on whose sails to blow,
These, where the wealth of nations ought to flow.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Great sir, your return into this nation in the 12th year of your reign, resembles the flowing of the river Nilus in the 12th degree; that year was crowned with the enjoyment of your royal person —Parliamentary Hist. Ch. II. an. 1661. Speaker's Speech to the King.

A flow of wealth, which, regulated by the essential qualities of a virtuous people, would have set all to rights, will serve only to extend the luxury, to encourage the dissipation, and to inflame the insolence and riot of a lawless crew of miscreants —Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 34.

FLO'WER, v. FLO'WER, n. FLO'WERET. FLO'WERING, n. FLO'WERLESS. FLO'WERY. } Fr. Fleur; It. Fiore; Sp. Flor; Lat. Flos, oris; from the Gr. Χλοος, propriè vigor herbarum, (Vossius.) See FLOUR; also FLORAL.

To throw forth, to bear flowers; to bloom or blossom; to be in vigour or beauty, (as a plant flowering;) to come or issue forth; to rise up, (sc. as flowers or blossoms;) and thus applied, by Bacon, to beer, when it foams or froths.

And Syre Wawein ye neueu, flour of corteysye.
R. Gloucester, p. 213.

For Inglis and Normant er stalworth men in stoure,
It is folk valiant, ouer alle thei bere the floure.
R. Brunne, p. 116.

Thanne is flesah a feel wynde, in flouryng tyme
Thorgh lecherie and lustes, so loude he gynneth blowe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 306.

And how the floures in the frith, cometh to feyre hewes.
Id. p. 238.

For ech fleische is hei, and al the glorie of it is as flour of hei: the hey driede up, and his flour falde doun, but the word of the Lord dwellith withouten ende.—Wiclif. 1 Pet. c. 1.

For all fleshe is as grasse, and all the glory of man is as the floure of grasse. The grasse widdereth, and the floure falleth away, but the word of the Lord endureth euer.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

As wel in gost as body, chast was she,
For which she floured in virginitee.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 11,976.

And if I vnto you mine othes bede
For mine excuse, a scorne shal be my mede,
Your chere floureth, but it wol not seed.
Id. The Assemblie of Ladies.

And certainly a man hath most honour
To dien in his excellence and flour,
Whan he is sicker of his goode name.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3050

For not iclad in silke was he
But all in floures and flourettes
Ipainted all with amorettes. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And in his beke of coloure nine
An herb he brought flowrinde all grene. Id. Dreame.

Downe by a flourie grene it went
Ful thick of grasse, full soft and swete. Id. Ib.

Whan comen is the mery Maie,
He spret his winge and vp he fleeth,
And vnder all aboute he seeth
The fayre lustie floures sprynge. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Or els of that noble clerke of Almayne, whiche late floured, called Agricola: whose worke prepareth inuention, tellynge the places from whens an argumente, for the profe of any matere maye be taken with lyttell studye.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 11.

Tho numbers all of beardes, vnto the citie came with preasse.
To Kyng Latinus court, and brought in sight the bodies twayne.
Of Almon flouryng lad, and good Galesus fouly slain.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii.

And when they weare wel charged with wine, at the sonne rising theye set garlandes of flowers vpon their headds, & mounted into galleis, nor onely with hope of victory, but with a triûphe made before hand.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 61.

He was in the pryme flower of his youth, & through other men's feare fled away emonges those horsemen, which were amazed at Philoras torments.—Id. Ib. fol. 147.

Thou barrine ground, whom Winter's wrath hath wasted,
Art made a mirrour to behold my plight:
Whilome thy fresh Spring flower'd, and after hasted
Thy summer prowde with daffodillies dight.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. January.

The one was in her flow'ring age,
The other to too old;
The first with beautie did allure,
The latter with her gold.—Warner. Albion's Eng. b. ii.

Immortal Amarant, a flour which once
In Paradise fast by the tree of life
Began to bloom, but soon for Man's offence
To Heav'n remov'd where first it grew, there grows,
And flours aloft, shading the fount of life.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

The young men, the flower and manhood in generall of the cittie, he [Tarquin] wrought and won to himself with gifts: and so partly with raising slanders upon the King in all places and charging upon him odious crimes, he grew very great and mightie.—Holland. Livie, p. 33.

And other whiles vaine toyes she would devize,
As her fantasticke wit did most delight:
Sometimes her head she fondly would agulze
With gaudy girlonds, or fresh flowrets dight
About her necke, or rings of rushes plight.
Spenser Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

No more shall trenching warre channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofes
Of hostile paces.—Shakes. 1 Pt Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

But then note, that an extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth, as they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowring
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 312.

Whilome I usde (as thou right well dost know)
My little flocke on westerne downs to keep,
Not far from whence, Sabrinaes streame doth flow;
And flowrie bancks with silver liquor steepe.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

What sweet delight a quiet life affords,
And what it is to be from bondage free,
Far from the madding worldling's hoarse discords,
Sweet flow'ry place, I first did learn of thee.
Drummond, son. 49.

As boys on holydays let loose to play,
Lay waggish traps for girls that pass that way;
Then shout to see in dirt and deep distress
Some silly cit in her flower'd foolish dress.
Dryden. An Essay upon Satire.

Then party-colour'd flowers of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head:
This done, she sang and carol'd out so clear,
That men and Angels might rejoice to hear.
Id. Palamon & Arcite.

Sweet Muse, who lov'st the virgin Spring,
Hither thy sunny flow'rets bring,
And let thy richest chaplet shed
Its fragrance round my Lamia's head.
Francis. Horace, b. i. Ode 26.

Last night, when after many a heavy sigh,
And many a painful thought, the God of Sleep,
Insensible and soft, had stole upon me;
Methought I found me by a murm'ring brook,
Reclin'd at ease upon the flow'ry margin.
Rowe. Ulysses, Act iii.

——— Retir'd
To secret winding flower-enwoven bowers.
Far from the dull impertinence of man.—Thomson. Spring.

In King Charles's collection was a miniature in oil of this Queene [Mary] by Antonio More, painted on a round gold plate, in blue flowered velvet and gold tissue with sleeves of fur, two red roses and a pair of gloves in her hand.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 6.

And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage and tyrant's angry steel;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud contempt, or favour's fost'ring sun.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

Return, celestial Muse!
By whose bright fingers o'er my infant head,
Lull'd with immortal symphony, were spread
Fresh bays and flow'rets of a thousand hues.
Jones, The Muse Recalled.

It is the flowery species, so remarkable for its weakness and momentary duration, that gives us the liveliest idea of beauty and elegance.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful

FLOYT. } Le. Fluting, playing on the flute.
FLO'YTING. } See FLUTE.

Singing he was, or floyting all the day,
He was as freshe, as is the moneth of May.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 91.

And many a floit and liting horne
And pipes made of grene corne.—Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

FLU'CTUATE, v. } Fr. Fluctuer; It. Fluttuare; Sp. Fluctuar; Lat. Fluctuare, from fluctus, a wave, (fluere, to flow.)
FLU'CTUANT.
FLUCTUA'TION,

To flow or float, to and fro; to have the motion or action of a wave; to waver; to be unsteady, inconstant, unsettled, irresolute, undecided, undetermined.

——— The Tempter
New parts puts on, and as to passion mov'd,
Fluctuats disturb'd, yet comely and in act
Rais'd, as of some great matter to begin.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

[The Papists] leave her [the Church of Christ] to be driven about with the whirlpools of a fluctuating conscience, or to be tost'd with the hurricanes of tentations, and at last to suffer shipwreck.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. ii. p. 119.

The first describeth the times of the militant church, whether it be fluctuant, as the ark of Noah, or movable, as the ark in the Wilderness, or at rest, as the ark in the Temple: that is, the state of the Church in persecution, in remove, and in peace.—Bacon. Of Learning, b. ii.

The fluctuation or pensility of the bowels, from the agitation of the waves of the sea, and from the winde gathered about the diaphragma, are alike: therefore such as are troubled with the hypochondriaque wind, doe often dream of navigations, and agitations upon the waters.
Id. Ib. by G. Wats, b. iv. c. 1.

So sounds, as fluctuates, the troubled sea
As the expiring tempest plows its way.
King. Ruffinus; or the Favourite.

Teach me how I came by such an opinion of worth and virtue, what it is which at one time raises it so high, and at another time reduces it to nothing, how these disturbances and fluctuations happen.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. iii. s. 2.

Wanting those principles, discoverable only by Revelation, which teaches man's true end, and which excites his endeavours to the attainment of it, human knowledge only fluctuates in the head, but comes not near the heart, where peace of mind is engendered.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 32.

The excentricities, it is true, will still vary, but too slowly, and to so small an extent, as to produce no inconveniency from fluctuation of temperature and season.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

FLUE. Of unknown etymology. Phaer renders Concha by this word.

Pegge, "Flew,—a narrow outlet for smoke, to increase the draft of air," (North.)

Grose, "Flue,—the coping of a gable or end wall of a house. Norf."

Him Tryton combrous bare, that galeon blew with whelkid shell.
Whose wrinckly wreathed flue, did fearful shril in seas outyell.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. x.

1654. Aug. 9. [Went] to the old and ragged city of Leicester, large and pleasantly situated, but despicably built, y^e chimney flues, like so many smith's forges.—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

FLU'ENT, adj. } From Fluens, entis, the pres. part. of the Lat. Fluere; A. S. Flowan, to flow, (qv.)
FLU'ENT, n.
FLU'ENCE.
FLU'ENCY.
FLU'ENTLY.
FLU'ENTNESS.
FLU'IBLE.
FLU'ID, n.
FLU'ID, adj.
FLU'IDITY.
FLU'IDNESS.

Moving, passing on, like a flood or stream of water; current, transient, transitory.

Fluence, fluency, fluent, and fluently, are applied (in general) met.—to a flow or course of style in writing or speaking, (&c.) an affluence, copiousness, readiness of speech, without hesitation in delivery.

And worse those haughty threat'nings they abhor,
With fame, from Brescia's ancient fighters brought;
Vaine fame, the people's trusted orator;
Whose speech (too fluent) their mistakes has wrought.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 2.

Such an extraction Daniel counselled the King to draw out of his perishable felicity, and by this method, while the matter of worldly goods remaineth fluent and transitory, there may be great utility derived even from the consideration of these qualities.—Mountague. Devoute Ess. Treat. 6. s. 2.

Of which, as long, as both the grace and powre
His person entertainde: she lou'd the man;
And (at the fluents of the ocean
Nere earth's extreame bounds) dwelt with him.
Chapman. A Hymne to Venus.

He is conceited to have a voluble and smart fluence of tongue.—Milton. Animad. upon the Remonstrants' Def. Pref.

We know that S. W. hath great fluency in the declamatory style, and that Henry VIII was no saint.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 130.

For when this humour of mediasance springeth in the head of the company, it runnes fluently in to the less noble parts.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, Treat. 2. s. 2.

The fluentness, and consistencie of time has not this inconvenience, to deny us the taking a dimention of it.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. Treat. 12. s. 3.

Yet is it [the sea] not capable (being a liquid fluible body) in the greatest depth and widenesse of such elevations as we see in high mountaynous regions.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. v. c. 13.

While the humour is attenuated, it is more fluid than it was before, and troubleth the body a great deal more, until it be dried up and consumed.—Bacon. Nat. Hist. § 68.

To this he [Boyle] adds a close history of fluidity and firmness, which tends mightily to the elucidating of those useful doctrines.—Glanvill, Ess. 3.

I knew him well, he was sagacious, cunning,
Fluent in words, and bold in peaceful councils,
But a cold, unactive hand in war
Rowe. The Fair Penitent, Act ii.

——— Upborne
By frothy billowes thousands float the stream
In combrous mail, with love of further shore;
Confiding in their hands, that sed'lous strive
To cut the outrageous fluent. J. Philips. Blenheim.

It is nevertheless certain, that in order to follow him in his quadratures, they must find fluents from fluxions, and in order to this, they must know to find fluxions from fluents; and in order to find fluxions, they must first know what fluxions are.—Berkeley. The Analyst, § 47.

We reason with such fluency and fire,
The beaux we baffle, and the learned tire,
Against her Prelates plead the Church's cause,
And from our Judges vindicate the Laws.
Tickel. Epist. from a Lady to a Gent. at Avignon

The truth is, he [Edmund Bunney] was the most fluid preacher in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, for he seldom or never studied for what he was to deliver, but would preach and pray extempore.—Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

He ought to treat of the effects of different sorts of alimentary substances upon the fluids and solids of a human body
Arbuthnot. On Aliments, Introd.

For there may be corpuscles of such a nature as consider ably to lessen that agitation of the minute parts by which the fluidity of liquors and the warmth of other bodies, are maintained.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 750.

It may be doubted whether in case water be not fluid upon the account of a congenite motion in the corpuscles it consists of, its fluidness may not proceed from the agitation of the ambient air, either immediately contiguous to the surface, or communicating its agitation to the water by propagation of its impulse, through the vessell, that interposes betwixt them.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 571.

Meditation is that that doth take away the darkness of the understanding; and then for the fluidness of the understanding, because it is apt to spring from one thing to another: Meditation in its very nature is the fixing of it.
Bates. On Divine Meditation, c. 4.

Vain is the flow'ry verse, when reasoning sage
And sober precept fill the studious page;
Enough if there the fluent numbers please,
With native clearness, and instructive ease.
Mason. Fresnoy's Art of Painting

I could indeed more patiently bear to be accused of wanting genius, fluency, or elegance, than of wanting diligence in the exercise of that office to which your authority hath called me.—Louth. Lectures, by Gregory, vol. i. Lect. 1.

For the dragoons, a wordy race,
Not burthen'd with religious grace,
Spoke fluently the sutler's tongue.—Cooper. Ver-Vert, c. 3.

The second supposition is, that the earth being a mixed mass somewhat fluid, took as it might do, its present form, by the joint action of the mutual gravitation of its parts and its rotatory motion.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

Were it not for the presence of heat, or for a certain degree of it, all fluids would be frozen.—Id. Ib. c. 21.

The grand importance of this dissolving power, the great office indeed of fire in the economy of nature, is keeping things in a state of solution, that is to say, in a state of fluidity.—Id. Ib.

FLUME. Lye has "A.S. Flum, flumen;" Lacombe, "Fluix, flume, rivière;" flumen, from the verb fluere; A.S. Flow-an, to flow.

A stream, a river.

And al the cuntre of Judee wente out to him, and alle men of Jerusalem, and thei weren baptisid of him in the flum Jordan, and knowlecchiden her synnes.

Wiclif. Mark, c. 1.

FLU'MMERY. Probably a corruption of Frumenty, (qv.) Applied, (met.) to—.

Fulsome flattery, or obsequiousness.

I allow of orange and butter-milk posseta, of roasted apples, flummery, or any other light and cooling thing they call for.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 590.

The fifth book of pease-porridge; under which are included, frumetary, water-gruel, milk-porridge, rice-milk, flummery, stir-about, and the like.—King. Art of Cookery.

FLU'RRY, v. } Perhaps a corruption of Flut-
FLU'RRY, n. } ter, (qv.) A. S. Floteran, fluctuare, volitare, leviter et frequenter movere;

To waver, to move lightly and inconstantly; to agitate, to toss.

We therefore trusted ourselves to the mercy of the waves, and in about half an hour the boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the North.—Swift. A Voyage to Lilliput.

But Fortune, not minding her ladyship's thunder,
And wiping her forehead, cry'd "well may you wonder
To see me thus flurry'd."—E. Moore. Envy & Fortune.

We were at first quite flurried and confounded with the hurry in the garrison, the perpetual noise of cannon, and the reports of the soldiers going through their firing exercise.

Swinburne. Spain, Let. 29.

They are so very noisy and impatient till the shew [the bull-fight] begins, and in such a violent commotion while it lasts, that one is kept in perpetuall alarm and flurry of spirits for the first or second time of assisting at this diversion.

Id. Ib. Let. 40.

FLUSH, v. } See Flood.
FLUSH, n. } Ger. Fliessen, to flow; fluss, a
FLUSH, adj. } flood.
FLU'SHING, n. } To flow,—to come or rush on as a flood, rapidly, violently; to overflow;—to have or give a quick or sudden motion, to rush, to start; to flow, as the blood to the surface of the body; and thus, to give a bloom or redness; to redden; to give a warmth, to warm, to animate.

And it sounded vnto me euen as it hadde bene the flushynge noyse of many waters.—Bayle. Image, pt. iii.

But while he and his companie like greedy wolfes were ackyng after their prave, the wynde rose highe and a great tempestuous rage and furious storm sodaynely flusshed and drowned xii. of his great shippes.—Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

And all her vitall powres, with motion nimble
To succour it [her heart] themselves gan there assemble;
That by the swift recourse of flushing blood
Right plaine appear'd, though she it would dissemble,
And fayned still her former angry mood,
Thinking to hide the depth by troubling of the flood.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 6.

As when a faulcon hath with nimble flight
Flowne at a flush of ducks foreby the brooke,
The trembling foule dismay'd with dreadful sight
Of death, the which them almost overtooke,
Doe hide themselves from her astonying looke
Amongst the flags and covert round about

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 2.

There is Christ's body indeed now, and some few bodies else, Elias, and Moses, and Enoch, who perhaps are there now in their bodies, but the shoal and the flush of mankind, whom all the things there are prepared for, and prepared from the beginning of the world, they shall not come into it till after the Resurrection.

Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iii. p. 113.

——— Now the time is flush,
When crouching marrow in the bearer strong
Cries (of it selfe) no more.

Shakespeare. Timon of Athens, Act v. sc. 5.

——— Many hot inrodes
They make in Italy, the borders maritime
Lacke blood to thinke on't and flush youth reuolt.

Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 4.

It was not properly a passion, which is a subitaneous flushing: indeed that of his adultery was from such a flush of passion; but this of Uriah's murder was a more continued distemper, sedately stirred, and retained and considered of.

Goodwin. Works, vol. v. pt. ii. p. 163.

But in a man that there is a sympathy and fellow moving of the body, together with the motions of the passions, may be proved by the pale colour, the red flushing of the face, the trembling of the joynts, and panting and leaping of the heart in fear and anger.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 63.

Afterwards in the progress of the dispute as men are apt especially when flushed with victory to grow both warmer and bolder, he [St. Austin] ventured to proceed further, and to lay it down for a maxim, that any baptism was good by whomsoever administered in the form of words, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.

Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 149.

And as he view'd her ardent, o'er and o'er,
Love, gratitude, and pity, wept at once:
Confus'd and frighten'd at his sudden tears
Her rising beauties flush'd a higher bloom.

Thomson. Autumn.

Rod. A burning purple flushes o'er my face.

Rowe. The Royal Convert, Act v.

Moth. Is this your game? I would not give sixpence for it! What, you have a passion for her pin-money; no, no, country ladies are not so flush of it.

Vanburgh. The Provoked Husband, Act ii. sc. 1.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are pains in the stomach many hours after repast, sickness, hickup, vomiting, a flushing in the countenance, foulness of the tongue.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, c. 1. Prop. 2.

Clodius, flushed with this victory, set fire with his own hands to the Temple of the Nymphs; where the books of the Censors and the public registers of the city were kept, which were all consum'd with the fabrick itself.

Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 5.

But now the sounds of population fail,
No cheerful murmurs fluctuate in the gale.
No busy steps the grass grown footway tread,
But all the blooming flush of life is fled.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

FLU'STER, v. } Probably a corruption of FLU'STER, n. } Flush; in its consequential usage,—

To warm, to animate; to heat; and thus, to intoxicate; to confuse or throw into confusion; to bluster, to bustle.

Three else of Cyprus, noble swelling spirites,
(That hold their honours in a wary distance,
The very elements of this warrelike isle,)
Have I to night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act ii. sc. 3.

The Apostle seems here most peculiarly to have directed this encomium of the Gospel, as a defiance to the philosophers of his time, the flustring vain-glorious Greeks, who pretended so much to magnify, and even adore the wisdom they professed.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 6.

But when Caska adds to his natural impudence the fluster of a bottle, that which fools called fire when he was sober, all men abhor as outrage when he is drunk.—Tatler, No. 252.

Being plied with two or three other imaginary bumpers of different wines, equally delicious, and a little vexed with this fantastic treat, he pretended to grow flustred, and gave the Barmecide a good box on the ear, but immediately recovering himself, Sir, says he, I beg you ten thousand pardons, but I told you before, that it was my misfortune to be quarrelsome in my drink.—Guardian, No. 162.

When full of zeal and Aristotle,
And flustred by the second bottle,
He taught the orator to speak
His periods in correcter Greek.—Cawthorn. Antiquarians.

The parish need not to have been in such a fluster with Molly. You might have told them, child, your grandmother wore better things new out of the shop

Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. iv. c. 9.

FLUTE, v. } Written by Chaucer, Floyt, (qv.)
FLUTE, n. } Dut. Fluyten, fluyte; Fr. Fleuter,
FLU'TING, n. } fleute; It. Flauto; Sp. Flauta; Low Lat. Flauta. The Dut. Fluyter (says Junius) is, Tibicen, tibiam inflans, whom for this reason they also called flator, a flando; the Fr. Flute is formed thus by Menage, Flare, flatum, flatuo, flatuto, flatutare, flautare.

To flute,—is tibiam inflare; to blow into a pipe.

To flute, (in architecture)—to form hollows resembling the hollow or concavity of a pipe, when divided lengthways.

Nowe likewise sounded vp the drums, trumpets, and flutes, which would have encouraged any man, had he never so little heart or courage in him.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 131.

The hoby, sagbut deep, recorder, and the flute:
Even from the shrillest shaum unto the cornamute.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 4.

——— Anon they move
In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood
Of flutes and soft recorders.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. i.

The oars of silver, which kept stroke in rowing after the sound of musick, of flutes, howboys, citherns, viols, and such other instruments as they played upon in the barge.

North. Plutarch, p. 763.

If fluted, with as many as the Ionic, half as deep as large; the listel or space between the grooves, a third of the depth; yet not so precisely, but that according to the compass and station of the column the flutes may be augmented to thirty and above.—Evelyn. Of Architecte & Architecture.

The cauliculi, the bell or burst under the leaves resembling Callimachus's basket, under which they are carv'd, fall exactly with the hollow of the flutings.

Evelyn. Of Architecte & Architecture.

If a stage player, be it a man or woman, a charioteer, gladiator, race-runner, a fencer, a practicer of Olympian games, a flute-player, a fiddler, a harper, a dancer, an alehouse-keeper, come to turn Christian; either let him give over these professions, or else be rejected.

Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vii. sc. 3.

The breathing flute's soft notes are heard around,
And the shrill trumpets mix their silver sound.

Pope. January & May.

From yon high cliff I plunge into the main;
Take the last present of thy dying swain:
And cease my silent flute, the sweet Mænalian strain.

Dryden. Virgil, Past. 8.

——— A Faun before me stood;
A flute he held, which, as he softly blew,
The feather'd warblers to the sound he drew;
Then to my hand the precious gift consign'd.

Sir W. Jones. Arcadia

FLU'TTER, v. } A. S. Floteran; Dut. Vled-
FLU'TTER, n. } deren; Ger. Flatteren, flot-
FLU'TTERING. } teren; Sw. Fladra. Volitare, leviter et frequenter movere, palpitare; to fly or flit, to move lightly and frequently. A frequentative from the A. S. Flow-an, to flow or float.

To move as any thing floating, when shaken by the wind; and thus, to shake quickly; to vibrate; (met.) to be unsteady or inconstant; to waver in uncertainty. See To Flurry.

Vain glorious man, when fluttering wind does blow
In his light winges, is lifted up to skie.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

Suddenly an innumerable flight
Of harmefull fowles about them fluttering cride,
And with their wicked winges them ofte did smight,
And sore annoyed, groping in that grisely night.

Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 12.

Anne. Set the grave councils up upon their shelves again, and string them hard, lest their various and jangling opinions put their leaves into a flutter.

Milton. Animad. upon Remonstrants' Defence.

Naples, 1645. This place [a labyrinth under ground] is so haunted with bats that their perpetual fluttering endangered the putting out our linkes.—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

I may be applauded by the lookers on, as brave and full of fortitude, when the bates and flutterings of a conscience within shall blow up coles, and kindle nothing but flames that shall consume mee.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 11.

Our thoughts are like a bird in a cage, which flutters the more because of its confinement, so our thoughts are apt to run strayingly out when we confine them to such a duty as this [divine meditation] is.

Bates. On Divine Meditation, c. 3.

So have I seen in black and white
A prating thing, a magpye hight,
Majestically stalk;
A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride and talk. Pope. Artemisia.

But all the gentler morals, such as play
Thro' life's more cultur'd walks and charm the way,
These, far dispers'd, on tim'rous pinions fly,
To sport and flutter in a kinder sky

Goldsmith. The Traveller.

Ev'n now thou 'rt nightly seen to add
One insect to the fluttering crowd;
And still thy trifling heart is glad,
To join the vain, and court the proud.

Byron. To a Youthful Friend.

She stay'd to hear the mourner sing,
The rest, to nature true,
The flutter of the gayer wing,
The vacant song pursue. Lovibond. Stanzas.

FLUX, v. } Flux (the disease) is sometimes in our old authors written FLUX, n. } flix, (qv.) Lat. Flux-us, from FLUX, adj. } fluere, fluxum, to flow.
FLUXA'TION. }
FLU'XIBLE. }
FLUXIBI'LITY. }
FLUXI'LITY. }
FLU'XION. }
FLU'XIONARY. }
FLU'XIONIST. }
FLU'XIVE. }
FLU'XURE. }

To flux, is to reduce from a solid to a fluid or liquid state, and thus, to melt; also, to pass out, clear or cleanse out, to purge.

Flux, the noun, is a flowing (away;) an issue or passage; a flowing (together,) a confluence, a concourse.

——— And wenne ich dranke late
Ich have a flux of a foul mouth. wel fyf dayes after.

Piers Ploughman, p. 95.

And fendede hem fro foul uveles. fevers and fluxes.

Id. p. 368.

And lo a womman that hodde a blodi flix twelve yeer neighede bihynde & touchide the hemme of his cloth.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 9.

The 28th, [Jan. 1595,] at four of the clocke in the morning, our General, Sir Francis Drake, departed this life, having bene extremely sicke of the fluxe, which began the night before to stop on him.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 588.

For in the nyght they could suffre no thynge on them, and so slept all naked, and in the mornyng colde toke them or they were ware, and that caste them into feuers and fluxes without remedy, and as well dyed great men as meane people.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 103.

Some faine that these should be the cataracts of heauen, which were all opened at Noe's flood. But I think them rather to be such fluxions and eruptions as Aristotle, in his booke de Mundo, saith to chance in the sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol ii. pt. ii. p. 21.

Surely, that God is mercifull, that will admit offences to be expiated by the sigh, and fluxed eyes.
Feltham, pt. i. Res. 89.

The next year was calamitous, bringing strange fluxes upon men, and murrain upon cattle.
Milton. History of England, b. vi.

1. Ontel. 'Tis not the wind, sure:
That's still and calm, no noise, no flux of waters.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 4.

The sectaries of Thales and Pythagoras, together with the Stoicks, do say, that the matter is variable, mutable, alterable, and fluxible, all wholly thorow the universall world.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 666.

But the evening deawes cause them [pearles] to be soft and fluxible.—Id. Ammianus, p. 238.

For the fluxibility of human nature is so great, that it is no wonder if errors should have crept in, the ways being so many: but it is a great wonder of God that none should ever creep in.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 693.

The dog hath need of no such testimony of logicians, for false it is and counterfeit, because it is the smell of itself and scent of the nose, which by the tract of the foot and the fluxion of the odour coming from the beast, sheweth him which way it fled.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 788.

And this is wrought the rather, by means of those fluxions which rest upon waters, looking glasses, or any such mirrors by way of repercussion.—Id. Ib. p. 594.

Their arguments are as fluxive as liquor spilt upon a table; which with your finger you may draine as you will.
B. Jonson. Discoveries.

These often bath'd she in her fluxive eyes,
And often kiss'd, and often 'gan to tear
Shakespeare. A Lover's Complaint.

Longer from tears that could not stay a whit,
Whose influence [heaven's] on every lower source,
From the swoln fluxure of the clouds doth shake
A rank impostume upon every lake.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars.

'Twas he that gave our Senate purges,
And flux't the House of many a burgess.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

Apollo heard; and suppliant as he stood,
His heavenly hand restrain'd the flux of blood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

They [the Siamese] believe a continual fluxation and transmigration of souls from eternity.
Leslie. Short Method with the Deists.

Our experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least, fluxility of the bodies here below.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 75.

Whereas, quantities generated in equal times are greater or lesser according to the greater or lesser velocity wherewith they increase and are generated,—a method hath been found to determine quantities from the velocities of their generating motions; and such velocities are called fluxions: and the quantities generated are called flowing quantities.
Berkeley. The Analyst, § 3.

Even so it cannot be denied that you may apply the rules of the fluxionary method.—Id. Ib. § 32.

Qu. 43. Whether an algebraist, fluctionist, geometrician, or demonstrator of any kind can expect indulgence for obscure principles or incorrect reasonings.—Id. Ib.

Habit so foul! there is, in short,
Nothing but salivation for't!
But what can salivation do?
It has been flux't, and refluxt too.
Byron. Verses on a Black Bob Wig.

The only idea probably which this term [dissolves] raised in the reader's mind, was that of fire melting metals, resins, and some other substances, fluxing ores, running glass, and assisting us in many of our operations, chymical or culinary.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 21.

Although it be scarcely possible to penetrate to the fountains of this celestial Nile, yet it may surely be allowed us to pursue the meanders of the stream, to mark the flux and reflux of its waters, and even to conduct a few rivulets into the adjacent plains.
Louth. Lectures, by Gregory, vol. i. Lec. 2.

Our argument for such a translation is the flux nature of living languages.
Abp. Newcombe. Rev. Translation of the Bible, p. 233.

Why humour (as 'tis ens) we thus define it,
To be a quality of air or water,
And in itself holds these two properties,
Moisture and fluxure.
Fielding. The Covent Garden Journal, No. 55.

FLY, v. FLY, n. FLY'ER. FLY'ING, n. } A. S. Fle-an, fleog-an; volare; Dut. Vliegen; Ger. Vliegen; Sw. Flyga. See FLEE, and FLIGHT.

To fly and to flee, are by usage distinguished: the former very commonly implying the motion of wings, the latter not.

To move, go or pass away, quickly, speedily; with the speed or quickness of a bird on the wing; to move or remain, or cause to move or remain, in the air, like a bird; to escape, to evade, to avoid.

And tho he was ylowe an hey, & ne cowthe not a ligte,
A doun nud so gret eir to the erthe he fel and pigte,
That al to pesea he to rof, that beter hym hadde ybe
Haue bi leued ther doune, than ylerned for to fle
R. Gloucester, p. 29.

And the fowles that flowe forth.—Piers Plowhman.

The fox answered, in faith it shal be don;
And as he spake the word al sodently
The cok brake from his mouth deliverly,
And high upon a tree he flew anon.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,423.

Alein answered; I count him not a fle.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4190.

But this Neptune his herte in vayne
Hath upon robberie sette,
The brid is flowe, and he was let,
The fayre made is hym escaped.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

But I dare take this on honde,
If that she had wynges two,
She wolde have flowen him tho.—Id. Ib.

But to conclude, much worth in litle writte,
The highest flying hauke will stoupe at laste.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bath.

That is to witte, the grounde & foundacion of fayth, without which had ready before, all the spiritual coumfort that any mun maye speake of can neuer auaile a fye.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1143.

The 15th we had leaue to depart with a fly-boat laden with sugar that came from Sant-Thome.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 132.

——— He with a constant mind
Man's beastliness so loaths, that flying human kind,
The black and darksome nights, the bright and gladsome days
Indifferent are to him, his hope on God that stays.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Which doe possess the empire of the aire,
Betwixt the centred earth, and azure skies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair.
Spenser. Muiopotmos.

With courage charge, with comeliness retire,
Make good their ground, and then relieve their guard,
Withstand the ent'rer, then pursue the flyer,
New form their battle, shifting ev'ry ward.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. ii.

In vaine the Welsh wild mountaines fence
The flier from his foe,
Or Gerneth castell, when as flames
Throughout the buildings goe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 19.

So also faith is express'd by coming to him, which implies not so much a perswasion that a man's sins are forgiven by God, as a recourse to him, to forgive them, as a flying to him that is gracious, and chosen by God on purpose.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. pt. ii. p. 76.

——— She knows your love!
Cleom. She must have known it long,
But warily affects an ignorance
That flies the notice of it.
Southern. The Spartan Dame, Act i. sc. 1.

The fiers now a doubtful fight maintain
While the fleet horse in squadrons scour the plain.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

The fly-kind, if under that name we comprehend all other flying insects, as well such as have four as such as have but two wings, of both which kinds there are many subordinate genera, will be found in multitude of species, to equal, if not exceed, both the foremention'd kinds.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i. p. 23.

And if he hit to make his fly right, and have the luck to hit, also, where there is store of trouts, a dark day and a right wind, he will catch such store of them, as will encourage him to grow more and more in love with the art of fly-making.—Walton. Angler, pt. i. c. 2.

"Your care," said Gatimozin, "is needless; they will not fly; they come to die at the feet of their sovereign." Such should be the disposition and resolution of the disciples and soldiers of Christ.
Bp. Horne. Essays & Thoughts on various Subjects.

On the forehead he [Holbein] painted a fly, and sent the picture to the person for whom it was designed, the gentleman struck with the beauty of the piece, went eagerly to brush off the fly, and found the deceit.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

I have seen a curious engine compounded of wheels, screws, and pulleys, whereby a lady with a single hair of her head might raise a stone of two hundred weight: the hair was fastened to a wheel something like the flyer of a jack.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 3.

During our course from Teneriffe to Bonavista we saw great numbers of flying fish, which from the cabin windows appear beautifull beyond imagination, their sides having the colour and brightness of burnished silver.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 2.

In teasing fly-time, dank and frosty days,
With unctuous liquids, or the lees of oil,
Rub their soft skins between the parted locks.
Dyer. The Fleece, b. i.

FOAL, v. FOAL, n. FO'ALING, n. } Goth. Fula; A. S. Fola, fole; Dut. Veulen; Ger. Fullin; Sw. Fole. Ihre thinks from A. S. Fdian, sequi, to follow; because the foal or filly follows the dam even more anxiously than other animals. It is not improbably from Goth. Full-jan; A. S. Fyllan; Dut. Vullen; Ger. Fullen, to fill: that with which (sc. the mare, &c.) is full or filled. The noun is applied to—

The young of a mare or ass.

The carter smote and cried as he were wood,
Hent scot, hent brok, what, spare ye for the stones!
The fend (quoth he) you feeche body and bones,
As ferforthly as ever ye were foled,
So mochel wo as I have with you tholed.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v. 7127.

——— And from a tender colt they take the knap
That from the front at foaling first the damme for loue doth snap,
Whom now thei do preuent.
Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. iv.

And cuts the forehead of a new-born fole,
Robbing the mother's love. Dryden. Ib.

Worldely princes loue fierce stiering coursers, foled euen purposely for warres, and wel broken and taught thereafter.
Udal. Luke, c. 19.

Reioice thou greatly, O doughter Sion, be gladde, O doughter Jerusalem. For lo, the King commeth vnto the, euen the ryghtuous and Sauyoure: Lowlye and symple is he, he rydeth vpon an asse, and vpon the foale of an asse.
Bible, 1551. Zachary, c. 9.

Of all the rest in that great waste that went,
Of those quick carrions the most eminent
Was a poor mule upon the common bred,
And from his foaling farther never fed.
Drayton. The Moon-calfe.

With that his strong dog, of no dastard kinde,
(Swift as the foales conceived by the winde,)
He set upon the wolfe.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

Then he again, by way of irrision, "yee say very true indeed, that will ye, quoth hee, when a mule shall bring fourth a fole." Afterwards when this Galba began to rebell and aspire unto the empire, nothing hastened him in this designe of his so much, as the foling of a mule.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 212.

FOAM, v. FOAM, n. FO'AMY. } A. S. Fam, spuma, fome, froth; Faman, spumare, to fome or froth, (Somner.) Chaucer (as Junius has noticed) writes Vomes. Setiger spumis humeros notavit; "The bristled bore marked with vomes the shulders of Hercules," (Boet. Le Cons. lib. iv. met. 7.) Skinner derives from fumus; Wachter, from spuma, detracto sibilo.—There seems no occasion to go farther than the A. S.

To throw forth or emit foam or froth; (met.) to rave or rage.

And lo a spiryt takith him and sodeinly he crieth, and hurtlith down, and to draweth him with foome.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 9.

And se a spirite taketh him, and sodenlye he crieth, and he teareth him, that he foometh againe.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Howe so it were, the windes nowe howsted vp our sayles,
Wee furrowing in the foaming flooddes to take our best aunales.
Gascoigne. A Deuice of a Maske for Viscount Montacute.

[Tyndall] answereth me with an hydeous exclamacion, and crying out vpon my fleshlines and folye, fometh oute hys hyghe spyrituall sentence in thys fashion.
Sir T. More. Workes, p 379.

The shores they leave; with ships the seas are spred;
Cutting the fome, by the blew seas they swepe.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

Aye the wynde was in the sayle,
Over fomes they flett withowtyn fayle,
The wethur them forth gan swepe.
Le Bone Florence of Rome. Ritson, v. 3.

But vnto Bitias she it raught with charge and he anon
The fomy bolle of golde vpturnde, and drew till all was gon.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. i.

Let me here contemplate thee
First, cheerful bridegroom, and first let me see
How thou prevent'st the sun
And his red foaming horses dost outrun
Donne. Raising of the Bridegroom.

To conclude, the very foaming channell of the river, stained and died with the barbarians' bloud, was even amazed to see such strange and uncouth sights.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 76.

—— Look how two boars
Together side by side, their threat ning tusks do whet,
And with their gnashing teeth their angry fome do bite,
Whilst still they should'ring seek each othere where to smite.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 12.

The warlike charlot turn'd upon the back,
With the dead horses in their traces ty'd,
Drags their fat carcase through the foamy brack,
That drew it late undauntedly in pride.
Id. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b iii.

—— I should offer wrong
To her mind's fortitude, should I but ask
How she can brook the rough high going sea,
Over whose foamy back our ship, well rigg'd
With hope and strong assurance, must transport us.
Massinger. The Renegado, Act v. sc. 3.

Careless in Sabine woods I stray'd,
A grisly foaming wolf unfed
Met me unarm'd yet trembling fled.
Roscommon. Horace, b. i. Ode 22.

When the wind whistles through the crackling masts,
When through the yawning ship the foaming sea
Rowls bubbling in; then, then, I'll clasp thee fast,
And in transporting love forget my fear.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act ii.

More pleas'd we are to see a river lead
His gentle streams along a flowery mead,
Than from high banks to hear loud torrents roar,
With foamy waters on a muddy shore.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

But now the waters, swell'd with heavy rains
And melted snows, had delug'd all the plains;
And loudly foaming, with resistless force,
Had borne the bridge before them in their course.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. ix.

Yet let me choose some pine-topt precipice,
Abrupt and shaggy, whence a foamy stream,
Like Anio, tumbling roars.—Warton. The Enthusiast.

FOB. Ger. Fuppe or Fupsack, saculus, says Skinner; but of these words Wachter makes no mention. Applied to—
A small pocket; the pocket for the watch.

—— He who had so lately sack'd
The enemy, had done the fact,
Had rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs.—Hudib. pt. iii. c. 1.

When a holy black Swede, the son of Rob,
With a saint at his chin, and a seal at his fob,
Shall not see one New-year's day in that year,
Then let England make good cheer
Swift. The Windsor Prophecy.

FOB, v. } Ger. Foppen, illudere, vel illudendo
FOB, n. } vexare; which Wachter thinks derived from Italian speech in the confines of the Alps; and Skinner, from fabbare, and that from fabulari, to fable, to tell fables, delusive or deceitful stories.
To delude, to deceive, to trick, to cheat; to put off with a trick, an evasion.

Maketh of Lyer a lang cart to lede alle thes othere
As fobbes and fattours. Piers Ploukman, p. 34.

The man, sir, that when gentlemen are tir'd gives them a fob, (i. e. fub)—Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iv. sc. 3.

2 Suit. Pish, pish, widow, y' have borne me in hand these three months, and now fobb'd me
B. Jonson. The Widow, Act ii. sc. 1.

But in the mean time, they may not think to fob us off, with the colourable testimonies of B. Whitgift, King, Barnes, who were all well known to be just and good friends to lay-presbitery, as themselves are to Episcopacy
Bp. Hall. Answer to a Calumniatory Epistle.

Cun. I'll fob him, here's my hand.
Clow. I shall be as glad as any man alive to see him well fobb'd, sir: but now you talk of fobbing, I wonder the lady sends not for me according to promise.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act iv. sc. 1.

Meanwhile the soldiers sigh'd and sobb'd,
For not one sous had they;
His Excellence had each man fobb'd,
For he had sunk their pay. Prior. The Viceroy.

FOCIL. "Fr. Focile,—the arm from the elbow to the wrist; the leg or shank from the knee to the ankle; each consisting of two bones," (Cotgrave.)

I was hastily fetch'd to assist one Mr. Powell, a barber-chirurgeon, in the setting of a fracture of both the focils of the leg in a man about 60 years of age, of a tough dry body.
Wiseman. Surgery, b. vii. c. 1.

FO'CUS. } Lat. Focus, fire. Applied in Opticks to the point whither all
FO'CAL. } the rays of light or heat concentrate, or whence they diverge.

In this room, I say, if the paper that receives the images be too nigh, or too far off the lens, the image will be confused and dim, but in the focus of the glass, distinct, clear, and a pleasant sight.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 2. Note 3.

If the extremes of the image A A were at a due focal distance, the middle B would be too nigh the christalline, and consequently appear confused and dim.—Id. Ib.

In that light the mind of an enquirer subdued by such an awfull image as that of the virtue and wisdom of a whole people collected into one focus, would pause and hesitate in condemning things even of the very worst aspect.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

By some late observations made by Mr Short, with a reflecting telescope, whose focal length is 12 feet, it appears that Saturn's ring is divided into two unequall parts by a dark list, (which may be seen by telescopes of less power,) and that the outward and lesser part is again subdivided by other smaller lists, into several (apparently concentric) rings.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iv. Note.

FO'DDER, v. } A. S. Fodre, fother, fothur;
FO'DDER, n. } alitura, alimentum, pabulum; food, sustenance, fodder, nourishment, (Somner.) Dut. Voeder; Ger. Futer; Sw. Foder; Low Lat. Foderum. From the verb Fedan, to feed. It is also written fother.
That which feedeth; food. Applied to the dry food, hay, &c., which is given to cattle.

But ik am olde; me list not play for age;
Gras time is don, my fodder is now forage.
Chaucer. The Reves Prologue, v. 3866.

He adulsed that for as much as they had bothe horsemen and footemen, and the countrey fertyll and haboundant of fodder: that they shoulde make no haste, but passe forwardes faire and easelye.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 116.

Let the cases be filled with natural earth (such as is taken the first half spit from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground,) in a place that has been well fother'd on.
Evelyn. Kalendarium. May.

And in the place where grows rank fodder for my neat,
The turf which bears the hay, is wond'rous needful peat.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

If milk be thy design: with plenteous hand
Bring clover grass; and from the marshy land
Salt herbage for the foddering rack provide
To fill their bags, and swell the milky tide.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

Their father Tyrrheus did their fodder bring;
Tyrrheus, chief ranger to the Latin King.
Id. Ib. Æneid, b. vii.

This [the drag] not only forced out the grain, but cut the straw in pieces for fodder for the cattle, for in the Eastern countries they have no hay.—Louth. Notes on Isaiah, c. 28.

FOE, v. } A. S. Fah, fa, past tense and FOE, n. } past part. of the verb Fi-an, to
FOE-HOOD. } hate, and means (subaud. any one) hated, (Tooke, ii. 175.) See FIEND, and FOH. Spenser uses Foe as a verb.
Any one hated; and, by usage, equivalent to Fiend, i.e. any one hating: an enemy, one hostile; one who wishes ill, an ill-wisher.

Hec nuste wich were here frend, ne wych were hire fon.
R. Gloucester, p. 79.

That bataile was hard, fo-men has no frith [peace]
Slayn was that coward, and his sonne him with.
R. Brunne, p. 90.

And made foos of frendes, thorow fals and fykel tonge.
Piers Ploukman, p. 91.

He foineth on his foo with a troncheoun,
And he him hurtleth with his hors adoun.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale. v. 2617.

Unto his lemman Dalida he told,
That in his heres all his strengthe lay,
And falsely to his fo-men she him sold.
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,071.

O thou my weale, O thou my wo,
O thou my frende, O thou my foe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And also well he can forbere,
And suffre a wicked kynge to falle
In handes of his fo-men all. Id. Ib. b. viii.

He brake the barres, and through the timber pearst
So large a hole whereby they might discerne
The house, the court, the secret chambers eke
Of Priamus, and auncient kings of Troy,
And armed foes in thentrie of the gate.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

He was fully determined neuer to leaue warre tyll either he had lost his awne natural life, or vtterly extinguished and put vnder his foes and enemies.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 10.

And there I sawe full many a bold attempt,
By seelie soules best executed aye,
And bravest bragges (the foe-men's force to tempt)
Accomplished but coldely many a day
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

At last when him she so importune sawe,
Fearing least he at length the reanes would lend
Vnto his lust, and make his will his lawe,
Sith in his powre she was to foe or friend.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

Then they that damzell called to them nie,
And asked her, what were those two her fone,
From whom she earst so fast away did flie.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 8.

—— This is now
Our doom; which if we can sustain and bear,
Our supreme foe in time may much remit
His anger, and perhaps thus far remov'd
Not mind us not offending, satisfi'd
With what is punish't; whence these raging fires
Will slack'n, if his breath stir not thir flames.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Have you forgotten S. Hierome's and Ruffinus's deadlie foe-hood which was rung over the world.
Bp. Bedell. Of Certain Letters, (1620) c. 2. p. 325.

—— He
Foe-like has bent his bow, his hostile hand
Advanc'd, and slain the beauty of the land.
Sandys. Lament, p. 4.

Yet farre I deem'd it better for to die
Then to my foe-men's feet an abiect lie.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 20.

Curst be the verse, how well so'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe.
Pope. Prologue to the Satires.

The man whose hardy spirit shall engage
To lash the vices of a guilty Age;
At his first setting forward ought to know
That ev'ry rogue he meets must be his foe.
Churchill. The Conference.

And when the Almighty lifts his fiercest scourge
Gainst those who most transgress his high command,
With treble vengeance will his hot shafts urge
Gaul's locust host, and earth from fellest foe men purge.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

FOETA'TION. Lat. Fetare, to bear, or bring forth young.

Flies, caterpillars, and worms, being ripen'd to foetation by the heat of the sun, they live upon leaves and grass, and take their food without the care or assistance of those parents that produced them.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, c. 6. s. 3.

FOG, v. }
FOG, n. }
FO'GGILY. }
FO'GGINESS. } Skinner thinks from A. S. Fog;
FO'GGY. } Dut. Voeghe, conjunctio seu collectio, i.e. vaporum seu halituum; a gathering or collection, (sc.) of vapour or steam. Fog is from Feg-an, (ge-feg-an,) to gather, to collect.
Fog,—of common use in the compound—
Pettyfogger,—occurs in Milton. Pettifogger probably means, a collector of petty suits; a paltry encourager of litigation: and it is in this evil application that fog is itself used by Milton.
A gathering or collection, (sc.) of vapour or steam; a mist; a thick or dense atmosphere; Foggy, (met.) Thick, cloudy, dull.

Also the fift of July there fell a hidious fogge and mist, that continued till the nineteenth of the same: so that one shippe could not see another.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 41.

Whose vale did daze mine eies,
and darckned so my sight
With error's foggie mist at first,
that reason gaue no light.
Turbervile. The Penitent Louer vtterly renouncing Loue, &c.

As for the fogging proctorage of money, with such an eye as strook Gehazi with leprosy, and Simon Magus with a curse; so does she [Excommunication] look, and so threaten her fiery whip against that banking den of thieves that dare thus baffle, and buy and sell the awful and majestick wrinkles of her brow.—Milton. Reformation in Eng. b. ii.

It must be such a dawn and shade
As that day cast, wherein was made
The sun, before man's damning fall
Threw a fogg'd guilt upon this all.—Feltham. Lusoria.

They [ministers of the Gospel] ought to endeavour to have their souls purified from the affections of sin, that the light of divine truth may shine clear in them, and not be fogged and misled with filthy vapours.
Leighton. Commentary on Peter, Ess. i. c. 1.

——— Fool, thou art wand'ring
In dangerous fogs, which will corrupt the purity
Of every noble virtue dwelt within thee.
Ford. The Fancies, Chaste & Noble, Act iv. sc. 1.

And Phœbus, flying so most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy cloud implyes,
And hydes for shame.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

25 Nov. 1696. There happen'd this weeke so thicke a mist and fog, that people lost their waye in the streetes, it being so intense that no light of candles or torches yielded any (or but very little) direction. It began about 4 in the afternoone, and was quite gon by 8, without any wunde to disperse it.—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. ii.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through, and make a lucid interval:
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day.—Dryden. Flecknoe.

Should foggy Opdam chance to know
Our sad and dismal story;
The Dutch would scorn so weak a foe,
And quit their fort at Goree.
Dorset. Song written at Sea, (1665.)

May it [Metaphysics] not be compared to the mist, or fog, described by Homer, as spread on the tops of the hills?
Horne. Essays and Thoughts.

It ought to be observed, that in order to produce such deceptions from the clearness or fogginess of the air it must be uncommonly clear, or uncommonly foggy; for we learn from experience, to make allowance for that variety of constitutions of the air which we have been accustomed to observe, and of which we are aware.—Reid. Enquiry, c. 6. s. 22.

It is very certain, that as, in air uncommonly pure, we are apt to think visible objects nearer, and less than they really are; so, in air uncommonly foggy, we are apt to think them more distant, and greater than the truth.—Id. Ib.

FOG. Low Lat. Fogagium, gramen quod æstate non depascitur, et quod spoliatis jam pratis hyemali tempore succrescit, (Spelman, and Du Cange.) Skinner suggests the It. Affogare, to choke; because choked or killed by the cold of winter. It is probably a consequential usage of Foo, ante.

Grass which has not been depastured or fed off in the summer. And see Brocket, Moore, and Nares.

The thick and well-grown fog doth mat my smoother slades,
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

FOH. The nauseating interjection (as it is called) foh! or faugh, is the past part. of Fian, to hate, (Tooke.)

Foh! One may smel in such, a will most ranke,
Foule disproportions, thoughts unnatural.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act v. sc. 1.

FOIBLE, n. } "Fr. Foible; feeble, weak,
FOIBLE, adj. } strengthlesse, faint, forceless," (Cotgrave.)

A foible; Fr. Foiblesse, a feebleness, a weakness, an infirmity. And see the quotation from Lord Herbert.

Then fencing-masters when they present a foyle or fleuret to their scholars, tell him that it hath two parts; one of which he calleth the fort or strong, and the other the foyble or weak.—Lord Herbert. Life, p. 46.

Presumption and self applause are the foibles of mankind.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 85.

I confess my foible with regard to flattery. I am as fond of it as Voltaire can possibly be; but with this difference, that I love it only from a masterly hand.
Chesterfield, b. i. Let. 11.

FOIL. } Lat. Folium; Fr. Feuille.
FOLIER. } "A leaf (of a herb or tree;) also, a sheet or leaf of paper; also, the foyl of precious stones or looking-glasses; and hence, a grace, beauty, or glosse given unto," (Cotgrave.) It is in English applied, consequentially, to—

That which, by comparison or contrast, sets off or shows more conspicuously the superiority of some thing else.

Folier is the name given to the foil used by goldsmiths.

Fructified oliue of foiles faire and thicke,
And redolent cedre most dere worthy digned.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

Which then appears more orient and more bright,
Having a foil whereon to show its light.
Drayton. Mary, to the Duke of Suffolk.

The bird, thus getting that for which she strove,
Brought it to her, to whom the Queene of Love
Serv'd as a foyle, and Cupid could no other,
But fly to her, mistaken for his mother.
Browne. Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Gau. The sullen passage of thy weary steppes
Esteeme a soyle [foyle] wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home returne.
Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act i. sc. 3.

The mast holm may be cut into fine thine foile or leaves like plates, and those also are of a daintie or pleasant colour.
Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 43.

Thou damn'd Antipodes to common sense,
Thou foil to Flecknoe, pr'ythee tell from whence
Does all this mighty stock of dullness spring?
Dorset. To Mr. Edward Howard.

Concerning the preparing these foliers, it is to be observed how and out of what substance they are prepared
History of the Royal Society, vol. ii. p. 489.

Had he known the full extent of Milton's excellence, Dennis thought he would not have ventured on this undertaking, [the State of Innocence,] unless he designed to be a foil to him "but they (he adds) who knew Mr Dryden, know very well that he was not of a temper to design to be a foil to any one."—Masons. Life of Dryden.

FOIL, v. } The Fr. Affoler, Cotgrave says, is
FOIL, n. } "to foyl, wound, bruise, or hurt sore with blows; also, to spoyl, ruine, undo; also, to besot, gull, befool." Fouler, he also explains, "to hurt or obtuse by treading on; to press, oppress, foyl, overcharge extreamly." For FOULER, see FULL.

To disable, to baffle, to render ineffectual; to defeat, to cause to fail.

A foil, (in Fencing,) that which foils, or with which any one foils, (sc.) his adversary.

Or a foil, Espée rabatue, a sword with the edge rebated; may be a corruption of foible, feeble, enfeebled, (sc.) a sword enfeebled, weakened, blunted, to render the exercise of fencing harmless: the pliant or weaker part of the plate towards the point is also called the foible.

A frollicke fauour foyld with fowle disgrace.
Gascoigne. David's Salutacion to Bernabe.

Into which, having thus made reentrie he could not yeeld againe to withdraw, though he sawe no encouragement to proceed, lest his credite, foyled in his first attempt, in a second should vtterly be disgraced.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 160.

If they lacke actiuitie, euery creature be he neuer so base of birthe, shall foyle and ouerthrowe them, like domme beastes, and beastly dastardes.—Hall. Edw. IV. an. 23.

But taking the foyle, he fled into Fraunce.
Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 62.

For monye maks, and mars (say they)
and coyne it keepes the coyle,
It binds the beare, it rules the roste,
it putts all things to foyle.—Drant. Horace, Sat. 1.

With noyse whereof when as the caytive carle
Should issue forth, in hope to find some spoyle,
They in await would closely him ensnarle,
Ere to his den he backward would recoyle;
And so would hope him easily to foyle.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

Loe, this is all for which the great contend,
Who, (whilst they pride themselves and others spoiles)
With their dominions doe their cares augment:
And O vaine man who toylst to double toyles,
Though still the victory the victor foyles.
Stirling. Chorus the Fifth in the Alexandrian Tragedy.

Their verie threats and menaces scared them, as who alreadie had seene by experience, by the foile they had at the Gaules hands, how unsure a citie they inhabited and not impregnable.—Holland. Livie, p. 345.

Suffer therefore thyselfe here to be frighted from this thy intended mischiefe, before thou have the foile there, and misse of thy purpose.—Holland. Livie, p. 478.

Ham. He that playes the king shall be welcome; his maiestie shall have tribute of mee; the aduenturous knight shall use his foyle and target.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

——— So acted too
The generous Cæsar, when the Roman knew
A coward king had treacherously slain,
Whom scarce he foil'd on the Pharsalian plain.
Stepney. On the late Horrid Conspiracy.

And three indirect insinuations will go as far in law towards the giving a downright lie, as three foils will go towards a fall in wrestling.
Dryden. The Duchess of York's Paper Defended.

And foil'd each rival with contending grace,
Strain'd in the grasp, or distance'd in the race.
Brookes. Jerusalem Delivered, b. ii.

I have endeavoured to find out, if possible, the amount of the whole of those demands, in order to see how much, supposing the country in a condition to furnish the fund, may remain to satisfy the publick debt, and the necessary establishments. But I have been foiled in my attempts
Burke. On the Nabob of Arcot's Debts

FOINE, v. } "To Foine, v. Fr., to make a FOINE, n. } pass in fencing; to push," (Tyrwhitt.) Skinner and Ruddiman; from Fr. Poindre, pungere, to prick or point. The former suggests also the A. S. Fandian, tentare, to try.

To point, to push or thrust, to aim at.

And after that, with sharpe speres strong
They foynden eche at other wonder long
Chaucer. The Knyghtes Tale, v. 1654.

He foyneth on his foo with a tronchoun,
And he him hurtleth with his hors adoun.—Id. Ib. v. 2617

Men might see speares shiuer asunder
That to beholde, it was a very wonder.
How they foyne, with daggers and with swerds
Through the viseres, aiming at berds
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

Than they assembled togyder in al partes, and began to foyne with speares and stryke with axes and swerdes.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 317.

And so there eche came to other with hande strokes, foyninge with their speares eche at other a great space.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. c. 24

They fret and foyne, are crowded on
By those that hindmost be,
And with their weapons spoyle themselues,
And fellowes two or three.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 7.

Edg. Chill picke your teeth, zir: come, no matter vor your foynes.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corslets, and the thinnest parts explore.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

FOISON. Fr. Foison, which Martinius derives from Dut. Fusen, to stuff, to fill; and Menage, with more probability, from the Lat. Fusio, a pouring forth. Consequentially, as the—

"Fr. Foison,—store, plenty, abundance, greatfulness, enough."

Foison plenty, i. e. plenty to the utmost abundance; Steevens;—more literally, profusion.

His fader left him inouh, penyes grete foysonne.
R. Brunne, p. 543.

So he may finden Goddes foison there,
Of the remenant needeth not to enquire.
Chaucer. The Milleres Prologue, v. 3165.

God sent his foyson at hire grete nede.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4924.

For the store and foison of fruite is that which openeth the trade and commerce of buying and selling.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 708.

Earth's increase, and foyson plentie
Barnes and garners, never empty.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

FOIST. Dut. Fuste; Fr. Fuste; It. and Sp. Fusta; Low Lat. Fusta; which Du Cange thinks a fuste seu ligno dicta. Junius suspects that the name was bestowed upon this kind of vessel from its incredible swiftness; from A. S. Fus, prompt, ready.

Cotgrave says, "Fuste, a foist; a light galley that hath about 16 or 18 oares on a side, and two rowers to an oare."

About this time, the warres yet conteynewynge betwene England and Fraunce, Prior Jhon (of whom you haue harde before in the iii. yere) great capitayne of the French nauy, with his galeys and foystes charged with great basylyskes and other greate artilery came on the border of Sussex.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 5.

And having given order before hand to certain masters of gallies for to split the foist wherein she was embarqued, as if by chaunce they were run full upon her.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 196.

220 gallies, with five course of oares on a side, and twenty foists were set aflote.—Id. Livius, p. 402.

While the captains of the Grecians were reasoning in this sort, Aristides seeing Psyttalea (a little Island before Salamina within the Straight) full of men of war of their enemies' imbarqued immediately the valiantest and lustiest souldiers he had of all his countreymen into the least foysts or pinnaces, he had among all his galleys.
North. Plutarch, p. 277.

FOIST, v.
FOIST, n.
FO'ISTER.
FO'ISTING, n.

Junius says, Foist in, subdere, supponere, suffarcinare; and Skinner, per furtum obtrudere, from the Fr. Fausser, q.d. falsificare, to falsify.

Foist, the noun, is applied in our old writers to a cheat, a cheating rogue, a cutpurse; also, to cheating, roguish tricks.

To intrude or put in fallaciously; to introduce surreptitiously, clandestinely, fraudulently.

Our dates are brief, and therefore we admire
What thou dost foist upon us that is old,
And rather make them born to our deare,
Than think that we before have heard them told.
Shakespeare, s. 123.

Face. There is not such a foist, in all the town.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act iv. sc. 4.

Volt. ——— Come,
Put not your foists upon me, I shall scent 'em.
Id. The Fox, Act iii. sc. 9.

Omnes. Foist! what's that.
Moll. A diver with two fingers, a pick-pocket; all his train study the figging law, that's to say, cutting of purses and foisting.— Middleton. The Roaring Girl, Act i. sc. 1.

These able are at neede to stande and keepe stake,
When facing foisters fit for Tiburne fraies
Are food sick faint; or, hart sicke run their waies.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 483.

Thy formal nods, important sneers,
Thy whisperings foisted in all eare.
Swift. A Dialogue between Mad Mullinix & Timothy.

Whether I am right or no, he is most certainly wrong in taking the liberty he has, of foisting in words, and altering the turn in expression, to help out his construction.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 87.

How also, without this, when a Scripture has been corrupted, partly by filching some words out of it, and partly by a supposititious foisting of some in, shall the whole be rescued from the imposture passed upon it, and so restored true and genuine to itself.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

FO'ISTY.
FO'ISTINESS.

I. e. Fusty, (qv.)

She passed not vpon daintie fare, nor costly raiment, neither couide away with Romish frēchhodes (otherwise called mytres) nor with foistie farthingales, coarded ouer the alter.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 63.

Look well to thy horses in stable thou must,
That hay be not foisty, nor chaff full of dust.
Tusser. December's Husbandry.

Such wheat as ye keep, for the baker to buy,
Unthreshed till March, in the sheaf let it be;
Lest foistiness take it, if sooner ye thresh it,
Although by oft turning ye seem to refresh it.
Id. November's Husbandry.

FOLD, v.
FOLD, n.
FO'LDING, n.

Goth. Faldan; A. S. Fealdan; Dut. Vouden, vowen; Ger. Fallen; Sw. Falla, plicare, complicare, involvere; A. S. Falad; Low Lat. Falda; stabulum, septum, ovile, bovile, (sc.) illud (says Skinner) quo erraticum pecus involvitur, id est, conditur; an enclosure for sheep or oxen, i. e. that in which rambling cattle are enfolded, i. e. shut up.

The noun is applied to that which folds or encloses, and to that which is folded or enclosed. To fold,—

To enclose or shut up; to close, or lay close, over; to form an enclosure, (sc.) by wrapping up, doubling over; as, to fold a letter; to complicate, to involve.

The fyngeres that folde sholden, and the fust [fist] make.
Piers Ploughman, p. 329.

And Saint Frauncies hymselfe shal folden the in his cope,
And present the to the Trinite, and pray for thy synnes
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Treuly treuli I sey to you, he that cometh not in by the dore into the foolde of schepe, but stieth by another weye, is a nyght theef and a day theef.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 10.

Verely verely I say vnto you · he that entreth not in by the dore into the shepe folde, but clymeth vp some other way: the same is a thefe & a robber.—Bible, 1551.

But dwelt at home, and kept wel his fold.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 514.

[They were] apparelled in cloth of gold and purple tynsell sattyn set with cutte wark of sylver plyghted goord fret and folded eche clothe vpon other.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

For you come into the fold of Christ without him, you bring not his voice, but you come with your owne voyce, with your owne statutes, with your owne word.
Barnes. Workes, p. 247.

The first place was this, a three fold cable is hard to break,—by this three fold cable, hee vnderstode, the reuerent father in God my Lord Cardinall.—Id. Ib. p. 287.

Sometime therout a blustering cloude doth breke, and vp to skies
All smokin black as pitche, with flakes of fiers among it flies,
And flames in foldings round.—Phaer. Virgill. Æn. b. iii.

And, if I marked well the starres revolution,
It shall continue till the worldes dissolution;
To teach the ruder shepheard how to feed his sheepe,
And from the falser's fraude his folded flock to keep.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. December.

My watchfulness and care gives day scarce leave to break
But to the fields I haste my folded flock to see,
Where when I find, nor wolf nor fox hath injured me,
I to my bottle straight.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 6.

——— That remedy
Must be a winding sheet, a fold of lead,
And some untrod on corner of the earth.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act iii. sc. 3.

Yea, but if I apply me to those straines,
Who should drive forth my flockes unto the plaines,
Which whilst the Muses rest, and leisure crave,
Must watering, folding, and attendance have.
Browne. Eclogues. Thirsis & Alexis.

Near his paternal stream he sadly stands
With downcast eyes, wet cheeks, and folded hands:
Upbraiding heaven from whence his lineage came;
And cruel calls the Gods, and cruel thee by name.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Th' expanded waters gather on the plain,
They float the fields, and overtop the grain:
Then rushing onwards, with a sweepy sway,
Bear flocks, and folds, and labouring hinds away.
Id. Ovid. Metam. The Giants' War.

Here, methinks, our author seems to have sufficiently understood the folds and doubles of Sylla's disposition; for his character is full of variety and inconsistencies.
Id. The Life of Plutarch.

As the stout oak when round his trunk the vine
Does in soft wreaths and amorous foldings twine
Easy and slight appears: the winds from far
Summon their noisy forces to the war.
Earl of Halifax. On the Death of Charles II.

The habit of a man or of a woman, which appeared to us in one uniform colour, variously folded and shaded would present to his eye [to a man newly made to see] neither fold nor shade, but variety of colour.—Reid. Enquiry, c. vi. s. 3.

So shoots a meteor's transitory gleam
Through nitrous folds of black nocturnal clouds,
Then dissipates for ever. Glover. Leonidas, b. vi.

At morn she came those willing flocks to lead
Where lilies rear them in the watry mead;
From early dawn the live-long hours she told,
Till late at silent eve she penn'd the fold.—Collins, Ecl 3.

That darkness of character, where we can see no heart; those foldings of art, through which no native affection is allowed to penetrate, present an object unamiable in every season of life, but particularly odious in youth.
Blair, vol. I. Ser. 11.

Remember the Linen board, where the paltry dividend of a little flax seed was become the seed of jobs, which indeed produced one hundred fold
Chesterfield. Miscel. vol. iv pt. ii. Let. 14.

FOLIA'CEOUS.
FO'LIAGE, v
FO'LIAGE, n.
FO'LIATE.
FO'LIATED.
FOLIA'TION.
FO'LIATURE.

Lat. Foliaceus, from folium, a leaf; Gr. φυλλον, and φυλλ-αν from φυ-ειν, nasci, as Lennep, or fundere, as Scheidius thinks.

Leafy; having, bearing, or consisting of, leaves or thin plates, like leaves.

Now and then an eagle or griffon is found to nestle among the foliage, of which it has a series of two rows, and under the ovola the Ionic neck-lace.—Evelyn. On Architecture.

And therefore gold foliate, or any metal foliate, cleaveth
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 293.

Now this attraction have we tried in straws and paleous bodies, in needles of iron equilibrated, powders of wood and iron, in gold and silver foliate.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 4.

Thus are also disposed the triangular foliations, in the conicall fruit of the firre tree, orderly shadowing and protecting the winged seeds below them.
Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3. p. 48.

Here laurel boughs, which ancient heroes wore,
Wreath round the pillars which the poets rear,
And slope their points to make a foliage there.
Parnell. Essay on Different Styles of Poetry.

The flame of spirit of wine is so hot, that I have in lamp furnaces employed spirit of wine instead of oil, and with the same flame I have not only lighted paper, but candles, and even melted foliated gold.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 330.

They wreathed together the foliature of the fig tree.
Shuckford. On the Creation, p. 203.

They are painted and often strewed with pieces of the foliaceous mica, which makes them glitter, and serves to augment their enormous deformity
Cook. Third Voyage, b iv. c. 2.

Behold the chair, whose fractur'd seat infirm
An aged cushion hides I replete with dust
The foliag'd velvet; pleasing to the eye,
Of great Eliza's reign, but now the snare
Of weary guest that on the specious bed
Sits down confiding. Shenstone. Economy, pt. iii.

Deep in the dark recesses of the wood
A cave obscur'd with gloomy laurels stood.
Ivy, within, the verdant roof o'erspread
With pendant foliage, a luxuriant shade.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iii

Nor will that sov'reign arbitress admit
Where'er her nod decrees a mass of shade,
Plants of unequal size, discordant kind,
Or rul'd by foliation's different laws;
But for that needful purpose those prefers
Whose hews are friendly, whose coeval leaves
The earliest open, and the latest fade
Mason. The English Garden

FO'LIO. It. Foglio; Sp. Hoja; Fr. Feuille; Lat. Folium, a leaf or sheet of paper; and a book in folio, "the whole leafe or sheet without folding or cutting into quarto or octavo," (Minshew.) So applied, because anciently it was the custom to write upon the leaves of trees, (Vossius.)

Monsieur Thevenot hath sent you a second tome of his curious voyages in folio, fairly bound, wherein are contained, as far as my cursory perusal could inform me, several things not unpleasing and instructive, both for navigation, policy, and natural philosophy.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 187.

I have been at the paine to read over two large folios of Trevisas: one, his version of Higden's Polychronicon; and the other, his translation of Bartholomew Glanvil's Book de Proprietatibus Rerum.—Waterland. Let. to Rev. Mr. Lewis.

In short, he knew what Paulus Jovius,
Salmacius, Grævius, and Gronovius,
Have said in fifty folio volumes
Printed by Elzevir in columns.
Cawthorn. The Birth and Education of Genius.

FO'LIOT. The It. Folletto, Florio calls, "a little fool; also, a spirit, a hag, a hobgoblin, a Robin—good fellowe."

Terrestriall devils, are those Lares, Genii, Faunes, Satyrs, Wood-nymphs, Foliots, Fairies, Robin Good-fellowes, Trulli, &c., which as they are most conversant with men, so they doe them most harme.—Burton. Anat. of Melancholy, p. 47.

Another sorte of these there are, which frequent forlorne houses, which the Italians call Foliots, most part innoxious.
Id. Ib. p. 48.

FOLK.
FOLK-LAND.
FOLK-MOTE.
FOLK-MO'TERS.

Lat. Vulg-us; Dut. Volck; Ger. Volk; A. S. Folk; the origin of this word, says Junius, is to be sought in A. S. Fylgan, folgian, to follow, (qv.) to accompany.

A company, an assembly (of people,) a people or nation; a number of men or women, of people

See the quotations from Spenser and Blackstone.

The kyng gared his folk, on haste alle that he mygte.
R. Brunne, p. 58.

Brytons were the firste folc that to Engelond come.
R. Gloucester, p. 3.

Ac geve hem forth to poure folk that for my love hit asketh
Piers Ploughman, p. 210.

Folk schal ryse togidre agen folk, and rewme agens rewme, and pestilences and hungris, and the erthe movyngis schuen be bi placis; and alle these ben begynnyngis of sorowis.
Wiclif. Matt. c. 24.

Infinite ben the sorwes and the teres
Of olde folk, and folk of tendre yeres
In all the toun for deth of this Theban:
For him there wepeth bothe child and man
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale.

But as a birde, whiche woll alight,
And seeth the meate, and not the nette,
Whiche in deceite of hem is sette,
These younge folke no perill sie
But all was likynge in hir eie —Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Sir Thomas More saveth, these dregges hath he dronkē of Wyclif, Ecolampadius, Tyndall, and Zwynglius, and so hath he al that he argueth here besyde, which thi. what maner folke they be, is metely well perceiued and knowen, and God hath in parte wyth hys open vengeaunce declared.
A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 17.

After theyse reasons and other by them made, the kynge cōmaundyd that, vpon the mornynge followynge, a folkmoot should be called at Pawlys crosse.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1257.

Those hills whereof you speak were (as you may gather by reading) appointed for 2 speeial cases, and built by 2 several nations. The one is that which you call Folk motes, which were built by the Saxons, as the word bewraieth, for it signifieth in Saxon, a meeting of folk.
Spenser. A View of the State of Ireland.

Keep your problems of ten groats, these matters are not for pragmatics, and folk-mooters to babble in.
Milton. Colasterion.

Yet merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country dance,
Call the old house-keeper and get her
To fill a place for want of better —Swift. Stella's Birth Day.

Necessity and a little common sense produced all the common arts, which the plain folks, who practised them, were not idle enough to record.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 5.

The other species were called folk-land, which was held by no assurance in writing, but distributed among the common folk or people at the pleasure of the lord, and resumed at his discretion, being indeed land held in villenage, which we shall presently describe more at large.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 6.

These held a court every fortnight, which they called the folk-mote, or leet, and there became reciprocally bound for each other, and to the publick for their own peaceable behaviour, and that of their families and dependants.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. ii. c. 7.

FO'LLICLE. Lat. Folliculus, diminutive of follis, a bag.

A small bag; a pod.

These cods or follicles are found in both sexes, though somewhat more protuberant in the male than the female.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

And therefore although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vessicle which long containeth this humour: yet is there a manifest receptacle and passage of choler from the liver into the guts.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 2.

FO'LLOW, v. } Dut. Volgen; Ger. Folgen;
FO'LLOWER. } Sw. Foelja; A. S. Folg-ian, fylg-ian, sequi, to go or come after. See FOLK.

To go or come after (others); to accompany or attend upon,—in the suit of; to pursue; to go after another, as our guide or master; to be guided by, to obey; to go or come after in the course of events, in time; and thus, to succeed, to ensue; to come from or after, as a consequence; to result.

In the yere folowend, at the somer's tide,
Roberd com to this land, at Douer gan vp ride.
R. Brunne, p. 87.

What man that me louyeth, and my wylle folweth,
Shal have grace to good ynow, and a good end.
Piers Ploughman, p. 25.

And fulliche folweth the feith and feyneth non other.
Id. Crede.

Ich have yben hus folwer, al thes fourty wynter
And served Treuthe sothlythe. Id. Vision, p. 120.

And whanne the pople hadde herde they folewеden on her feet fro citees.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 24.

And when the people had hearde thereof, they folowed hym a fote out of their cities.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Be ghe my folewеris as I am of Crist.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 11.

Therto she coude skip and make a game
As any kid or calf folowing his dame.
Chaucer. The Millеres Tale, v. 3260.

She loves not him that plaineth, but that pleaseth.
When much thou lovest, most disdaine comes on thee,
And when thou thinkst to hold her, she flies from thee;
She follow'd, flies; she fled from, followes post;
And loveth best where she is hated most.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good?—Bible, 1 Pet. iii. 13.

Then as for those who were his followers,
(Being all choice men for virtues, or deserts,)
He so with grace and benefits prefers,
That he becomes the monarch of their hearts.
Daniel. History of the Civil Wars, b. v.

Learning and Rome alike in empire grew,
And Arts still follow'd where her eagles flew.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock.

No Indian Prince has to his palace
More followers than a thief to the gallows.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

I am sensible that common sense has lately met with very great discouragement in the noble science of politics; our chief professors having thought themselves much above those obvious rules that had been followed by our ancestors, and that lay open to vulgar understandings.
Chesterfield. Common Sense, No. 4.

What the Epistles of the Apostles declare of the suffering state of Christianity, the writings which remain of their companions and immediate followers, expressly confirm.
Paley. Evidences of Christianity, pt. i. c. 4.

FO'LLY. } Fr. Folie, folier; It. Follia; the Mid. Lat. Follere, Vossius says, is from Follis, ut follere sit turgere instar follis aere pleni; to swell like bellows filled with wind; and from Follere, is follescere, stultescere, vanum esse instar follis aere turgentis. And hence, he adds, the Fr. Fol; unless rather from the Gr. Φαυλος, malus, vitiosus. Skinner prefers the Ger. Faul; that is, the A. S. Ful; Eng. Foul. See also Menage, Caseneuve, (Fol, and Fou,) and Hickes, (Gram. Fr. Theo. p. 94.)

FO'LLIER.
FOOL, v.
FOOL, n.
FOO'LERY.
FOO'LIFY.
FOO'LING, n.
FOO'LISH.
FOO'LISHLY.
FOO'LISHNESS.

G. Douglas (as well as Chaucer) uses folly as an adjective, "The foly trojane hat; the foly hat; zour folly hattis:" and Wiclif and Chaucer, "folily," adv. Warner.—Follial. Foliful, full of folly, occurs in the Complaint of Scotland, (see Jamieson.) A fool is—

A vain or empty man, an empty-headed man; having no judgment, sound sense or understanding; one who follows silly councils or conduct; ill-advised or evil ways; who acts without discernment or discretion, consideration or forethought.

"Fools (says Gifford) as every one knows, are gooseberries boiled and beaten up with cream."

Fool — prefixed, — see HYPHEN, and also the quotation below from Beattie.

Merlyn was sory ynow for the kynge's folye.
R. Gloucester, p. 158.

No wonder, he sayd, thaw Bretoyne al day go to gronde,
Wan heo, that ther inne beth suche foles beth yfonde.
Id. p. 147.

Icham, he seyde, mest fol. thernore, as foles wolle,
My fole red, gyf ge wolle yhure, verst seowe ichylle.
Id. p. 305.

Fol-hardy he ye ynou, ac al wythoute rede.—Id. p. 457.

Foure and twenty gere was he kyng, and thorgh no folie
Neuer in his lyue a fote of lond he les.—R. Brunne, p. 27.

Patriarkes and prophetes reprovede here science,
And seide here wordes and here wysdomes ne was bote al folye. Piers Ploukmen, p. 233.

And howe the folke folyliche. here fif wittes myspenden.
Id. p. 276.

Trewely quath the frere, a fole I the holde.—Id. Crede.

Therefore whanne it maie not be aghenseid to these thingis, it behoueth ghou to be ceesid, and to do nothing foolili.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 19.

And every man that hereth these my wordis and doith hem not; is lyk to a fool that hath bildid his hous on gravel.
Id. Matthew, c. 7.

And whosoeuer heareth of me these sayinges & doth thē not, shal be likened unto a foolish man which bylt his hous upō yᵉ sāde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Eschewe thou follische questiouns and genologies, and stryues and fightingis of the lawe.—Wiclif. Tyte, c. 3.

Foolish questions and genealogies, and brawlynge and stryfe about the lawe, auoyde.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Youre conseil as in this case no shulde not (as to speke properly) be called a conseilling but a motion or a meving of folie, in which conseil ye han erred in many a sondry wise.
Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

Than bring they to her remembraunce
The foly dedes of her enfaunce,
Which causen her to mourne in wo
That youth hath her beguiled so.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

I have my body falsly dispended,
Blessed be God that it shal be amended.
Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9276.

Him behoves serve himself that has na swain,
Or else he is fool, as clerkes sain.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4026.

But ones nil thou, for thy coward hert
And for thine ire, and foolish wilfulnesse
For wantrust tellen of thy sorows smert
Ne to thine owne helpe, do busineese.—Id. Troilus, b. i.

Whether wenest thou (said she) that this world be gouerned folishly by happes and fortunes, or els wenest thou that there be in it any gouernment of reason?—Id. Boecius, b. ii

Haue I not striuen with ful great strife, in old tyme before the age of my Plato, ayenst the foole-hardinesse of folly.
Id. Ib. b. i.

But for as moche as som folk ben unmesurable, men oughten for to avoid and eschue fool-largesse, the which men clepen waste, certes, he that is fool large, he yeveth not his catel, but he leseth his catel.—Id. The Persones Tale.

When that thei [Jews] shulde most perfite
Haue stonde vpon the prophecie,
Tho fallen thei to most folie. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Now good fader I you prey,
That for to wisse me the more,
Some good ensample vpon this lore
Ye wouide me tell, of that is writte,
That I the better might witte,
How I fool haste shulde eschewe,
And the wisdome of counsuill sewe. Id Ib. b. iii.

There was no care for the plough,
As they that were fool hastife. Id. Ib

I haue sene foly amonge the prophetes of Samaria, that they preached for Baal, and dyceaued my people of Israell.
Bible, 1551. Jerem. c. 23.

The common sort of men had rather to enuie thinges that be knowen and familiar, than to fauour them, wheras they make muche of straunge thinges fondely and folishely esteming a thing therefore to be goodly because it cummeth farre off.—Udal. Matthew, c. 13.

Quod cauere possis stultum est admittere. It is a foolishnesse to suffer that ill to bee dooen, that a man maye auoyde.
Id. Flowers of Latine Speaking, p. 66.

There is also Ranulfe Erle of Chester, a man without reason, and full of fole-hardynesse, redy and prest to all conspiracy, and vnstedfastnesse of maner, and deedys hasty.
Fabyan. Chron. vol. i. c. 232.

Thou knowest well what fole-hardye ludgementes the people gyue agaynst the for this thy sentence.
Fisher. On the Seuen Psalms

Ye shal lese the felde this daye by reason of the pride of the Frenchemen, theyr valyantnesse turneth to folysshhardyness, for they shall be all slayne or taken, none is likely to scape —Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 217.

And surelye I can not be so folyshe-hardy as to condemne soch an infinite nombre for our prelates pleasures.
A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 168.

For when it naught avails, what folly then
To strive against the current of the time?
Who will throw down himself, for other men,
That make a ladder by his fall to climb.
Daniel. The Civil Wars, b. i.

Sounds not the pulpett, which we then be-labour,
Better, and holyer, than doth the tabour?
Yet such is unregenerate man's folly,
He loves the wicked noyse and hates the holy.
Corbet. To Mr. John Hammon.

All foresaid practices seeme then
Epitomies to it,
Whereto these follitall traytors did
Themselues and senses fit.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 55.

Fall to your cheese cakes, curdes, and clowted creame,
Your foules, your flawnes.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 7.

For every idle knave that showes his teeth,
Wants and would live, can juggle, tumble, fiddle,
Make a dog face, or can abuse his fellow,
Is not a fool at first dash: you shall find, sir,
Strange turnings in this trade; to fool is nothing
As fooling has been.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act i. sc. 1.

——— I have had gallants,
Both court and country, would ha' fool'd you vp
In a new suit, with the best wits in being,
And kept their speed, as long as their cloathes lasted
Han'some, and neate.
B. Jonson. The Staple of Newes, Act i. sc. 2.

No more, no more of this, I vow,
'Tis time to leave this fooling now,
Which few but fools call wit.]
There was a time when I begun,
And now 'tis time I should have done,
And meddle no more with it.—Brome. Songs. Poincac.

They to the vulgar sort now pipe and sing,
And make them merrie with their fooleries;
They cherelie chaunt, and rymes at random fling,
The fruitfull spawne of their rank fantasies.
Spenser. Teares of the Muses.

They being throughly taught how with excessive flatterie to bear him up, foolified and gulled the man telling him ever anone, that there was nothing in the world so adverse and difficult, but his powerfull vertue and heavenly fortune together were able (as ever heretofore) to overcome.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 43.

Unhurt, untouch'd, did I complain,
And terrify'd all others with the pain.
But now I feel the mighty evil;
Ah! there's no fooling with the Devil!
Cowley. The Dissembler.

—— Wits that presum'd
On wit too much, by striving how to prove
There was no God, with foolish grounds of art,
Discover'd first the nearest way to Hell,
And filled the world with dev'lish atheism.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 1.

So in the world long time they wondered,
And mickle want and hardness suffered,
That them repented much so foolishly
To come so farre to seek for misery.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Com. O foolishness of men! that lend their ears
To those budge doctors of the Stoic fur,
And fetch their precepts from the Cynic tub,
Praising the lean and sallow abstinence.—Milton. Comus.

More huge in strength then wise in workes he was,
And reason with foole-hardize over-ran;
Sterne melancholy did his courage pas,
And was, for terrour more, all arm'd in shining bras.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

At last the nourse in her fool-hardy wit
Conceiv'd a bold devise, and thus bespake;
Daughter, I deeme that counsel aye most fit,
That of the time doth dew advauntage take.
Id. Ib. b iii. c. 3.

The simple maid did yield to him anone;
And eft him placed where he close might view
That never any saw, save onely one,
Who, for his hire to so foole-hardy dew,
Was of his hounds devour'd in hunters hew.
Id. Ib. Of Mutabilitie, c. 6.

Who when they would not lend their helping hand to any man in engine-worke, nor making of bulwarkes and fortifications, used foole-hardily to sallie forth and fight most courageously.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 127.

The elder, through practice of his weapons and cunning slight, soone ouercame the foole-hardinesse and inconsiderate fierceness of the younger.—Id. Livius, p. 684.

Annibal tooke this losse and dammage nothing neere the heart, but rather made full reckning that he had caught (as it were) with a bait and fleshed the audaciousnesse of the foole-hastie consull, and of the souldiers especially.
Id. Ib. p. 458.

How wisely does nature things so diff'rent unite!
In such odd compositions our safety is found;
As the blood of a scorpion is a cure for the bite,
So her folly makes whole whom her beauty does wound.
Walsh. The Antidote.

And such as come to be thus happily frighted into their wits, are not so easily fool'd out of them again.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 6.

But when I consider that she squanders on fools
All those treasures of beauty with which she is stor'd,
My fancy it damps, my passion it cools,
And it makes me despise what before I ador'd.
Walsh. The Antidote.

4. Answer not a fool according to his folly, lest thou also be like unto him.
5. Answer a fool according to his folly, lest he be wise in his own conceit.—Bible. Proverbs, c. 26.

Such fooling, if not properly animadverted upon, and seasonably suppressed, may arrive to a greater height, and be attended with very mischievous effects.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 295.

If any man will be wise in this world, let him become a fool that he may be wise; that is, not let him do any thing foolishly indeed; but by adhering to that, which weak men falsely esteem foolish, let him show himself to be really and truly wise.—Clark, vol. ii. Ser. 142.

But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned.
Bible. 1 Cor. ii. 14.

Oft would he say, who builds his house on sands,
Pricks his blind horse across the fallow lands,
Or lets his wife abroad with pilgrims roam,
Deserves a fool's cap, and long ears at home
Pope. The Wife of Bath.

At church with meek and unaffected grace
His looks adorn'd the venerable place;
Truth from his lips prevail'd with double sway,
And fools, who came to scoff, remained to pray.
Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

All such fooleries are quite inconsistent with that manly simplicity of manners, which is so honourable to the rational character.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5.

The same foolish charge (that the Jews worshipped the effigy of an ass) is also confidently repeated by Plutarch.
Paley. Evidences, pt. iii. c. 4.

It is foolishly imagined in France, that to deprive one great man of his dishes of silver and gold, and another of his money, will be of advantage to the poor. No, sir, these are the means by which the poor are maintained.
Fox. Speech, March 28, 1794.

To expose ourselves unnecessarily to evil, is worse than folly, and very blamable presumption: it is commonly called fool-hardiness, that is, such a degree of hardiness or boldness as none but fools are capable of.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 2. s. 5.

The preservation of this faith is of more consequence than the duties on red lead, or white lead, or on broken glass, or atlas ordinary, or demy fine, or blue royal, or bastard, or foolscap, which you have given up; or the three-pence on tea which you retained.—Burke. On American Taxation.

With diadem hight fool's-cap, lo! a fiend,
A little fiend that scoffs incessantly.
There sits in parchment robe array'd, and by
His side is hung a seal and sable scroll.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

FOME/NT, v. } Fr. Fomenter; It. Fomentare; Sp. Fomentar. The FOMENTA'TION. } Lat. Fomentum, (q.d. fovimentum,) from fovere, to warm. See the quotation
FOME'NTER. } from Holland.

To warm, to cherish, to nourish, to foster; to give warmth or heat to, to encourage, to invite.

That [oyntment of precious spike] was not vnpleasaunt to our Lorde: but those superfluous sauors & fomentes of the body, which the more it is cherished, the more it riseth & rebelleth against the soul.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 9.

Abide thou still by his bed's side, and lighten his sorrow sometime with comfortable words, sometime with gentle fomentations.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 4.

And all this time it was still whispered euery where, that at least one of the children of Edward the Fourth was liuing. Which bruite was cunningly fomented by such as desired innouation.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 20.

Preoccupation of minde, ever requireth preface of speech; like a fomentation to make the ungent enter.
Id. Ess. Of Dispatch.

Fomentations properly be devises for to be applied unto any affected part, either to comfort and to cherish it, or to allay the paine, or else to open the pores to make way for ointments and plastres. If they be liquid things, they are laid too by the meanes of bladders, spunges, or such like; if drie, within bags or quilts.
Holland. Plinie. Explanation of the Words of Art.

The Jews, of all other who were of the sect of the Pharisees, that made conscience of the Law, when they came to be enlightened by the Gospel, became the raisers and fomenters of that great opposition to the Gospel, which was the ruine of many professors in those primitive times.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. p. 224.

They were but so many incendiaries, and fomentors of crueltie, quarrells, murthers, and reuenge.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act iii. sc. 2.

These to remove th' expiring embers came,
While those with unctuous fir foment the flame.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xix.

The opinion of some of their neighbours, especially in a shire so guiltie, which was of itself the heat and fomenter of the warr, their opinion is not to be considered, for it shews their guilt but not Blackwood's innocence.
State Trials. Lourie or Weir, an. 1683.

Persecution may be carried on by the people, but it is raised and fomented by kings and rulers.
Bp. Horne. On the Psalms, Ps. 2.

Experience, slow preceptress, teaching oft
The way to glory by miscarriage foul,
Must prompt him, and admonish how to catch
Th' auspicious moment, when the tempered heat,
Friendly to vital motion, may afford
Soft fomentation, and invite the seed.
Cowper. The Task, b. iii.

The general composition was of obscure provincial advocates, of stewards of petty local jurisdictions, country attorneys, notaries, and the whole train of the ministers of municipal litigation, the fomentors and conductors of the petty war of village vexation.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

FOND, v. }
FOND, adj. }
FO'NDLE, v. }
FO'NDLING, n. } To fond, in Chaucer, (says Junius) is "to studie, to endeavour, to attempt;" and fond, also in Chaucer, he further says, is "to search and try any man's mind, to dive into his thoughts, and by a privie search to espie (i. e. to find) his intention." Of this latter usage he cannot (he declares) conjecture the origin, having never met with any instance of it, except those in Chaucer, (Man of Lawes Tale, and Troilus.) The two usages or applications are so similar, that it seems scarcely possible to discern a difference.
FO'NDLY. }
FO'NDNESS. }
FO'NNE. }

"To be right mery wol I fond," i. e. I will try, seek, endeavour to be merry.

"To strengthen hire shal all his frendes fond," i. e. all his friends shall try to strengthen her. And in the same manner may all the instances from Chaucer, Gower, R. of Gloucester, R. of Brunne, and Piers Ploughman, be explained. The word is from—

The A. S. Fund-ian, to try, attempt or endeavour, examine, search or seek after; and, as Somner expresses it, to labour to come to a thing, (i. e. to find,) with all endeavour to aspire unto. See FIND.

Fonne or fond, the adjective (Junius) is in Chaucer, fatuus, stolidus; and fonne, the verb, (written by Lord Berners, Fond,) infatuare, desipere, stultescere; but even this appears no more than a consequential application, resulting immediately from Somner's interpretation, "with all endeavour to aspire unto:" (sc.)—

To fix the mind, or heart, or the desires upon, to covet eagerly, to dote upon. "The rich man ful fond is iwis," i. e. a dotard is. "Alein, thou is a fonne," i. e. a dotard, consequentially, a fool; and to fonne, to act like a dotard, a fool; to play the fool, to be infatuated, to be foolish; to fool or fool away.

Fond, adjective, præ reliquis placet etymon, (says Skinner,) ab A. S. Fundian, anhelare, niti, to pant after, to strive for. Fond, the verb, is used so lately as by Dryden. Fond, the adjective, is—

Longing for, coveting, loving eagerly, inordinately, excessively; doating; and thus, foolish.

To fond or fondle,—to act towards, to treat fondly, doatingly; to caress tenderly, indulgently.

And nathles ich wol fonden, to brynge hym of ye sore.
R. Gloucester, p. 58.

Hil fondede myd alle gyle to do thys luther dede.
Id. p. 310.

To Scotland now he fondes, to redy his viage.
R. Brunne, p. 315.

For eche frend feedeth othr. and fondeth how he may quite
Meles and manshupes. Piers Ploughman, p. 207.

Zut it [poverty] is moder of mygth. and of mannes helth
And frende in alle fondynges. and of foule reveles leche sanitatis mater. Id. p. 270.

So hit fareth quath the frere by ryghtful mannes fallynge
Thawe he thorghe fondinge falle. he falleth nat out of charite
So dedliche synne doth he nat. Id. p. 168.

But yet to be right mery wol I fond.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6061.

They sworen, and assented every man
To live with hire and die, and by hire stond:
And everich on, the best wise he can,
To strengthen hire shal all his frendes fond.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4767.

And I will fonde to espien on my side,
To whom I may be wedded hastily.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9284

Or els certain she bare him on hond
That this was doen of Malice her to fond.
Id. Troilus, b. iii.

When age approcheth on
And lust is laied and all the fire is queint
As freshly then, thou shalt begin to fonne
And dote in loue, and all her image peint
In the remembrance, till thou begin to feint.
Id. The Court of Loue.

I'll haile, Alein, by God thou is a fonne.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4057.

The rich man ful fond is iwis
That weneth that he loued is;
If that his hert it vnderstood
It is not he, it is his good. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

She fondeth in hire birdes forme,
If that she might selfe conforme
To do the plesance of a wife,
As she did in that other life. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

Though I sekenesse haue upon honde
And longe have had, yet wolde I fonde
To write, and do my besinesse,
That in some partie, so as I gesse,
The wise man male be adused. Id. Prologus.

She sente for thys Syr Othes to ayde her in ye warre yt she made agaynst the Napolitanes, and this Syr Othes a certayne space excused hymselfe, and dyssymuled and fodel forth the tyme as he that wyst not what to do.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c 42

Aristotel (that is muche esteined and worthily) fansved a first matter, in all things to be one, in whiche consideration he seemeth to be as extreme in a staye, as the other fonde philosophers were in mouynge.
Bp Gardner. Explication of Transubstantiation, fol. 99.

For I haue such a fonde fantasy of mine own, yt I had leuer shyuer & shake for cold in ye middes of somer, thā be burned in the middes of winter.—Sir T. More. Workes, p.133.

The badges of a fondlynge, as braue napkyns, braceletes, rynges,
He layde away, and went to schoole
to learn more sober thinges.—Drant. Horace, b.i. Sat.3.

But all her kinsemenne and frendes dyd wepe, and after the countrey maner, they beat theyr bodyes bewaylyng her, and crying out, and dyd suche other thinges as menne be wont to doe verye fondly, in the funerals of ryche menne and great meune.—Udal. Matthew, c. 9.

It were fondnes to fayne that the soule dyd otherwyse eate then do the Angels in heauen, and theyr meate is onelye the loye and declaracion that they haue of God and of hys glorye.—A Boke made by John Fryth, fol. 60.

The. Thou art a fon, of thy love to boate;
All that is lent to love will be lost.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. February.

Such questions, youth, are fond, for better 'tis
To bless the sun, than reason why it shines;
Yet he thou talkst of is above the sun.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 1.

Still on he lov'd, and lov'd, and wish'd, and wish'd,
Ithoon began to speak, yet soon broke off,
And still the fondling durst not, 'cause he durst not.
Id. The Ladies' Trial, Act iv. sc. 1.

Have care, I pray, to guide the cock bote well,
Least worse on sea then us on land befell —
Therest th' old man did nought but fondly grin,
And saide, his bote the way could wisely tell.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

I (as I am) had rather be envied,
All were it of my foe, then fondly pitied;
And yet, if neede were, pitied would be,
Rather then other should scorne at me
Id. Shepherd's Calendar. May.

That when amidst the fervour of the feast,
The Tyrian hugs, and fonds thee on her breast,
And with sweet kisses in her arms constrains,
Thou may'st infuse thy venom in her veins.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. i.

In vain their fond opinions you deride,
With their lov'd follies they are satisfy'd.
Id. The Art of Poetry, c. 4.

This either flowed from his not having yet arrived at a sure persuasion of the matter, or that he [John Frith] chose in that modest stile to encounter an opinion, [the real presence] of which the world was so fond, that to have opposed it in downright words would have given prejudices against all that he could say.—Burnet. History of Reform. an. 1534.

He stroak'd her cheek to still her fear,
And talk'd of sins en cavalier:
Each time enjoin'd her penance mild,
And fondled on her like a child.—Gay. Work for a Cooper.

The Goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress.
She prays the Gods to take the fondling's part
To teach his hands some beneficial art.—Id. Tricia, b. ii.

But they abus'd that grace to make allies,
And fondly clos'd with former enemies,
For fools are doubly fools endeavouring to be wise.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

And in other places [Phœbus] perfectly tattles like a father, which by the way makes the length of the speech very natural, and concludes with all the fondness and concern of a tender parent.
Addison. Notes on the Story of Phaeton.

But what was it that seduced the prodigal Gentile to leave so gracious a father, and to quit the house where his glory dwelt? What but an impatience of restraint, a fond desire of independency, and of being wise above all that is written.
Horne. Works, vol. iv. Disc. 25.

—— But Cynis made no revel,
No midnight mask, no flatt'ring, amorous fondling
To fan her pride, or melt her guardless heart.
Mickle. The Siege of Marseilles, Act ii. sc. 4.

Where'er I roam, whatever realms to see,
My heart, untravell'd, fondly turns to thee:
Still to my brother turns with ceaseless pain,
And drags at each remove a lengthening chain.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

The profusion of ornaments with which they are loaded are marks of her continual fondness for dress, while they entirely exclude all grace, and leave no more room for a painter's genius than if he had been employed to copy an Indian idol, totally composed of hands and necklaces.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

FONG, v. To take. A. S. Feng-an; Ger. Fang-en, capere, corripere, comprehendere, to take, to seize, to grasp. To underfong, in our old writers, is to undertake. See Fang.

—— Piers gan swere
Ich nolde fonge a ferthing, for Seynt Thomas shryne.
Piers Ploughman, p. 121.

Oure power lasteth nought so feer, but we soin peny fongen.
Id. Crede.

She rideth to the Soudan on a day,
And sayd him, that she wold renoie hire lay
And Cristendom of prestes hondes fong,
Repenting hire she Hethen was so long.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4797.

None other reason thei ne fonge
But that thei ben of might stronge.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

But who that woll in his degre
Trauaile so as it belongeth,
It happeth ofte, that he fongeth
Worship, and ease bothe two. Id. Ib. b. iv.

FONT. } Fr. Fons, font; It. Fonte;
Fo'NTANEL, or } Sp. Fuente; Lat. Fons. Skin-
Fo'NTINEL. } ner adds, q.d. salutis; Junius, fons lustralis. Applied particularly to the baptismal font. See Fount.

A fountain or spring.

Fontanel,—"Fr. Fontanelle; a running sore; or an issue made for a grief or sore," (Cotgrave); from fontaine, a fountain or spring.

Cristene will he be, the kyng of fonte him left.
R. Brunne, p. 25.

The time is come, a knave child she bere;
Mauricius at the font-stone they him call.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5143.

If he say that it is fruteles for lacke of preaching ther vnto ye childe it self: then I deny not but that Tindal saith right wel and reasonable, & I shal speke to the persone of our parish that he shal preache to the childe at the font & tel him many good tales in hys eare.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 382.

When ye said Rollo was cristened, his name was chaunged, & called Robert, after the Erle of Peytowe, which receyued hym at ye fonte-stone.—Fabyan. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 182.

Wherefore Moylvennil wyll'd his Cluyd herself to show:
Who from her native font, as proudly she doth flow,
Her handmaids Manian bath, and Hespin, her to bring
To Ruthin. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

Agreeable hereunto it is, that artificial issues made in any part of the body are by physicians called fontinels, or little fountains.—Hammond. Annotations on St. Mark, v. 29.

Why hath Nature given to women two exuberant fontinels which like two Roes that are twins feed among the lillies, and drop milk like dew from Hermon.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. i. Disc. 1.

He now first opened a fontinel, and there sprang out an excellent rivulet from his abyss of wisdom.—Id. Ib. Ad. c.7.

The first reflection I have to make is that it is very improper language at least to call upon those who have once been regenerated, in their infancy, who have had their new birth already at the font, to be new regenerated; or to bid them expect a new birth.—Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 363.

A child in my neighbourhood was seized with an inflammation from the shoulder down to the elbow, and from thence an œdematous humour reached to the fingers' ends, the fontanel itself gangrened.—Wiseman. Surgery, b. i.

—— Who triumphs there?
Bathing for ever in the font of bliss,
For ever basking in the Deity!
Lorenzo! who? Young. The Complaint, Night 5.

FOOD. See Feed

FOOL. See Folly.

FOOT, v. } Dut. Voet; Ger. Fuss; A.S.
Foot, n. } Fot; Goth. Fotus, which Ju-
Foo'tless, or } nius derives from the Gr. Πους, Fe'etless. } Lat. Pes, (ph?) It may be Foo'ting, n. } from the A. S. Fettian, to carry,
Foo'tingly. } (sc.) that which carrieth, which beareth.

Foot,—that which carrieth, beareth or supporteth; upon which we stand or move. Also applied, to the posture suited or prepared for motion, for proceeding; to the position, state or situation; the lower part, the basis, the foundation, the pediment.

To foot,—to move, tread or go upon the foot; to move with the foot, to strike or seize with the foot, to have or cause to have a foot.

Foot-cloth, is sometimes applied to the horse that wears the cloth or housing.

Foot-hot,—straightway; literally, adds Skinner, with a hot-foot, a hasty foot. And Tooke,—"Foot-hot means, immediately, instantaneously, without giving time for the foot to cool; so our Court of Pie poudre, pied poudré; in which matters are determined before we can wipe the dust off one's feet." See in Tooke, i. 487, the examples collected; and Fute-vate in Jamieson.

Foot is much used—prefixed.

He hupte hym vp fram the borde, in gret wraththe ynou,
And hente thys Lof by the top, fram the borde hym drou,
An defouled hym vnder hym myd houde & myd fete.
R. Gloucester, p 277.

& rigt atte churche dore he vel adoun a kne
To the archebissope's feet. Id. p. 508.

To bysegy thys castel her fot-men hii lete.—Id. p 279.

Athelstan did hym bynd both fote & hond,
& kast him in tule Temse, whan it was most brym,
To chastise alle other he tok vengeance on him
R. Brunne, p 28.

Another pyne he had, if it may be trod,
With iren nayles sad, it sais, his fete was schod
Id. p 108

The fote-folk left alon, if thei wild stand or fle,
Help had thei non, of tham ther hede suid be.—Id. p 305.

And if thin hond or thi foot sclaundrith thee kitte it off and cast away fro thee.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 18.

Wherefore yf thy hand or thy fote offende the cut him of and caste hym from the.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And sche stode bihynde bisidis hise feet: and bigan to moiste hise feet with teeris, & wipide with the heeris of hir heed, and kiste hise feete and anoyntide with oynement.
Wiclif. Luke, c. 7.

And she stode at his fete behynde him wepinge, and began to washe his fete with teares, and dyd wype thē with ye heeres of her head, and kissed his fete and anoynted them with oyntment.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And up he rose, and softely he went
Unto the cradel, and in his hand it hent
And bare it soft unto his beddes fete.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4211.

A fote-mantel about hire hippes large
And on hire fete a pair of sporres sharpe.
Id. The Prologue, v. 474.

And Custance han they taken anon fote-hot,
And in a ship all stereles (God wot)
They han hire set.—Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4858

But take good hede vnto yourselues, yt ye prouoke them not, for I wyll not geue you of their lande, no not so much as a fote breade.—Bible, 1551. Deut. c. 2.

Stand sure and take good foting.
Skelton. The Boke of Colin Clout.

Howbeit our men for as muche as they were able neither to kepe aray, nor to take sure fooling, nor to folow theyr standerds, inasmuche as some commyng out of one shyppe and some out of another, they were fayne to cluster themselues vnder that standard that came next to hande, were much troubled.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 100.

For who, for number or for grace, dare mell with me in ryme?
Or who can daunce so footingly,
observing tune and time?—Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 9.

What nobleman, what common man of note,
What ordinary subject hath come in,
Since first you footed on our territories,
To only feign a welcome? children laugh at
Your proclamations.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iii. sc. 4.

Nay, I must walk you farther.
Ang. I am tir'd, sir, and ne'er shall foot it home.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Elder Brother, Act i. sc. 1.

For there the pride of all her heart will bow,
When you shall foot her from you, not she you.
Id. Wit at several Weapons, Act v. sc. 1.

—— Though I love
My limbs as well as any man, if you had now
A humour to kick me lame into an office,
Where I might sit in state and undoe others,
Stood I not bound to kiss the foot that did it.
Massinger. The Duke of Milan, Act iv. sc. 1.

He rides, said Turpine, that's not farre afore,
With a wylde man soft footing by his syde;
That if ye list to haste a litle more,
Ye may him overtake in timely tyde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

The sacred springs of horse-foot Helicon,
So oft bedeawed with our learned layes,
And speaking streams of pure Castalion,
The famous witnesse of our wonted praise,
They trampled have with their fowle footings trade,
And like to troubled puddles have they made.
Id. The Teares of the Muses.

So Geffray of Boulion, the glorious generall in those warres, at one draught of his bowe shooting against David's Tower in Hierusalem broched three feetlesse birds called Allerions vpon his arrow, and thereupon assumed in a shield Or three Allerions argent on a bend gueles, which the house of Lorrain descending from his race continueth to this day.
Camden. Remains. Armorses.

Be thou musical to me, and I will marry thee to a dancer: one that shall rule on his foot-cloth, and maintain thee in thy muff and hood.
Ford. The Lover's Melancholy, Act i. sc. 2.

For, had you laid this brittle ware
On Dun, the old sure-footed mare,
Though all the ravens of the hundred,
With croaking had your tongue out thundered,
Sure footed Dun had kept her legs,
And you, good woman sav'd your eggs.
Gay, Fable 37. pt. i.

Upon this foot it will be impossible for any church ever to secure the profession of any mysterious doctrine against secret meanings and subtile evasions; but men may subscribe to as many mysteries as they please, and still believe none of them.—Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 301

All hail, Patroclus! let thy honoured ghost
Hear, and rejoice, on Pluto's dreary coast;
Behold! Achilles' promise is compleat;
The bloody Hector stretch'd before thy feet.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

As once she watch'd me from a rail,
Poor soul; her footing chanc'd to fail,
And down she fell, and broke her hip.
Prior. Down Hall.

One thing, indeed, we do affirm, because we can prove it from Scripture, that whoever preaches and enforces moral duties, without justification and sanctification preceding, may as well declaim upon the advantages of walking, to a man that can neither stir hand nor foot.
Horne. An Apology for Certain Clergymen.

The form of the feet fixes the character of the animal. They are so many shovels; they determine its action to that of rooting in the ground, and every thing about its body agrees with this destination.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

But laying another world out of the question, taking things on the footing of this life only, still it can be clearly shown, that the crooked wisdom of the world is no better than foolishness.—Blair, vol. v. Ser. 17.

FOP.
Fo'PPERY.
Fo'PLING, n.
Fo'PPISH.
Fo'PPISHLY.
Fo'PPISHNESS.

Skinner thinks a Teut. Fobis or Pofisz, a kind of fungus: he should rather have said from Dut. Pof, fungosus, poffen, to puff, efflare inanes glorias. One puffed up with vain-glory; ostentatiousness, (sc.) of his person or dress.

Take from your true subiectes, the Pope's false Christ with his bels and bablinges, with his miters and mastries, with his fannoms and fopperies.
Bayle. Preface to English Votaries.

A fop! in this brave, licentious age,
To bring his musty morals on the stage?
Rhime us to reason? and our lives redress
In metre, as Druids did the savages?
Tuke. The Adventures of Five Hours, Act v.

But I shall discover to ye, readers, that this his praising of them is as full of nonsense and scholastic foppery, as his meaning he himself discovers to be full of close malignity.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

—— Boldly I dare, I say,
There has been more by us in some one Play,
Laugh'd into wit and vertue, than hath been
By twenty tedious Lectures drawn from sin
And foppish humours.
Randolph. The Muses' Looking-glass, Act i. sc. 2.

—— But this foppishness
Is wearisome: I could at our saint Antlins,
Sleeping and all, sit twenty times as long.
Id. Ib. Act ii. sc. 4.

Which is she?
Calam. Why this, fop-doodle.
Massinger. The Great Duke of Florence, Act ii. sc. 1.

Farce scribblers make use of the same noble invention [laughter] to entertain citizens, country gentlemen, and Covent garden fops.
Dryden. A Parallel of Poetry and Painting.

Give me leave to say, that I should have liked your introduction better, if, instead of pointing your satire entirely against one extreme, you had stated the due and proper medium between foppery on one hand and slovenliness on the other.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 241.

And, with a curs'd half witted fate
To grow more dully desperate,
The more 'tis made a common prey
And cheated foppishly at play,
Is their condition. Buller. Satire upon Gaming.

'Tis mean for empty praise of wit to write,
As foppings grin to show their teeth are white.
Brown. Essay on Satire, pt. ii.

Content, if, to convert my vacant time,
I can but like some love-sick fopping rhyme;
To some kind-hearted mistress make my court,
And, like a modish wit, in sonnet sport.
A. Philips. To a Friend.

In their present state I cannot recommend, [Lord Chesterfield's Letters,] being of Dr. Johnson's opinion, that they teach the manners of a fop, and the morals of a harlot.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. i. s. 4.

No truth, no sincerity: without which, conversation is but words; and the polish of manners the idlest foppery.
Hurd. On Retirement, Dial. 2.

As foppish minors court their taylor,
And hate their guardians as their jailor.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad.

FOR.
FORA'SMUCH.
FORSO'MUCH.
FO'RTHY.

"I imagine (says Tooke) the word For (whether denominated preposition, conjunction, or adverb) to be a noun, and to have always one and the same single signification, viz. Cause, and nothing else. Though Greenwood attributes to it eighteen, and S. Johnson forty-six different meanings; for which Greenwood cites above forty, and Johnson above two hundred instances. But with a little attention to their instances, you will easily perceive, that they usually attribute to the preposition the meaning of some other words in the sentence. Junius (changing p into f, and by metathesis of the letter r) derives for from the Gr. Προ. Skinner, from the Lat. Pro. But I believe it to be no other than the Gothic substantive, fairina,—Cause."

Upon the passages (from Chaucer and P. Plouhman) referred to by Mr. Tyrwhitt in his Glossary, and quoted below, Tooke observes, that though their construction is awkward and faulty, yet is the meaning of For equally conspicuous. The cause of putting on the habergeon, of the advice not to open the gate, of sowing the sack, being respectively—that the heart might not be pierced, that the rose might not be stolen, that the wheat might not be shed.

And so in the instances from Ford, B. Jonson, and Massinger, (upon which Mr. Gifford writes, as others had done before him, that for means for fear, and prevention,) the cause of having him wormed, of having two or three officers, of putting the platters far enough, being respectively—that he might not run mad, that they might not fail, that they might not reach.

In Robert of Gloucester,—the cause of their choosing a fair place and strongly walling it, as a castle, and storing it well, being—that they might abide the assault of the king.

In R. of Brunne,—felony being the cause of the outlawry.

In P. Plouhman,—weariness being the cause of his falling asleep.

In Wiclif,—the cause of the superior value of the widow's cast, being—that others cast part of their "plentee," but that she of "her povertee keste alle thingis that sche hadde."

Forthy,—A. S. Forthi, quamobrem, wherefore (says Somner,) i. e. this cause—or this being the cause.

A fair place heo cheson hem, & there heo gonne arere
Walles wyde and strong ynow, casteles as hit were,
And a storide hit wel ynow, and here god ther inne bere,
For to a bide the kyng, gef he wolde a sayle hom there.
R. Gloucester, p. 18.

He bigan to schake ys axe, for to smyte anon,
Ac knygtes cride, & gede bitwene hem mony on.—Id. p. 25.

Tho the emperour herde this, he bigan hym by thenche,
And hys wraththe toward the kyng, for drede of the erl quenche.—Id. p. 58.

& led his vnto France, spoused for to be.
R. Brunne, p. 30

Whilom he serued in his panterie,
& was outlawed for a felone. Id. p. 33.

Eft God thei bisouht, to saue tham in that cas,
Sauely to hauen he brouht, for luf of S. Thomas,
That for holy kirke suffred martirdam,
& God for tham gan wirke, how a voice cam.—Id. p. 148.

Ac on a May morwenyng, on Malverne hulles,
Me by fel for to slepe. for weyrynesse of wandryng.
Piers Ploughman, p. 1.

Treuly I seye to you that this pore widow keste more than alle that kesten into the tresorye, for alle kesten of that thing that thei hadden plentee of, but this of hir poverte keste all thingis that sche hadde al her lyf lode.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 12.

But at the laste whanne the ellevene disciplis saten at the mete, Jheesus apperide to hem and reprevede the vnbelive of hem and the hardnesse of herte, for thei beleviden not to hem that hadden seyen that he was risun fro deith.
Id. Ib. c. 16.

And whanne every temptacioun was ended the fend wente awaye fro him for a tyme.—Id. Luk, c. 4.

But what wenten ye out for to se? a profete? yhe I seye to you and more than a profete.—Id. Ib. c. 6.

I seye to you, though he schal not rise and gyue to him, for that, that he is his frend, netheles for his contynuel axing he schal rise and gyue to him as many as he hath nede to.—Id. Ib. c. 11.

For he was late yeome fro his viage,
And wente for to don his pilgrimage.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 78.

A semely man our hoste was with alle
For to han ben a marshal in an halle. Id. Ib. v. 754.

He didde next his white lere
Of cloth of lake fin and clere,
A breche and eke a sherte,
And next his shirt an haketon,
And over that an habergeon,
For percing of his herte.
Id. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,791.

Therefore for stealing of the rose
I rede her nat the yate vnclose.—Id. The Rom. of the R.

Wel ofter of the well than of the tonne
She dranke, and for she wolde vertue plese,
She knew wel labour, but non idel ese.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8092

What! trowen ye, that whiles I may preche
And winnen gold and silver for I teche,
That I wol live in poverte wilfully!
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,373.

Forasmuch as the knowingis of these things, is a maner pocion or medicine to thee, al be it so, that I haue litle time to done it, yet neuerthelesse I would enforcen me to shewen somewhat of it. Id. Boecius, b. iv.

And forthy I you put in this degree,
That eche of you shall have his destinee
As him is shape, and harkneth in what wise;
Lo here your ende of that I shall devise.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1343.

But for that few men endite
In our Englishe, for to make
A booke for Englande's sake. Gower. Con. A Prol.

And for my wittes ben to smale
To telle euery man's tale,
This booke vpon amendement
To stonde at his commandement
With whom mine herte is of accorde,
I sende vnto mine owne lorde,
Whiche of Lancaster is Henry named. Id. Ib.

Not for to synge with the birdes. Id. Ib. b. 1.

My sonne, an hypocrite is this:
A man, whiche faineth conscience
Without, and is not so within:
And doth so for he wolde winne
Of his desyre the vaine astate. Id. Ib

Lo, sayth the kynge, nowe maie ye see,
That there is no defaut in mee
Forthy my selfe I woll acquite,
And heareth your owne wife
Of that fortune hath you refused.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Item, it is lawfull for the clergie, by their power to take away the sacraments of the church from the laictie customably offending, foraomuch as it doeth pertaine to the office of the Christian ministers by their power to minister the same vnto the lay people.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 423. The Clergy subject to Civil Power.

Fas. And had not your sudden coming prevented us, I had let my gentleman blood under the gills; I should have worm'd you, sir, for running mad.
Ford. 'Tis Pity She's a Whore, Act i. sc. 2.

Love. Is there an officer there?
Off. [without.] Yes, two or three for failing.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act v. sc. 3.

——— Two hundred ramm'd in the earth
To the armpits, and full platters round about them,
But far enough for reaching.
Massinger. Virgin Martyr, Act v. sc. 1.

Thomalin, have no care forthy,
My selfe will have a double eye,
Ylike to my flocke and thine.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. March.

But I am bound by vow, which I profest
To my drad soueraigne, when I it assayd,
That in atchieuement of her heigh behest,
I should no creature loyne vnto myne ayde,
Forthy, I may not grant that ye so greatly pray'd.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 2.

FOR, in composition, as the Dut. and Ger. Ver, and A. S. For, says Skinner, negat et aufert, denies or takes away; perhaps from the Lat. Foras. And see Wachter, Prol. Ser. 5, in Ver.

Tooke accounts for it in the following manner,—"From the Lat. Fores, foris, the French had Fors; and of the Fr. Fors, our ancestors (by their favourite pronunciation of th) made forth. Fors, in the prepositive and conjunctive use of it, the French have latterly changed to hors, but they have not so changed it when in composition. From the French we have many English words preceded by for, with this meaning; as forfeit, foreclose, &c. and we had anciently many more. (Tooke, i. 496, 332, 333.) See Forth.

Hence for, prefixed to such words, is equivalent to out, through-out, thoroughly, utterly, extremely: or to out, out of, off, away.

FO'RAGE, v.
Fo'rage, n.
Fo'rager.

Fr. Fourrager; It. Foraggiare; Sp. Forrageur. Junius, Fforraye, pabulum, q. d. fodderage, from fodder, (qv.)

To fodder,—to supply, provide, procure or purvey fodder; to go forth in quest of fodder; and thus, to pillage, to plunder, to ravage; to make an incursion (sc.) for fodder, spoil or pillage: and in Shakespeare, (as the commentators say,) to range abroad.

——— These foragers of kynde
Hadden prykede and preyede polles of people.
Piers Ploughman, p. 396.

Kynde haryde tho conscience. and cam out of the planetes.
And sent forth his ferroure. Id. Ib.

I wol no woman thirty yere of age,
It is but bene straw and gret forage.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9296.

Whych victorie letted them, that thei went not to pillage and fourrage all your townes and cyties of Peloponese.
Nicoll. Thucidides, fol. 30.

That company of horsmen of the Usepits and Teucthers were gone a forragyng and to fetch booties on the other side of the Maze, and were not at the battel.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 93.

Thus iii. dayes and iii. nightes, they were in maner withowte brede, wyne, candel or light, foder, or forage, or any maner of purueyance, other for horse or mã.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 18.

But about midday, when Cæsar had sent forth a lieutenant of his called Caius Trebonius with three legions, and all his men of armes for forrage, sodẽly they came flying vpon the forragers on all sides.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 118.

What, shall they seeke the lion in his dennе,
And fright him there? and make him tremble there?
Oh let it not be said: forrage, and runne
To meet displeasure farther from the dores,
And grapple with him ere he come so nye.
Shakespeare. K. John, Act v. sc. 1.

I like our forces their first course should hold,
To skirmish with them upon every stay,
But fight by no means with them, tho' they would,
Except they find them foraging for prey.
Drayton. Battle of Agincourt.

This bold adventure of the Samnites speeding so well, made them take better heart; so as they would not permit the Romanes to encamp farther into the countrie, no not so much, as to go a foraging into their territorie, where upon they were compelled to retire againe, and to purvele forage in the quiet and peaceable quarters of their friends about Sora.—Holland. Livius, p. 375.

There was no question what perill there would be in the returne, the forragers being but fewe and beauily loaden.
Savile. Tacitus, Historie, p. 137.

One night, a foraging for prey,
He found a store-house in his way.
Yalden. The Fox & Weasel.

With greens and flowers recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Lost in the spreading floods the landmarks lie,
Nor can the forager his way descry.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

A good plain mouse, our host, who liv'd to spare
Those heaps of forage he had glean'd with care.
Fawkes. Horace, Part of Sat. 6. b. ii.

——— Down so smooth a slope
The fleecy foragers will gladly browse.
Mason. The English Garden, b. ii.

FORA'MINOUS. Lat. Foramen, from forare; and this from foris, forth, quia qui forat, facit ut forinsecus via sit et inspectio; Vossius,—because he who makes a hole through, makes a way or passage forth or out.

Having holes through, bored, pierced, penetrated, perforated.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the sound, will dead it; for the striking against cloth, or furre, will make little sound, as hath been said. but in the passage of the sound, they will admit it better than harder bodies
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 215.

Almost every plant breeds its peculiar insect, most a butterfly, moth or fly, wherein the oak seems to contain the largest seminality, while the julus, oak, apple, dill, woolly tuft, foraminous roundles upon the leaf, and grapes under ground, make a fly with some difference.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

FOR-BA'THED. For, i. e. forth, and bathe, (qv.); i. e.
Utterly bathed, steeped, soaked.

And Priam eke with iron murdred thus,
And Troye town consumed all with flame,
Whose shores hath ben so oft forbathed in blood.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

There saw I Pompey, and Cæsar clad in armes,
Their hosts allied and all their ciuill harmes,
With conquerors' hands forbathed in their own blood,
And Cæsar weeping ouer Pompey's head.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 267.

FOR-BEAR, v.
Forbe'arance.
Forbe'arer.
Forbe'aring, n.

A. S. Forberan, abstinere, and thus, parcere. Compounded of for, (i. e. forth,) and bear. Mr. Tyrwhitt (on Rom. of the Rose) also says, to abstain, i. e. to hold or keep away from; and so, forbear itself, is forth-bear, i. e. to bear forth or away from; to hold off or away.

To hold or keep off or away from; to abstain, to withhold, to refrain; and thus, (met.) to temperate, to moderate.

For thei shoulde nate faste. ne forbere sherte
Bote feithfullich defende. & fygte for truthe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 17.

I may not certes, though I shulde die,
Forbere to ben out of your compagnie
For veray loue.—Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,056.

So that thou might the better lere
What mischiefe that this vice stereth,
Whiche in his anger nouht forbeareth.
Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And I põdre thy feruent & godly zele, wherin thou cãst in no wise forbeare thẽ that are wycked, and euyll, but thou hatest blasphemers and abhorest the enemyes of God.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

The West, as a father, all goodness doth bring,
The East, a forbearer, no manner of thing.
Tusser. The Properties of the Winds.

But nowe to these excuses, some other menne answere agayne, that the leauing oute of felonye, sacrilege, and murder, is rather a token of wylynesse, than any forbearing or fauoure.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 871.

Thus apereth vnto you the begynnyng of the right of superioritte, with a perpetuall continuance, without intermission within memorie, certayne omission and forbearyng vpon the groundes and occasions before specified we deny not.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 34.

Such and such evil God on Guyon reare,
And worse and worse, young orphane, be thy payne,
If I, or thou, dew vengeaunce doe forbeare,
Til guiltie blood her guerdon doe obtayne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

And now they have stript him naked; and haling him by both armes, as it were, cast him alive into his grave. So in pretence of forbearance, they resolve to torment him with a lingering death: the savagest robbers could not have beene more merciesse.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Of Joseph.

Phidias, when he had made the statue of Minerva, could not forbear to engrave his own name, as author of the piece.
Dryden. Eleanora, Ded.

The crowd, whose insolence forbearance swells,
While he forgives too far, almost rebels.
Tate. Absalom & Achitophel, pt ii.

Mylo forbear, to call him blest
That only boasts a large estate,
Should all the treasures of the West
Meet and conspire to make him great.
Watts. False Greatness.

There is however a limit at which forbearance ceases to be a virtue.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

FOR-BID, v.
Forbi'ddance.
Forbi'ddenly.
Forbi'ddenness.
Forbi'dder.
Forbi'dding, n.

A. S. Forbeodan; Dut. Verbieden; Ger. Verbieten; Sw. Foerbjuda, to bid forth, or away from, (sc.) any thing to be done; to prohibit. The Goth. Faurbiudan, as Ihre has noticed, is used—sensu generali imperandi; in the general sense of bidding or commanding: and so forbede appears to be used in R. Gloucester, for augmenting the force of bid.

To bid forth or away from, (sc.) any thing doing or to be done; to command not to do; to hinder from being or doing; to prohibit, to interdict; and in Shakespeare, to be under the consequences of interdiction.

In the xxxhi. yere Baldewine, Erchebishop of Caunterbury, was forbede by the Pope's letters to cesse of the buyldyng of a newe chaunterye atte Lambehithe, bygonne by him.
R. Gloucester, p. 484.

He had redy sailyng, that to the lond him ledde
& at his riuyng the lond non him forbedde.
R. Brunne, p. 70

——— Lord it me forbede
Bote ich be holiche at thyn heste, let honge me ellys.
Piers Ploukman, p. 45.

Jon answerde to him and seide, maister we sigheu oon castinge out fendis in thi name which sueth not us, and we haue forbeden him. And Jhesus seide nyle ye forbede him for ther is no man that doith vertu in my name & may soone speke yvel of me.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

John answered him saying: Master, we saw one castynge out deuels in thi name which foloweth not vs, & we forbad hym because he folowed vs not. But Jesus said, forbid hi not. For ther is no man that shal do a myracle in my name, that can lightly speake euyll of me.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

So make he eke a temple of false goddes,
How might he don a thing that more forbode is?
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,170.

But neuer ment they as I suppose the forbydding of the Bible to be readde in any vulgare tong.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 243.

Ne wight with him on that aduenture went,
But that wyld man: whom though he oft forbad,
Yet for no bidding, nor for being shent,
Would he restrained be from his attendiment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

Sleepe shall neyther night nor day
Hang upon his pent-house lid:
He shall live a man forbid.—Shakes. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 3.

Rather how hast thou yielded to transgress
The strict forbiddance, how to violate
The sacred fruit forbidd'n.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Cam. He thinkes, nay with all confidence he sweares,
As he had seen 't, or beene an instrument
To vice you to 't, that you haue toucht his queene
Forbiddenly.—Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 1.

——— Heav'n is high,
High and remote to see from thence distinct
Each thing on earth; and other care perhaps
May have diverted from continual watch
Our great forbidder, safe with all his spies
About him. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

If we have given ourselves up to be taught by the pure, and living precept of God's word only; which without more additions, nay with a forbidding of them, hath within itself the promise of eternall life, the end of all our wearisome labours, and all our sustaining hopes.
Milton. Of Prelatical Episcopacy.

Stop thy enquiry then, and curb thy sense,
Nor let dust argue with Omnipotence
'Tis God who must dispose, and man sustain,
Born to endure, forbidden to complain.
Prior. Solomon, b. iii. Power.

These suggested such strange and hideous thoughts and such distracting doubts of some of the fundamentals of Christianity, that though his looks did little betray his thoughts, nothing but forbiddenness of self dispatch hindered his acting it.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p 23.

Th' applause of listening senates to command,
The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
And read their history in a nation's eyes,
Their lot forbad.
Gray. Elegy written in a Country Churchyard.

FOR-BLOWN. } For, i. e. forth, thorough,
FORSTO'RMED. } thoroughly.
Utterly blown, or stormed.

The ship whiche on the wawes renneth
And is forstormed and forblowen
Is not more peined. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

FOR-BOUGHT. For, i.e. forth, out, off.
Bought off.

But he, whiche hyndreth euery kinde,
And for no golde maie be forbought,
The death comenid er he besought
Toke with this kynge such acqueintance,
That he with all his retenance
Ne might not defende his life.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

FOR-BREAK. For, i. e. forth.
Utterly brake, or, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, broke off.

I then that ne had all vtterly forȝeten yᵉ weping and the mourning that was set in mine hert, forbrake [abrupt] the intencion of her that entended yet to sain some other things.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iv.

FOR-BRU'ISED. For, i. e. forth.
Utterly, extremely; and thus, (as Mr. Tyrwhitt says,) sorely bruised.

But in a chaiere men about him bare,
And forbrused bothe bak and side.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,532.

FOR-CARVE, v. } A. S. For-ceorfan; for,
FO'RCUT, v. } i. e. forth, thorough.
To carve or cut through; or off.

Right as a sword forcutteth and forkerveth
An arm atwo, my dere sone, right so
A tongue cutteth frendship all atwo.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,389.

FORCE, v. } Fr. Forcer; It. Forzare; Sp. Forzar; Low Lat. Fortiare; from fortis, strong, say all the etymologists.
FO'RCE, n.
FO'RCIBLY.
FO'RCEDNESS.
FO'RCEFUL.
FO'RCELESS.
FO'RCELET.
FO'RCER.
FO'RCEMENT.
FO'RCIBLE.
FO'RCIBLY.
FO'RCING, n.

The usage by Chaucer and Camden appears to us extraordinary. Tyrwhitt explains the word in the passages from the former, thus, "No force, no matter.—I do no force, I care not. I do no force of your divinitee.—I care not for your divinity. No force of death.—No matter of death." Jamieson (in v. Fors) says, "This verb (i. e. the especial usage of the verb in such instances as those explained by Tyrwhitt, and by himself in his Dictionary,) is formed from the French phrase (in Cotgrave) Je ne fait point force de cela. I care not for, I force not of, I am not moved by, that thing."

The Latin phrase, parvi, nihili pendo, I value little, nothing, is of equivalent meaning, i. e. "I weigh, give or allow (little, no) weight. I do no force, I give or allow no force, no strength, no weight to your divinity."

To force, in modern usage, is,—to have or give strength or power; to strengthen, to fortify; to use, exert or employ strength or power; to compel, to overpower, to subdue; to effect or accomplish, to acquire, by strength or power, by violence;—to violate.

"Force or Forse, a cascade or waterfall. Su. Goth. Fors, a cataract. The High Force in Teesdale is an object of great sublimity," (Brocket.)
Fors, (in Scotch,) a stream or current, (Jamieson.) See Fors in Jamieson, and Ihre.

And heo a forcede hom the more, the hethene a wey to dryue R. Gloucester, p. 121.

Alle the Bretons he ouercome, that wild him assaile,
& in his thirtende gere force gan him faile
Tille Uttred his kosyn, a stille knyght in stoure,
He gaf his kyngdom, and died in langoure.
R. Brunne, p. 6.

No force, quod he, but tell me all your grefe
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7771.

My lady, and my love, and wif so dere,
I put me in your wise governance,
Cheseth yourself which may be most plesance,
And most honour to you and me also,
I do no force the whether of the two;
For as you liketh, it sufficeth me.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Tale, v. 6816.

I do no force of your divinitee.—Id. Freres Tale, v. 7094.

Now rekke I never to be ded right here,
Sin I stond in your love, and in your grace,
No force of death, ne whan my spirit pace.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8968.

Therof no force, good yeman, quod our host,
Sin of the conning of thy lord thou wost.
Telle how he doth, I pray thee heartily,
Sin that he is so crafty and so sly.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Prologue, v. 16,120.

But trewely, min owen maister dere,
This was a pitous tale for to here:
But nathles, passe over, is no force.
Id. The Pardoneres Prologue, v. 12,237.

It little forceth how long a man liue, but how wel and vertuously.—Udal. Marke, c. 5.

For either they must of force go on the Christian coast, and so fall into their hands, or els on this coast, and fall into the kings of this towne, or Tripolis, their hands, which if they should, will neuer be recouered.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 174.

By reason wherof the pore paysaũtes & rustical people goyng abrode, without feare or suspicion of euil, wer ouer ronne or taken with the horssemen or thei could attain to any toune, or forcelet.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 18.

Yᵉ peinful climing of mountaines did nothing discourage them, nor the shame of forceable breaking into this or that man's house, could not kepe them from him, in case he had any where by occasiõ kept himself secret within doores.
Udal. Luke, c. 5.

For it is not enough, at all aduentures (not regardyng what waie) to haue entred forceably within the limites, enclosure, and shepefolde of the churche. It is not sufficiente to haue atteigned the name and dignitie of a shepherde, not forcing how.—Id. John, c. 10.

But this I thought to commit to historie to the intent men might see the lamentable decaie of true Christianitie amongst Christian Bishops, who inflamed with glorious ambition so contended for honour, that without meere forcement of lawe no modestie could take place.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 157. Contention between Cant. & York.

That morning that he [William the Conqueror] was to joyne battell with Harold, his armorer put on his back-peece before, and his breastplate behinde, the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day: to whom the Duke answered—I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in South-saying, (as in sooth I have none,) it doth prognosticate that I shall change copie from a Duke to a King.—Camden. Remaines. Wise Speeches.

But let not what so needfully was done,
Though still perus'd, make your ambition feare;
For could I force all monarchys to one,
That universal crown I would not weare.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 8.

——— My kind sister,
Thy teares are of no force to mollify
This flinty man.—Heywood. Woman killed with Kindness.

——— Yet from all the fayre
Of this so forceful concourse; vp in ayre
The golden-rodd sustaining Argus guide,
Rapt me in sight of all.
Chapman. A Hymn to Venus, pt. iii.

Her eies full swollen with flowing streames aflote,
Were with her lookes throwne up full piteously,
Her forcelesse handes together oft she smote,
With dolefull shrikes that eckoed in the skye.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p 257.

And I but yesterday produc't to light,
By which it falle into his owne free sight
That I in no similitude apper'd
Of power to be the forcer of a herde.
Chapman. Hymn to Hermes, pt. iii.

Ach. A short deliberation in this
May serve to give you counsel: to be honest,
Religious and thankfull, in themselves
Are forcible motives, and can need no flourish
Or gloss in the perswader.
Beaum. & Fletch. The False One, Act i. sc 2.

Yet was the stroke so forceably applide,
That made him stagger with uncertaine sway,
As if he would have tottered to one side.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

Let other rapes of virgines, forcings of honourable dames be forgotten: let us imagine that we have nothing to doe, nor to meddle with Philip, for fear of whose cruelitie ye were all so mute, and could not open your mouth.
Holland. Livie, p. 822.

Cur. No doubt ye may compel her,
But what a mischievous unhappy fortune
May wait upon this will of yours, as commonly
Such forcings ever end in hates and ruines.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act i. sc. 1.

From a desire of forcing mutually our own opinions upon others, instead of exhorting them to study and obey the Gospel of Christ; have risen strifes and contentions, hatred and uncharitableness, schisms and divisions without end.
Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 48.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend,
His double-biting axe and beaming spear
Each asking a gigantic force to rear.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters.—Burnet. Theory.

Against the forcedness and incongruity of this sense much might be said.—Worthington. On the Millennium, p. 2.

On his broad shoulders fell the forceful brand,
Then glancing downward lopp'd his holy hand,
Which stain'd with sacred blood the blushing sand.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

Now the usual means for the ascent of water, is either by suckers or forcers, or something equivalent thereunto.
Wilkins. Daedalus, vol. ii. c. 15.

The desire of knowing more is itself natural, and so lawful: and there is no desire more strong and forcible in man fallen, who is in any degree exalted above sense
Bp. Bull, vol. ii. Disc. 5.

For the Holy Spirit moves and inclines only, and does not compel; he leads and conducts as many as will be led and conducted by him, but does not so forcibly attract them, as to overrule all stubborn resistance or reluctant perverseness
Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 330.

Warin was exceedingly fond of money, and having forced his daughter, who was beautiful, to marry a rich and deformed officer of the revenue, she poisoned herself a few days after the wedding, saying, "I must perish since my father's avarice would have it so."
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

To gain something like a satisfactory conclusion in this point, it were well to examine, what proportion is, since several who make use of that word, do not always seem to understand very clearly the force of the term, nor to have very distinct ideas concerning the thing itself.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 2.

Oct. 9, 1769. After dinner I went along the Milthrope turnpike four miles to see the falls or force of the river Kent.
Gray. To Dr. Wharton.

Didst thou to heaven address the forceful prayer,
Fold thy fair hands, and raise the mournful eye,
Implore each power benevolent to spare,
And call down pity from the golden sky!
Langhorne. To Miss Crocroft.

He is at once elegant and sublime, forcible and ornamented, he unites energy with copiousness, and dignity with variety.—Louth, vol. ii. Lect. 21. By Gregory.

When I consider this, I seem more inclined than the generality even of sober critics to excuse the false accounts of the Pagan writers concerning the Exodus; who concur in representing the Jews as expelled or forcibly driven out of Egypt.—Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

FO'RCEMEAT, i.e. forced meat, stuffed meat. See FARCE.

FO'RCEPS. } Forceps (says Vossius) dicitur quasi ferricapis, hoc est,
FO'RCIPAL. } ferrum, quo quid capimus sive
FO'RCIPATED. } prehendimus; the iron or steel
FORCIPA'TION. } with which we take or hold any thing.

Mechanicks made use hereof in forcipal organs, and instruments of incision.—Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

The locusts have antennæ or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind.
Id. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 3

And a punishment (bowelings and consuming men's entrails by fire) surely it is, though of great terror, yet by reason of the quick dispatching, of less torment far than either the wheel or forcipation, yea than simple burning.
Bacon. Observations on a Libel.

At which time all her motions, some of which were judged convulsive, and others, that had been excited by our rousing her with a forceps, appeared to cease, and her head to hang carelessly down as if she was quite dead.
Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 369.

In many insects the mouth is converted into a pump or sucker, fitted at the end sometimes with a wimble, sometimes with a forceps; by which double provision, viz. of the tube and the penetrating form of the point, the insect first bores through the integuments of its prey, and then extracts the juices.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 12.

FOR-CLOSE, v. } Usually written fore-close.
FORCLO'SURE. } Fr. Forclorre; for, Fr. Fors or hors, out; and close, Lat. Clausum, from claudere; Fr. Clorre. Forclose—

To shut out or exclude, to block out, close up, to debar. For the legal application of the word, see the quotation from Blackstone.

There could come no succour unto thé, no nor any victuals be conueyed in for theyr relieſe, the wales being forecloſed by the enemy.—Goldinge. Cæsar, p. 66.

Now it fell out so that the continuall raine which overflowed all the fields, had forecloſed and stopped the passages three wayes betwene his armies, so as they could not help one another.—Holland. Livius, p. 298.

You resolve notwithstanding, to proceed in your own way, and to make a show of saying something, though you find yourself already forecloſed, and every objection obviated.
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 265

Our question is barely upon the pleading before us, whether we have a sufficient pleading of such an impeachment as can foreclose the hands of the court?
State Trials. Charles II. Edward Fitzharris.

The mortgagee may either compel the sale of the estate, in order to get the whole of his money immediately; or else call upon the mortgagor to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof, to be for ever foreclosed from redeeming the same, that is, to lose his equity of redemption without possibility of recall.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 10.

FORD, v. } Junius and Skinner agree, that
FORD, n. } Ford is from Far-an, ire, trans-
FO'RDABLE. } ire, to go, to go over. And Tooke that it is the past part. of that verb; and always, without exception, means gone, i. e. a place gone over or through, (Div. of Purley, ii. 179.) Upon this past part. the verb, to ford, has been formed.

To go or pass through or over; generally applied, when shallow water is to be passed; or met.

The river [Euphrates] being small and narrow, for that he is so neere his head, and as yet not growne big by other rivers running into him, might be easily passed over, as having in it many shallow foords.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 117.

But now, readers, we have a port within sight; his last section, which is no deep one, remains only to be forded, and then the wish'd shore.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

The Prince Palatine himself with Major King, thinking to go over the Weser in a coach, the water being deep, and not fordable, he sav'd himself by the help of a willow.
Howell, b. i. Let. 39. s. 6.

Thus in devotion having eas'd their grief,
From sacred oracles they seek relief;
And to Cephisus' brook their way pursue;
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. The Iron Age.

FOR-DO, v. In Chaucer, (Frankeleynes Tale,) "I am fordo," says Tooke, "is I am forth-done, i. e. done to go forth, caused to go forth, i. e. out of doors. In modern language, turned out of doors.

Somner; "Fordoen, fordon, perdere, pessundare, to destroy, to undoe." Dut. Ver-doen. But this is merely a consequential signification; he that is forth-done, turned out of, deprived of, house and home, "who may there no longer dwell," is consequently, undone.

To do, or put or turn forth or out, (sc.) out of doors; and thus, to undo. Also, utterly done, (in Shakespeare,) overdone, (sc.) with labour; and thus, tired, wearied.

The bode was sent to rathe. the messenger com ouersone
For soth it was gret skathe, his passage was fordon.
R. Brunne, p. 87.

Thus than was the sawe whilom in that cite
The pape fordid that lawe, the skille can I not se.
R. Brunne, p. 322.

For that that kynde doth, unkynde fordoth.
Piers Ploukman, p. 334.

Alas (quod he) alas, that euer I beheyght
Of pured gold a thousande pounde of weight
Unto this philosopher, how shall I do?
I se no more, but that I am fordo;
Myne herytage mote I nedes sell,
And ben a beggar, here may I no lenger dwell.
Chaucer. The Frankeleynes Tale, v. 11,866.

This monk began upon this wif to stare,
And sayd, alas! my nece, God forbede,
That ye for any sorwe, or any drede,
Fordo yourself. Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 1357.

Delicacie his sweet toothe
Hath suffred so that it fordoothe
Of abstinence all that ther is.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

Wilt thou not first go see where thou hast left
Anchises thy father fordone with age!
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Felowe, he seyde, what dyd thou there?
Syr, wyth my lord on the were,
That now to dedd ys dyght:
As Sowdears, my brodur and Y,
We have noght ellys to leve by,
Owre fadur fordyd owre ryght.
Le Bone Florence of Rome. Ritson, vol iii.

Thus Lord, is thy mercy and justice fordone by him that sayth he is thy vicar on earth; for he neither keepeth it himself nor will, nor suffer other to do it
Fox. Martyrs, p. 370. The Complaint of the Ploughman.

To which, when now they gan approach in sight,
The lady counsel'd him the place to shonne,
Whereas so many knightes had fowly been fordonne.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf behowls the moon,
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task foredon.
Shakespeare. Song of the Faries.

In his own quiet house ordain'd to die,
He knows the place in which his bones shall lie,
No trumpet warns him 'put his harness on,
Though faint, and all with weariness foredone.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iv.

Fierce as the lion roaring for his prey,
Or honess of royal whelps foredone.
Churchill. Independence.

FOR-DRIVE, v. A.S. For-drifan; Dut. Ver-dryven. Driven forth, utterly, away.

Right so fareth loue that seld in one
Hodeth his ancre, for right anone
Whan thei in ease wene best to hue
They ben with tempest all fordriue.
Chaucer. Rom of the Rose.

FOR-DRU'NKEN. A.S. For-drenkan; for, i. e. forth.
Utterly drunk, extremely drunk.

The miller that fordronken was all pale,
So that unethes upon his hors he sat,
He n'old avalen neither hood ne hat.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 3122.

He was parde an old felaw of youres,
And sodenly he was yslain to night,
Fordronke as he set on his benche upright.
Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 1268.

FOR-DRY. A. S. For-drigan; for, i.e. forth, and dry, (qv.)
Utterly dry, quite dry.

Amidde a tree fordry, as white as chalk,
As Canace was playing in hire walk,
Ther set a faucon over hire hed ful hie,
That with a pitous vois so gan to crie.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,723.

FOR-DWI'NED. A. S. For-dwinan; Dut. Ver-duynen, for, i. e. forth, and dwine or dwindle, (qv.)
To consume, to waste, to vanish, utterly away.

Her face frounced and forpined
And both hir hondes lorne fordwened
So old she was, that she ne went
A foote. Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

FORE. A.S. Foran, fore; Dut. Veur, voor; Ger. Fur, vor, prior or anterior in space or time. In the diagram by Wilkins, for the clearer explication of the local prepositions, it is placed at the front of the figure of the man, and described as referring either to motion or rest.

Fore is very commonly written—prefixed; and some few words so formed will require a separate explanation. Many such compounds have descended from the A. S.; Foran- or fore-sceawian, to foreshew, præostendere. Fore-gan, to forego, præire. Fore-sæcgan, to foresay, præ-dicere. Fore-thencean, to forethink, præ-meditari. For-scip, foreship. Of these some quotations to illustrate the usage are subjoined.

Nowe dooeth God with his Chrysten folkes ordinarily take that way in the getting them theyr belief and fayth that though they dooe not merite with anye for-goynge good dedes, nor deserue the gyfte of beliuyng, yet maye they with good endeuoure and obediente conformitie deserue and merite in the beliefing.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 582.

Wherefore not allonly of this man we shall say that he shall dwell in wysdome, but as a perfyght man and not a chylde, he shall thynke and deme, and haue suche a circumspecte wyth hym, that he shall dylygentlye fore-loke and see that Goddys wylle be done and not his.
Fabyan, an. 1399.

Two young men of the parish are yerely chosen by their last foregoers.—Carew. Survey of Cornwall, p. 68.

And so it was that where Jacob the Patriarke a litle before he shoulde dye, being endowed with the spirite of propheeye, dyd fore-saye veray thynges which shoulde afterwarde come to passe.—Udal. Luke, c. 1.

But the Pharisels were neuer the better, neyther for that they vnderstoode the prophecies & for-sayynges of the prophetes, nether because they had so ofte tymes hearde Jesus preache vnto them the heauenlye doctrine
Udal. Marke, c. 7.

He was not the Sonne of God, but a voyce fore-shewing the Sonne of God, who anon after should be disclosed to the world.—Id. Ib. c. 1.

Now is Daniel called to be the fore-shewer of the iugement of God) neither saluting the king) nor prayysyng his giftis.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 5.

Their for-ships al to landward then to turne, and inward bend
He bids his mates, and to the deepe floud glad he doth descend. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. vii.

I trust it shall so come to pass that neither I shall repent me, for that I haue giuen you counsaill, nor yet you shall fore-thinke yourselfe, that you haue obeyed and followed my aduice.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 40.

For mine owne part I saw them not, but I am resolued that so many people did not all combine, or fore-thinke to make the report.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 653.

And finallie, [how contrarious] to the ancient lawes, customes, and examples of our fore-elders during the daies of a thousand yeares after Christ, they were.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1073. Notes for Legitimation of Priest's Children.

Like as a feareful dove, which through the rain
Of the wide ayre her way does cut amain
Having farre off espyde a tassell gent,
Which after her his nimble winges doth straine,
Doubleth her haste for feare to bee for-hent,
And with her pinsons cleaves the liquid firmament.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c 4.

Panæphus now, though all in the cold sweat,
Dares venture through the feared castle gate,
Albe the faithful oracles have fore-sayne
The wisest senator shall there be slaine.
Bp. Hall, Sat. I. b vi.

——— When the crowned cock
That to the village lately was the clock,
Comes to roost by him, with his hen, fore-shewing
The shower would quickly fall, that then was brewing.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

For if I ever thought or rather dream'd of loyes,
That litle lightning but fore-show'd a thunder of annoyes,
It was but like a fruit that Tantalus torments,
Which while he sees and naught obtains, his hunger but augments. Stirling. Aurora, Elegie 2.

His sanguine beames about his forehead spread,
A sad presage of ill that should betide,
With vermile drops at eu'n his tresses bleed,
Fore-shews of future heat.
Fairfax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. iii. s. 54.

The fertile Nilus never rashly mov'd,
Which (ag'd in trauell) many countreys knows,
Whose inundation by the labourer lov'd,
As barrennesse or plenty it fore-shows.
Stirling. Doomes-day. Third Houre.

He thought rue she should, and fore-thinke
That she her had unto him misbore.
Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

——— I then express'd my zeale
Unto the glory, now the need inflames me:
When I fore-think the hard conditions,
Our states must undergo, except, in time,
We do redeeme ourselves to liberty
And breake the iron yoke forg'd for our necks.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act I.

FORE-BODE, v. } A. S. Fore-bodian, bodian; Ger. Bieten.
FORBO'DE, n. } To see or discern; to
FORBO'DING, n. } shew or exhibit, before, or prior: to prognosticate.

And in thy lower rooms the wolves shall howl,
And thy gilt chambers lodge the raven and the owl,
And all the wing'd ill-omens of the air
Though no new ills can be fore-boded there.
Cowley. Isaiah, c. 34.

There is upon many fore-bodes, and seeming more than probabilities, out of the Revelation, one great fate to come upon the Churches of Christ; the last killing of the witnesses, that hath been so long fore-warned of by many witnesses.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 72.

——— He cautious backward drew
His horse compell'd; fore-boding, in his fears,
The rattling ruin of the clashing cars,
The floundering coursers rolling on the plain,
And conquest lost through frantic haste to gain.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxii.

For the Atheists can never wholly extinguish those horrible fore-bodings of conscience —Bentley, Ser. 1.

Cicero called upon him [Matius] on his way from Rome into the country, and found him sullen, desponding, and fore-boding nothing but wars and desolation, as the certain consequence of Cæsar's death.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

The Earl, who watched perpetually over him as his guardian angel, and forgot his own infirmities to provide against those of his son, expresses great anxiety on these occasions, and seems with difficulty to conceal some fore-bodings of the event.—Chesterfield. Misc. Works vol. i. Mem. by Maty.

FORE-BY, i. e. Forth-by, out by.

Not farre away [quoth he] he hence doth wonne
Foreby a fountaine, where I late him left,
Washing his body wounds that through the steele were cleft.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6

As when a falcon hath with nimble flight
Flowne at a flush of ducks, foreby the brooke,
The trembling foule dismayd with dreadfull sight
Of death, the which them almost overtook,
Doe hide themselues from her astonying looke.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 3.

FORE-CAST, v. } To cast in one's mind
FO'RECAST, n. } before hand, (Minshew.)
FO'RECASTING, n. } To cast or throw (met.)
the mind or thoughts forward: to think, to meditate, on what is future, on what is to be or come to pass; to foresee or provide, to anticipate.

A col fox, ful of sleigh iniquitee,
That in the grove had wonned yeres three,
By high imagination forecast,
The same night thurghout the hegges brast
Into the yerd.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,223.

But by hys prudent and forecastyng counceil he somewhat stayed till he might se the ayre clere and no darcke cloude nere to the place where the listes were.
Hall. Hen. IV. an. 1.

In thinges perteining to this presente lyfe ye haue a witte and a forecaste: but in thingis belonging to immortalitie ye haue no sighte at all.—Udal. Luke, c. 12.

For the witty inuencions, forecastinges, policies disputatiõe and other laborious affaires of Anselme aboute the ouerthrowe of princely authoritye and vprearynge of Antichristes tyrannye, &c.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

But when the furious fitt was overpast,
His cruel facts he often would repent,
Yet, wilful man, he never would forecast,
How many mischieves should ensure his heedlesse haste.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

——— Till at length
Their lords, the Philistines, with gather'd powers
Enter'd Judea seeking me, who then
Safe to thy rock of Etham was retir'd,
Not flying, but forecasting in what place
To set upon them, what advantag'd best.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

But. Younger brothers call you them, and have no more forecast? I am ashamed of you.
Wilkins. The Miseries of Inforced Marriage, Act iv.

And, warily forecasting to evade
The giant's furious arm, about him wheel'd,
With restlesse steps aye traversing the field.
West. Education.

A man o' the town dines late, but soon enough,
With reasonable forecast and dispatch,
T' ensure a side-box station at half price.
Cowper. Task, b. ii.

FORE-FA'THERS. Ancestors, generally, those who have lived before.

But the truth is this: that God of his mercy had promised vnto our fore-fathers his deare sonne Christ that he shoulde deliuer them frõ all iniquities, and that all the nations of the worlde be blessed in him.—Fryth. Workes, p. 22.

But those men (as I thinke) neuer or very rarely taste of the sweetnes of deuotion and prayer, for the whiche cause chiefly our fore-fathers of the churche, did appoint those canonical praiers, as we use to call them.
Fisher. A Godly Treatise.

——— The other peeres, for povertie,
Were forst their auncient houses to let lie,
And their olde castles to the ground to fall,
Which their fore-fathers, famous over all,
Had founded for the kingdomes ornament,
And for their memories long monument.
Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

The covetousness of the gentry appeared, as in raising their rents, so in oppressing the poorer sort by enclosures, thereby taking away the lands where they had used, and their fore-fathers, to feed their cattle for the subsistence of their families; which was such an oppression, that it caused them to break out into a rebellion in the year 1549.
Strype. Memorials. Edw. IV. an. 1553.

No more our great fore-fathers stain our cheeks
With blushes; their renown our shame no more;
In military garb, and suddain arms,
Up starts old Britain
Young. On the Public Situation of the Kingdom.

FORE-HAND, n. } Any thing taken, placed,
FO'REHAND, adj. } done, before; the fore,
FO'REHANDED. } leading, or chief part, place or station.

And but for ceremonie, such a wretch,
Winding vp dayes with toyle, and nights with sleepe,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a king.
Shakespeare. Henry V. Act iv. sc 1.

Ulys. The great Achilles, whom opinion crownes
The sinew, and the fore-hand of our hoste,
Hauing his eare full of his ayery fame,
Growes dainty of his wrath, and in his tent
Lies mocking our designes.
Id. Troil. & Cress. Act i. sc. 3.

This pre-contract, this anticipated oneness, this fore-hand union hath some such virtue in it, that let them afterwards fall out never so much, they must be brought together again, and be one.—Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. iii. p. 125.

——— If I haue knowne hir,
You will say, she did embrace me as a husband,
And so extenuate the fore-hand sinne.
Shakespeare. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc. 1.

Wid. Go, thou art a pretty fore-handed fellow, would thou wert wiser.—Beaum. & Fletch. Scornful Lady, Act ii. sc. 1.

He told me I must go then to have my trial at the King's Bench bar. Lord, says I, I wonder I had no fore-hand notice of it, I have no witnesses ready; he answered, he could not help it, but go I must.
State Trials, an. 1678. Introd. to Trials for Pop. Plot.

FORE-HEAD. A. S. Fore-heafod; Dut. Veur-hoofd; frons, anterior pars capitis, i. e. The front, or anterior part of the head; above the eyes.

And I saigh, and lo a lomb stood on the Mount of Syon, and with him an hundride thousynde and four and fourti thousynde hauynge his name and the name of his fadir writun in her forheedis.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 14.

And I loked, and lo, a lamb stode on the Mount Sion, & wyth hym an c. and xliiii m hauynge hys father's name writte in their foreheades.—Bible, 1551. Revelacion, c. 14.

——— Her flesh so tender
That with a brere small and tender
Men might it cleue, I dare well saie
Her forhedde frounceles all plaie.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

He commaunded, but if they auoided the citie of Rauenne, by certayne day assigned, that menne marken hem on the forhedde with an hotte yron, and chasen hem out of the toune.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

And with a stroke (as he was wondrous strong,)
He cleft his crown that on his helm he wore,
And tore his plume, that to his heels it hung;
Then with a second bruis'd his helm before,
That it his forehead pitifully wrung.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

It was the question of the rich and precious jewell of England, to which his hardie adversarie had never the face to reply. My refuter's forehead is stronger with a weaker wit; let him trie here the power of audacitie.
Bp. Hall. Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i. s. 3.

A savory dish, a homely treat
Where all is plain, where all is neat,
Without the stately spacious room,
The Persian carpet, or the Tyrian loom,
Clear up the cloudy foreheads of the great.
Dryden. Horace, b. iii. Ode 29.

Our grandmothers, they tell us, wore
Their fardingale and their bandore,
Their pinners, forehead cloth, and ruff,
Content with their own cloth and stuff.
King. The Ar e, pt. xii.

We saw no emotion of your mind, none of your body, no striking your forehead, or your thigh; no stamping with your foot.—Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 2.

FO'REIGN. } Fr. Forain; It. Forestier;
FO'REIGNER. } Sp. Foraneo. From Lat. Fores,
FO'REIGNNESS. } foris, (from Gr. Φορα, Dor. for Θυρα.) Fr. Fors, forth, out. Equivalent to the A. S. Ut-landisc; Dut. Uitlandsch, outlandish; Dut. Uitlander, an outlander.
Out, or away from, external; and consequentially, extraneous, amoved or removed, alien, strange, irrelevant.

Of the number of which accusours, one Basilius that whilome was chased out of the kynges seruice, is now compelled in accusyng of my name, for nede of foraine monv.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

For if that name of gentillesse be referred to renoune and clerenesse of linage, than is gentil name but a forain thing, that is to say, to hem that glorifien hem of her linage.
Id. Ib. b. iii.

Foraine gentilnesse ne maketh thee nat gentill.—Id. Ib.

Yea prosperous pastimes these may bee iustly counted, by which he [King Edgar] also made euident to the whole world, that as he wisely knew the ancient bounds and limits of this British empire, so that he could and would royally, iustly, and triumphantly enioy the same, spite of the Deuil, and maugre the force of any foraine potentate.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 8.

The Jews did in manier interprete the name of neighbour, to extende no ferther but to menne of their owne nacion, supposing that it was lawfull for them to hate aliones and forensours, and to leat them alone without dooyng them any benefite or good at all —Udal. Luke, c. 10.

Which that those knights likewise mote understand,
And witnesse forth aright in forrain land,
Taking them up unto her stately throne,
Where they mote heare the matter throughly scand
On either part, she placed th' one on the one,
Th' other on th' other side, and neare them none.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 9.

He who is not trusted with his own actions, his drift not being known to be evil, and standing to the hazard of law and penalty, has no great argument to think himself reputed in the commonwealth wherein he was born, for other than a fool or a foreigner.—Milton. Of Unlicensed Printing.

So Dryden, not contented with the fame
Of his own works, though an immortal name,
To lands remote sends forth his learned Muse,
The noblest seeds of foreign wit to choose.
Granvill. To Dryden.

Rebels were sainted, foreigners did reign,
Outlaws return'd, preferment to obtain,
With frogs and toads, and all their croaking train.
Dryden. Sunum Cuique.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right.—Locke.

He [the Catholic] was rendered a foreigner in his native land only because he retained the religion along with the property handed down to him from those, who had been the old inhabitants of that land before him.
Burke. Speech at Bristol, previous to the Election.

FORE-JUDGE, v. } To pre-judge or preju-
FOREJU'DGMENT. } dicate; to judge or deem, before; (sc.) trial, examination, proof.

They were takyn as prysoners in the Towre of London, and soone after for-iuged, häged, and hedyd, and their heddys also sette vpon London brydge.
Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400.

It is not my part to make any ones title either better or worse with my fore-iudgment.—Udal. Marke, Prof.

That all the Gods which saw his wondrous might,
Did surely deeme the victorie his due:
But seldome seene, fore-iudgement proveth true.
Spenser. Muiopotmos.

Now if we should acquit this man (we have no assurance we shall acquit him, only suppose it) then there is nothing against him but what lies in a parliamentary way, and we shall fore-judge their cause.
State Trials, an. 1681. Edward Fitzharris.

FO'RE-KNOW. } Dut. Veur-kennen; Ger.
FOREKNO'WABLE. } Vorkennen. Fore, and FOREKNO'WER. } know; A. S. Cnawan.
FOREKNO'WING, n. } To know before; to have FOREKNO'WLEDGE. } a prescience of, a foresight or providence; to foresee, to foreweet, (qv.)

No forsoth (qd she) for the deuine sight runneth beforne and seeth all the futures, and clepeth hem ayen, and retourneth hem to the proper prescience of his proper knowing, ne he enter changeth not, so as thou wenest ye stoundes of his foreknowing.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

Marke also this, that there is nothing hyd and vnknowen vnto the Lorde; so that it is manifest and playne hereby, that he hath foreknew, and wilingly suffered whatsoeuer he suffered for our cause.—Udal. Marke, c. 13.

Now for the illes and displeasures whiche ye haue suffered for my sake, take the inheritaunce of the heauenly kingdome, whiche by the prouidence of God and by his determinacion, was prepared for you of God the foreknower of al thinges, before the world was made.—Id. Matthew, c. 25.

Thése straunge tokens or shewings, propheeyings and foreknowynges, and forepercevnynges of thynges to folowe and come. what other thynge do they declare, &c

Id. Flowers of Latine Speaking, p. 56.

On the other side, yf he by his foreknowledge perceaue me to be dampned, no prayers in the world are able to profit me, forasmuch as his prescience cannot be disappointed or chaunged. Verily this croked dilemma, or false subtyle argument hath seduced very many.

Fisher. A Godly Treatise.

Naught unto them this general wrack foreshowes,
Men, angels, no, not Christ (as man) foreknows.

Stirling. Doomes-day. The Third Hour.

It is certainly foreknowable what they will do in such and such circumstances.—More. Diuine Dialogues.

Every thing that is future God sees it will come to pass, and yet, ου προγνωσις εστιν αιτιον προγνωσθεντων, the foreknower is not cause of all that are foreknown.

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 701.

So that, if thou wilt weigh his foreknowledge, with which he discerneth all things, thou wilt more rightly esteeme it to be the knowledge of a never fading instant, than a foreknowledge as of a thing to come.

Boecius. Philosophical Comfort, (1609,) b. v. pr. 6.

——— If I foreknew
Foreknowledge had no influence on their fault,
Which had no less prov'd certain unforeknown

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Is there no seeming repugnancy in maintaining that the same act is certain, as being foreknown; uncertain, as depending on the will of a free agent?

Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 301.

Since therefore neither the foreknowledge of God nor the liberty of man, can without a plain contradiction be denied; it follows unavoidably, that the foreknowledge of God must be of such a nature as is not inconsistent with the liberty of man.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 47.

Nor hath Jove given us to foreknow
When the rich years of virtue shall succeed;
Yet bold and daring on we go,
Contriving schemes of many a mighty deed.

West. Pindar. Nemean Ode i.

FORE-LOCK. The lock, (sc.) of hair, at the fore or front part of the head; generally, the front.

Goe to my love, where she is carelesse layd,
Yet in her winters bowre not well awake,
Tell her the ioyous time will not be staid
Unlesse she doo him by the fore-lock take.

Spenser, son. 70.

The place was apt, the pastime pleasant,
Occasion with her fore lock present.

Congreve. The Peasant in Search of his Heifer.

FORE'NSICK. } Lat. Forensis, from Forum.
FORE'NSICAL. } See the quotation from Watts.

The matter of fact being most evident to the contrary, and it being most prompt and proper, that words used either among the Greeks or Hebrews in forinsecal sences, may be bent by Christian writers to a sacred

Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 439.

By the same reason, speaking peace is verbum forense, a forensecal act; properly belonging to court proceedings, or holding analogy with sentence in a court

Goodwin. Works, vol. v. p. 286.

The forum was a public place in Rome, where lawyers and orators made their speeches before the proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend: thence all sorts of disputations in public assemblies, or courts of justice, where several persons make their distinct speeches for or against any person or thing whatsoever, but more especially in civil matters, may come under the name of forensic disputes.

Watts. Improvement of the Mind, c. 12.

Lactantius, from a forensick lawyer now became an advocate for Christianity, found nothing so much hindered its reception with the learned, as the doctrine of a future judgment: which, their universal principle, that God could not be angry, directly opposed.

Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

FORE-SEE. } A. S. Fore-seon; Dut. Veur-sien; Ger. Vor-sehen; Sw. Foersee, prævidere, to see before FORESEE'ER.
FO'RESIGHT.
FORESI'GHTFUL.

To see before; (sc.) any thing happens or comes to pass: any thing future or that can or may, or is to, be.

He seeketh to foresee the peril of thy fall;
He findeth out thy faults, and warnes thee of them all.

Vncertaine Auctors. The Praise of a true Friend.

Not that hys foreknowledge forceth them to bee nought, but for it is impossible for them to be nought, but yt hys infinite foresight must nedes from the beginning foresee it.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1071.

I must nedes in hart thinke and with mouth confesse and saie, that you be a sure frend, and trustye counsailour, a vigilent foresear, a very louer of your countrey, a naturall countrey man.—Hall. Rich. III. an. 2.

But Lau. Val. li 4. cle. ca. 13. saith in this wise he is called in Latine stultus, that lacketh experience in thynges, and knowlage of the worlde, nor hath no foresyght in thynges to come.—Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 107.

Give us foresightful minds; give us minds to obey
What foresight tells, our thoughts upon the knowledge stay.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

He well foresaw, how that the Roman courage,
Impatient of pleasure's faint desires,
Through idleness would turne to civill rage
And be her selfe the matter of her fires.

Spenser. The Ruins of Rome.

Adding that God foreseeing ὁποιος εκαστος, how qualified every one will be, sees also the causes that he will be so, mean while his foreseeing is not the cause of their being what they are, but though strange, saith he, yet 'tis true, το εσομενον αιτιον τουτοισι εἰναι του περι αυτου προγνωσιν, the thing future is the cause that such a foreknowledge is had of it, for it doth not because it was known come to pass, but because, (ενεκα εσεσθαι) it was to come to pass, it was known.—Hammond. Works, vol. i. p. 70.

At length the foolish flie without foresight,
As he that did all daunger quite despise,
Toward those parts came flying carelesslie,
Where hidden was his hatefull enemie.

Spenser. Muiopotmos.

Not Troy itself, though built by hands divine,
Nor Priam, nor his people, nor his line,
My mother, nor my brothers of renown,
Whose valour yet defends th' unhappy town:
Not these, nor all their fates which I foresee,
Are half of that concern I have for thee.

Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. vi.

'Tis very reasonable to apprehend, that God, without influencing men's wills by his power, yet by his foresight cannot but have as much certainer knowledge of future free events, than either men or angels can possibly have, as the perfection of his nature is greater than that of theirs.

Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 47.

For fame, for honest fame we strive,
But not to struggle half alive,
And drag a miserable being,
Its end still fearing and foreseeing.—Lloyd. The Puff.

A disposition to expence was complained of; to that I opposed not mere retrenchment, but a system of economy, which would make a random expence without plan or foresight, in future not easily practicable.

Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

FORE-SHO'RTEN, v. } To shorten (to the FORESHO'RTNING, n. } eye) parts that come or stand forward.

As 'tis a greater mystery in the art
Of painting, to fore-shorten any part
Than draw it out; so 'tis in books the chief
Of all perfections to be plain and brief.

Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

Show no parts which are unpleasing to the sight, as all fore-shortnings usually are.—Dryden. Du Fresnoy, § 18.

FORE-SPEAK. A. S. Fore-sprec-an, Dut. Veur-spreken, prcloqui.

To speak or bespeak, before: to predict, to foretell, good or ill.

And yet wer there some in that assembly of people, which did coniecte (because of the forespeaking of death) yt he had spoken of the tormente of the crosse.—Udal. John, c. 12.

——— Some call me witch,
And being ignorant of myself, they go
About to teach me how to be one, urging,
That my bad tongue (by their bad usage made so)
Fore-speaks their cattle, doth bewitch their corn,
Themselves, their servants, and their babes at nurse.

Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act ii. sc. 1.

Censure. Pray God, some on us be not a witch, gossip, to fore-speak the matter thus.

B. Jonson. Staple of Newes. See. Intermeane after Act ii.

FO'REST. } Fr. Forest; It. Foresta; Sp. Floresta; Low Lat. Foresta; Dut. Forest; Ger. Forst, forest. Forester is not uncommonly contracted into forster or foster.
FO'RESTED.
FO'RESTER.
FO'RESTY.

Vossius (de Vit. lib. ii. c. 6) is in doubt whether forestum be of Latin origin, and so called, quia foris esset, sive extra urbem, et agros, or whether rather the Gauls and others received it from the Normans. Spelman says, so called from the adverb foris or foras, quasi pars forastica seu exterior, hoc est, foris culta et habitata. Sic Gallis, For, and rest; It. Fore, and resta: illud notent quod foris restat. Thus (he adds) a desert, a place deserted and abandoned to wild beasts. He quotes from the Book (qui Niger dicitur, i. e. the Black Book of the Exchequer,) foresta regis est tuta ferarum mansio: quasi feresta, hoc est, ferarum statio: this opinion is ridiculed by Camden. Others (as Du Cange notices) from foris stent. Wachter derives the Ger. Forst, from the verb, furen, pascere, nutrire, to feed, to nourish; as the Lat. Nemus from the Gr. Νεμειν, to feed. Grotius (he tells us) derives from horst, in (English, hurst, qv.) h being changed into f. A forest, no doubt, was a place of forelosure or exclusion, a place from which the many were excluded or shut out: and to this effect,—Cotgrave, (though probably wrong in the component parts of the word.)

Fr. Forest; a forrest: a great (and privileged) wood or woody wilderness; some (Frenchmen) have generally interpreted it (from the Latin words, foris, and sto,) a place whereto the access and entry is forbidden, by the owner, unto others; and hence, it seems, that privileged fishings or large waters (wherein none but the lords thereof could fish) were also termed forests.

Game of hondes he louede y nou, & wylde best,
And hys forest & hys wodes & mest the Nywe Forest.

R. Gloucester, p. 375.

Ne that bailif, ne forester, ne soffrede hem nower come,
To sowe, ne to other thing, that hor bestes nere inome

Id. p. 499

In Huntyngtonshire the kyng in that forest
A moneth lay, to spire for wood & wilde beste.
Foresters did somoun, enquered vp & doun
Whilk men of toun had taken his venysoun.

R. Brunne, p. 112

Lewede men to laborie, lordes to honte
In frythes and in foreates, for fox and other bestes

Piers Ploughman, p. 158

So on a day he layed him doune to slepe,
And so bifel that in slepe him thought
That in a forest he walked to wepe
For loue of her, yt him these paines wrought.

Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

An horne he bare, the baudrik was of grene,
A forster was he sothely as I gesse.—Id. Prologue, v. 117.

And seche in the forest aboute
Some wild place that it were,
To cast him out of honde there:
So that som beste hym male deuoure
Where as no man hym shall succour.—Gower. C. A. b. iii.

After that was shewed & rad a charter of pardon cõcernyng ye said cause, & a cõfirmacõn of ye statutes of ye forest, with many other actes & statutes before graũted of the kyng

Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1261.

So the Frenchmen and Scottes retourned into Scotlande the same way they came, and when they came into Scotlãde they founde the countrey destroyed, but the people of the countre dyd sette but lytell therebr, and said howe with thre or four poles, shortely they wolde make agayne their houses, for they had saued moche of their catayle in the forestes.

Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 15.

How princely purple keepes her shoulders light, how trim her heares
With gold are vender knit, her quiuer gorgeous how she beares,
And dreadful launce of length, and pointed like to fosters speares.

Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii.

But to do something that were strange and new,
Wherefore (I ask you) came we to this shore?
Upon these French our fathers won renown,
And with their swords we'll hew you forest down.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

And at New Forest's font into the sea do fall,
Which every day bewail that deed so full of dread,
Whereby she (now so proud) became first forested

Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

For first this forester, of all
That Silvius had to name,
To whom the lot being cast doth fall,
Doth thus begin the game.

Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6.

So as they gazed after her awhile,
Lo, where a griesly foster foorth did rush.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

For then their sylvan kind most highly honour'd were,
When the whole country's face was foresty, and we
Liv'd loosely in the wealds, which now thus peopled be.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

A milk-white hind, immortal and unchang'd,
Fed on the lawns, and in the forest rang'd;
Without unspotted, innocent within,
She fear'd no danger, for she knew no sin.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

It is not the oak, the ash, or the elm, or any of the robust trees of the forest, which we consider as beautiful, they are awful and majestick, they inspire a sort of reverence.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 16.

Forests are waste grounds belonging to the king, replenished with all manner of chase or venery; which are under the king's protection, for the sake of his recreation and delight.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

It will be found, that all forest and game laws were introduced into Europe at the same time and by the same policy as gave birth to the feodal system, when those swarms of barbarians issued from their northern hive, and laid the foundation of most of the present kingdoms of Europe, on the ruins of the Western Empire.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 27.

Plants rais'd with tenderness are seldom strong;
Man's coltish disposition asks the thong,
And without discipline the fav'rite child,
Like a neglected forester runs wild.
Cowper. Progress of Error.

FORE-STALL, v. } The Dut. Stallen, staellen,
FORESTA'LLER. } and Fr. Estaller, are, to lay open wares upon a stall; to place or set upon a stall. The A. S. Fore-stallan, or fore-steallan, is, consequentially, intercipere, to intercept, i.e. in its way to its stall or station, before it reaches its stall or station; on its road to the market. See the quotation from Rastall.

To intercept, to prevent, to preoccupy; to anticipate the occupation or possession; and thus, further, to deprive of the possession.

Thincke not that woorde do virtue make,
as trees do make a wood,
Take ship betyme, leste sum forestal,
and buy vp all this good.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Numitius.

No forestaller shal be suffered to dwell in any towne, who manifestly is an oppressor of the poore, a publike enemie of the whole communaltie and countrie, who meeting graine, fish, herring, & other things coming by land or by water to bee solde, doeth make haste to buy them before other, thirsting after wicked gaine, oppressing the poore, & deceiuing the rich.—Rastall. Statutes, fol. 191. Stat. 31. Edw. I.

Where they readie found, them to repell
Great hostes of men in order martial,
Which them forbad to land and footing did forestall.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. xii.

The Tribunes evidently saw, that unless they freed the eies of the people from beholding the memoriall of so great a desart, it would never be that so long as their mindes were thus forestalled and possessed with that benefit of his [Manlius] they would find the enditement, were it never so true.—Holland. Livius, p. 231.

Up, up, they cride, and fiercely up they got,
And climed boldly gainst the mountaine fell;
But forth there crept, (from whence I cannot say)
An ugly serpent, which forestall'd their way.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xv. s. 47.

Ja. All the better: may
This night fore-stall him of the comming day.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act ii. sc 5.

Athenæus reporteth, that the country law of the Syrians deprived them of fish: and that Gatis (a Syrian queen) prohibited the eating of fish ater Gatis, that is, without Gatis, without her licence, and therefore was called Atergatis, as a forestalier of the fish to her own delicate tooth.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. i. c. 17.

The principles I have here mentioned, may, I think, be pursued a great deal farther, in several useful corollaries, or other superstructure, but I shall not forestall your own thoughts.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 464.

However, it may not be amiss at present, so far to forestall that enquiry, as, by way of specimen, to say one word of a particular hitherto untouched, the specific nature of supernatural events.
Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple, b. ii. c. 6.

FORE-TELL, v. }
FORETE'LLER. } To prophesy, to predict, to pronounce.
FORETE'LLING, n. }

Wherupon they saie: Why then, art thou that same sonne of God, of whom the for-tellinges of the prophetes doe make mencion.—Udal. Luke, c. 22.

I pray thee, Pool, have care how thou dost pass,
Never the sea yet half so dangerous was:
And one fore told by water thou shouldst die,
Ah! foul befal that foul tongue's prophesy.
Drayton. Q. Margaret to the Duke of Suffolk.

I verely thinke with Hillary, that these two are pointed at as the fore-runners of the second coming of Christ, as now they were the fore-tellers of his departure, neither doubt I, that these are two witnesses, which are alluded to in the Apocalypse.—Bp Hall. Cont. Christ Transfigured.

He had fore told them long afore he did them, or brought them to pass, and fore-tells withall that it should be his doing and not man's that had effected them: and both his fore-telling, and the affecting them, he tells us, were from out of his fore-knowledge and decree so to do.
Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 25.

When at your second coming, you appear,
(For I foretel that millenary year,)
The sharpen'd share shall vex the soil no more,
But Earth unbidden shall produce her store;
The land shall laugh, the circling ocean smile,
And heaven's indulgence bless the holy isle.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite. Ded.

And then what follows? Why, blindness of mind, stupidity of conscience, deadness of affection to all that is good, and a daring boldness in sin, which are as certain forerunners of the soul's destruction, as buds and blossoms, are the fore-tellers of fruit, or the sentence of condemnation the harbinger of death.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 10.

His birth, if we believe Plutarch, was attended by prodigies; foretelling the future eminence and lustre of his character, which might have passed, he says, "for idle dreams, had not the event soon confirmed the truth of the conviction."—Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. pt. i. s. 1.

FORE-TOKEN, v. }
FORETO'KEN, n. } A. S. Fore-tacn-ian; Dut. Veur,—teecken, pre-signare.
FORETO'KENING, n. }
To presignify, to foreshew.

They shall onely be as signes and profres of the ende that is to come, euen as in an olde man's bodie, diseases oft times chaunceing, are fore-tokens that his body shall shortly decaie and perishe.—Udal. Mark, c. 13.

If aught were fore-tokened thereby [by lightning] it shewed before hand encrease of honour and renowne unto the emperour in his glorious enterprise.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 225.

But of all the fore-tokens of thy fearfulest plagues prepared for any nation, O God, there is none so certain, as the prodigious sinnes of the people committed with a high hand against heaven, against so clear a light, so powerfull convictions.—Bp. Hall, Sol. 79.

The dictatour himself, for his part hath given a good foretokening and presage of a consull commoner, in electing his generall of horsemen from out of the commons.
Holland. Livius, p. 245.

His first thesis is this: "The person called Jesus Christ, before ever he had that name, or was born of the blessed Virgin Mary, had a real existence in a far more excellent nature than the human, and therein did appear to the holy men of old as a fore-token of his future incarnation."
Bp. Bull. The Life by Nelson.

FOREWA'RN, v. }
FOREWA'RNING, n. } A. S. For-wyrnan, fore, and wyrnan; Ger. Warnen; Dut. Waernen. The A. S. is variously written, Wyrnan, warnian, warian, wardian, weard-ian; to look at or after, to take heed or be cautious.

To look at, direct the view to, before hand; to give notice, to caution, to admonish, to apprize, (sc.) of any thing to come, of consequences.

I thought mete to forwarne you heroof, that when these discommodities falleth vpon you, ye maie the more paciently and with lesse heart breaking beare them.
Udal. John, c. 16.

And finally to giue them forewarning that Messias and the kyngdome of God wer at hand,—Id. Marke, c. 1.

Yet were not those lecherous lubbers by those forewarnings amended.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

These precedents presented to my view,
Wherein the presage of my fall was shown,
Might have forewarn'd me well what would ensue,
And others' harms have made me shun mine own.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamond.

Sometimes God orders things so, as a sin is made a great sin, by such forewarnings; so he contrived circumstances in Judas his sinning.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. p. 523.

Himself, though oft forewarn'd by friendly care
Of Punic frauds, and danger to beware,
Soon as the dawn of early day was broke,
His camp with all the moving foot forsook.
Rowe. Lucan, b. v.

Taking occasion to consult the Sibylline books on the subject of some late prodigies, he [Cato] chanced to find in them certain verses, forewarning the Roman people not to replace an exiled king of Egypt with an army.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. ii. s. 6.

FORE-WEET, v. }
FOREWE'ETER. } Fore, and weet; Goth. and A. S. Wit-an; Dut.
FOREWE'ETING, n. } Weten; Ger. Wissen; Sw. Weta, to know, or be wise. To weet or wise—To know before, to foreknow.

Thou were ful wel ywarned by thy dremes,
That thilke day was perilous to thee,
But what that God forewote most needs be.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,240.

And God beholder and foreweter of al things dwelleth aboue, and the presente eternitie of sight, runneth alway with the diuers qualitie of our deedes, dispensing or ordaining medes to good men, and tormients to wicked men.
Id. Boecius, b. v.

But I ne cannot boult it to the bren,
As can the holy doctour Augustin,
Or Boece, or the bishop Bradwardin,
Whether that Goddes worthy forewetting
Streineth me needely for to don a thing.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,240.

FOR-FARE, v. A. S. For-faran, to fare or go forth; Dut. Ver-vaeren, abire, exire, exitum habere, and thus, perire, to perish; Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to fare ill.

& in that ilk toun did he krie a krie,
That alle that him serued, & of his meyne ware,
Man, woman & childe, auld thei alle forfare.
R. Brunne, p. 42.

Tuo busses wer forfaren, that in the tempest brak,
The godes attached waren to the kyng of Cipres Isaac.
Id. p. 158.

And alle mané men, that thow mygte aspye
In meschief othr in mal ese and thow mowe hem helpe
Loke by thy lyf, let hem nouht for fare.
Piers Ploughman, p. 140.

That he not loseth his dede proueth,
Whan he his richesse so well loueth
That he wol hide it, alle and spare
His pore frendes sene forfare.—Chaucer. R. of the Rose.

FOR-FEAR, v. To fear or frighten thoroughly, utterly; and thus forfered, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is—much afraid.

Till that min herte, to pitous and to nice,
Al innocent of his crowned malice,
Forfered of his deth.—Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,841.

——— His coward harte
Made him amis the Goddes text to gloss
When he forferde out of Delphos sterte.
Id. Troilus, b. iv. p. 183.

FOR-FEIT, v. }
FO'RFEIT, n. }
FO'RFEIT, adj. }
FO'RFEITABLE. }
FO'RFEITER. } Fr. Forfaire; fors, out, and faire, to do. Low Lat. Foris-facere; (quasi extraneum facere, says Spelman;) to do, or cause to be out or away from, and consequentially, transgredi, to transgress, to do amiss, to misdo. And also, rem suam (sc. ex delicto) amittere, to do away or lose his property, (sc.) for some crime. Thus the Fr. Forfaire is explained by Cotgrave; "to sin, offend, commit a fault, misdo, transgress, trespass against; also, to forfeit." And in Chaucer—forfaite, to do amiss or misdo.
FO'RFEITING, n. }
FO'RFEITURE. }

To do away or lose; to do or put away—a property or right; to alienate or lose (by a misdeed or transgression.)

For spiritus fortitudinis. forfeteth ful ofte
He shal do more than mesure, many tyme and ofte.
Piers Ploughman, p. 393.

And thus suffered our Lord Jesu Crist upon the crosse, wheras ther was no part of his body free without grete peine and bitter passion. And all this suffred our Lord Jesu Crist that never forfaited.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Remember in thine heart how horibly sometyme to thine Margarite thou trespassest, and in a great wise ayenst her thou forfetest.—Id. The Test. of Love, b. iii.

My hart nor I, haue doen you no forfeit
By which you should complain in any kind.
Id. La Belle Dame sans Mercie

For God which is of man the creatour
He would not men slough his creature
Without cause of deadly forfaiture.
A Balade to King Henry IV. by John Gower.

Nowe thou my sonne hast herd this tale,
Beware that of thyn owne bale
Thou be not cause in thy foolhaste,
And keep that thou thy witte ne waste
Upon thy thought in auenture,
Wherof thy liue s forfeiture
Mate falle. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

But here he wolde saye vnto me as he dothe in his boke, that he hade forfayted hys salue conduyte, & therebye was fallen in to hys enemyes handes.
A Boke made by John Frith, fol. 81.

Than Duke Aubert, as a man redy purueyed of answere, sayd Gwylliam, what haste or wyll haue you to go in this voyage into Hungery, and into Turkey, to aske armes vpon people and countrey that neuer dyd vs any forfeyte: thou hast no tytell of reason to go, but for the vayne glory of the world —Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 206.

He was not permitted to conueigh the sayd goodes out of that porte, vnto any other place of the land of Prussia, either by water or by lande, vnder the peyne of the forfeiting of the same.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 154.

Moreouer, the saide customers haue ordained betweene themselues, that the saide merchants shall put or make vp no cloth into fardels to transport out of the realme, vnless certaine men appointed by them for the same purpose bee there present, to see what maner of clothes there be vnder paine of forfeiture of the saide goods.—Id. Ib. p. 173.

Thou didst lament and pity human race,
Bestowing on us thy free-given grace,
More than we forfeited and losed first
In Eden rebels when we were accurst.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

Arr. He is our monster; forfeited to vice
So farre, as no rackt vertue can redeem him.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iv. sc. 5.

For so the holy sages once did sing,
That he our deadly forfeit should release,
And with his father work us a perpetual peace.
Milton. Ode. On the Morning of Christ's Nativity.

——— Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires.—Id. Par. Lost, b. iii.

——— Louers,
And men in dangerous bondes pray not alike,
Though forfeytures (forfeiters) you cast in prison, yet
You clasp young Cupid's tables.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 2.

He ask'd, but all the heav'nly quire stood mute,
And silence was in Heaven; on man's behalf
Patron or intercessor none appeer'd,
Much less that durst upon his own head draw
The deadly forfeiture, and ransom set.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Honour's a lease for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant; 'tis a chattle
Not to be forfeited in battle.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

But as our kind is of a softer mold
And cannot blood without a sigh behold,
I grant thee life, reserving still the power
To take the forfeit when I see my hour
Unless thy answer to my next demand
Shall set thee free from our avenging hand.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale.

He paus'd and choak'd the rest. The youth who saw
His forfeit life abandon'd to the law,
The judge, the accuser, and th' offence to him
Who had both power and will t'avenge the crime,
No vain defence prepar'd.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

So a guardianship in soccage, a man may renounce it as well as he may executorship, they are neither of them forfeitable; and so is the trust of a freehold, and several other like things.
State Trials. The King and the City of London, an. 1682.

Which obliged the King to send forth a proclamation bearing date April the 3d, forbidding that any man should convey it [gold] away, whole or broken, upon pain of imprisonment, and other paine and forfeitures as were by the law appointed.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1548.

The direct consequence of which is, [the power of the House of Commons of declaring incapacities] that the first franchise of an Englishman, and that on which all the rest vitally depend, is to be forfeited for some offence which no man knows, and which is to be proved by no known rule whatsoever of legal evidence.
Burke. On the Cause of the Present Discontents

The rewards, promised by each religion, being totally different, they may reasonably, when forfeited, have different means appointed for their recovery.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ix. c. 1.

Walking out, drinking tea, country dances, and forfeits, shortened the rest of the day, without the assistance of cards, as I hated all manner of gaming.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 2.

FOR-FEND. As we say, God forfend it, i. e. May God avert or prohibit it; from our fore, for before, and the Fr. Défendre, vetare, (Skinner.) But it is more probably from for, i. e. forth, Fr. Fors; and fend, (Lat. Fend-ere, used only in composition,—arcere, depellere.)

To utterly fend or defend; to keep off, to ward off; to prohibit, to forbid, to avert.

That lawe forfended to weare any clothyng of linsaye wolsaye; but he cleane depryued hymselfe both from the vse of wolle and flaxe.—Udal. Marke, c. 1.

For the sacrament of baptisme also being ministred of an adulterer or a theefe (which God forfende to be in the church) doth come vnto the receiuer neuer a whit the worse. —Fox. Martyrs, p. 1060. Volusianus in Defence of Priests' Marriage.

What, I pray you, if we had promised and undertooke, that the people of Rome should forsake and abandon this cittie! or set fire on it! or not have magistrates, senat, or lawes any longer! or to be governed againe by kings! God forbid and forfend that, say you.—Holland. Livius, p. 318.

Oth. I would not kill thy vnprepared spirit,
No—heauens fore-fend—I would not kill thy soule.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act v. sc. 2.

FORFEX. Forfex dicitur quasi ferrifacis, ferrum quo quid facimus; the iron or steel with which we do or make any thing, (Vossius.) And see FORCEPS.

It is applied by Pope to,—a pair of scissars.

The peer now spreads the glittering forfex wide,
T' enclose the lock; now joins it, to divide.
Pope. The Rape of the Lock.

FORGE, v.
FO'RGEDLY.
FO'RGER.
FO'RGERY.
FO'RGETIVE.

Fr, Forger; Sp. Forjar; which Menage deduces from fabrica; thus, fabriciare, fauriciare, forger. "Fr. Forger,—to forge, make, frame, compose, hammer, devise, coin, invent," (Cotgrave.)

To form, frame or fabricate, to invent or contrive; to fabricate, (sc.) any thing counterfeit, to form or make any thing wrongfully to resemble, or in imitation of something else.

See the quotation from Blackstone.

Than spak Phillip ——— I wote what this menes,
That was a fals brefe, & forged well, it semes.
R. Brunne, p. 155.

——— I dare wel sain,
Apelles, Xeuxis, shulden werche in vain,
Other to grave, or peinte, or forge, or bete,
If they presumed me to contrefete.
Chaucer. The Doctowres Tale, v. 11,951.

For though so be that louers be as trew
As any mettall that is forged new,
In many a case him tideth oft sorow.
Id. The Complaint of Venus.

An horse of brasse thei lette do forge
Of suche entaile, and of suche a forge,
That in this world was neuer man
That suche an other worke began.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And through the crafte of Artemage
Of wexe he forged an ymage. Id. Ib. b. vi.

And when thenditement was openly redde, the duke sayd it is false and vntrue, and conspired and forged to bring me to my death, and that will I proue.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 13.

I know vnder the grene the serpent how he lurkes:
The hammer of the restlesse forge I wote eke how it workes.—Surrey. Description of the Fickle Affections.

Misguided haue I beene
and trayned all by trust,
And Loue was forger of the fraude,
and furtherer of my lust.
Turberuile. The Louer hoping to haue had Redresse, &c.

One foot was set vppon the crocodile,
And on the ground the other fast did stand;
So meaning to suppresse both forged guile
And open force.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 7.

——— Him there they found
Squat like a toad, close to the eare of Eve,
Assaying by his devilish art to reach
The organs of her fancie, and with them forge
Illusions as he list. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

But Nero, impatient of lingering and long working wickednes, threatened the tribune, commanded the poisonerasse [Agrippina] to be put to death, bicause that whilest they respect the rumour, and forge excuses for their owne safty, they droue off his security.
Grenewey. Annales. Tacitus, p. 183.

Another seeing his drunken wife disgorge
Her pamper'd stomach, got her to a forge
And in her throat the feverous heat to quench,
With the smith's horn was giving her a drench.
Drayton. The Moon-calf.

As for the forges and furnaces of brasse, some think the Chalypes deuised, others attribute that to the Cyclopes.
Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

She answered, that Babington might confess what he list, but it was a flat lie that she had contrived any such means to escape: that her adversaries might easily get the cyphers which she had made use of to others, and with the same write many things forgedly and falsely.
Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1586.

Thus God is the immediate forger of every linke of that golden chain, whereof the first is riveted in his own heart, and the last ends in him also.
Goodwin. Works, vol. iv. p. 29.

But the chaste damzell, that had neuer prieſe
Of suche malengine and trne forgerye,
Did easely believe her strong extremitie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

A good sherris-sack hath a two fold operation in it: and ascends me into the braine, dryes me there all the foolish, and dull, and the crudditie vapours, which enuiron it: makes it apprehensiue, quicke, forgetiue, full of nimble, fierie, and delectable shapes; which deliuer'd o'er to the voyce, the tongue, which is the birth, becomes excellent wit.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 3.

Quoth Hudibras, I now perceive
You are no conjurer, by your leave:
That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you.
Hudibras, pt ii. c. 3.

O could I hide him from the Fates as well,
Or with these hands the cruel stroke repel,
As I shall forge most envy'd arms, the gaze
Of wond'ring Ages, and the world's amaze.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Soon as he bade them blow, the bellows turn'd
Their iron mouths; and where the furnace burn'd
Resounding breath'd; at once the blast expires,
And twenty forges catch at once the fires. Id Ib.

Mark them with characters and brands
Like other forgers of men's hands.
Butler. Satire upon Plagiaries.

Whereas Dangerfield had 8*l.* a week, whilst a forger of plots against the Protestants; he is cast off with scorn, and in danger of his life, since he had laid open the Popish engineers.—State Trials, an. 1681. Edward Fitzharris.

I am aware that a learned writer of our own has hinted his suspicion that the writings going under the name of Aristobulus were a forgery of the second century: and another considerable author seems in a great measure to favour the suspicion.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 6.

Being the master, both of Cæsar's papers and of his secretary Faberius, by whose hand they were written, he [Antony] had an opportunity of forging and inserting at pleasure whatever he found of use to him, which he practised without any reserve or management.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

——— And stiffening there,
A ponderous lump but to the hammer tam'd,
Takes from the forge, in bars, its final form.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

Erasmus was so taken with Lucian's dialogue, that he has transfused its highest graces into his own; and employed these fine arms to better purpose against the Monks, than the forger of them had done against the Philosophers.
Hurd. Pref. On the Manner of writing Dialogue.

Forgery may with us be defined (at common law) to be, "the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another man's right."
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iv. c. 17.

In war he practised the same art, that he had seen so successful to Marius, of raising a kind of enthusiasm and contempt of danger in his army, by the forgery of auspices and divine admonitions.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 1.

All these circumstances, with many other of inferior note, were merely the "nimble shapes" and lively effusions of Corinna's forgetive imagination.—Malone. Life of Dryden.

FOR-GET, v.
FORGE'TFUL.
FORGE'TFULLY.
FORGE'TFULNESS.
FORGE'TTER.
FORGE'TTING, n.
FORGE'TTINGLY.

Anciently written Forgete. A. S. Forgytan; Dut. Vergheten; Ger. Vergessen; Sw. Foergaeta. For, (qv.) i. e. forth, and get; to get forth or out, (sc.) of the mind or memory.

To get,—to cause or suffer to get or go forth; pass out or escape, (sc.) from the mind or memory; from the recollection or remembrance; to lose or omit the recollection or remembrance.

Now gos he home Harald, & has ouer comen his tene,
The othe that he suld hold, it is forgeten clene.
R. Brunne, p 69.

That sawe that he ther said, so wele it was of leten,
In boke it was vp laid, git is it not forgeten.—Id. p. 195.

Wher fyve sparowis ben not seeld for twey halpens? and oon of them is not in forgetyng before God?
Wiclif. Luk, c. 12.

Are not fiue sparowes bought for two farthynges. And yet not one of theym is forgotten of God.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And glader ought his frend ben of his deth,
Whan with honour is yolden up his breth,
Than whan his name appalled is for age;
For all forgetten is his vasaillage.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 3056.

Thus hath this widewe hire litel sone ytaught
Our blisful lady, Cristes moder dere,
To worship ay, and he forgate it naught.
Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,441.

I say, Grisilde, this present dignitee
In which that I have put you, as I trow,
Maketh you not forgetful for to be
That I you toke in poure estat ful low.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8348.

——— For I am distourbed
In al myn herte and so conturbed,
That I ne may mie wittes gete:
So shall I muche thynge forgete.—Gower. Con. A. b. i

So that for feare I can nought gette
My wit but I myselfe forgete,
That I wote neuer, what I am,
Ne whither I shall, ne wher I am. Id Ib b. iv.

There is of slouth an other vice,
Whiche is cleped forgettinnes,
That nought maie in his herte impresse
Of vertue, whiche reason hath set,
So clene his wittes he forgete. Id Ib.

If I be not forgetfull, I neuer sawe thee content in this life, because thou were euer busie in thy prosperitee, and wearie of any aduersitie.—Golden Boke, Let. 3.

Children therefore being ouer moyst, and old men ouer drie, haue neuer good memories; againe, where ouer much colde is, and extreme moysture, there is euer much forgetfulness.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 213.

Beguyld thus with delight of noveltics,
And naturall desire of countryes state,
So long they redd in those antiquities,
That how the time was fled they quite forgate.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

So great a senselesness had possessed his [Vitellius] minde, that if other men had not remembred, that he had beene once prince, and therefore was not to looke for security in priuate estate, he himselfe would haue quickly forgotten it.—Savile. Tacitus. Historie, p 127.

Euen as one heate, another heate expels,
Or as one naile, by strength driues out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona, Act ii. sc. 4.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benumm not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat: descent and fall
To us is adverse. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

They ferry over this Lethean sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment,
And wish and struggle, as they pass, to reach
The tempting stream, with one small drop to loose
In sweet forgetfulness all pain and woe,
All in one moment and so near the brink,
But Fate withstands. Id. Ib.

Clora. She loves him too much, that's the plain truth.
Frederick.
For which, if I might be believ'd, I think her
A strange forgetter of herself.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iv. sc. 3.

I am not willing to discover the forgettings of reverend men, yet here I must.—Milton. Doct. of Div. b. ii. c. 22.

——— I crie your pardons.
I feare, I haue (forgettingly) transgress'd
Against the dignity of the Court.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iv. sc. 6.

Of Daniel you may read in holy writ,
Who, when the king his vision did forget,
Could word for word the wondrous dream repeat.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Then thus the sire: the souls that throng the flood
Are those, to whom, by fate, are other bodies ow'd
In Lethe's lake they long oblivion taste,
Of future life secure, forgetful of the past.
Id. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

But since it is our duty not to violate the memory of our oppressors, but silently, thankfully, and forgetfully to accept the oppression; we will commemorate only the king's restitution.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 11.

Howe'er 'tis well, that sleep awhile can free,
With soft forgetfulness, a wretch like me.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

In like manner, the great Pyrrho himself forgot his principles on some occasions; and is said once to have been in such a passion with his cook, who probably had not roasted his dinner to his mind, that with the spit in his hand, and the meat upon it, he pursued him even to the market place.
Reid. Enquiry, c. 1. s 5.

Unmindful of approaching night they sport
While circling pleasures new attention court,
Or through the maze forgetfully they stray,
Lost in the pleasing sweetly winding way.
Boyse. From the Horti Arlingtoniani of C. Dryden.

Remember me, oh! pass not thou my grave
Without one thought whose relics there recline
The only pang my bosom dare not brave
Must be to find forgetfulness in thine.
Byron. The Corsair, c. 1.

FOR-GHERD, i. e. Foreyard or fore-court.

And a rehed lyk a gherd was ghouun to me, and it was said to me, Arise thou and mete the temple of God and the auter, and men that worschipen in it, but caste thou out the forgherd that is withoute the temple and mete not it, for it is ghouun to hethene men.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 11.

FOR-GIVE, v. FOROI'VENESS. FOROI'VER. } Anciently also written Foryeve. A. S. For-gif-an; Dut. Vergheven; Ger. Vergeven; for, i. e. forth, and give; to give forth, out, or away, remittere, condonare, to remit or release, and consequentially, to pardon. (per-donare.)

To give forth or away, to give up utterly; to relinquish, to remit, to release, to resign, (sc. a right or claim to payment or retribution;) and consequentially, to pardon, (per-donner.)

Edward God bisouht, that it suld be forgyuen,
And amendid with penance, & therof clene he scryuen.
R. Brunne, p. 65.

And yf hure wirche wisliche. by wys men counsail
Ich wolle forgyfe hure alle hure gultes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 38.

Here of good God. graunte me forgeveneesse.—Id. p. 109.

And for our great sinnes forgiuenes for to gutten
And only by Christ clenlich to be clensed.—Id. Crede.

What is it lighter to seye thi synnes ben forgoven to thee: either to sey rise thou and walke!—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 9.

Whether is it easier to saye, thy sinnes be forgeuen the, or to saye: aryse and walke.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But if ony man synneth we han an advocat anentis the fadir Jesu Crist, and he is the forgifnesse for oure synnes, and not oonli for oure synnes but also for the synnes of al the world.—Wiclif. 1 Jon, c. 2.

Whom God ordeynyde forghyuere bi feith in his blood, to the schewyng of his rightwisnesse for remissioun of bifore goynge synnes.—Id. Romayns, c 3.

To Rome he cometh to receive his penance
And putte him in the Pope's ordinance
In high and low, and Jesu Christ besought,
Forgeve his wicked werkes that he had wrought.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5415.

Then saide Melibee; he is wel worthy to have pardon and forgeveneesse of his sinne, that excuseth not his sinne, but knowlecheth, and repenteth him, axing indulgence. For Senek saith: there is the remission and forgeveneesse, wher as the confession is neighebour to innocence.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus

Also whan he is falle in synne,
Hym thynketh he is so fer culpable,
That God woll not be merciable
So great a sinne to forgeue.
And thus he leueth to be shriue.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And nathles this dare I saie,
That if a sinful worlde praie
To God of his forgeuenes,
With halfe so great a besinesse,
As I haue do to my ladie,
In lacke of askynge of mercie,
He shulde neuer come in helle. Id. Ib.

I on my behalf, though I doe baptise you with water yet am I no forgeuer of sinnes.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

The bishops & priestes also to call themselues their churches bridgromes, sitters in God's sted, forgeuers of sinne, and our ladies chaste knights!—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

He writes here to forgive him, he is married;
False gentleman! I do forgive thee with my heart,
Yet will I send an answer to thy letter,
And in so short words thou shalt weep to read them.
Wilkins. The Miseries of Inforced Marriage, Act ii.

——— If I obey them,
I do it freely, venturing to displease
God for the fear of man, and man prefer,
Set God behind: which in his jealousie
Shall never, unrepented, find forgiveness.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And indeed, what a shamefull reproach is this to the infinite mercy of the forgiver? What a wrong to his justice? whereto is the punishment due but to the fault.
Bp. Hall. No Peace with Rome, s. 10.

And yet we know, that, in Christian charity all offences are to be forgiven, as we expect the like pardon for those which we daily commit against Almighty God.
Dryden. The Origin and Progress of Satire.

And this consideration has often made me tremble, when I was saying our Saviour's prayer; for the plain condition of the forgiveness which we beg, is the pardoning of others the offences which they have done to us.—Id. Ib.

All that the genial ray of morning gilds,
And all that echoes to the song of even,
All that the mountain's sheltering bosom shields,
And all the dread magnificence of Heaven,
O how canst thou renounce, and hope to be forgiven!
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

Not soon provok'd, however stung and teas'd,
And if perhaps made angry, soon appeas'd;
She rather waves than will dispute her right,
And injured makes forgiveness her delight.
Cowper. Charity.

FOR-GNAW. For, and gnaw, (qv.) Thoroughly, utterly gnawn, quite gnawn.

——— He fonde
The wympell, whiche out of hire hond
Was faile, and he it hath to drawe,
Be bledde aboute, and all forgnawe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

FOR-GO, v. A. S. For-gan, to go forth or away from.

To go forth or away from; to leave, to relinquish, to quit, resign, yield or give up; to renounce.

Now by that lord that cleped is Saint Jame,
Thou shalt nat bothe, though that thou were wood,
Be maister of my body and of my good,
That on thou shalt forgo maugre thin eyen.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 8397.

As homely as he rideth amongs you,
If ye him knew, it would be for your prow:
Ye wolden not forgon his acquaintance
For mochel good, I dare lay in balance
All that I have in my possession.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 1678

The maiden wolde he not forgone
He saide for no maner thyng,
And bad hym gone home to his king.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

What other welth to man by Fortune may befall:
But Fortune's changed chere may reue a man of all!
A frend no wracke of welth, no cruel cause of wo
Can force his frendly faith unfrendly to forgoe
Incertaine Auctores. The Praise of a True Friend.

Thus in making of cõcord & amitie, weigh not sowerly nor extremely whether partie is more in fault. Leat this only be thine endeauour (yea though you forgo and lose part of thy right) yt concord and amitie suffre no dãmage.
Udal. Matthew, c. 5

For [Licinius] he tooke by violence euerie man's substance, and cared not by what means he came by the same, but threatned them with death, vnless they would forgo the same.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 79. The Ten First Persecutions

I sawe Calliope with Muses moe,
Soone as the oaten pype began to sounde,
Their yvory lutes and tamburins forgoe.
And from the fountaine where they sat around,
Renne after hastely thy silver sound.
Spenser. Shepherd's Calendar. July.

Which Artegall perceiving, strooke no more,
But loosing soone his shield did it forgoe,
And whiles he combred was therewith so sore,
He gan at him let drive more fiercely than afore.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

And he, who late was fear'd, was set upon,
And by his own (Actaeon like) pursu'd,
His own, that had all love and awe forgone;
Whom breath and shadows only did delude.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. ii

——— Let it suffice,
No fond distrust of thee makes me precise
To shew my griefe. Leave me then, and forgo
This care more sad, since I have made it so.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

[The Lord Chancellor answered,] that he had no ill intention in it, and therefore submitted himself to the King's mercy, and to the gracious consideration of the Protector and the council; and desired, that, in respect of his past services, he might forego his office with as little slander as might be, and that, as to his fine and imprisonment, they would use moderation.—Burnet. Hist. of Reform. an. 1547.

Turn then thy labours to the servile crowd,
Entice the wary, and control the proud;
Make the sad miser his best gains forego,
The solemn statesman sigh to be a beau.
Akenside. Love, an Elegy.

FOR-GROWEN. For, i. e. forth, and grow. Thoroughly, utterly grown, over*grown*.

And at the last a patch of little breade
I found that greatly had not vred be
For it forgrowen was with grass and weede.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

Like as the elm forgrown in mountains hye,
Round hewen with axe, that husbandmen
With thick assaultes striue to teare up, doth threat.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

FORHA'IL, v. Sw. Forhalla. The glossarist (E. K.) to Spenser's Shepherd's Calendar says, "Draw or distresse;" it may be from for, i. e. forth, and hale, to drag or pull along; and thus, to distract, to distress.

Dig. Ah! but, Hobbinoll, all this long tale
Nought ceaseth the care that doth mee forhaile:
What shall I do!—Spenser. Shepherd's Calender. Sept.

Wernock. Is this the cause that thou been ligge so laid,
Who Whilom no encheson could fore-haile.
Davies. Eclogue. Yonge Willie & Old Wernock.

FOR-I'RKING. Thoroughly, utterly irking; sorely troubled.

For loe his wife forerirking of his raigne
Sleeping in bed this cruel wretch hath slaine.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 442.

FORIS-FAMI'LIATE. The Low. Lat. Foris-familiare is, to place, drive or eject any one foris familiam, forth from his family; and a son is said to be forisfamiliate, (forisfamiliatus,) when he has received from his father a share or portion of his inheritance, and is to expect no more, (Spelman.)

Yet Glanvil, with us, even in the twelfth century, seems to declare for the right of the nephew by representation; provided the eldest son had not received a provision in lands from his father, (or as the civil law would call it) had not been forisfamiliated, in his life time.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 14.

FOR-JU'DGED. Judged out of or without law or right, i. e. wrongfully; also, without delay.

It is difficult to decide whether in Fabyan it should be for- or fore-judg'd.

Falsly accused, and of his soone forjudged
Without answere, while he was absent
He damned was.—Chaucer. Of the Blacke Knight.

They were takyn as prysoners in the Towre of London, and soone after for-dugyd, hāged, and hedyd, and their heddys also sette vpon London brydge.
Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1400.

FORK, v. } A. S. Forc; Dut. Vorcke; Ger. Furch; Sw. Fork; It. Forca, Sp. Horca; Fr. Fourche, fourcher; Lat. Furca. Of uncertain etymology. Wachter thinks it may be possible to trace it back to brechen, to break, quia furca est ferrum bisulcum aut trisulcum, adeoque in fronte ruptum.
FORK, n.
FO'RKEDNESS,
FO'RKY.

To cleave, or split, or otherwise divide, into two or more prongs: to move with a fork.

Forked, in Shakespeare,—a fork'd one; one having forked horns, (sc.) those of a cuckold; (met.) so divided as to point more than one way; and thus, having two courses or directions, two purposes or meanings.

A fork,—any thing so divided as to have two or more pointed prongs; the barbed point of an arrow.

A marchant was ther with a forked berd.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 272.

And euen these be the two lombes hornes signifyed by the two forked bisshops mytere.—Joye. Expos. of Daniel, c. 7.

And what hath this auctor woone nowe by his forked question!—Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol. 81.

Some with poles or forks ouerthrew this sluggish lump, leauing them for half dead lying on the ground, not once going about to rise.—Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 78.

——— Then must you learne the use,
And handling of your silver forke at meales.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iv. sc. 1.

Mer. Vpon my proiect o' the forkes.
Sel. Forkes! what be they?
Mer. The valuable use of forkes,
Brought into custome here, as they are in Italy,
To th' sparing o' napkins.
B. Jonson. The Diuell is an Asse, Act v. sc. 4.

Never considering how ill for seventeen years together he had protected them, and that these miseries of the people are still his own handy-work, having smitten them, like a forked arrow, so sore into the kingdom's sides, as not to be drawn out and cured without the incision of more flesh.
Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

——— Gone already,
Ynch thick, knee deepe, ore head and eares, a fork'd one.
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act i. sc. 2.

And yet again, besides the strength of the arm that shoots them, and the forkedness of the arrows themselves, they were all, as arrows dipt in poison, envenomed with the guilt of his sins.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. p. 601.

——— Your T. beard is the fashion
And twifold doth express the enamour'd courtier,
As full as your fork carving traveller.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act iv. sc. 1.

With that, at him a quivering dart he threw,
With so full force, and vile mous despite,
That through his habergeon the fork-head flew,
And through the linked mayles impierced quite
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

He spoke, and smote the loud resounding shield.
Which bears Jove's thunder on its dreadful field,
The adamantine ægis of her sire,
That turns the glancing bolt and forked fire.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxi.

Parnassus is its name; whose forky rise
Mounts through the clouds, and meets the lofty skies.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Then exercise thy sturdy steers to plough
Betwixt thy vines, and teach the feeble row
To mount on reeds and wands, and upwards led,
On ashen poles to raise their forky head.
Id. Virgil. Georgics, b. ii.

——— First he bids spread
Dry fern or litter'd hay that may imbibe
Th' ascending damps, then leisurely impose,
And lightly, shaking it with agile hand
From the full fork, the saturated straw.—Coup. Task, b. iii.

Flattery shall faint beneath the sound,
While hoary Truth inspires the song;
Envy grow pale and bite the ground,
And Slander gnaw her forky tongue.
Watts. Epitaph on King William the Third

An old man with a red, forked beard, supposed to be a grand master of Rhodes by Holbein.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

FOR-LAY. } Dut. Verlaeghen, insidiari, to FORLA'YING, n. } beset. Forth, and lay; to lay forth or out, (sc.) in wait for; and thus—
To lay (snares) for.

The churche is brent, the priest is slaine,
The wife, the maide is eke forlaine,
The lawe is lore, and God unserued —Gower. C. A. b. iii.

—— What way ever the suspected take
Still envy will most cunningly forelay
The ambush of their ruin, or will make
Their humours of themselves to take that way.
Daniel. Chorusses in Philotas.

That this is true, may appear by the example of Alexander above named, who had not one that envied him, but many enemies he found and those malicious, and by them in the end he was traitorously forlaied and murdered.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 193.

Either it was because this is a token of one that believeth and is verily perswaded that his wife entendeth no lewdnesse, nor is otherwise busied than well: whereas to come upon her at unawares and on a sudain, is a kind of forlaying and surprise.—Id. Ib. p. 698.

And eyther with forelaying of his way,
Or he full gorg'd ran not so swift as they,
Before he could recover downe the strand
No swaine but on him [wolfe] had a fast'ned hand.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

And lastly, how cunningly doth he forelay their confidence (which was only left them) in the Almighty, protesting not to bee come up thither without the Lord; The Lord said to me, go up to this land, and destroy it.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Hezekiah & Senacherib.

A serpent shoots his sting at unaware:
An ambush'd thief forelays a traveller.
The man lies murder'd, while the thief and snake,
One gains the thickets, and one thrids the brake.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

FOR-LEFT, i. e. utterly left, entirely left.

A theef, of venison that hath forlaft
His likerousnesse, and al his olde craft,
Can kepe a forest best of any man.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,019.

FOR-LESE. To lose utterly.

For by this sinne [simonie] God forleseth the chirche and the soule, whiche he bought with his precious blood, by hem that yeven churches to hem that ben not digne, for they put in theves, that stelen the soules of Jesu Christ and destroyen his patrimonie.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

FOR-LETE. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, to give over, to quit. A. S. For-lætan; Dut. Ver-laten, ver-letten, præter-mittere, omittere, to let pass or omit.

To let forth or out, to let pass, to omit, to neglect, to quit, to resign, to renounce.

That if thou me mot mete bi our seluen tuo,
My lif I suld forlete, or my hede for go.
R. Brunne, p. 196.

In all this world ther n'is no creature,
That ete or dronke hath of this confecture,
Not but the mountance of a corne of whete,
That he ne shal his lif anon forlete.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,798.

And therefore repentant folk, that stint for to sinne, and forlete sinne or that sinne forlete hem, holy chirche holdeth him siker of hir salvation.—Id. The Persones Tale.

But yet there ben of londes fell,
In Occident, as for the chele,
In Orient, as for the hete,
Whiche of the people be forlete,
As londe deserte, that is vnable,
For it mane not ben habitable.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Being returned home from the war he [Archytas] was L. Generall, (he) found his land forlet, neglected and untilled; whereupon he sent for his baillife of husbandrie: who had the charge thereof and when he was come before him, were I not exceeding angrie (quoth he) I would make thee feel my fingers, and give thee thy desert
Holland. Plutarch, p. 10.

For hee had forlet altogether the custom of searching those that came in duty to salute him even whiles yet the civill warre continued.—Id. Suetonius, p. 247.

And found it was at last where it was that the Gods blamed the neglect of ceremonies, and forletting the ancient solemnities and sacrifices.—Id. Livie, p. 191.

First a dearth of corne, and all manner of victuals, by reason that the grounds upon the departure of the commons were forelet and untilled.—Id. Ib. p. 66.

In these and such like imperfect tables, a man may (as it were) see what traicts and lineaments remaine to be done, as also the very desseignes and cogitations of the artificers and as these beginnings are attractive allurements to moove us for to commend those hands that began such draughts so the conceit, that they bee now dead and missing, is no small greefe unto us, when wee behold them so raw and forelet.—Id. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 11.

FOR-LORE. } Mr. Tyrwhitt says, utterly
FORLO'RN.
FORLO'RNESS. } lost. It is the A. S. Forleoran; Dut. Verloren; Ger. Verlahren; Sw. Foerlora; Fr. adj. Frelore; from Goth. Fralusan; A. S. Forleosan; Dut. Verliesen, to lose utterly.

To lose or cause to lose utterly; to deprive, to take away; and the past part. forlorn, still in so common use, is—

Utterly lost, deserted, forsaken, destitute, solitary.

Thus Troilus withouten rede or lore
As man that hath his loyes eke forlore
Was waiting on his ladie evermore.—Chaucer. Troil. b. v.

For it is Christ's conseil that I say,
And if thou tell it man, thou art forelore.
Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3505.

I dare well affirme hardely, that if tho thinges of which thou plainest that thou hast forlorn [amisso] had been thine, thou ne haddest not forlorn hem, [perdidisses]
Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Aurelius, that his cost hath all forlorne,
Curseth the time, that ever he was borne.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,661.

Thus thei that comen first tofore
Upon the rockes ben forlore. Gower. Con. A.

Or Ida, where the Gods loved to repayre
Whenever they their heavenly bowres forlore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

Of heav'n, and earth, and God and men forlore,
Thrice begging help of those, whose sins he bore.
G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Now therefore be it knowne to noble Lewis,
That Henry, sole possessor of my loue
Is, of a king, become a banisht man,
And forc'd to liue in Scotland a forlorne.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 3.

But Philopœmen made as though it had been nothing and that he set light by it; and spying the great fault his enemies made, following the forlorne hope on the spur, whom they had overthrown, and staying so far from the battell of their footmen, whom they had left naked, and the field open upon them; he did not make towards them to stay them, nor did strive to stop them that they should not follow those that fled, but suffered them to take their course.
North. Plutarch, p. 309.

If you are truly a patron of the distressed, and an adept in astrology, you will advise whether I shall or ought to be prevailed upon by the impertinences of my own sex, to give way to the importunities of yours. I assure you, I am surrounded with both, tho' at present a forlorne
Tatler, No. 210.

But when my sense was waken'd to despair,
I beat my tender breast, and tore my hair;
As a distracted mother weeps forlorn,
When to the grave her fondling babe is borne.
Fenton. Sappho to Phaon.

Even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition, by the lethargy of not being sensible of it, and were as careless to seek means of recovery, as they had been unable to devise them of themselves, even then, his restless love would never be at quiet.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 267.

When God created man, he made woman for his companion and associate, but the only means of enjoying this benefit is the use of speech: can we think that God would leave them to themselves, to get out of the forlorne condition of brutality as they could.
Warburton. The Divine Legation of Moses, b. iv. Notes.

FORM, v.
FORM, n.
FO'RMAL.
FO'RMALIST.
FORMA'LITY.
FO'RMALIZE, v.
FO'RMALLY.
FORMA'TION.
FO'RMATIVE.
FO'RMER.
FO'RMFUL.
FO'RMING, n.
FO'RMLESS.

Fr. Former; Sp. Formar; It. Formare; Lat. Formare; Dut. Vormen, all (Tooke) from the A. S. Frem-an, to frame, facere, facessere.

To frame or fashion, to shape, mould or model; to make, to put together, to compose, to fabricate, to construct, to devise, to contrive.

Form,—the noun, is any thing formed or framed; shape, mould or model, composition or construction; it is also applied, emphatically, to—

A settled, regulated or prescribed form, or mode, or method, or order; as a form of prayer; a ceremony; a mere ceremony; also to, a well-made form; to beauty. Also to—

The whole collected constituent qualities of which any thing is formed, framed or composed; and see the quotations from Locke and Addison.

Tho he come toward ys men, ys owne forme he nom,
And leuede the erle's fourme, & the kyng Uter by com.
R. Gloucester, p. 56.

Dauid of Scotland hasted to the bataile,
Walter Spek ros on hand, the folk to forme & taile.
R. Brunne, p. 115.

[None] that can versie fayre, other formelich endite
Ne that can construe kyndeliche, that poetre maden.
Piers Ploukman, p. 291.

Not a word spake he more than was nede;
And that was said in forme and reverence,
And short and quike, and ful of high sentence.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 307.

But it were for an olde appalled wight,
As ben thise wedded men, that lie and dare,
As in a fourme sitteth a wery hare.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,034.

Her person he shall afore him set,
Her laughing eyen persaunt and clere,
Her shape, her forme, her goodly chere.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

O where hast thou been hid so longe in mewe
That canst so well and formeliche argewe.
Id. Troilus, b. iv.

This clerke, whā he herd the forme,
How he the Pope shuld enforme:
Toke of the Cardinali his leaue,
And goth hym home. Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Whenne God formed Adam of clave, the mattier of the claye remayned in Adam, and yet the materiall clay remayned not, for it was altred into another substance, whiche I speake not to compare equallye the fourmynge of Adam to the sacrament, but to shewe it not to be all one to saye the materiall breade and the matter of breade
Bp. Gardner. Explic. of Transubstantiation, fol. 107

Saint Paul speaketh of a fourme in the Godhead, (Qui quum in forma Dei esset,) Who when he was in the fourme of God. So as if Christ be present in the sacrament without all fourme, then is he there, neither as God nor man, whiche is a straunger teachyng thē yet hath been heard or redde of.
Id. Christes Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 2f.

The Duke being then at his oysters without any further tarrieng, and also breaking both his shinnes at the form for haste, took boate with the Lord Percie, and by water went to Kingstone, where then the Princesse with Richard the young Prince did lie.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 394. Duke of Lancaster and Londoners at variance.

Well, quod I, and yet he cometh to hys perswasion by a sylogysme & reasonninge, almost as formall as is the argument.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 125.

And what were the formall wordes, or at the leastwise in substance that I the said Bishop then vttered or wherewith they were offended.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1202. The Interrogatories of Bonner.

Sith it [Chastity] is shrined in my soveraine's brest,
And form'd so lively in each perfect part,
That to all ladies, which have it profest,
Need but behold the pourtraict of her hart;
If pourtrayd it might bee by any living art.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

[And) where the hearth was warm'd with winter's feasting fires,
The melancholy hare is form'd in brakes and briers.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

Then if her [the soul] heavenly form do not agree
With any matter which the world contains,
Then she of nothing must created be;
And to create, to God alone pertains.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 7.

——— For what come you?
Are your aerial forms deprived of language,
And so denied to tell me, that by signs
[The Ghosts use various gestures.]
You bid me ask here of myself?
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act v. sc. 2.

1639. I began to look on the rudiments of musick, in which I afterwards arriv'd to some formal knowledge, though to small perfection of hand, because I was so frequently diverted by inclinations to newer trifles.
Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

From this unfortunate country, came certain zealous persons hither that pretended, That the best of our people were but formalists and moral men.—Glanvill, Ess. 7.

Many that vehemently oppose forms, are the greatest formalists.—Id. Discourses, Ser. 1.

This to prevent, I set orations by,
For passion seldom loves formalitie.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

1636. After I was somewhat settled there in my formalities (for then was the University exceedingly regular under the exact discipline of William Lawd, Archbishop of Canterbury, then Chancelor.)—Evelyn. Memoirs, vol. i.

Many times indeed our gallants can formalize in other words, but evermore the substance, and usually the very words are no other but these of Cain's, Let us go out into the field.—Hales. Rem. Ser. of Duels.

They turned their poor cottages into stately palaces, their true fasting into formalizing and partial abstinence.
Id. Ib. St. Peter's Fall

At length at full and formally
He courted her for grace,
But all in vain, naught booted him
To have both time and place.
Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 13.

Nature continues in this labour, until a perfect shape be introduc'd; and this is call'd formation, which is the third act, and is a production of an organical body out of the spermatic substance caus'd by the plastic virtue of the vital spirits.—Howell, b. i. Let. 30.

The plastick or formative faculty, from matter appearing homogeneous and of a similary substance, erecteth bones, membranes, veins, and arteries.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 6.

It must have power and energy of that formative act, whereby the matter is conformed to its specifical nature.
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 259.

Empe. No more, I have too much on't,
Too much by you, you whetters of my follies,
Ye Angel formers of my sins, but, Devils,
Where is your cunning now?
Beaum. & Fletch. Valentinian, Act iv. sc. 1.

Through knowledge we behould the world's creation,
How in the cradle first he fostered was;
And iudge of nature's cunning operation,
How things she formed of a formless mas.
Spenser. Virgil's Gnat.

For as when a caruer cuts and graues an image, he shapes only that part whereupon he works, and not the rest, as if he be fashioning the face, the rest of the body is a rude and formless stone still, till such time as he come to it: but contrariwise, when nature makes a flower or living creature, she ingenders and brings forth rudiments of all the parts at one time.—Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 1.

From these they choose out subjects, and create
A little monarch of the rising state;
Then build wax kingdoms for the infant prince,
And form a palace for his residence.
Addison. Virgil, Geor. 4.

Of bodies chang'd to various forms I sing:
Ye Gods, from whence these miracles did spring,
Inspire my numbers with celestial heat
Till I my long, laborious work complete.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. i.

Those therefore who have been taught, that the several species of substances had their distinct internal substantial forms; and that it was those forms, which made the distinction of substances into their true species and genera, were led yet farther out of the way, by having their minds set upon fruitless enquiries after substantial forms, wholly unintelligible, and whereof we have scarce so much as any obscure, or confused conception in general.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 6.

So have I seen grave fools design,
With formal looks to pass for wise;
But Nature is a light will shine,
And break through all disguise.—Lansdowne Belinda.

I shall make use of the same instance to illustrate the force of education, which Aristotle has brought to explain his doctrine of substantial forms, when he tells us that a statue lies hid in a block of marble; and that the art of the statuary only clears away the superfluous matter, and removes the rubbish. The figure is in the stone, the sculptor only finds it.—Spectator, No. 215.

This, my Lord, I may safely aver, as so true in itself, and so well known for truth by the cunning formalists of the age, that they can better bear to have their impostures rail'd at, with all the bitterness and vehemence imaginable, than to have them touch'd over so gently in this other way [of ridicule.]—Shaftesbury. A Letter concerning Enthusiasm.

If any Protestant in any place where the Romish religion is professed, had been but thought guilty of such crimes, he had never have come to the formality and justice of an arraignment, and to be tried by his Peers, permitted to make his defence, and hear what could be said against him; but he had been hanged immediately, or perhaps suffered a worse death.—State Trials, an. 1678. Ireland, Pickering, &c.

This extremely took with the King, and soon set him at ease; for he found no formalizing scruples in the Lord Keeper's part, and, as for the citizen, he was made to understand that there was no hazard at all.
Id. an. 1683. North's Examen

I have detained your lordship longer than I intended, in this dispute of preference betwixt the epic poem and the drama, and yet have not formally answered any of the arguments which are brought by Aristotle on the other side and set in the fairest light by Dacier.
Dryden. A Discourse on Epic Poetry.

On the formation of the earth reflect,
Is this a blind, fortuitous effect?
Blackmore. Creation, b. iv.

Helmont asserts, that all mixt bodies spring from one element, and that vegetables, animals, marchasites, stones, metals, &c. are materially but simple water disguised into these various forms, by the plastick or formative vertue of their seeds.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 496.

As fleets the vision o'er the formful brain,
This moment hurrying wild the impassion'd soul,
The next in nothing lost. Thomson. Autumn.

All the ends and uses, as I conceive, of moral precepts, resolve into these two. First, the disposing men to such actions as are for the present peace and happiness of mankind: and secondly, the forming in men's minds such good dispositions as shall qualify them for a heavenly state hereafter.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 480.

——— The swain
Disaster'd stands; sees other hills ascend,
Of unknown joyless brow, and other scenes,
Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain
Nor finds the river, nor the forest, hid
Beneath the formless wild. Thomson. Winter.

But supposing the self subsistence of matter from eternity; could the world, full of innumerable forms, spring by an impetus from a dead, formless principle.
Bates. The Existence of God, c. 4.

We are so wonderfully formed, that, whilst we are creatures vehemently desirous of novelty, we are as strongly attached to habit and custom.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 5.

'Tis better far thro' any form to pass,
To crawl a reptile, or to drudge an ass,
Than see base miscreants, guilt's abandon'd crew
Enjoy those honours that are virtue's due.
Fawkes. Man unhappy compared with other Creatures.

What tho' her [Perspective] rules may to your hand impart
A quick mechanic substitute for art,
Yet formal, geometric shapes she draws;
Hence the true genius scorns her rigid laws;
By Nature taught he strikes th' unerring lines,
Consults his eye, and as he sees designs.
Mason. Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Is 't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravely plead!
As far a formalist from wisdom sits
In judging eyes, as libertines from wits.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 2.

It was necessary that every candidate should be nominated to the people by two Augurs, who gave a solemn testimony upon oath, of his dignity and fitness for the office: this was done in Cicero's case by Pompey and Hortensius, the two most eminent members of the college, and, after the election, he was installed, with all the usual formalities, by Hortensius.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. ii. s. 6.

The diplomatick politicians of whom I speak, and who formed by far the majority in that class, made disadvantageous comparisons even between their more legal and formalizing monarchy, and the monarchies of other states, as a system of power and influence.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 2.

The Christian scheme, without formally repealing the Levitical code, lowered its estimation extremely Paley. Evidences, vol i. pt. i. c. 1.

Accent is related to music or song; as appears in the formation of the Latin word, from ad and cantus, and in that of the correspondent Greek term προσῳδια, from προς and ᾠδη.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i c. i. s. 11.

Away, ye worthless, formless race!
Ye weeds, that boast the name of flowers!
No more my native bed disgrace,
Unmeet for tribes so mean as yours.
Langhorne The Tulip and the Myrtle.

FORME'LL,—Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is put for the female of any fowl, more frequently for a female eagle. And Skinner thinks the word is from the Fr. Femelle, by the insertion of r, and the change of e into o. Junius, from the A. S. Formeel, pactio, bargaining, entreating, agreement.

And eche of them did his busie cure
Benignly to chese, or for to take
By her accord, his formell or his make.
Chaucer. The Assemblie of Foules.

Right as the fresh redde rose newe
Against the sommer sunne colour'd is:
Right so for shame, all waxen gan the hewe
Of this formell, when she heard all this. Id. Ib.

FO'RMER. FO'RMERLY. FO'REMOST. FO'REMOSTLY. } Former is fore, (qv.) and maer or mær, i.e. more, (qv.) Fore-most, A. S. For-mest, fore, and most, (qv.) More, and most, fore, afore or before; either in space or time.

Former,—prior, anterior: foremost,—first, earliest, soonest.

The A. S. Forme, and formest, are used by Chaucer.

The kynge's sister Jone, & dame Berenger,
Formest of likone, next tham his chanceler.
R. Brunne, p. 157.

For ich formest & ferst. to fader & to moder
Have ybe unboxome. Piers Ploughman, p. 88.

When that our Lord had created Adam our forme father, he sayd in this wise: it is not good to be a man allone; make we to him an helpe semblable to himself.
Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

To get her love no nere was he
That woned at home, than he in Inde,
The formest was alway behinde —Id. The Duchesse, v 890.

Daniel saw this vision by the flond whose waters lyke as the later waues thruste forthe the former sourges, euen so shall one tribulacion and persecution succede another cõtinually —Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 8.

And being so loden, may by them and the cadie with other their inferiour officers be visited, requiring for the visiting no more then formerly they were accustomed to pay at their first coming.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. pt. i. p. 161.

Whom he furnished to encounter as it were in the vaward, against the continual fraudes, perpetual batail and warres of the world, the fleshe and the Deuil, to be forwardest, and as it wer the ensigne bearoure, in the very formost rank.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience, fol. 42.

But if that nor my former acts, nor what
I have deliver'd, can prevail with you,
To make good my integrity and truth;
Rip up this bosome, and pluck out the heart
That hath been ever loyal.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act i. sc. 1.

With that the other likewise up arose,
And her faire lockes, which formerly were bownd
Up in one knott, she low adowne did lose,
Which flowing long and thick her cloth'd arownd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

But yet so fast they could not home retrate,
But that swift Talus did the formost win;
And, pressing through the preace unto the gate,
Pelmell with them attonce did enter in
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b v c. 7.

But when he saw his daughter dear
Coming on most foremostly,
He wrung his hands, and tore his hair,
And cryed out most piteously.
Jephthah, Judge of Israel. In Percy, vol. i.

Resolv'd to leave the wicked town,
And live retir'd upon his own,
He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of pelf,
Soon split him on the former shelf,
He put it out again.—Dryden. Horace, Epod 2.

In the sixth year of his reign, complaints being made of the excessive rates of compositions for archbishopricks and bishopricks in the Pope's chamber, which were raised to the treble of what had been formerly paid; it was enacted, that they should pay no more than had been formerly wont to be paid.—Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1531.

Dastard, and drunkard, mean and insolent,
Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight.
Dryden. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

The most obvious division of society is into rich and poor; and it is no less obvious, that the number of the former bear a great disproportion to those of the latter
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

Fashion, that sets the modes of dress,
Sheds too her influence o'er the Press:
As formerly the sons of rhyme
Sought Shakspeare's fancy and sublime:
By cool correctness now they hope
To emulate the praise of Pope,
But Pope and Shakspeare both disclaim
These low retainers to their fame.
Lloyd. Epistle to J. B. Esquire.

And when they smiled because he [Brunswick] deem'd it near,
His heart more truly knew that peal too well
Which stretch'd his father on a bloody bier,
And roused the vengeance blood alone could quell:
He rush'd into the field, and, foremost fighting, fell.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3. s. 23.

FO'RMIDABLE. FO'RMIDABLENESS. FO'RMIDABLY. } Lat. Formidabilis, formido, which Julius Scaliger thinks is so called—a formis, that is, spectris; and Joseph Scaliger, from the ancient formus, that is, calidus.

That is to be feared or dreaded; that causes fear or affright, dread, terror; fearful, dreadful, terrible.

When that eternal punishemente shal appeare & be shewed, the countenaunce of God shall be soo formydable and feareful that in the time when miserable sinners shal stande in his sight they shall thinke them self set in a brennynge fornesse of fier —Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, Ps. 6.

And therefore now these lords confedered
(Being much increas'd in number and in spite)
So shap'd their course, that gath'ring to a head,
They grew to be of formidable might.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

——— Before the gates they sat
On either side a formidable shape.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. ii.

They durst not after such a blow
As you have given them, face us now;
But, from so formidable a soldier,
Had fled like crows when they smell powder.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

Nor do I so much admire, as deplore the fatally venturous curiosity of the elder Pliny, who, as the younger relates, could not be deterred by the formidableness of destructive flames vomited by Vesuvius from endeavouring by their light to read the nature of such Vulcanian hills.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 6.

To thee, you abbey dank, and lone,
Where ivy chains each mouldering stone
That nods o'er many a martyr's tomb,
May cast a formidable gloom. Mason, Ode 7.

But let not one friend to religion be weak enough to fear; there is not a particle of formidableness in the thousand strokes that this blasted arm of infidelity has been laying upon the shield of Christianity.
Whitaker. Review of Gibbon's History.

FO'RMOUS. Lat. Formosus, from forma, a form, (qv.)
Beautiful.

O pulchrior sole in beautie full lucident
Of all femine most formous flour.
Chaucer. Balade. The Nine Ladies Worthie.

FO'RMULA. FO'RMULARY, n. } Lat. Formula, from Forma, a form, (qv.;) a fixed or established form, order or method.

'Tis true, tho' there be rules and rubricks in our Liturgy sufficient to guide every one in the performance of all holy duties, yet I believe every one hath some mode and model or formulary of his own, specially for his private cubicular devotions —Howell, b. i Let. 32.

Wherefore it is extremely probable, that about this time they received this creed from the Gallican churches; received it as an orthodox formulary, and an approved rule of faith.
Waterland. Works, vol. iv. p. 223.

You have sent me several papers, some in print, some in manuscript. I think I had seen all of them, except the formula of association.
Burke. Letter to Sir Hercules Langrishe, M. P.

The Jews understood this (Gen. xii. 3,) to signify a formulary, that men should use, when they invocated the choicest blessings on their friends and families, to this effect; may God bless thee as he blessed Abraham
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 3

FO'RNICATE, v. FO'RNICA'TION. FO'RNICATOR. FO'RNICATRESS. } Fr. Forniquer; It. Fornicare; Sp. Fornicar. Fornicare for machari, says Vossius, was unknown to the ancients; but fornix, a vault or cavern, is applied both by Horace and Juvenal to a brothel. And by the writers of the lower ages, fornicaria dicta meretrix, quæ sub fornice prostare solet; a harlot, who prostituted herself under arches. See the allusion in the first citation from Milton.

——— Oure cart shal he drawe
And fetche forth oure vitaules of fornicatours.
Piers Plouhman, p 33.

In al maner fornicacioun is herd among ghou and fornicacioun which is not among Hethen men, so that suma man haue the wyf of his fadir.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 5.

There goeth a common sayinge, that ther is fornicacion among you, and suche fornicacion as is not once named amonge the Gentyls yt one shoulde haue his father's wife.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Whilom ther was dwelling in my contree
An archedeken, a man of high degree,
That boldely did execution
In punishing of fornication, &c.
Chaucer. The Freres Tale, v 6886

And straight after that, bringeth againe in fauour with ye Corinthians the haynouse fornicatour, whom he by his former epistle had commaunded to be geuen ouer to Satan
Udal. Argument to Corinthians

The heroicall spirit of Luther (for I cannot be flouted out of that word) hated the brothelry of their clovsters, and chose rather (which galls them to the heart) to be an honest husband, than a fornicating friar.
Bp. Hall. The Honour of the Married Clergie, b. i s 8.

[She] gives up her body to a mercenary whoredom under those fornicated arches which she calls God's house, and in sight of those her altars which she hath set up to be ador'd, makes merchandize of the bodies and souls of men.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b ii.

Because we know that Christ never gave a Judicial law, and that the word fornication is variously signified in Scripture, it will be much right done to our Saviour's words, to consider diligently whether it be meant here that nothing but actual fornication prov'd by witness can warrant a divorce, for so our Canon law judges.
Id. Doctrine of Divorce, b. ii c. 18.

Vil. If the old fornicator had but told us so much, we should have had the grace, either to haue set him free, or fortune to have us'd him more gently.
Heywood. The Four Prentices of London.

Ang. Well, let her be admitted,
See you the fornicatresse be remov'd,
Let her haue needful, but not lauish meanes,
There shall be order for't.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 2

He [Abimelech] was not altogether innocent even as to that, because he meant no adultery, yet he intended either fornication or rape, and would certainly have gone on with his lewd intentions, had not God withheld him.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 60

If this be true, what will become of the notoriously vicious, the gross and scandalous sinner, the drunkard, the adulterer, the fornicator, the common swearer, the malicious and revengeful person, the liar, the extortioner, the oppressor, and such like.—Bp. Bull, vol. i. Ser. 9.

Those travell'd youths, whom tender mothers wean,
And send abroad to see and to be seen,
With whom, lest they should fornicate, or worse,
A tutor's sent by way of a dry nurse.
Churchill. The Farewell

If fornication be criminal, all those incentives which lead to it are accessaries to the crime, as lascivious conversation, whether expressed in obscene or disguised under modest phrases; also wanton songs, pictures, books; the writing, publishing, and circulating of which, whether out of frone.

or for some pitiful profit, is productive of so extensive a mischief from so mean a temptation, that few crimes, within the reach of private wickedness, have more to answer for, or less to plead in their excuse.
Paley. Moral Philosophy, vol. i. b. iii. pt. iii. c. 2.

FOR-PASS, v. To pass forth, pass along.

One day as he forepassed by the plaine
With weary pace, he far away espide
A couple, seeming well to be his twaine,
Which hoved close under a forest side,
As if they lay in wait, or else themself did hide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

FOR-PINE. Utterly, thoroughly, extremely pined.

He lai forpyned in the wonde, and to dethe drowg.
R. Gloucester, p. 50.

Now certainly he was a fayre prelat,
He was not pale, as a forpined goat.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 205.

In derkeneese and horrible and strong prison
This seven yere hath sitten Palamon,
Forpined, what for love and for distreese.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1455.

And thou (my heart) that long for lacke of grace
Forepinde hast bene and in a dolefull case,
Lament no more, let all such gripinge go
As bred thy bale, and nurst thy cankred wo
With milke of mournefull dug.
Turbervile. The Lover hoping after a long Suit.

But, through long anguish and self-murdering thought,
He was so wasted and forpined quight,
That all his substance was consumed to nought,
And nothing left but like an aery spright.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

FORRA'Y, v. FORRA'Y, s. FORRA'YER. } See FORAGE; and Forray, in Jamieson.

Whan William alle was dight & to the boun
Redy with him to fight, he forid Harald futle sone.
R. Brunne, p. 70.

He bade to open wide the brazen gate,
Which long time had beene shut, and out of hand
Proclaimed ioy and peace through all his State,
For dead now was their foe, which them forraid late.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b i. c 12.

Wherefore upon a new aid of certain Gauls being come into him, he entred into the realm of Macedon, (which Antigonus, Demetrius's son held at that time,) with intent only to make a forray and to get some spoil in the countrey.
North. Plutarch, p 343.

At length, when they occasion fittest found
In dead of night, when all the thieves did rest
After a late forray, and slept full sound,
Sir Calidore him arm'd, as he thought best.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 11.

Then those rovers and forraiers retired in haste unto their ships, because on a suddaine there was a rumour blowne abroad, that the Punike armada was coming, consisting of 83 saile.—Holland. Livius, p. 650.

With all the speed and haste he could make [he] fled to a companie of Persian forrayers that were abroad to waste the countrey, of whom they had intelligence that they approached.—Id. Ammianus, p. 135.

FOR-SAKE. FORSA'KER. FORSA'KING, s. } A.S. For-sacan; Dut. Versacchen; for, i. e. forth, and sec-an, to seek; to seek forth or out, away from; and thus, to go away or depart from.

To leave, quit, desert or relinquish; and thus, to renounce, and, (as in Chaucer and Robert of Gloucester,) to disavow, to deny.

—— Zuf eni clerc as felon were itake,
& vor felon iproued, & ne mizte it nost uorsake,
That me solde uerst desordeine.—R. Gloucester, p. 473.

A brightnesse com fro heuen on Roberd light,
Thre tymes alle ouer, that alle sauh it with sight,
Thris that alle mot se the light on Roberd toke,
Vngracious man was he, thris he it forsoke.
R. Brunne, p. 103.

We hauen forsaken the world, and in wo libbeth,
In penaunce and pouerte. Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Thanne Petir answeredo and seide to him, lo we han forsaken alle thingis, and he han sued thee, what thanne schal be to us? Jhesus seide to hem, treuly I seye to you, that ye that han forsaken alle thingis, and han sued me in regeneracioun whanne mannes sone schal sitte in the seete of his majeste, ye schulen sitte on twelve seetis demynge the twelve kynredis of Israel.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 19.

Then answered Peter, and sayde to hym: Beholde, we haue forsaken all and folowed thee, what shall we haue? Jesus sayde vnto them: verily I say to you: when the sonne of man shall syt in the seat of his maiestie, ye which folow me in the second generacion shall syt also vp o xii. seates, and iudge the xii. trybes of Israel.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For wele or wo she n'ill him not forsake.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9166.

If thou consider the number and the maner of thy blisses and thy sorrowes, thou maist nat forsaken [negare non possis] that nart yet blisfull.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

But as it were a man forsake,
Unto the wood and waie gan take,
Not for to synge with the birdes.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

This verse declareth, the impietie) vngodly cruelty) and the forsaking of the lawes of God to be the cause of the calamities of ye Jewes.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 11.

But now shal Christ for hys forsakynge of his own life, in the honour of hys fayth forgyue the payne of all hys synnes, of his mere liberality.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1151

So after long pursute and vaine essay,
When I all wearie had the chace forsooke,
The gentle deere return'd the self-same way,
Thinking to quench her thirst at the next brooke.
Spenser, son 67.

Still violent, whatever cause he took,
But most against the party he forsook.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

Clear, placid Leman! thy contrasted lake,
With the wild world I dwell in, is a thing
Which warns me, with its stillness to forsake
Earth's troubled waters for a purer spring.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3.

FOR-SAY. To say forth, out, or away from, (sc.) what has been said; and thus—
To renounce, to deny, to refuse, to forbid.

But shepheard must walke another way,
Sike worldly souenance he must forsay.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

And sithence shepheards beene forsay'd
from places of delight:
For thy, I weene thou be affraid, to clime this hilles height. Id. Ib. July.

FOR-SHAPE. Out of her own shape; and thus, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, transformed.

The swalow Proigne, with a sorowful lay
Whã morow come, gã make her waimenting
Why she forshapen was. Chaucer. Troilus, b. ii. p. 159.

FOR-SHRUNK. Utterly shrunk, entirely shrunk up.

Forshronke with heat the ladies eke to brent
That they ne wist where they hem might bestow.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

FOR-SLACK. For, i. e. forth, out, utterly, and slack, (qv.) "A. S. Sleac-ian, pigrescere, to wax slow, slothful, dull or lazy," (Somner.) See FORSLOW.

To retard or delay; to procrastinate; and consequentially, to lose or let slip, (sc.) the time, occasion or opportunity.

The official thinking to forslacke no time, taking counsell with his fellowes, laide hands vppon this Peter, and brought him before the inquisitor.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 829. A Table of the French Martyrs. Peter Serre.

Neither did he forslack the occasion ministred, but went straight to the King.
Id. Ib. p. 1024. Lambert brought before the King.

Tho' gan Sir Calidore him to aduise
Of his first quest, which he had long forlore,
Asham'd to thinke, how he that enterprise,
The which the Faery Queene had long afore
Bequeath'd to him, forslacked had so sore.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b vi c. 12.

Gainst whom Sir Artegall, long hauing since
Taken in hand th' exploit, beeing theretoo
Appointed by that mighty Feary Prince,
Great Gloriane, that tyrant to fordoo,
Through other great adventures hithertoo
Had it forslackt. Id. Ib b v c 12.

Eudox. It is a great pittie, that so good an opportunity was omitted, and so happie an occasion fore-slacked, that might have beene the eternall good of the land.
Id. View of the State of Ireland.

FOR-SLOW, v. FORSLO'UTH. FORSLO'G, v. } For, i. e. forth, and Sleacian, sleacgian, tardare, pigrescere.

Utterly to slow or retard. (See FORSLACK.) Slack, slug, slow, in A. S. Slæc, sleac, slog, slæw, sleaw, slaw, are all the same past tense, and therefore past part. (differently pronounced and written) of the A. S. verb Sleacian, sleacgian, slacian, (a broad) tardare, remittere, relaxare, pigrescere. See Tooke, ii. 346.

Now certes, this foule sinne of accidie [i. e. slouth] is eke a ful gret enemie to the livelode of the body; for it ne hath no perveaunce ayenst temporel necessitee; for it forsleutheth, forsluggeth, and destroieth all goodes temporal by recchelessnesse.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

But sith I see that thou wolt here abide
And thus forslouthen wilfully thy tide,
God wot it reweth me, and have good day.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,102.

Neuerthelesse he entreated wyth him by messengers, lamenting that the warres of so rich a prince as he was, should be forslowed for want of money.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 85.

Albeit that Induciomarus were disappointed of this hope yet not wt standing he nothing forslowed to muster souldiers, to traiu them before hand, to get horses of hys neighbors, and to allure to him with promis of great rewards the outlawes & condēned persons of al Gallia.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 143.

By protractyng of tyme and longe space Kyng Henry might fortefie & munite all daungerous places, and passages wt souldiours and men of warre, which thinge thei heard saye yt he neither forgate nor forslowed.
Hall. Hen. VII. an 9.

The consull for his part forslowed not to come to handfight, the onely thing he sought for in threatning to give assault.—Holland. Livius, p. 1119.

Then rise ye blessed flocks, and home apace,
Least night with stealing steppes do you forslow,
And wett your tender lambes that by you trace.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. June.

Maci. Now therefore if you can think upon any present means for his delivery, do not forslow it.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 6.

Fore-slow no longer, make we hence amaine.
Shakespeare. 3 Part Hen. IV. Act ii. sc 3.

The wondring Nereids, tho' they rais'd no storm,
Forslow'd her passage to behold her form;
Some cry'd a Venus: some a Thetis past;
But this was not so fair, nor that so chaste.
Dryden. To the Duchess on her Return.

FOR-SONGEN. Sung forth or out; and thus, exhausted, weary with singing.

There might men see many flockes
Of turtles and laverockes,
Chelaundres fele sawe I there
That verie nigh forsongen were.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

FOR-SOOTH. Utterly sooth, entirely true, certainly true.

On the expression in B. Jonson, "A forsooth of the City," Mr. Gifford remarks, "By this petty oath, which was probably familiar to the merchants and tradesmen's wives, the city ladies are characterised in many of our old dramas."

Forsoth vengeance he fond, of Criste the grace he les.
R. Brunne, p. 104

If ghe louyden me, forsoothe, ghe schulden haue ioie, for I go to the fadir, for the fadir is grettere than I.
Wiclif. Jon, c. 14.

I say thin enemy shalt thou love for Godde's sake, by his commandement: for if it were reson that man shulde hate his enemy forsoth God n'olde not receive us to his love that ben his enemies.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Can ye drynke of the cup that I shall drynke of? Can ye be baptised with the baptism that I shall be baptised wyth? They as yet lytle knowing their strength, but for the gredinesse that they had to obteine theyr peticion, they answere rashly rather than valiantly: yea forsouth can we.
Udal. Matthew, c. 20.

Carry not too much under-thought betwixt yourselfe and them, nor your city mannerly word (forsooth) use it not too often in any case; but plain, I, madam, and no, madam.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iv. sc. 1.

He never feare you, for being too witty,
You sip so like a forsooth of the city.—Id. The Penates.

But we, forsooth, must bear a Christian mind;
And fight, like boys, with one hand ty'd behind.
Dryden. Epilogue to the Duke of Guise.

—— Where the hot-brain'd youth,
Who tore tiara at his pleasure tore
From kings of all the then discover'd globe,
And cry'd, forsooth, because his arm was hamper'd
And had not room enough to do its work!—Blair. Grave.

FOR-SPEAK. For, i. e. forth, and speak. (See FORSAY.) To speak forth, out or away from, against, (sc.) what has been spoken. And thus, as Mr. Steevens says, the opposite to bespeak.

To forbid.

Thou hast forespoke my being in these warres;
And say'st it is not fit.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act ii. sc. 7.

FOR-SPEND. To spend forth, to spend utterly, extremely: and thus, as Mr. Steevens says, to waste, to exhaust.

War. Fore-spent with toile, as runners with a race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 2.

After him, came spurring hard
A gentleman (almost fore-spent with speed)
That stopp'd by me to breath his bloodied horse.
Id. 2 Pt. Henry IV. Act i. sc. 1.

FOR-STRAUGHT. See DISTRAUGHT.
Utterly straught or dis*traught*; quite distracted.

But it were for an olde appalled wight
As ben thise wedded men, that lie and dare,
As in a fourme sitteth a wery hare,
Were al forstraught with houndes gret and smale.
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,035.

FOR-SWAT. To sweat utterly, extremely.

Shee is my Goddess plaine,
And I her shepheard's swaine,
Albee forswonke and forswat I am.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. April.

FOR-SWEAR. } A. S. For-swærian; Dut.
FORSWE'ARING. } Ver-zwæren, abjurare, to ab-jure; to swear out or away from. And thus—

To abjure; to disavow, deny, refuse or renounce, upon oath.

To abjure, (sc.) the truth; and thus, to swear falsely, to be guilty of false swearing or perjury.

The first justice in benk Sir Thomas of Weland,
For falshed & for wrenk he forswore the land.
R. Brunne, p. 246.

Herald this lond les, for he was forsworen,
Leulyn brake the pes, his hede he lost therforn.—Id p 289.

Lo, Demophon, Duke of Athenis
How he forswore him falsely,
And traied Phillis wickedly
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. i.

With that the hande of heuen smote,
In token of that he hath forswore
There he bothe his eyen lore,
Out of his head the same stounde
Thei stert, and so they were founde.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Hasard is veray moder of lesinges,
And of deceite, and cursed forswearinges.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,526.

How many thousandes forsweare themselves! how many thousandes set themselves aboue their habilitie, partly for feare lest they should be forsworne and partly to saue their credence.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 115.

Thys man I say beyng examined & long keping himself close from disclosyng of the matter, & more ready to go straighte to ye Deuil we lyenge & false forswerers, thē to be aknowe of hys euyll demeanure and confesse the trouthe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 262

Where well-near overwhelm'd with mountains of the dead,
His force and fortune made the foes so much to fear,
As they the land at last did utterly forswear.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

Or say, that now
We are not just those persons, which we were?
Or, that oaths, made in reverential fear
Of love and his wrath, any may forswear?
Donne. Woman's Constancy.

Tells of him all the tales it selfe then makes;
But, if it shall be question'd, undertakes,
It will deny all; and forsweare it too.
B. Jonson, Epig. 115.

Here I forswear my merry piping trade:
My little pipe, of seven reeds ymade,
(Ah pleasing pipe!) I'll hang upon this bough:
Thou Chame, and Chamish nymphs, bear witness of my vow.
P. Fletcher. To my ever Honoured Cousin, W. R. Esq.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove.
Thou being a Goddess, I forswore not thee.
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd, cures all disgrace in me.
Shakespeare. Passionate Pilgrim, st. 1.

He that's in all the world's black sins forlorn
Is careless now how oft he be forsworn.
Drayton. Queen Margaret to the Duke of Suffolk.

Gron. ——— By Mars,
I'll marry thee!
Phil. ——— By Vulcan, you're forsworn,
Except my mind do alter strangely.
Ford. The Broken Heart, Act i. sc. 2

I thought it better to prefer a blameless silence before the sacred office of speaking, bought and begun with servitude and forswearing.
Milton. Reason of Church Government, b. ii. Introd.

I, too, have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn
Eternal love and endless faith to Theseus;
And yet am false: forsworn; the hollow shrine
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act iv.

Besides, how insincere you are!
Do ye not flatter, lie, forswear,
And daily cheat, and weekly pray,
And all for this,—to lead the way.
Shenstone. The Charms of Precedence.

FOR-SWONK. Swonk, past part. of swink, to labour or swink utterly, extremely. See FOR-SWAT, and the quotation there.

FORT. } Fr. Forteresse; It. Fortezza;
FO'RTED. } Sp. Fuerte, fortaleza, from the FO'RTRESS. } Lat. Fortis. Propugnaculum
FO'RTRESSED. } (says Skinner) locus fortis seu munitus, i. e. a strength, which we use in the same sense. See to FORTIFY.

A strong part or place, a strong position: well defended and secured.

To liue the more in sikarness
Do make a mon a fortresse.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

My mother is of great prowesse,
She hath tane many a fortresse
That cost hath many a pound er this.—Id. Ib.

And by that, whyche I can lerne, they haue determyned for to assaulte oure rampares and fortes all at one instante, as well by sea as by lade.—Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 178.

Their temple and cite Jerusalem were builded pleasantly vpon that holy highe mount of Sion, well fortreced and turretted.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 12.

Hee willed him besides to choose out a place vppon the brinke of Tanais, wher as he might build a citie, to remaine as a fortres for the subduing of those people that he intended to visit.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 191.

Sir Bereas de la Laude, and other, with their companyes departed fro Rochell, to the nombre of foure hundred speares, and toke the way to Subyze, for ther were certayne Bretons that helde churches and small forteresses, and had fortifyed them.—Bernes. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 301.

Whose hath seen young lads (to sport themselves)
Run in a lowe ebbe to the sandy shelves
Where seriously they work in digging welles,
Or building childish forts of cockle shells.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

——— It deserues with characters of brasse
A forted residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And razure of oblivion.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act v. sc. 1.

Honour and beauty, in the owner's arms
Are weakly fortress'd from a world of harms.
Id. The Rape of Lucrece.

What way could we, fraile fortresses, defend,
Against Hell's lord with legions bent for ill,
Who even in Heaven so proudly durst contend,
Whilst flying armies shining fields did fill.
Stirling. Doome-day. The Tenth Houre.

——— Goe, goe, presently
Draw me out an hundred and fifty of our horse,
And meet me at the fort-bridge.
Webster. The Duchesse of Malfy, Act iii. sc. 3.

The next dispatch to him has a particular account of two persons whom the King of France had corrupted to betray one of their forts to him.—Burnet. Hist. of Ref. an. 1547.

Whilst meagre Pthisis gives a silent blow,
Her strokes are sure, but her advances slow:
No loud alarms, nor fierce assaults are shown;
She starves the fortress first, then takes the town.
Garth. The Dispensary.

This statute, (13 Car. II.,) it is obvious to observe, extends not only to fleets and armies, but also to forts, and other places of strength, within the realm; the sole prerogative as well as of erecting, as manning and governing of which, belongs to the King in his capacity of general of the kingdom.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 7.

Catiline was disappointed likewise in another affair, of no less moment, before he quitted the city; a design to surprise the town of Præneste, one of the strongest fortresses of Italy, within twenty-five miles of Rome.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 3.

FORTH. } A. S. Forth; Dut. Voord; Ger.
FORTHWI'TH. } Fort, furt; all, says Skinner, from the Lat. Foris, forus, vel porro. The Gr. Θυρα (Tooke) became the Dor. Φορα, and the Lat. Fora, whence fores, foris; and whence the It. Fuora, fuore, fuori; and the Fr. Fors. And of the Fr. Fors, our ancestors (by their favourite pronunciation of th) made forth, (Div. of Purley, i. 331, 496.) See FOR, in Composition.

Fore, in the passage from Chaucer, (Rom. of the Rose,) Tooke interprets, Fors, forth. Mr. Tyrwhitt considers it to be the past part. of Fare, A. S. Far-an, to go. Forth, is—

Out, away from; through, thoroughly; out in a direct course, straight on, onward.

Forth-with is with-out, (sc.) delay, loss of time. Vox sanè elegantissima, in the opinion of Skinner. Forth is used before many words, to which it might with equal propriety be subjoined. As forthbring, i.e. bring forth or out. Some examples are subjoined.

Yburied it was forth with him, as in tokenynge
Of ye prowes, that he yt wan of on so hey a kynge.
R. Gloucester, p. 50.

That lond folk eode forth, and togedere drowe.—Id. p. 97.

Ne that he ne kepte bute hire one, without other thing.
That heo mygte som eyres [heirs] bitwene hem forthbrynge.
Id. p. 32.

Kyng Philip did also, his baner was forth laid,
& right it felle therto, for no man him withsaid.
R. Brunne, p. 179.

Loke out of lond thou be not fore,
And if such cause thou haue, that the
Behoueth to be gone out of countre
Leaue hole thine hert in hostage.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

On the left side, mo divels than any herte may thinke, for to hary and drawe the sinful soules to the pitte of helle and within the hertes of folk shal be the biting conscience, and without forth shal be the world all brenning.
Id. The Persones Tale

An homicide therto han they hired,
That in an aleye had a privee place,
And as the child gan forthby for to pace,
This cursed Jew him hent, and held him fast,
And cut his throate, and in a pit him cast.
Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,499

She freyneth, and she praieth pitously
To every Jew that dwelled in thilke place,
To telle hire, if hire child went ought forthby.
Id. Ib. v. 13,532.

Unto his brother's bed he comen is,
And swiche comforte he yaf him, for to gon
To Orleaunce, that he up stert anon,
And on his way forth-ward than is he fare,
In hope for to ben lissed of his care.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,481.

For why the queen forthwith her leue
Toke at them all that were present. Id. Dreame

Than ech of us toke other by the sleue
And forthwithall, as we should take our leue.
Id. The Assemblie of Ladies.

Benethe foorthe amonge vs here
Al stante alike in this matere.—Gower. Con. A. Proi.

——— And forthwithall,
Or any man therof beware,
A naked swerde the which she bare
Within hir mantell priuely,
Betweene hir hondes sodeinly
She took, and through hir hert it thronge.—Id. Ib. b. viii.

And he fedeth the weake with milke, that afterward he might bring foorth strōg meatte thē, whan they were of more strēgth.—Udal. Matt. c. 4.

Saint Kentigerne Byshop of Glasghon, (that ye nowe call S. Asses or Asaphes,) had in lyke case a fayre maide to his forthe-brynger, but farther would she graunt none to him for no compulsion.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

Would this pacifier adulse the ordinarie thus, or elles to keepe hym in prysō where he should doe no hurte, and lette the walles and the lokkes be hys suerties for hys forthecoming.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 888.

It was nere vnto the feast of Mary Magdaleyn or his people were all assembled, at whiche season he set forthward to the town of Calets, to remoue the Kyng of Englande from that siege.—Fabyan, an. 1357.

Yf any of these begyn to spryng in the mynde, forthwith it must be cut up, for so the yll that begynneth to spryng, shall be the more easelye and safely taken away.
Udal. Matthew, c. [illegible].

In time to come thou shalte see more apparaunt signes, whereby thyne opinion of me maye encrease. And forthwithall Jesus turned him to his other disciples.
Id. John, c. 1.

As stubborne steed, that is with curb restrained,
Becomes more fierce and feruent in his gate,
And breaking forth at last, thus dearnly peined
Spenser. Daphnaida.

Order therefore was given by the state and the same observed from time to time, that the sextons or wardens of the said chappell should purfourme the safetie and forth-coming of it [a dog in brass] under paine of death.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 7.

Thence forward he him led, and shortly brought
Vnto another roome, whose door forth-right
To him did open, as it had been taught.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

For emulation hath a thousand sonnes,
That one by one pursue; if you giue way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forth-right;
Like to an entred tyde, they all rush by,
And leaue you hindmost.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iii. sc. 3.

So pond'ring, and from his armed peers
Forth-stepping opposite, half way he met
His daring foe. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

But Terpine, borne to a more unhappy howre,
As he on whom the luckelesse starres did lowre,
She caused to be attacht, and forthwith led
Vnto the crooke, t' abide the balefull stowre,
From which he lately had through reskew fled.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

It was replied, that the King looked for no other answer from them; but would forthwith send his owne ambassadors to the French king.—Bacon. Henry VII. p. 93.

You should have added the other words by me cited, εικων τελειος και απαυγασμα του πατρος, the perfect image and shining forth of the Father.
Waterland. Works, vol. iii. p. 49.

A swift old age o'er all his members spread;
A sudden frost was sprinkled on his head,
No longer on the heavy eyeball shin'd
The glance divine, forth-beaming from the mind.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

Sometimes in hand the spade or plough he caught,
Forth-calling all with which boon earth is fraught.
Thomson. The Castle of Indolence, c. 2.

And October the 24th, [1551,] it was ordered, that he [Walgrave] should be moved out of the Tower by the lieutenant to some honest house, where he might be better looked to, for the curing of his quartan ague: remaining still as a prisoner, and to be forth-coming whensoever he should be called for.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

Forth issuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax with truest temper steel'd,
And double edged. Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

Besides the filthy swine will oft invade
Thy firm enclosure, and with delving snout
The rooted forest undermine: forthwith
Halloo thy furious mastiff. J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

On the contrary, he was forth-coming, to answer the call, to satisfy the scrutiny, and to sustain the brow-beating of Christ's angry and powerful enemies.
Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 1. Prop 2.

Fir'd with his tragic tale, the indignant crowd
To guard his steps, forthwith a menial band,
Array'd beneath his eye for deeds of war,
Decree. Akenside. Pleasures of Imagination, b. ii

FORTHI'NK. A. S. For-thencan; perperam cogitare de, (Lye.) To think wrong or rashly concerning (any thing.) And Skinner, molestas cogitationes habere, to have troublesome thoughts, and thus, dolere, to grieve.

To grieve, to vex, to regret or be sorry for.

And he answeride and seide I nyle, but afterward he forthoughte and went forth.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 21.

That me forthinketh, quad this January.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9780.

If jelousie the soth knew
Thou shalt forthinke, and sore rue.—Id. Rom. of the R.

And least it grieved or forthought
The Lord that thilke garden wrought. Id. Ib.

——— Anone he thinketh
Of his misdede, and it forthinketh
So greatly, that for pure sorowe
He lueth not til on the morowe.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii

And lest any shoulde so doe, John came before to prepare and dispose all men by his carnall baptism, to the spirituall baptisme of Christ: to cause them by exhorting, and making them afrayde, to forthink and hate theyr former life.
Udal. Mark, c. 1.

Then gan he thinke, perforce with sword and targe
Her forth to fetch, and Proteus to constraine:
But soon he gan such folly to forthinke again.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

FO'RTIFY, v. FORTIFICA'TION. FO'RTIFIER. FO'RTITUDE. FO'RTIFYING, n. } Fr. Fortifier; It. Fortificare; Sp. Fortificar; Lat. Fortis, strong, anciently Forctis; from the Gr. Ἐρκτος, from Ἐογ-ειν, sepire, to fence, to defend.

To strengthen, to defend, to confirm, to assure, to enforce or encourage.

——— Now I wol and dare boldly
Assaile my purpose, with scriptures autentike
My werke woll I ground, vnderset, & fortifie.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Loue.

Bachu is from Bildih, the place where they road, about a day's iourney, on foote easily to be trauelled, which may be sixe leagues the next way ouer land. it is a walled towne, and strongly fortified.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 422.

The King of Scithiæ, whose empire was then beyond the riuer of Tanais, iudgyng that the fortifying vppon the riuer's side, shoulde bee as a yoke to his necke, sent his brother Carcasis wyth a greate power of horsemen to defeat the fortificacion, and to remove away the Macedons from the water's syde.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 192.

Fortitude is a considerate hasarding vpon daunger, and a willing heart to take paines, in behalfe of the right.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 35.

In vain with terror is he fortified,
That is not guarded with firm love beside
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. i.

And what are Courts, but camps of misery!
That do bestege men's states, and still are press'd
T' assail, prevent, complot and fortify:
In hope t' attain, in fear to be suppress'd
Id. Ib. b. viii.

But the Samnites on the other side, so much the more fiercely skirmished on horseback about the fortifications, and never gave them rest.—Holland. Livius, p. 329.

It should seeme the fortifier [of Pendennis] made his aduantage of the commodities afforded by the ground.
Carew. Survey of Cornwall, p. 149.

I thought that fortitude had been a meane
'Twixt feare and rashness: not a lust obscene
Or appetite of offending; but a skill,
Or science of discerning good and ill
B. Jonson. To Sir Edw. Sackville.

For this great fortitude and resolution of his [Cocles] the citie was thankful, and in token thereof his image or statue was set vp in the common hall, named Comitium, and as much ground given him in compasse, as he was able with a plough to break up in one day.—Holland. Livius, p. 50

When Interest fortifies an argument,
Weak Reason serves to gain the Will's assent;
For souls, already warp'd, receive an easy bent.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Whereas the French were practising in Ireland, Sir James Crofts, a good soldier, was sent thither in February, to look after the condition of that kingdom, especially the havens, to prevent any invasion, and to begin some good fortifications.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. IV. an. 1550.

And it is true, that in the severe notions of our faith, the fortitude of a Christian consists in patience, and suffering, for the love of God, whatever hardships can befal in the world.—Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

Timidity was fortified by pride, and even the success of my pen discouraged the trial of my voice.—Gibbon. Life.

During that period this John Stone published a book on fortification, called Enchiridion, with many small cuts etched by himself but without his name.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 1.

Fortitude expresses that firmness of mind, which resists dangers and sufferings.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. c. 2. s. 3.

FO'RTILAGE. A little fort, (qv.)

In all straights and narrow passages, as between 2 boggs, or through any deep foord, or under any mountain side, there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keepe and command that straight, whereby any rebells that should come into the country might be stopped that way, or passe with great perill.
Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

FO'RTNIGHT. A. S. Feowertene; four, and ten, and niht, night. Fourteen nights.

Git salle thou mak tham dred, or com a fortenyght
R. Brunne, p. 173.

And certes, lord, to abiden your presence
Here in this temple of the Goddesse Clemence
We han ben waiting all this fourtenight.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 906.

I se that oft time, there as we ben now
That for the best, our counsaile for to hide
Ye speke nat with me, nor I with you
In fourtenight. Id. Troilus, b. ii.

It is to be noted, that from the haven of Linne in Norfolke (whereof the foresaid Franciscan friar tooke his name) to Island, it is not aboue a fortnight's sailing with an ordinarie winde, and hath bene of many yeeres a very common and vsuall trade.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 122.

——— Had you but five pound
Left you in all the world, I'd undertake
Within one fortnight you should see five thousand.
Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act ii. sc. 2

About a fortnight after this, Gardner wrote another letter to the King, which will be found in the collection.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1529.

But you to all your friends are partial·
You reckon · · · another Martial.
He'd think a fortnight well bestow'd
To write an epigram or ode.—Cambridge. The Intruder

FOR-TRO'DDEN. For, i. e. forth, and trodden.

Utterly trodden; or, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, trodden down.

Honour is also cleped great dignitee and highnesse; but in helle shal they be alle fortroden of divels.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

& vertue nis not all onely wythout meedes, but it is cast down, & eke fortrodden vnder the fete.—Id. Boecius, b. iv.

FO'RTUIT. FO'RTUITOUS. FO'RTUITOUSLY. FO'RTUITOUSNESS. FO'RTUITY. } From forte, (Vossius.) Fr. Fortuit; It. and Sp. Fortuito; Lat. Fortuitus; fors a ferendo; est enim fors, prout res fert, as things happen or fall out. See FORTUNE.

Happening, falling out, or coming to pass, (sc.) without the guidance or direction of an intelligent cause; casual, accidental.

These been then the causes, of the abredgyng of fortuit hap, ye which abredgyng of fortuit hap commeth of causes of encountryng, and flowyng togyther to himselfe, and not by the entencion of the doer.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. v.

That though the coalition of those semina were casual, and by an accidental or fortuitous aggregation of some atoms, yet these were the immediate, primitive, productive principles of men, animals, birds, and fishes, and that determined them to their several species
Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 257.

But what do these Theists here else, then whilst they deny the fortuitous motion of senseless matter, to be the first original of all things, themselves in the mean time, enthrone fortuitousness and contingency, in the will of an omnipotent being, and there give it an absolute soveraignty and dominion over all.—Cudworth. Intellect. System, p. 813.

I cannot think that the branded Epicurus, Lucretius and their fellows were in earnest, when they resolv'd this composition into a fortuitous range of atoms.—Glanvill, Esa. 1.

The old stale pretence of the Atheists, that things were first made fortuitously, and afterwards their usefulness was observed or discovered, can have no place here.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii. p. 49.

The only question, which the adversaries to Providence have to answer is, how they can be sure, that those deserved judgmentes were the effect of mere fortuity, without the least intervention on the part of the Lord of the universe?
Forbes. On Incredulity, p. 79.

As chance is the operator assigned in a fortuitous concourse of atoms, we would know, what this chance, this wise and ingenious artist, is—is it substance? No, that is not pretended. Matter? Nor that. Quality of matter? Nor that neither. What neither subject nor attribute?
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. ii. Note.

Nor have we the less range of action for the secret springs of events taking their certain course by the divine appointment, neither would our liberty be at all enlarged if they were set in motion by the fortuitous declination of Epicurus's atoms.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. p. iii. c. 26.

Nothing befals them fortuitously, nothing happens in vain, or without a meaning; but every event possesses its proper and destined place, and forms a link in that great chain of causes which is appointed to carry on their improvement and felicity.—Blair, vol. v. Ser. 5.

FO'RTUNE, v. FO'RTUNE, n. FO'RTUNED, FO'RTUNATE. FO'RTUNATELY. FO'RTUNATENESS. FO'RTUNELESS. FO'RTUNABLE. FO'RTUNIZE. FO'RTUNOUS. } Fr. Fortune, fortuner; It. and Sp. Fortuna; Lat. Fortuna, anciently forctuna, from fortis or fortus, anciently forctis or forctus. Fortuna κυριως, bona notat: prius dicebant,—Fors forctuna, i. e. fors bona; postea ἁπλως dixere fortuna; [sed καταχρηστικως tum extensa significatio, ut et de adverso eventu usurparetur.] (Vossius.) And thus it appears, that fortuna from fortis, strong, and so far good, was originally used adjectively with fors, denoting, good hap, good luck; then simply, hap or luck: see FORTUIT.

Good hap, good luck; any hap or luck; success, good or bad; any thing happily or luckily acquired, attained or possessed; as a good estate, riches, wealth. The verb, to fortune, is—

To happen or cause to happen; to give luck or success to.

Ac er this fortune by fulle fynde me shal the worste
Piers Ploughman, p. 62.

Wel coude he fortunen the ascendent
Of his images for his patient.—Chaucer. Prologue, v 419.

Thou hast in every regne and every lond
Of armes all the bridel in thin hond,
And hem fortunest as thee list devise.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2379.

Alas, why plainen men so in commune
Of purveyance of God, or of fortune,
That yeveth hem ful oft in many a gise
Wel better than they can hemself devise?—Id. Ib. v. 1254.

And the contrary is Joye and gret solas,
As whan a man hath ben in poure estat,
And climbeth up and waxeth fortunat,
And ther abideth in prosperitee.
Id. The Nonnes Preestes Prologue, v. 1482.

If the fortune of this worlde is so selde stable, that if it turneth by so many enterchaunges, wilt thou than trusten in the toimbling fortunes of men.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

Right as a manne delfe the earth, bicause of tilling of the field, and found there a goblet of gold bedoluen, then wenen folke, that it is befall by fortunous betidyng.—Id. Ib.

A thousande tyme with one breath
Wepende he wisheth after deth,
Whan he fortune fynt aduerse. Gower. Con. A. b iv.

Euen so vnbelefe onely damneth and keepeth out the spirit, prouoketh the flesh, and styrreth vp lust vnto the euill outward works, as it fortuned to Adam and Eue in Paradice.—Tyndal. Works, p. 41.

For wel wote I that oure Lord geueth in thys worlde vnto eyther sort of folk, either sort of fortune He maketh hys sunne to shyne both vppon the good and the bad, and hys rayne both on the iust and on the vniust.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1157.

The Lord lyueth. in truth, in equite & righteousnesse: and al people shall bee fortunable and ioyfull in him.
Bible, 1551. Jeremye, c 4

And then was crowned with a crowne royall at the palaice of Westminster, beside Lódon, the yong Kyng Edward the III., who in his dayes after was right fortunate, and happy in armes.—Berners. Froussart. Cronycle, vol i. c 14.

After this victorye fortunately obteined, the Duke of Bedforde sailed by water vp to the very towne of Harflew, and without let or impediment landed and refreshed it both with vitaile and money.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 4.

For first, with words, nearer admiration than liking, she would extol his excellencies, the goodlinesse of his shape, the power of his wit, the valiantness of his courage, the fortunateness of his successes.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii.

It fortuned, that in the house of P. Sestius, a nobleman, there was a dead bodie found buried, and brought forth openly into the publicke assemblie of the people.
Holland. Livie, p. 110.

Whereupon, if it fortuned that a child having been chastised by another man, went to complain thereof to his own father; it was a shame for the said father, if he gave him not his payment again.—Id. Plutarch, p. 392.

Fortune (the foe of famous cheuisaunce)
Seldome (said Guyon) yeelds to vertue ayde,
But in her way throwes mischiefe and mischaunce,
Whereby her course is stopt, and passage staid.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 9.

So happy are they, and so fortunate,
Whom the Pierian sacred sisters loue,
That freed from bands of implacable fate,
And powre of death, they liue for aye aboue,
Where mortall wreakes their bliss may not remoue.
Id. Ruines of Time, s. 57.

The battle then at Stoke so fortunately struck,
Upon King Henry's part, with so successful luck,
As never till that day he felt his crown to cleave,
Unto his temples close. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

For wisedome is most riches: fools therefore
They are, which fortunes do by vowes deuise
Sith each vnto himselfe his life may fortunize.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

For to waxe olde at home in idlenesse,
Is disaduentrous, and quite fortuneless.
Id. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

The councell of Ancyra, or Engury, canon 21, exposeth all Christians to fiue yeeres penance, who shall obserue any prophecies, dreames, diuinations, or fortune-tellers after the customes of the Gentiles, or should entertaine such diviners or soothsayers in their houses.
Prynne. Hustrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act i. sc. 2.

We are simple men, we do not know what's brought to passe vnder the profession of fortune telling. she workes by charmes, by spels by th' figure, and such dawbry as this is, beyond our element wee know nothing
Shakespeare Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

The very next parliament after the marriage, that sat in November 1554, it was enacted 'that such as imagined or spoke any seditious or scandalous news, rumours, sayings, or tales of the King or the Queen, should be set upon the pillory, if it fortuned to be said without any city or town corporate; but if within any city or towne corporate, then to have both ears cut off, unless he paid £100. to the King within a month."—Strype. Memorials, Q. Mary, an. 1554.

Fortune fortùn'd the dying notes of Rome:
Till I, thy consul sole, consol'd thy doom
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

Fortune a Goddess is to fools alone,
The wise are always masters of their own.
John Dryden, Jun. Ib. Sat. 14.

—— Godolphin, wise and just,
Equal in merit, honour, and success
To Burleigh (fortunate alike to serve
The best of Queens.) J. Philips. Blenheim.

These Adam-wits, too fortunately free,
Began to dream they wanted liberty.
Dryden Absalom & Achitophel.

This sacred truth print deeply on thy mind;
Fortune and Fortune's votaries are blind.
Pawkes. Fortune Blind.

As Sylla was sacrificing before his tent in the fields of Nola, a snake happened to creep out of the bottom of the altar; upon which Postumius the haruspex, who attended the sacrifice, proclaiming it to be a fortunate omen, called out upon him to lead his army immediately against the enemy.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 1.

And when, fortunately for their preservation, they [Paul, &c.] were not found at home, the master of the house was dragged before the magistrate for admitting them within his doors.—Paley. Evidences, vol. i. pt. i. Prop. i. c. 4.

FORTY. Four, and ten. Four times ten.

This was euene forty ger, that he hadde this dom,
Aftur that he mid his folc to this lond com.
R. Gloucester, p. 142.

In the ger of grace a thousend, & on & fourty, the gere,
Thys kyng deyde in Auerył, mony glad man was there.
Id. p. 825.

Sire, at O word, if that you list it have,
Ye shal pay fourty pound, so God me save.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,829.

Our Swithun then ensues, of him why ours I say,
Is that upon his feast, his dedicated day,
As it in harvest haps, so ploughmen note thereby.
Th' ensuing forty days be either wet or dry,
As that day falleth out.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

I said, "If any title be
Convey'd by this, ah! what doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail."—Donne. Love's Diet.

You have of mine, four Odes of Horace, which I have already translated, another small translation of forty lines from Lucretius, and the whole story of Nisus and Eurialus.
Dryden. Letter to Mr. Tonson.

This collection, after Sir Peter's [Lely] death was sold by auction, which lasted forty days, and produced 26,000*l.*
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

FORUM. Lat. Forum. Varro maintains, à ferendo, because people brought into it their suits for determination or their goods for sale; or from foras, because it was in the open air. See FORENSICK.

Thus they convers'd on works of ancient fame,
Till to the monarch's humble court they came
There oxen stall'd, where palaces are rais'd,
And bellowing herds in the proud forum graz'd.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. viii.

Rienzi! last of Romans! While the tree
Of freedom's wither'd trunk puts forth a leaf,
Even for thy tomb a garland let it be,
The forum's champion, and the people's chief—
Her new-born Numa thou, with reign, alas! too brief.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4.

FOR-WAKE, v. To wake utterly, thoroughly.

Wery, forwaked in hire orisons,
Slepeth Custance, and Hermegilde also.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5016.

With that word she hung downe the head
And fell in a swoune as colde as stone
Her women caught her vp anone,
And brought her in bed all naked
And she forweped and forwaked.—Id. Dreame.

He was forwepte, he was forwaked,
He kiste hir cold lippes ofte,
And wisheth, that thei were softe —Gower. Con. A. b iv.

FOR-WA'NDERED. Wandered out, utterly, extremely, to an extreme degree. See another example in v. Forweary.

To werie forwandred tent and paulion.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

And being thus alone, and all forsake,
Amid the thicke, forwandred in despaire
As one dismaid, nay wist what way to take.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 447.

His armes, which he had vowed to disprofesse,
She gather'd up and did about him dresse,
And his forwandred steed unto him gott.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 3.

FOR-WARD, v. Fo'RWARD, n. Fo'RWARD, adj. Fo'RWARD, ad. Fo'RWARDER. Fo'RWARDLY. Fo'RWARDNESS. Fo'RWARDS. Dut. Veur-waerts. "Foreward; — ward, the imperative of wardian or weardian, to look at; or to direct the view," Tooke.) Directed, straight to the fore-part or front.

To put or place, to move or bring, to or towards the fore-part, or front, the van; to promote, to advance, to hasten, to quicken, to use or employ speed or despatch. And the adjective,—

Quick, hasty, eager, ardent; coming on or advancing quickly; early; premature.

For in all extremeties they shewed themselues the rediest & the most forwarde: whyles they coueted to redeme their reproche, their valyaunte doinges could not be hidden in so small a number seperate by themselues.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 178.

And John de Medices whiche led thē forward, shot sixe gonnes at a tower to haue ouerthrowen the same, and so to haue entered in by the waie.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

And it is matter worthy to be noted, because Gamaliel's obseruacion writen in the Acts of the Apostles, is allowed to marke, howe they prosper and go forward in their doctrine that be auctors of any new teachyng.
Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol 3.

And it is also an auncianute practice of the father of the Pope's malignaunt churche (that most diligent preachyng prelate doctour deuyll) whan he can not get him damnable disciples ynowe to satisfie his greedy luste through his poperye, by reason of the cleare lyght and powre of the Ghospel shynyng forth, to take vpon him to be a fyne forewarder of the Ghospel's libertie.—Udal. Prologue to Ephesians.

The other is a forwardnesse in any thing, gotten by labour and traucle, not geuen by nature's goodnesse, or els we may call it, the half atteining of that, which we goe about to haue, wanting perfection, for lacke of full time, and is called in Latine dispositio.—Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol 10.

—— Then let me heare
Of you my gentle cousin Westmorland,
What yesternight our councill did decree,
In forwarding this deere experience.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

But Mortimer his foot had scarcely set
Into the road where fortune had to deal,
But she, disposed his forward course to let,
Her lewd condition quickly doth reveal.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

—— And as they forward went.
Thei spide a knight faire pricking on the plaine,
As if he were on some adventure bent,
And in his port appeared manly hardiment.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c. 8.

—— Nor am I accessary,
Part, or party confederate, abetter,
Helper, seconder, persuader, forwarder,
Principal or maintainer of this late theft.
Barry. Ram Alley, Act v. sc. 1.

For now the rebel thus forlorn, grows strong,
Both in his reputation and success:
For having with his pow'r held out so long,
Many adventure with more forwardness,
To yield him aid, and to support his wrong
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

All sounds (whatsoever) move round; that is to say, on all sides, upwards, forwards, and backwards.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 201.

—— Quite from his chariot's head,
He strooke him with a lance to earth, as first he flight addrest;
It took his forward-turned backe, and lookt out of his breast. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. v.

The bill which Lord Roos had brought in against his wife, for adultery, was forwarded by the King, with as much zeal as if the case was his own.
Parliamentary Hist. Chas. II. an. 1669.

The troop retires, the lovers close the rear,
With forward faces not confessing fear:
Backward they move, but scorn their pace to mend,
Then seek the stairs, and with slow haste descend
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

No sooner got than with disdain
He [Desire] threw them on the ground again,
And hasted forward to pursue
Fresh objects fairer to his view,
In hope to spring some nobler game.
Swift. Desire & Possession, 1727.

The saying went that he [a friar] practiced with the Turk to have undone again all that was there in so good forwardness.—Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. an. 1552.

Had but the objector taken the pains to read three verses forwards to the end of the chapter, he might easily have seen how little foundation there was for finding fault with what he had read in verse 18.
Waterland. Works, vol. vi. p. 247.

The occasional propensity to this superstition [symbolic figures] was, without question, forwarded and encouraged by the priesthood.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 4.

I do not imagine that you find me rash in declaring myself, or very forward in troubling you.
Burke. To the Electors of Bristol at the conclus. of the Poll.

I think we might have found, before the rude hand of insolent office was on our shoulders, and the staff of usurped authority brandished over our heads, that contempt of the suppliant is not the best forwarder of a suit; that national disgrace is not the high road to security, much less to power and greatness.—Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

After his return, however, he was so far from observing that caution which Plutarch speaks of, that he freely and forwardly resumed his former employment of pleading.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 1.

'Tis true, Christianity gives us these hopes which reason forwardly assumes, and makes her own, forgetting at the same time, or unthankfully slighting, the only grounds on which they are founded.—Hurd. Works, vol. vii. Ser. 34.

This often gave his enemies a plausible handle of ridiculing his pride and arrogance; while the forwardness that he shewed to celebrate his own merits in all his publick speeches, seems to justify their censures.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 12.

FOR-WASTE, v. For, i. e. forth, and waste. To utterly, entirely waste.

——— That had of yore
Their sceptere stretcht from East to Western shore,
And all the world in their subiection held;
Till that infernall fiend with foule vprore
Forewasted all their land, and them expelld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

FOR-WEAR, v. } To wear thoroughly; to
FO'RWORN, adj. } wear out.

For certainly it were her lothe
To wearen of that ilk cloth,
And if it were forweared, she
Would haue full great nicite
Of clothing, or she bought her newe.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Though what ail'd me, I might not well as they
Rake up some forworne tales that smother'd lay,
In chimney corners smoak'd with winter fires,
To read and rock asleep our drowsy sires?
Bp. Hall, b. vi. Sat. 1.

FOR-WE'ARY. Utterly, extremely weary; wearied out.

With that word Reason went her gate
Whan she saw for no sermoning
She might me fro my foly bring,
Than dismaid I left all soole,
Forwery, forwandred as a foole.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Thine armes shall thou sprede abrede
As man in warre were forweredе. Id. Ib.

Some of his diet doe from him withdrawe;
For I him find to be too proudly fed.
Giue him more labour, and with straiter lawe,
That he with worke may be forwearied.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

——— Your King, whose laboured spirits,
Fore-wearied in this action of swift speede,
Craues harbourage within your citie walles.
Shakespeare. King John, Act ii. sc. 1.

FOR-WE'EPED. Wept extremely. See an example from Gower, in v. Forwake.

With visage and ein all forwept
And pale, as man long vnslept. Chaucer. Dreame.

FOR-WE'LKED. Utterly, extremely welked or wrinkled.

A foule forwelked thing was she
That whilome round and soft had be.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

FOR-WI'THERED. Utterly, extremely withered.

Her body small forwithered and forespent,
As is the stalke that summer's drought oppresst.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 257.

FOR-WORD. A. S. Foreword, forword; pactum, fædus, a bargain, a league, a covenant, a condition, an agreement; Dut. Veur-waerde, Somner.

*A*fore-said, *a*fore-trothed or assured; already promised, covenanted or agreed: and thus, a promise, covenant or agreement.

This forword was faste y mad. R. Gloucester, p. 150.

& left the Inglis the lond on a forword dere
To pay ilk a hede a peny to tham bi gere.
R. Brunne, p. 8.

And whan this good man saw that it was so,
As he that wise was and obedient
To kepe his forword by his free assent,
He saide; sithen I shal begin this game,
What? welcome be the cutte a Goddes name.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 854.

Sire man of Lawe, quod he, so have ye blis,
Tel us a tale anon, as forword is.
Id. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4454.

For he hath made his forewordе,
With sacrilege for to dwelle,
Whiche hath his heritage in Helle.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

FOR-WOUNDED. Utterly, extremely wounded.

Upon my feet I rose vp than Feble, as a forwounded man.—Chaucer. Rom of the Rose.

FOR-WRAPT. Utterly, extremely wrapped; covered or concealed.

The proudest of thise riotoures three
Answer'd agen! What? cherl, with sory grace,
Why art thou all forwrapped save thy face?
Why liuest thou so longe in so great age?
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,652.

All must be sayd, and nothing excused, ne hid, ne forwrapped.—Id. The Persones Tale.

FORYE'TE. See FORGET.

FOR-YIELD, v. To yield it forth; yield it up, pay it, repay.

That thanke I God and you, to whom I prey
Foryelde it you, ther is no more to sey.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8707.

——— Madame, the God aboue
Foryeld thou that the God of Loue
Haue maked me his wrath to foryeue
And grace so long for to liue
That I may know sothly what ye be
That haue me holpen.
Id. Prologue of Cleopatra, Queene of Egypt.

FOSS. } Fr. Fosse; Lat. Fossa, a ditch;
FO'SSWAY. } fossum, the past part. of fodere, to dig.
A ditch or dike.

Hee had an intention once to set out and enlarge the walls of Rome, even as far as to Ostia; and from thence by a fosse to let the sea into old Rome.
Holland. Suetonius, p. 185.

O'er the dread fosse (a late impervious space)
Now steeds and men, and cars tumultuous pass.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

Then o'er his shoulders, pledge of favours past,
The gift of fair Hypsipyla, be cast,
A sable robe:—a deep round foss he made,
And on the kindling wood the victim laid.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius, b. iii.

While he, from whom their dreadful sufferings rise,
Fierce Rodomont escapes, and as he flies
High bounding o'er the fosse that yawns below,
Lights on th' interior ramparts of the foe.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xv.

FO'SSET. Properly written Faucet. Fr. Fausse; quasi faucis obturamentum, (Minshew.)
The stop of the mouth.

You weare out a good wholesome forenoone in hearing a cause betweene an orendge wife and a forset-seller, and then reiourne the controuersie of three-pence to a second day of audience.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 1.

If you are sent down in haste to draw any drink, and find it will not run, do not be at the trouble of opening a vent, but blow strongly into the fosset, and you will find it immediately pour into your mouth, or take out the vent, but do not stay to put it in again, for fear your master should want you.—Swift. Directions to Servants. The Butler.

FO'SSIL, n. } Fr. Fossile; Lat. Fossilis,
FO'SSIL, adj. } fossile, that may or can be FO'SSILIST. } digged or dug; from Fossum, the past part. of fod-ere, to dig.

By recent mineralogists Fossil appears to be restricted to such forms of organic bodies, animal or vegetable, as have been penetrated by earthy or metallic substances.

And on the structure next he heaps a load
Of sulphur, turpentine, and mastic wood;
Gums, fossils too, the pyramids increas'd.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 3.

Tournefort says, this countrey [Cappadocia] is so full of fossil-salt that it is to be found in the high roads and ploughed lands.—Fawkes. Apoll. Rhodius, b. ii. Notes.

Had these adventitious fossils not been found in every quarter of the globe, we could not conclude the Deluge to have been universal: and had they been found in all kinds of soils indifferently, we might suppose them to be (what they were once commonly thought) the natives of those narrow beds in which they are discovered, and a kind of lusus naturæ.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 13.

Lo! from the depth of many a yawning mine
Thy fossil treasure rise. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

It is well shaded by tall ash trees of a species, as Mr. Jones the fossilist informed me, uncommonly valuable.
Johnson. A Journey to the Western Islands.

FO'STER. See FORSTER.

FO'STER, v. } A. S. Fostrian; Dut. Voedsteren; probably the same
FO'STERAGE. } word as A. S. Fothre; Dut.
FO'STERER. } Voederen, to fodder, to feed.
FO'STERESSE. } In A. S. Foster-bearn, or foster-
FO'STERIDGE. } child; foster-brothor, fæder,
FO'STERING, n. } moder.
FO'STERLING, n. }

To feed; to nourish or to nurse, to cherish; to rear or train up.

A foster-brother,—one fed, nursed as brother. Father,—one who feeds, rears, as a father does.

And in gret reverence and charitee
Hire olde poure fader fostred she.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 876.

I am a man of litel sustenance,
My spirit hath his fostring in the Bible.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7427.

In sweet April, the messenger to May,
When hoonie drops do melt in golden showres,
When euery byrde records her louer's lay,
And western winds do foster forth our flowres,
Late in an euen I walked out alone.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of Philomene.

The childe also beeyng vnder the guiding of his mother, and his foster-father, euen then as young as he was, accustomed himself to deuout seruing of God, for our ensaumple.
Udal. Luke, c. 2.

Stage playes serve for nothing else but either to drawe men on by degrees to idlenesse, or to foster, to foment them in it.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi. sc 6.

The fosterer of shooting is labour, that companion of vertue, the mainteyner of honestye, the encrease of healthe and wealthenesse.—Ascham. Toxophilus.

Some one or other adjoining to this lake had the charge and fosteridge of this child. [Semiramis.]
Ralegh. History of the World, b. i. c. 12. s. 3.

——— Take her again among you,
I'll none of your light heart fosterlings.
B. Jonson. The New Inn, Act v. sc. 1.

Glory of knights, and hope of all the earth,
Come forth; your fostrese bids; who from your birth
Hath bred you to this bower, and for this throne
Id. Speeches at Prince Henry's Barriers.

Though I am tame and bred up with my wrongs,
Which are my foster-brother's, I may leap
Like a hand-wolf into my natural wilderness,
And do an out-rage: pray thee do not mock me
Beaum. & Fletch. Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

Then I avow by this most sacred head
Of my dear foster-child, to ease thy griefe,
And win thy will.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

——— Go, go: give your foster-daughters good counsell,
Tell them that the Devill takes delight to hang at a woman's girdle,
Like a false rusty watch that she cannot discerne how
The time passes.—Webster. Duch. of Malfy, Act ii. sc. 2.

Faine would she [Esther] uncase her foster-father [Mordecai] of these mournfull weeds; and change his sack-cloth for tissue; that yet, at least, his clothes might not hinder his accesse to her presence, for the free opening of his griefes.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Haman Disrespected.

Scar. My name is bound to your beneficence,
Your hands have been to me like bounty's purse
Never shut up; your self my foster-nurse.
Wilkins. Inforced Marriage, Act i.

Ye Deities! who fields and plains protect,
Who rule the seasons, and the year direct:
Bacchus and fostering Ceres, powers divine,
Who gave us corn for mast, for water wine.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. i

He [Clemens of Alexandria] proceeds thus: "The word is all things to the infant, a father, a mother, a preceptor, a foster-eat, says he, my flesh, and drink my blood."
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 116.

They [kings] by God are destined to be the protectours of the church, the patrons of religion, the fosterers and cherishers of truth, of virtue, of piety.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 10.

Thousands and ten thousands of children have been snatched from the jaws of ruin, from ignorance and vice, and educated in the fear of God, in the charity schools originally fostered and reared through Great Britain and Ireland, by their paternal care.—Horne. Works, vol. vi. Dis. 1.

There still remains in the Islands, though it is passing fast away, the custom of fosterage. A laird, a man of wealth and eminence, sends his child, either male or female, to a tacksman or tenant, to be fostered. In Mull, the father sends with his child a certain number of cows, to which the same number is added by the fosterer.
Johnson. A Journey to the Western Islands.

FO'THER. Mr. Tyrwhitt says,—A carriage load; an indefinite large quantity. Skinner,—A fodder or fother, from Ger. Fuder, vectura, or as much as can be contained and carried in a cart, perhaps from the Ger. Fuhren, vehere, to carry. It relates (says Ray) properly to lead, and signifies a certain weight, viz. eight pigs or 1600 lbs.

With him ther was a plowman, was his brother,
That hadde ylaid of dong full many a fother.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 532.

Of Mars he maked hath right swiche another,
That coste largely of gold a fother.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1910.

FO'UDRE. } "Fr. Fouldroyer, to dart or cast
Fo'ULDER. } thunderbolts; to strike, burn or blast with lightning," Cotgrave; from Fouldre or foudre, a thunderbolt, and this from the Lat. Fulgur, lightning.

Ne that thing that men call foudre,
That smite sometime a toure to powdre.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

Seem'd that loud thunder with amazement great,
Did rend the rattling skies with flames of foudering heat.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

FO'UGHTEN. Past tense and past part. of the verb to fight, (qv.)

And foughten atten ale.—Piers Ploughman, p. 3.

——— The sad sports we riot in,
Are tales of foughten fields, of martial scars,
And things done long ago, when men of courage
Were held the best, not those well spoken youth,
Who only carry conquest in their tongues.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Laws of Candy, Act iii.

FOUL, v. } Goth. Fuls, fœtidus; A. S. Fylan, ful-an; Dut. Vuylen, polluere, contaminare, to pollute, to contaminate, to file, (qv.)
Fo'ULLY. }
Fo'ULNESS. }

To dirty, to pollute, to contaminate. The adjective is applied more extensively;

Dirty, polluted, impure; and thus, consequentially, disgusting, ugly, odious, disgraceful; opposed to fair, as foul weather, foul play.

Get this gredi wreche louede this foule best,
As wommon deth hire child alle thing mest.
R. Gloucester, p. 69.

Hot ouer was Elfred foule begiled.—R. Brunne, p. 42.

——— And thenne tok ich hede
Whether the frut wher faire, other foul to loken on.
Piers Ploughman, p. 307.

Ne a foule thral may no man, no woman, make of his body than for to yeve his body to sinne.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

He wolde algate his trouth holde,
As euery knight therto is hold
What hap so euer him is befall,
Though she be the foulest of all.
Yet to honour of woman head
Him thought he shulde taken head.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Ther was a countrey in the which there wer almoste none but fooles, saving a fewe whiche were wise, and they by theyr wisdom knew, that ther sholde fall a great rayne, the whiche shoulde make all theym fooles, that shuld be fouled or wet therewith.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1433.

But I pray God that the sore eyes of his sicke soule may once loke vp better, lest he finally fall into the foule smoke of Helle, where he shall neuer see after
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 477.

For if, with vs be conuersaunte
sum humble lowly soule,
We call him goose, and disarde doult,
and fowlye fatted nowle. Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 3.

They of ye castell sawe how they were assailed on all sydes, and coude parceyue no comfort, and sawe well how the duke nor the cõstable wolde nat departe thens tyll they had ye castell at their wyll, outher with fayrnesse or foulnesse
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 321.

Wallowing among concubines, dallying and kissing, and using vnhonest delayes, he cut his own throate at length with a razour, fouling his infamous life with a low and dishonest departing.—Suetle Tacitus. Historie, p. 41.

Amongst these mighty men were wemen mixt,
Proud wemen, vaine, forgetfull of their yoke:
The bold Semiramis, whose sides transfixt
With sonnes own blade, her foule reproaches spoke.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

There also was that mightie monarch laid
Lowe vnder all, yet aboue all in pride,
That name of nature sire did foule vpbraid,
And would as Ammon's sonne be magnifide. Id. Ib.

A wight she was so farre from being faire,
None could be foule esteem'd compar'd with her.
Describing foulnes, pardon if I erre,
Ye shepheards' daughters and ye gentle swaines,
My Muse would gladly chaunt more lovely straines!
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 1.

——— This foulness must be purged,
Or thy disease will rankle to a pestilence,
Which can even taint the very air about thee.
Ford. The Fancies Chaste and Noble, Act iv. sc. 1.

You must expect the like disgrace,
Scrambling with rogues to get a place,
Must lose the honour you have gain'd,
Your numerous virtues foully stain'd.—Swift. Answer.

A father will hug and embrace his beloved son for all the dirt and foulness of his clothes: the dearness of the person easily apologizing for the disagreeableness of the habit
South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

There being reason to apprehend some violence and foul play from the intrigues of the Tribunes, Metellus, the Augur and Prætor of that year, contrived to dissolve the assembly by a stratagem before they came to a vote.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 3.

There are who say they view'd without amaze
Thy sad reverse of all thy former praise;
That through the pageants of a patriot's name,
They pierc'd the foulness of thy secret aim.
Akenside. An Epistle to Curio.

FOU'MART. I. e. Foul-mart; Mart, or Martin; Fr. Martin, mart; Sp. Marta; It. Martino; Low Lat. Martes. Written by Walton, Fulimart, (see FITCHAT,) and by Junius, Fulimer.

An animal (Skinner thinks) of the weasel or ferret kind.

For, in the night time and in corners, spirits and theeves, rattes and mice, toodes and oules, night crowes and poulcattes, foxes and foumardes, with all other vermine, and noysome beastes, use most styrringe.—Ascham. Toxophilus.

FOUND, v. } Fr. Fonder; It. Fondare; Sp. Fundar; Lat. Fundare, which Vossius thinks may be from the Gr. Βυθος, interpreted by Hesychius, Βαθος, profunditas, depth.
FOUNDA'TION.
FOUNDA'TIONLESS.
Fo'UNDER.
Fo'UNDRESS.

To put, place or lay deeply; to place or lay the bottom, ground or basis, i.e. that upon which any thing may stand, be raised or established, from which any thing may rise or spring; and thus, to build or establish, to raise or erect.

At Feuersham he lies, at a heuen in Kent,
In an abbey of pris he founded with lond & rent.
R. Brunne, p. 127.

His bones did he lay in a toumbe of honour.
It was his owen abbey, therof he was foundour.
Id. p. 109.

And thou Lord in the begynnyng foundidist the erthe, and heuenes ben werkis of thin hondis.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 1.

And thou Lorde in the beginnynge hast layd the foundacion of the earth: and thy heauens are the worckes of thy handes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Upon the whiche also stode
Of squared stone a sturdy wall,
Which on a cragge was founded all,
And right great thicknesse eke it bare,
About it was founded square
An hundred fadome on euery side.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

Witness of Rome that founder was truly
Of all knighthood and deeds marueious
Record I take of Titus Liuius.
Chaucer. The Floure and the Leafe.

Wherebi he that marketh it more nerely and more surely, might perceiue that these dedes were not hole nor perfecte, ne grounded vpon iust foundation, but had le a greater appearaunce of truth.—Bp. Gardner. True Obedience, fol. 35.

There is furthermore a place bearing name Corn, very famous for the multitude of abbyes which the Benzil have therin. The beginner and founder wherof is thought to be one Combendaxis, a suttle craftie fellowe, that got the name of holinesse by cunning speech.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 84.

But of the place he held, books diversly dare say,
As they of Gilbert do, who founded those divines,
Monastics all that were, of him nam'd Gilbertines.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

And verily this region two cities (besides many other good townes) doe beautifie, to wit Seleucia, founded and built by King Seleucus, and Claudiopolis, which Claudius Cæsar erected as a colonie.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 17.

Which engines of protests, and proffers kind,
Urg'd out of seeming grief and shows of love,
So shook the whole foundation of his mind,
As they did all his resolution move.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vi.

None of the same sort, none of the rationable, grounded, conditional, but a flattering, fallacious, foundationless, because unconditionate, hope, which the bigger it swells the more dangerous it proves.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 506.

If any ask, how the soul came by those foundation propositions. I return, as quantity did by longum, latum, and profundum, they being the essential annexes, or rather constitutives of it as reasonable.
Glanvill. Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 11.

And your example may work such effect,
That it may be the beginning of a sect
Of patient women; and that many a day
All husbands may for you their founder pray.
Drayton. To the Noble Lady J. S. of Worldly Crosses.

For of their order she was patronesse,
Albe Charissa were their chiefest founderess.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

Yet Venus, whom you worship was a whore;
Flora, the foundress of the publick stews,
And has, for that, her sacrifice.
Massinger. The Virgin Martyr, Act iii. sc. 1.

Having laid down as my foundation, that the Scripture is a rule that in all things needful to salvation, is clear, sufficient, and ordained by God Almighty for that purpose, I have left myself no right to interpret obscure places, such as concern the possibility of eternal happiness to Heathens.
Dryden. Religio-Laici. Pref.

From thee, with pride the Caledonians trace
The glorious founder of their kingly race:
Thy martial sons, whom now they dare despise,
Did once their land subdue and civilize.
Swift. On the sudden Drying up of St. Patrick's Well.

He knew he could not please the Romans better or oblige them more to patronize his poem, than by disgracing the founderess of that city. [Carthage.]
Dryden. A Discourse on Epic Poetry

It cannot, I should suppose, after this, be believed, that the religion and the transaction upon which it was founded, were too obscure to engage the attention of Josephus, or to obtain a place in his history.—Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 7.

From thence I draw the most comfortable assurances of the future vigour and the ample resources, of this great misrepresented country; and can never prevail on myself to make complaints which have no cause, in order to raise hopes which have no foundation.
Burke. Observations on a late State of the Nation.

Tatian, who lived in the year 172, went into many extravagant opinions, was the founder of a sect called Encratites, and was deeply involved in disputes with the Christians of that age; yet Tatian so received the four Gospels, as to compose a harmony from them.—Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 9.

In the library of St. John's College, Cambridge, is an original of their foundress, Margaret of Richmond, the King's mother, much damaged, and the painter not known.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3

FOUND, v. } Fr. Fondre; It. Fondere, Lat. Fundere, to melt.
Fo'UNDER.
Fo'UNDRESS.
Fo'UNDERY. }

To melt or reduce to a liquid state, to pour.

In the quotation from Milton the first edition reads founded; the subsequent ones, till Bentley, found out, (Todd, Notes on Milton.)

The belowes are burnt: the leade is consumed in the fyre: the founder melteth in vaine: for the wicked are not taken away.—Geneva Bible, 1561. Jeremiah, vi. 29.

—— A second multitude
With wond'rous art found out the massie ore,
Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion dross.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Dædalus moreouer, who is ranged among the excellent founders and imageurs of old time, deuised in brasse two boies, rubbing, scraping, and currying the sweat from their bodies in the baine.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiv. c. 8.

That the art of founderie or casting metals for images hath been very antique, practised also and professed in Italie as well as in other countries time out of mind, may be evidently prooued by the statue of Hercules, which Evander consecrated to the honour of him, in that verie place (by folks saying) which now is the beast-market in Rome.
Id. Ib. b. xxxiv. c 7.

Now long before this time [A.U.C. 608,] those great masters and imageurs, so famous for metall-foundinge, and casting of images, were dead and gone.—Id. Ib. b. xxxiv. c. 3.

—— Thou, flinging down thy eyes
Low at her feet, repliedst, Because, oh sovereign!
The great bell of my heart is crack'd, and never
Can ring in tune again, till't be new cast
By one only skilful founderess.
Ford. The Fancies Chaste and Noble, Act iii. sc. 2.

This person was Benedetto da Rovezzano, another Florentine sculptor, who, Vasari says, executed many works of marble and bronze for Henry, and got an ample fortune, with which he returned to his native country, but, his eyes having suffered by working in the foundery, he grew blind in 1550, and died soon after
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

FO'UNDER, v. } Fr. Fondre; It. Sfondare.
FO'UNDEROUS. } (See to FOUND.) Skinner gives two reasons for deriving from the same origin as the verb to found; one is sufficient. Quod in fundum (i.e.) terram cadit, (sc.) equus; because he (the horse) falls to the ground. (See the quotation from Chaucer.) G. Douglas renders ruentem,—foundering.

A ship is said to founder, when she goes to the bottom.

To come to the ground, to the bottom; to sink; to fall; to fail, to be in a ruined or ruinous state or condition.

Out of the ground a fury infernal stert
From Pluto sent, at requisite of Saturne,
For which his hors for sore gan to turne,
And lepte aside, and foundred as he lepe.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2089.

While we were so beaten in the former tempest, the pilot of the barke signified vnto vs, that he perceiued she beganne to leake, and that already she had receiued in much water, insomuch that she beganne to founder.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 398.

Popish. Spare the old jade, he's founder'd.
Massinger. The Bondsman, Act iii. sc. 3.

Vain efforts! still the battering waves rush in,
Implacable, till delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks foundering in the vast abyss.
J. Philips. The Splendid Shilling.

The ship no longer found'ring by the lee,
Bears on her side th' invasions of the sea.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 3.

I thank you for the bundle of state papers, which I received yesterday. I have travelled through the negociation; and a sad founderous road it is.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

FOUND-LING, i.e. one found; a child found, (previously lost or exposed.)

And fals folke and foundelynges, faitours and lyars.
Piers Ploughman, p. 181.

I am an Israelite, not by engraffynge, but by kyndred: not a strange foundlyng, but a Jewe, beinge borne of the Jewes.—Udal. Philippians, c. 3.

And so the kyng reproued the lightnes of this younge fond foundelyng, and euery daie more and more neglected and lesse phanteased and gaue credite to him.
Hall. Hen. VII. an. 11.

Now these two foundlinge (Romulus and his brother Remus) were nourished and brought up afterward in the citie of Gabii, unknown to all the world that they were the children of Sylvia, and the nephew's or daughter's children of Numitor the king.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 519.

Though he a foundling bastard be,
Convict of frequent perjury;
His hands with brother's blood imbrued,
By justice for that crime pursued:
Never the wall, when ask'd, refuse,
Nor lose your friend, to save your shoes.
King. Ulysses & Tiresias.

It is remarkable that a law of King Ina orders the care and education of foundlings to be regulated by their beauty.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. ii. c. 1.

Captain Thomas Coram, who obtained the charter for the founding-hospital.—Walpole. Anec. of Painting, vol. iv. c. 4.

FOUNT, n. } Fr. Fontaine; It. Fonte, fontana; Sp. Fuente; Lat. Fons. Varro says, Fons, unde funditur e terrâ aqua vivâ; whence the water pours or wells forth from the earth. See FONT.
FO'UNTAIN.
FO'UNTAINLESS.
FO'UNTFUL.

The sixte day of Jul he deide, & mid great onour & prute
At fount Ebrand he was iburied, as he lith zute.
R. Gloucester, p. 481.

O rodie rosier, flouring without spine,
Fountaine al filthless, as birell currant clere
Sum drop of thy graceful hewe to vs propine.
Chaucer. A Balade to our Ladie.

The Lord Jesus thought no disdeigne to come with the residue of folkes vnto baptisme, which he dyd not to be purified himselfe, (which he needed not) but to consecrate and halow the lauacre or font of eternall saluacion to oure behoufe through hys baptisme.—Udal. Luke, c. 3.

Outlandish wares are conueighed into the same citie by the famous riuer of Thames; which riuer springing out of a fountaine 80 miles beyond the citie, is called by one and the self same name 70 miles beneath it.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 127.

But leave these hatefull herds, and let me now declare,
I' th' Heliconian fount, who rightly christ'ned are;
Not such as basely sooth the humour of the time,
And slubberingly patch up some slight and shallow rhyme.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 21.

And in the midst of all a fountaine stood,
Of richest substance that on earth might bee,
So pure and shiny, that the silver flood
Through euery channell running one might see.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Huge cities and high tower'd, that well might seem
The seats of mightiest monarches, and so large
The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert, fountainless and dry.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

He hears the crackling sound of coral woods,
And sees the secret source of subterranean floods,
And where, distinguish'd in their several cells,
The fount of Phasis and of Lycus dwells.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Well may they argue, nor can you deny,
If we must fix on Church authority,
Best on the best, the fountain not the flood;
That must be better still, if this be good.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

The hedge of water, in forme of lattice-worke, which the fontanier caused to ascend out of the earth by degrees, exceedingly pleased and surprized me.
Evelyn. Mem. Flanders, 1641.

Go wait the Thunderer's will, Saturnia cry'd,
On yon tall summit of the fountful Ide.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

And lately had he learn'd with truth to deem
Love has no gift so grateful as his wings:
How fair, how young, how soft soe'er he seem,
Full from the fount of joy's delicious springs
Some bitter o'er the flowers its bubbling venom flings.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

Where a green grassy turf is all I crave,
With here and there a violet bestrown,
Past by a brook, or fountain's murmuring wave,
And many an evening sun shine sweetly on my grave.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii.

Ere yet life's silver cord be snapp'd in twain,
Ere broke the golden bowl that holds the brain,
Ere broke the pitcher at the fountful heart,
Or life's wheel shiver'd, and the soul depart;
Then shall the dust to native earth be given,
The soul shall soar sublime, and wing its way to heaven.
Fawkes. The Picture of Old Age.

We have this detail from the fountain-head, from the persons themselves; in accounts written by eye-witnesses of the scene, by contemporaries and companions of those who were so, not in one book, but four, each containing enough for the verification of the religion, all agreeing in the fundamental parts of the history.
Paley. Evidences, vol. ii. c. 8.

FOUR. } Goth. Fidwor, fidur; A. S. Feower; Dut. and Ger. Vier; Sw. Fyra. The Æolians (says Junius) wrote πετορα from τετταρα; whence, he thinks, the Goth. Fidwor.
FOURTH.
FOURTE'EN.
FOURTE'ENTH.

Foure kynges heo maden tho in this kyndome.
The kyng of West sex, & of Kent, & of Northomber the thridde,
And the kyng of the March, that was here amidde.
R. Gloucester, p. 3.

The firste age & tyme was from oure firste fader Adam
To Noe, & Seththe the other from Noe to Abraham,
The thridde was from Habraham forte Moyses com,
The ferthe fro Moyses to Dauid kyndom.
R. Gloucester, p. 9.

This was (as me may in bok rede and se)
Ar God were bore a thousand ger, fourscore & thre.
Id. p. 27.

Four & tuenti wynter lasted this sorow,
If he had pes at euen, he had non at morow.
R. Brunne, p. 40.

The folk of the cuntre to this conseile thei ches,
To gyf tham four hundreth pounde, forto lyue in pes.
Id. p. 41.

A thousand & two hundred the date fourscore & two.
Id. p. 240.

The ferthe sorow of this lond com thorgh the Danes,
The folk of the North slough, destroied ther wanes.
Id. p. 8.

Into which I lookynge biheelde and sigh foure footid beestis of the erthe and beestis and creepinge beestis and volatilis of heuyne.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 11.

I considered and saw foured fote beastes of the earth, & vermē and wormes, and fowles of the ayre.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And aith fourtene ghere after eftsoones I wente vp to Icrusalem with Barnabas.—Wiclif. Galathies, c. 2.

But aftirward that in the fourtenthe dai the nyght cam on us sellynge in the stoony see, about mydnyght the schipmen supposiden sum cuntree to appere to hem.
Id. Dedis, c. 27.

Open the foure-cornerde sheete as did Peter.
Bale. Image, pt. iii.

Hauing in them an hundred and fiftie souldiers, and fortescore chosen mariners vnder Captaine Cazenoue his lieutenant, and Francis Bourdelois, master ouer the mariners
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 566.

Also neere to the said citie there is a place called the Pyramide, being as I may well terme it, one of the nine wonders of the world: that is seuen seuerall places of flint and marble stone, foure-square, the wals thereof are seuen yards thicke in those places that we did see.
Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. i. p. 281.

At Muttrell gates hopeless of all recure,
Thine earl half dead, gave in thy hand his will,
Which cause did thee this pining death procure;
Ere summers four-times seven thou couldst fulfil.
Surrey. Epitaph on Sir Thomas Clare.

Renowned Spenser lye a thought more nigh
To learned Chaucer, and rare Beaumont lye
A little nearer Spenser, to make roome
For Shakspeare in your threefold, fourfold tombe.
F. Beaumont. On William Shakespeare.

Craw. A secretary from the Duke of York,
The second son to the late English Edward,
Conceal'd, I know not where, these fourteen years,
Craves audience from our master.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act i. sc. 3.

Yet the fourth time, when mustering all her wiles,
With blandisht parlies, feminine assaults,
Tongue-batteries, she surceas'd not day nor night
To storm me over-watcht, and wearied out.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

And Gylford Dudly fourth-borne sonne
Vnto Northumberland
Had married her, and nothing seem'd
The plot-forme to withstand.
Warner. Albion's England, b. viii. c. 10

Nor less on either side tempestuous fell
His arrows, from the fourfold-vising'd foure
Distinct with eyes, and from the living wheeles
Distinct alike with multitude of eyes;
One spirit in them rul'd; and every eye
Glar'd lightning. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

And have we not practis'd all methods to gain you;
With the tithe of the tithe of the tithe to maintain you;
Provided a fund for building you spittals!
You are only to live four years without victuals.
Swift. On the Irish Bishops.

They were upon hard duty still,
And every night stood sentinel,
To guard the magazine i'th' hose
From two-legg'd and from four legg'd foes.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 1.

The fathers of the third and fourth centuries had the advantage of many written accounts of the doctrine of the former ages which have since been lost: and therefore their testimonies also are of considerable weight, and are a marke of direction to us, not to be slighted in the main things.
Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 264.

Dante was born in Florence in the year 1261. He fought in two battles, was fourteen times ambassador, and once Prior of the Republick.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 4. Note 30.

FOURBE. Fr. Fourbe, is a wile, guile or deceit, (Cotgrave.) Denham applies the word to the deceiver.

——— Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus: now Jove's envoy through the air
Brings dismal tidings; as if such low care
Could reach their thoughts, or their repose disturb!
Thou art a false impostor, and a fourbe.
Denham. Passion of Dido for Æneas.

FOUTY. Fr. Foutu; un foutu, a scoundrel, a fellow of small account, (Cotgrave.)

Dr. Jamieson gives instances of the usage of this word in Scotch writers; it is still common in the north of England.

FOWL, v. FOWL, n. FO'WLING, n. FO'WLER. } Dut. Vog-hel; Ger. Vogel; Sw. Fogel; A. S. Fug-el; past part. of Fleog-an, fiolyan, fioglan, volare, to fly.

That which flieth; a bird.

To fowl; to hunt, pursue, destroy, fowl.

Bothe fox and fowel may fleo to hole and crepe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 394.

And smale foules maken melodie,
That slepen alle night with open eye,
So priketh hem nature in hir corages.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 9.

This was her song: The fouler we defie
And all his craft. Id. Ib. p. 198.

And if it fall so perchance
As he, which is a fowle of praie,
That he a man finde in his waye
He woll hym flea, if that he maie.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Solinus speketh of wonder kinde,
And saith of foules there is one,
Whiche hath a face of bloode and bone,
Like to man in resemblance. Id. Ib.

Anceps properly a fouler, and ancupium is foulynge, and by a metaphore, it is for all maner of wayes, to geat any thynge by wiles, traynes, or crafte.
Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, p. 46.

For once I heard my father say,
How he him caught vpon a day,
(Whereof he will be wroken,)
Entangled in a fowling net,
Which he for carrion crows had set,
That in our peare-tree haunted.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. March.

And let the fowle flie above the earth, with wings
Display'd on the op'n firmament of Heav'n.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

The fowler's snares in ambush are not lay'd
T' intrap my steps, which oft have you betray'd.
Drayton. The Owl.

You shall see in the country in harvest time, pigeons, though they destroy never so much corn, the farmer dare not present the fowling-piece to them: why? because they belong to the lord of the manor.—Webster. White Devil, Act v.

But certainly it is an ill argument, because sinners do not see God to conclude therefore, that God does not see them; like the foolish bird hiding his head in a hole, thinks himself secure from the view of the fowler, because the fowler is not in his view.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 13.

And it must also be remembered, that such persons as may lawfully hunt, fish, or fowl, ratione privilegii, have, as has been said, only a qualified property in these animals.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 27.

At Chatsworth, where a like taste collected ornaments by the most eminent living masters, are many by Gibbons, particularly in the chapel; in the great antichamber are several dead fowl over the chimney, finely executed.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. a. 2.

FOX, v. FOX, n. FO'XERY. FO'XISH. FO'XLY. FO'XSHIP. FO'XY. } Goth. Fauh; A. S. Fox; Dut. Vos, vosse, vosch; Ger. Fuchs; Serenius from Su. Goth. Foxa, decipere. And Wachter remarks, that the Ger. Fahen, is frequently dolo capere, and foxa, decipere. And thus, a fox, may be so called from his slyness and cunning.

"Fox was a familiar and favourite expression for the old English weapon, the broad-sword of Jonson's days, as distinguished from the small (foreign) sword," (Gifford, Note on B. Jonson, quoted below.) Archdeacon Nares (Gloss. ad v.) inclines to think that fox was not a cant term, but a specific name for some kind of blade manufactured in England; perhaps, with the steel browned, which might give occasion for the name: or it might be named from the inventor.

An ende of a foxe's wrenche. R. Gloucester, p. 570.

And go houte hardiliche, to hares and to foxes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 129.

And Jhesus seyde to him, foxis han dennis and briddes of the eyr han nestis: but mannes sone hath not where he reste his heed.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 9.

And he seyde to hem: go ye and seye to that fox, [Herod,] lo I caste out fendis and I make perfightly heelthis, to day and to morowe; and the thridde day I am endid.
Id. Ib. c. 13.

And he sayde vnto them, Go ye and tell that foxe, behold I cast out deuels and heal the people to daye and to morow, and the thyrde day I make an ende.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

They crieden out! harow and wala wa!
A ha the fox! and after him they ran,
And eke with staves many another man.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,388.

I haue more will to ben at [redacted]
And haue well leuer, soth to say
Before the people patter and pray
And wry me in my foxery
Under a cope of papelardy.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

By fortune came a foxe,
where grue a loftie vine,
I will no grapes (quoth hee)
this yarde is none of mine.
The foxe would none bicause that hee
Perceiued the highnesse of the tree.
Turbervile. A Fox that wold Eate no Grapes.

So men that foxlie are,
and long their lust to haue
But cannot come thereby,
make wise they would not craue,
Those subtle merchants will no wine,
Bicause they cannot reach the vine.—Id. Ib.

Oh foxy Pharisay, that is thy leuen, of which Christ so diligētly bad vs beware.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 148.

The emperour's mother, gaue vnto eche of vs a gowne made of foxe-skinnes, with the furre on the outside, and a piece of purple.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 71.

Cok. What would you have, sister, of a fellow that knows nothing but a basket hilt, and an old fox in't?
B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act ii. sc. 6.

How villanous were these, and how vnlike?
Of noble stocke the most ignoble staine,
Their wolvish hearts, their trayterous foxly braine.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 407.

When my fox-bitch, Beauty, grows proud, I'll borrow him.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act iv. sc. 1.

To keepe her slender fingers from the sunne,
Pan through the pastures often times hath runne
To plucke the speckled fox-gloves from their stem,
And on those fingers neatly placed them.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

These people have by their policy and wisedome not onely retained their ancient freedome against both the power of the Spaniards, who have the knack also to fight with gold and other arts, and the wily subtilties of the French and English, and the crafty fox like fetches of the Prince of Orange.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1587.

——— Hast thou foxship
To banish him that strooke more blowes for Rome
Then thou hast spoken words.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 2.

Such a one is carried about the town with a boord fastned to his necke, all be-hanged with foxe-tayles, besides a penalty according to his state in money.
Purchas. Pilgrimage, c. 2. s. 3.

To cozen him of all, were but a cheat
Well plac'd; no man would construe it a sinne:
Let his sport pay for't, that is all the fox-trap.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iv. sc. 5.

"The fox, the wicked fox!" was all the cry;
Out from his house ran every neighbour nigh:
The vicar first and after him the crew
With forks and staves the felon to pursue.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Early at business, and at hazard late;
Mad at a fox-chase, wise at a debate.
Pope. Moral Essays, Epistle I.

It [metaphor] may be founded on a comparison, first, of the qualities of a man with those of a beast; as when we call a crafty and cruel man, a fox.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 1.

That [style] of Titian, which may be called the Golden manner, when unskilfully managed becomes what the painters call Foxy.—Sir J. Reynolds. Note on Dufresnoy.

FOX, v. See the noun. To deceive, to entrap, to ensnare; and thus, to intoxicate, to make drunk.

Bright. 'Fore Jove, the captain fox'd him rarely.
Mayne. The City Match, Act iii. sc. 1.

Your Dutchman indeed, when he is foxt, is like a fox; for when he's sunk in drink quite earth to a man's thinking, 'tis full exchange time with him, then he's subtlest.
Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act ii. sc. 1.

An apology equally excusing with the thief's, that should alledge that he commits all his robberies on the same horse; and the drunkard that should offer to justify his beastliness, by affirming that he never foxes himself but with one sort of wine, or in such a peculiar unaltered bowl.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p 9.

FOY. Fr. Foy, faith.

Next them did Gurgunt, great Bellinus sonne,
In rule succeed, and eke in father's praise,
He Easterland subdewd, and Denmarke wonne,
And on them both did foy and tribute raise,
The which was due in his dead father's dayes.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

FRACT, v. FRA'CTION. FRA'CTIONAL. FRA'CTIOUS. FRA'CTURE, v. FRA'CTURE, n. FRA'GILE. FRAGI'LITY. FRA'GMENT. FRA'GMENTARY. } Fr. Fraction; Lat. Fractio, from Frangere, fractum, to break: which, Vossius says, may either be from the Heb. Frag, rumpere, frangere; or from the Gr. Ῥηγ-ω, or Dor. Ῥαγ-ω, with f prefixed;—the meaning of the word is clear enough.

A breach or rupture; a breaking of an integer or entire whole into parts; a separation, a discontinuity.

Fragile,—that can or may be broken; easy to be broken; brittle; and therefore, weak.

Fractious, as a fractious temper,—a temper easily disturbed or broken; fretful, peevish: a word common in speech.

But understād well, that these degrees of signes, ben euerich of hem considered of lx. minutes, and euery minute of lx. secondes, and so forth into smal fractions infinite, as saieth Alcabucius.—Chaucer. Of the Astrolabie.

Suche is the blyndnes of our fraile and fragile nature, ever giuen to concupiscence, and mundain delectacion.
Hall. Edw. IV. an. 23.

The Spirite wayteth, and watcheth on the will of God, and euer hath her owne fragilitie and weakeness before her eyes.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 81.

Also at that tyme idolatry was nat clerely extinct, but dluers fragmentes therof remayned in euery region.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 19.

And yet is faithe alone good to bee kepte, yea and the very peeces and fragmentes of the faythe also, for they be meanes by whiche a manne may more easely come to the remanaunt that he hath loste or lacketh.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 712.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spoke the right, his heart is fracted and corroborate.—Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act ii. sc. 1.

——— I must serue my turne
Out of mine own, his dales and times are past,
And my reliances on his fracted dates
Haue smit my credit.—Id. Timon of Athens, Act ii. sc. 1.

James was our earthly sunne, who call'd to heau'n,
Leaues you his heire, to make all fractions eu'n.
Beaumont. At the end of his Majesty's First Yeere.

Ergo, there was bread, forsomuch as neither the accidences of bread wtout bread can be brokē, neither can the natural body of Christ be subiect to any fractiō or breaking vp by yᵗ Scripture, which saith: And ye shall break no bone of him, &c.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1050. Allegat. against the Six Articles.

Likewise if any bones or limbs be broken, a cerot made with the seed of rue and wax together, is able to souder the fracture.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 13.

When subtile wits have spun their thread too fine,
'Tis weak and fragile, like Arachne's line.
Denham. The Progress of Learning.

To whom our Saviour answer'd thus unmov'd:
Much ostentation vain of fleshly arm,
And fragile arms, much instrument of war
Long in preparing, soon to nothing brought,
Before mine eyes thou hast set.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

Of bodies some are fragile; and some are tough, and not fragile: and in the breaking, some fragile bodies break out where the force is; some shatter and flie in many pieces. Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended: and therefore stone is more fragile than metal.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 841.

The tribunes also seeing that was the way, and all enclining and growing to petition, followed after, and did the semblable, earnestly beseeching the dictatour to forgive this humane fragilitie, and youthful folly of Qu. Fabius, saying, that he had suffered chastisement ynough.
Holland. Livie, p. 207.

She, she is gone; she's gone · when thou knowst this,
What fragmentary rubbish this world is
Thou know'st, and that it is not worth a thought;
He honours it too much that thinks it naught.
Donne. Progress of the Soul. Second Anniversary.

To which letters I have added a third, written by John Bale, late Bishop of Ossory, who was now lately removed from Frankfort to Basil, with many others, upon the dissensions there; by whose letter it appears these fractions were also got into this church of Basil, the disaffected at Frankfort bringing hither with them their dislike to the English liturgy.—Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1555.

The distributing the bread to the company, after the benediction and fraction, was customary among the Jews: and here likewise our Lord was pleased to adopt the like ceremony.—Waterland. Works, vol. vii. p. 51.

——— On the blind shelve,
And pointed rock that marks th' indented shore,
Relentless dash'd, where loud the northern main
Howls through the fractur'd Caledonian isles.
Thomson. Britannia.

My lightning these rebellious shall confound,
And hurl them flaming, headlong to the ground:
Their coursers crush'd beneath the wheels shall lie,
Their car in fragments scatter'd o'er the sky.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

I know we often proceed to fractions supposed to express less than unit, but in this notion we impose upon ourselves by shifting our ideas and considering that as a multitude which before we considered as one; therefore we cannot make a fraction without multiplying first before we divide.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii pt. i. c. 2.

The right honourable gentleman who now fills the office of Treasurer of the Navy, [Mr. Canning,] asserts that it is physically impossible to act up to the letter of the Act, and has amused the house with an account of fractional sums of 8*s* 6*d*., 14*s*., and 2*s*., and then turns short upon us, and asks how it is possible to pay all these trifling claims by drafts upon the Bank.
Fox. Speech. Proceedings respecting Lord Melville.

A pile stupendous, once of fair renown,
This mould'ring mass of shapeless ruin rose,
Where nodding heights of fractur'd columns frown,
And birds obscene in ivy-bow'rs repose.
Langhorne. Written among the Ruins of Pontefract Castle.

The giddy carelessness of a nurse may bring on maims, fractures, or diseases, which can never be cured.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii c. 25.

Secure, thy steps the fragile board could press,
Nor feel the least alarm where I had sunk.
Blacklock. A Soliloquy.

Such writers, instead of brittle, would say fragile.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. iv. c. 1. s. 3.

An air of robustness and strength is very prejudicial to beauty. An appearance of delicacy, and even of fragility, is almost essential to it.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 16.

It has been said, that if the prodigies of the Jewish history had been found only in the fragments of Manetho, or Berosus, we should have paid no regard to them: and I am willing to admit this.—Paley. Evidences, vol. ii. c. 1.

FRA'GOR. Lat. from frangere, to break.
A breach; a rupture; a crash. This word occurs in Herbert's Travels, for fragrance: he talks of the fragour of gardens, the fragor of musk.

——— Scarce sounds so far
The direful fragor, when some southern blast
Tears from the Alps a ridge of knotty oaks
Deep fang'd, and ancient tenants of the rock.
Watts. The celebrated Victory of the Poles.

FRA'GRANT. } It. Fragrante; Lat. Fra-
FRA'GRANCE. } grans, from the ancient frago,
FRA'GRANCY. } for frango; Vossius, who
FRA'GRANTLY. } adds from Servius on l. Æn. Quoties incendium significatur, quod flatu alitur, per L flagrat dicimus; quoties odor, qui fractâ specie major est, per R dicimus fragrat. Fragrant, then, is—

Breathing forth, issuing forth, throwing out, a scent or odour; sweet to the sense of smelling; an agreeable perfume, odoriferous.

Alas (quod she) behold eche pleasaunt greene,
Will now renew his sommer's iuery,
The fragrant flowers, which haue not long been seene,
Will flourish now (ere long) in brauery.
Gascoigne. A Louing Lady Wounded, &c.

And secõdly ought we heartily to wish, that in the fragrant odor of thy swete sauoures, O God, and in the most pleasant breathe of thy Holy Spirite, we may most ioyfullye runne after thee.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1366.

Thus while God spake, ambrosial fragrance fill'd
All Heav'n, and in the blessed Spirits elect
Sense of new joy ineffable diffus'd
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

When I recall to mind at last, how the bright and blissful Reformation (by divine power) strook through the black and settled night of ignorance and antichristian tyranny, methinks a sovereign and reviving joy must needs rush into the bosom of him that reads or hears, and the sweet odour of the returning Gospel imbath his soul with the fragrancy of Heaven.—Id. Reformation in England, b. i.

He is, if they can find him, faire,
And fresh and fragrant too,
As summer's sky, or purged ayre,
And looks as lillies doe,
That are this morning blown.
B Jonson. A Nymph's Passion.

The train prepare a cruise of curious mold,
A cruise of fragrance, formed of burnish'd gold;
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

Not lovelier seem'd Narcissus to the eye;
Nor, when a flower, could boast more fragrancy.
Garth. Claremont.

I've seen the time, when, on that wither'd thorn,
The blooming rose vied with the blushing morn;
With fragrant wreaths I thence have deck'd my head,
And see how leafless now, and how decay'd.
Congreve. Ovid. Art of Love, b. iii.

As the hops begin to change colour, and smell fragrantly, you may conclude them ripe.—Mortimer. Husbandry.

While, whispering pleasure as they fly,
Cool Zephyrs through the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.—Gray. Ode on the Spring.

——— There heavenly dews
Nightly descending shall empearl the grass
And verdant herbage, drops of fragrancy
Sit trembling on the spires.—Watts. The Bright Vision.

Lay me, where o'er the verdant ground
Her living carpet nature spreads,
Where the green bower, with roses crown'd,
In showers its fragrant foliage sheds.
S. Johnson. Midsummer.

FRAIL, adj. } Corrupted from fragile, (qv.)
FRA'ILNESS. } Fr. Frale, fragile; It. Frale,
FRA'ILTY. } fragile; Sp. Fragil; Lat. Fragilis, that can or may be broken; easily broken, and therefore, weak.

Easily broken; brittle; easily overcome or persuaded; weak or infirm, unsteady or unstable.

For fraith [fraught] with such frailtye is worldly prosperity,
That suddenly it slideth, chaunging as the moone.
R. Gloucester. The Foundation of the Abbey, p. 579.

Hit is bote frelete of flesch ge fynden well in bokes
And a cours of kynde, werof we comen alle
Piers Ploughman, p. 41.

Affection of flesh is sin truly,
But verray loue is vertue as I fele,
For verray loue may not thy frelil desire ackele.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

And of these thinges certes euerich of hem is declared and shewed by other, for as good and yuell ben two contraries, if so be that good be stedfast, thã sheweth the feeblesse all openly. And if thou knowe clerely the freelnesse of yuell, the stedfastnesse of good is knowen.
Id. Boecius, b. iv.

Other for ye han kept your honestee,
Or elles for ye han fallen in freeltee.
Chaucer. The Doctoures Tale, v. 12,012.

And because the toes were parte yerne ãd parte bakt erthe, this empyre shalbe partely stronge and partely frayle and weak.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 2.

And where I had my thought and minde araced
From earthly frailnesse, and from vaine pleasure,
Me from my rest he toke and set in errour.
Wyat. Complaint vpon Loue.

The same nighte that his mother Olympias conceiued, she dreamed she had to doe with a great dragon, neither was she deceiued of God in her dreame, for out of all dout, she bare in her wombe a piece of work exceeding the frailnesse of mannes nature.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 66.

——— My weaker yeares
Captiu'd to Fortune and fraile worldly feares,
Fly to your faith for succour and sure ayde:
Let me not die in languor and long teares
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

And, sooth to say, it is foole-hardie thing,
Rashly to wyten creatures so diuine;
For Demigods they be, and first did spring
From heauen, though graft in frailnesse feminine.
Id. Colin Clouts come Home againe.

——— Therefore, where I see
Much in the poem shine, I will not be Offended with few spots, which negligence
Hath shed, or humane frailty not kept thence.
B. Jonson. Horace. Of the Arte of Poetrie.

How much more is it necessary that God, who has the tenderest concern for all his creatures, and who is infinitely far from being subject to such passions and variableness as frail men are, should desire to be imitated by his creatures, in those perfections, which are the foundation of his own unchangeable happiness!—Clarke, vol. i. Ser 25.

Hadst thou not lov'd, or, loving, sav'd the shame,
If not the sin, by some illustrious name,
This little comfort had reliev'd my mind,
'Twas frailty, not unusual to thy kind.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

Business or vain amusement, care or mirth,
Divide the frail inhabitants of earth.—Cowp. Retirement.

No further seek his merits to disclose,
Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
There they alike in trembling hope repose
The bosom of his father and his God
Gray. Elegy. The Epitaph.

FRAIL. A frail for figs or raisins, a fragilitate. Fr. Petit panier d'osier, (Minshew.) But Skinner truly observes, that frailty or brittleness is not at all a characteristic of osiers, and prefers the It. Fragli, an enfolding or interweaving of bows, from the Lat. Flagella, (see FLAGELLATE,) especially applied to the vine: the shoots of the vine. The old Fr. Frayel, fraiaus, is said by Roquefort to be a basket of rushes. See Nares; and Moore's Suffolk Words.

They left two hundred pipes of floure and bisket bread,
Greate gunnes fourteene, three hundred pipes of wine,
Two hundred frailes of figs and raisons fine.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 482.

What would you give now for her? some five frail
Of rotten figs, good godson, would you not, sir.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Honest Man's Fortune, Act v. sc 1.

Per. Sir, best
Convey yourself into a sugar chest:
Or, if you could be round a frail were rare,
And I could send you abroad.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act v. sc 2

Out of these troughs they take the pulp, and put it into frails, and spread it in them equally.
Locke. Obser. on Olives.

FRAI'SCHEU'R. A word (says Skinner) which I have met with only in the English Dictionary; from the Fr. Fraischeur; moderate coolness. It is used by Dryden.

"Fr. Fraischeur,—coolness; freshness; newness; lustiness," (Cotgrave.)

Hither in summer evenings you repair,
To taste the fraischeur of the purer air.
Dryden. To his Sacred Majesty.

FRA'KNES. See FRECKLE.

FRAME, v. } A. S. Fremman, facere, facen-
FRAME, n. } sere, formare, efficere, to make,
FRA'MER. } to frame, to effect, (Somner.) See to FORM.

Of whom dame Nature thought
such beautie to bestowe,
As she had never framde before
as proufe did playnely showe.
Turbervile. The Louer to Cupid, for Mercie

Their ensign bearer is so stoute
ecleaped Hope by name,
As if they follow his aduise
eche thing shall be in frame.
Id. That Louers ought to shunne, &c.

Fabrica, proprely is a forge or frame of a carpẽter, or other workmanne, of fabricor, aris, to frame, and per metaphoram, to inuent or to imagine.
Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fo⁹. 84.

By their aduise, and her own wicked wit,
She there deuiz'd a wondrous worke to frame,
Whose like on earth was never framed yit,
That euen Nature selfe enuide the same,
And grudg'd to see the counterfet should shame
The thing itself. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

Mar. As lightly burdened with the weight of crimes,
As spotless infants, or poor harmless lambs,
Thus I ascend my heaven, this first step lower
Mounts to this next, and thus hath brought
My body's frame into its highest throne.
Machin. The Dumb Knight, Act iii. sc. 1.

He gouerned Africk as Proconsul two yeeres; being elected without lots drawing, for to settle and bring into order that prouince farre out of frame, and disquieted as wel with the civil mutinies, among the soldiers, as tumultuous cómotions of the barbarous inhabitants.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 214.

The father perfected all things, and delivered them to the second minde, which all mankind calleth the first: He remaineth in the paternall profundity. It is the mind which is framer of the fiery world.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. iv. c. 6.

How godly, and how to be wisht were such an obedient unanimity as this! what a fine conformity would it starch us all into! doubtless a staunch and solid piece of framework, as any January could freeze together.
Milton. Of Unlicens'd Printing.

But let us consider the secret reasons which Virgil had for thus framing this noble episode, wherein the whole passion of love is more exactly described than in any other poet.
Dryden. Dedication to the Æneid.

But yield an ampler scene to Bounty's eye,
An ampler range to Mercy's ear expand:
And, midst admiring nations, set on high
Virtue's fair model, framed by Wisdom's hand.
Beattie. Judgment of Paris.

Almighty framer of the skies!
O let our pure devotion rise,
Like incense in thy sight.
Chatterton. A Hymn for Christmas Day.

Vertue mentions having seen a fine miniature of Henry VIII., and his three children, but does not say where; it had a glass over it, and a frame curiously carved.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

Cooper the print-seller told him that he had often heard Norrice, frame-maker to the Court, and who saved several of the pictures, aver, that he was in the room where the bust [of King Charles by Bernini] used to stand over a corner chimney, and that it was taken away before that chamber was destroyed.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p 86. Note.

FRA'MPOLD. Ray says, frampald or frampard; fretful, peevish, gross, froward; as froward comes from from, so may frampard. See the Note on the passage quoted below from Shakespeare, and Nares in v. Also FRUMP.

For this flower of age having no forecast of thrift, but altogether upon spending, and given to delights and pleasures: winseth and flingeth out like a skittish and frampold horse, in such sort that he had need of a sharpe bit and short curb.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 12.

Most of their horses for to serve their turns bee guelded, least upon the sight of mares they should be disquieted and flung out of order, or bestowed behind in place of supply, growing therewith frampold, bewray by their thicke neighing those that ride upon them.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 94.

Alas, the sweet woman leades an ill life with him: he's a very jealousie-man: she leads a very frampold life with him, (good heart)
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act ii. sc. 2.

Sir Greg. Is Pompey grown so malepert? so frampel.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at Several Weapons, Act iii. sc. 1.

Now when the credit of our town lay on it,
Now to be frampall.
Id. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iii. sc. 6.

FRA'NCHISE, v. FRA'NCHISE, n. FRA'NCHISE, adj. FRA'NCHISEMENT. } Fr. Franchir; It. Francare. Spelman says,—Franci, quasi feranci, i.e. feroces. Junius,—Franc, a liberrima gente Francorum. Skinner,—Franci, unde, ut aiunt, ortum est Francorum et Franciæ nomen ob libertatem olim gentis insignem. See DISFRANCHISE, and ENFRANCHISE.

To free, to set at liberty; to give freedom to, to endow with the liberties and privileges of a free citizen, town, or state; to endenizen.

Franchise, in Chaucer, is, (as Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets it,) frankness, generosity.

We mote, he sayde, be hardy, & stalworthe, & wyse,
Gef we wol habbe oure lyf, and holde our franchise.
R. Brunne, p. 155.

Hit ys nogt semly forsoth. in cyte ne in borwton
That usurers oth regratours. for eny kynne geftes
Be fraunchised for a free man. and haue fals name.
Piers Ploughman, p. 43.

Here may ye seen, how excellent franchise
In woman is whan they hem narwe avise.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9961.

Fro his lust yet were him lever abide,
Then do so high a cherlish wretchednesse
Ageins fraunchise, and alle gentillesse.
Id. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,829

And for to speke it otherwise,
What man that lasseth the franchise,
And taketh of holy church his praie,
I not what bedes he shal praie. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And to the sonnes of Aaron they gaue the franchysed cytyes Hebron and Lobnah, wyth their suburbes.
Bible, 1551. 1 Cron. c. 6.

And by the counsayll of Neotus or Notus he [Alphred] ordeyned the firste grâmer scole at Oxenford, and other free scoles, and fraunchaysed that towne with many great libertes.—Fabyan. Cronycle, pt. vi. c. 171.

We had rather ye sholde take all that we haue, to ayde and to maynteyne vs and our fraunches, thē the Castellyans sholde be maysters ouer vs.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 44.

Yet he was fayne to departe and to go to Trecte, a fraunches towne for all maner of people, payeng for that they take.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. c. 160.

Bang. So I lose none,
In seeking to augment it, but still keepe
My bosome franchis'd, and allegeance cleare,
I shall be counsail'd.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 1.

And as they encountred any, all their song was this, to exhort and encourage the commons to recover their franchises, and to create Tribunes of the comunaltie.
Holland. Livius, p. 121.

That fate, which did thy franchisement inforce,
And from the depth of danger set thee free,
Still regular and constant in that course,
Made me the strait and even path to thee
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. iii.

His gracious edict the same franchise yields
To all the wild increase of woods and fields,
And who in rocks aloof, and who in steeples builds.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

But though they were not able to exclude him [John] from the succession, they had strength enough to oblige him to a solemn promise of restoring those liberties and franchises, which they had always claimed, without having ever enjoyed, or even perfectly understood.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. iii. c. 8.

FRA'NGIBLE. FRANGIBI'LITY. } Fr. Frangible; Lat. Frangere, to break. See FRAGILE.

That can or may be broken.

Some solid and frangible, as the bones; others tough and flexible, as the ligaments.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 68.

He allows the frangibility of charters, when absolute occasion requires it, and admits that the charter of the Company should not prevent the adoption of a proper plan for the future government of India, if a proper plan can be achieved upon no other terms.
Fox. Speech. East India Bills, 1 Dec. 1783.

FRA'NION. Mr. Todd, Spenser, vol. iii. p. 283, quotes from Heywood's Edward IV. "He's a frank franion, a merry companion," &c. And it may be from the A. S. Freon, a friend.

——— But,
My franion, I tell you this one thing,
If you disclose this, I wyll devise such a way,
That whilst thou livest thou shalt remember this day.
Edwards. Damon & Pithias.

First, by her side did sit the bold Sansloy,
Fit mate for such a mincing minion,
Who in her looseness took exceeding joy;
Might not be found a franker franion
Of her lewd parts to make companion.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

FRANK. Nummus Francicus: a Frank, or French coin.

Dan John, I say, lene me this hundred frankes;
Parde I wol not faille you my thankes,
If that you list to do that I you pray.
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,117.

But in London, and in the diocese was gathered a tūne of gold, and in the whole realme of England was gathered xxv. c. m. frankes, which makes in English money cclxxvii. m. vii. c. lxxvii. p.—Barnes. Workes, p. 193.

FRANK, v. FRANK, n. FRANK, adj. FRA'NKLY. FRA'NKNESS. } See FRANCHISE. Fr. Franc. Cotgrave thus fully explains the usages of the adj. Franc, m. franche, f.; "frank, free, at liberty; subject unto no man; exempt from subsidies, duties, or services; also, frank, liberal, bountiful, courteous, gracious; also, valiant, hardy, bold, courageous; also, plain, round, open-hearted; sincere, honest."

To frank; to free, (sc.) letters or other things from payment of postage or other charge.

A frank; a letter, &c. so freed. See FRANK, infra.

This is that John, whom Malachias vnder Helias name (whome he folowed in austeritie and hardenesse of lyuyng, and apparell, whome he folowed also in franke reprouyng of kinges) prophecied before, should come before that Christe dyd come.—Udal. Matthew, c. 11.

He bounde Kinge Henry the Seconde of Englaude (excusing himselfe of the death of Thomas) y^t his subiectes should frankiye & freely appeale frō him to the court of Rome.
Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 101.

And y^t all men of warre should franckly departe out of the citie, and none ther to remayne, but artificers and merchauntes.—Hall. Henry VII. an. 5.

But after the death of Clytus, all the libertie and frankness of speache being taken away, theye seemed to agree with their countenaunces, as with the most apt instrument to declare the consent of the minde.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 221.

Aye franke shepheard, how been thy verses meint
With dolefull pleasance, so as I ne wotte,
Whether rejoyce or weepe for great constraint?
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. December.

The forest is the most noble of all, for it is a franchise of so princely a tenure, that according to our laws none but the King can have a forest; if he chance to pass one over to a subject, 'tis no more forest, but frank-chase.
Howell, b. iv. Let. 16.

And sweet Lone gentle fits amongst them throwes,
Without fel rancour, or foul lealousie;
Franckly each paramour his leman knows,
Each bird his mate, ne any does enuie
Their goodly meriment, and gay felicitie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

When he was fully determined to chastise the Mamertines sharply and to proceed against them in all rigor, for that they had rebelled, the said Sthenon stept unto him, and thus frankly spake.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 304.

One of the principall and chiefe citizens, named Polyneus, made an oration unto them all, with frankenesse of speach enough, tending unto libertie, and yet seasoned with modestie and moderation, in this wise.—Id. Livius, p 323.

Have not your frank and dutiful expressions, that cheerfulness and vivacity in your looks, rendered it much more acceptible, much more valuable.—Parliamentary History. Ch. II. an. 1660. The Lord Chancellor's Speech.

Gazettes sent gratis, down and frank'd,
For which thy patron's weekly thank'd.
Pope. Imitations of English Poets, Dr. Swift

Reserve with frankness, art with truth ally'd,
Courage with softness, modesty with pride.
Id. Moral Essays, Ep. 2.

Hence if we examine the history of mankind, we shall see, that the founders of empires and false religions, which the artists contrived should support one another, were frank enthusiasts: But, at the same time, sufficient masters of themselves, to turn, with proper address, that spirit which they had catched and communicated, to the advancement of their proper schemes.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 6.

Cicero frankly used the liberty, which this consul's behaviour allow'd him, of delivering his sentiments without any reserve; giving Piso himself no quarter, but exposing every thing that he did and said in favor of Clodius.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. i. s. 5.

He [Verrio] was expensive, and kept a great table, and often pressed the king for money with a freedom which his majesty's own frankness indulged.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

Its original [sc. the Court Leet, or View of Frank-pledge] was to view the frank-pledges, that is, the freemen within the liberty; who, (we may remember) according to the institution of the Great Alfred, were all mutually pledges for the good behaviour of each other.—Blackstone. Com. b iv. c. 19.

FRANK, v. FRANK, adj. FRA'NKLY. } "Fr. Franc; a frank or stye, to feed and fatten hogs in," (Cotgrave.) A frank or franch, a place where animals are freely fed, liberaliter stabulantur. To frank fowl, to stuff or cram fowl; from the noun, frank, free, q. d. birds freely fed, (Skinner.) Perhaps the Eng. Rank, (adj.) may be the origin. See F.

And when they were ones franke and fatte, they stode up together proudelye agaynst the Lorde and his worde.
Bale. Image, pt. i.

I behelde in a vysion the horses, franke, fatt and fearce.
Id. Ib.

So that the commons doe feed and franke up, even for the shambles and butcher's knife, the fauters and maintainers of their weale and libertie.—Holland. Livius, p. 226.

After (I say) they had been hardened and made more fell by so many travailes and dangerous adventures, they were received in the end within such a land as, through the aboundance of all good things, might feed and franke them up.—Id. Ib. p. 993.

Swine will be well fat and well larded in sixtie dales; and the rather, if before you begin to franke them up, they be kept altogether from meat three dales.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 51.

It seemeth to take his juice from wood putrified; which sheweth, by the way, that wood putrified yieldeth a franke moisture.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 551.

These guests of his fared so highly, that a man would have said they had beene franke-fed.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 10.

Whereas they that be kept up and crammed in coupes, cages, mewes, and bartons, or otherwise frank-fed and fatted, are in greater danger to fall into diseases.
Id. Plutarch, p. 574.

Ajax. My halfe supt sword, that would have frankely fed.
Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act v. sc. 9.

FRA'NKINCENSE. Minshew says, Franke incense, free incense:—to the same purport, Skinner and Junius:—Incense freely and liberally offered.

Bagistines strowed all the wayes where he should passe with flowers & garlands, and set aulters of siluer on both sides with frankensence burning vpon the same, and all other kind of sweet odours.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 103.

The tree which beareth frankincence, hath a trunk or body writhen about, and putteth forth boughs and branches, like for all the world to the maple of Pontus.
Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 14.

All sorts of trees their sev'ral countries know,
Black Ebon only will in India grow:
And od'rous frankincense on the Sabæan bough.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgic 2.

For Edgar ranks him first in his high favour,
Loads him with honours, which the Earl receives,
As does the golden censer frankincense,
Only to spread a sacred gale of blessings
Around on all. Mason. Elfrida.

FRA'NKLIN. From Frank, (qv.) Skinner says, Libertus, libertinus, municeps. And Spelman, Qui liberè tenet, libertus, municeps. See the quotation from Gregor's Fortescue.

Was mad an other statute, that non erle no baroun,
No other lorde stoute, ne frankeleyn of toun,
Tille holy kirke salle gyue tenement, rent no lond,
Fro tho that now lyue in to the dedis hond,
Without leue of the kyng, or of his consaile.
R. Brunne, p. 239.

For shold no clerk be crouned, bote yf he y come were
Of franklens and freemen. Piers Ploughman, p. 78.

A frankelein was in this compagnie;
White was his berd, as is the dayesie.
Of his complexion he was sanguin.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 333.

Where them does meet a franklin faire and free,
And entertaines with comely courteous glee
His name was Zele, that him right well became.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 10.

No franklin carving of a chine
At Christide, ever look'd so fine.
Somervile. The Officious Messenger.

England is so thick spread and filled with rich and landed men, that there is scarce a small village in which you may not find a knight, an esquire, or some substantial householder, commonly called, a franklayne; all men of considerable estates.
Fortescue. De Laudibus, L. A. by Gregor, c. 29.

FRA'NTICK. See FRENZY.

FRAPE. FRA'PLER. FRA'PLING, n. FRA'PPET. } Hearne says, Frape, clutter, hurly burly, aid, from the Fr. Frappé, struck, knockt, rapt, &c. Bullokar, Frape, a company, a rabble. Gifford, that Frapler is a quarreller, a bully, perhaps from the Fr. Frapper; and of the etymology of Fraper, Menage acknowledges that there exists a great diversity of opinions; the A. S. Rap-an, fremere, is, perhaps, the true origin. See F.

In alle this mykelle frape wex a grete distance
Of Boniface the Pape, & the Kyng of France
R. Brunne, p. 320.

Two days the pape withouten mete lay,
The thrid day com grete frape, & conged him away.
Id. p. 323.

Amo. I say to thee thou art rude, debauch'd, impudent, coarse, unpolish'd, a frapler, and base.
B Johnson. Cynthia's Revels, Act II. sc. 1.

What double and indirect dealing is this (quoth the Samnites!) what frapling is here to no purpose! (Quid perplexe agimus.)—Holland. Livie, p. 297.

Idomeneus in frapling prompt,
What mean'st thou thus to prate!
This babling little thee becomes,
Such clattering men do hate.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 39.

Why my little frapped you, I heard thy uncles talk of thy riches, that thou hadst hundreds a year.
Wilkins. The Enforced Marriage, Act v.

FRATE'RNAL. FRATE'RNITY. FRATE'RNIZE, v. FRATERNIZA'TION. FRATE'RNIZER. } Fr. Fraternel; It. Fraternale; Sp. Fraternal; Lat. Fraternus; from frater, a brother. The Northern word is probably the root of the Latin: by the literal changes, b, p, ph, f.

To fraternize, is a word revived, not created, during the French Revolution. Cotgrave says,—"Fraternizer,—to fraternize, concur with; be near unto, agree as brothers."

Fraternal,—of or pertaining to brothers or brethren, to brotherhood; to those united or conjoined as brothers or brethren; brotherly.

With [him] were the templers, & ther fraternite
Fals in alle maners, so telus the storie me.
R. Brunne, p. 188.

Thauh he be founde in fraternite of all fyve ordres.
Piers Ploughman, p. 165.

Preres in here fraiour shulle fynde that tyme
Bred wt outs beggynge. Id. Ib. p. 84.

Thanne ferd I in to fraytoure, and fond there a mother,
An halle for an hygh kynge an household to holden,
With brode bordes abouten, ybenched wel clene,
With wyndowes of glass, wrought as a chirche.—Id. Crede.

A webbe, a deyer, and a tapiser,
Were alle yclothed in a livere,
Of a solempne and grete fraternite.—Chaucer. Prologue.

And by their agreable warres they brought fortunately the publike enemies to their subiection but alas thys fraternall faith is peruerted to fraternall occasion, as Lot persecuted Abrahã by humayne impulsion.—Hall. Hen. V. an. 2.

I would be loth to be judged by the only brethren and systers of the false fraternitie.—Sir T. More. Workes, p 851.

Their impotent actions cannot sustain themselves the least moment, unless they would rouze us up to a war fit for Cain to be the leader of; an abhorred, a cursed, a fraternal war.—Milton. Reformation in England, b. ii.

Thus from the Laureat fraternity of Poets, riper years and the ceaseless round of study and reading, led me to the shady spaces of Philosophy; but chiefly to the divine volumes of Plato, and his equal Xenophon.
Id. Apology for Smectymnuus.

And that M. Furius should ordain a guild, or fraternitie out of those that dwelt in the hil of the Capitoll, for the celebration of those plaies.—Holland. Livie, p. 211.

The murderer the assises after was condemn'd, and the law could but only hang him, though he had committed matricide and fratricide.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 43.

And to cloak this fratricide with show of constraint, first to the souldiers, and then to the senate, he accuseth his brother to haue sought his death, and that in defence of himself he was forced to slay the other.
Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 25. a. 4. an. 212.

Fraternal rage, the guilty Thebes, alarms,
The alternate reign destroyed by impious arms,
Demand our song. Pope. Statius. Thebais, b. I.

It is also worth our while to consider with what terms of respect and commendation knaves and sots will speak of their own fraternity.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 6.

Fraternal tenderness arose in all its warmth, and totally effaced from his [Joseph] generous breast the impression of their ancient crueltie.—Blair, vol. i. Ser. 13.

Their first charter in which they are styled Peyntours, was granted in the 6th of Edward IV., but they had existed as a fraternity long before.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

I hope, that no French fraternization which the relations of peace and amity with systematised regicide would, assuredly, sooner or later draw after them, even if it should overturn our happy Constitution itself, could so change the hearts of Englishmen, as to make them delight in representations and processions, which have no other merit than that of degrading and insulting the name of royalty.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 3.

A regular correspondence for fraternizing the two nations had also been carried on by Societies in London with a great number of Jacobin Societies in France.
Id. Observations on the Conduct of the Minority.

Here again I join issue with the fraternizers, and positively deny the fact.—Id. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 4.

FRAU'D. FRA'UDFUL. FRA'UDFULLY. FRA'UDULENCE. FRA'UDULENCY. FRA'UDULENT. FRA'UDULENTLY. } See DEFRAUD. Fr. Fraude. It. Frande, frode; Lat. Fraus, of uncertain origin. May it not have sprung from the A. S. Reaf-tan,—reav, rav, rav-ed, rav'd, raud, with the prefix be (be-reave, beraud) changed into p, ph, f; and have been originally applied to violence, to violent robbery.

Deceit, guile, cheating, treachery.

Upon the word Fraud, in the passage quoted from Milton's Paradise Lost, Richardson (followed by others) remarks, that "Milton, who so constantly makes Latin or Greek of English, does it here, and extends the idea to the misery, the punishment, consequent upon the deceit, as well as the deceit itself." The word in Milton has no other meaning than in other writers, viz. deceit, treachery.

Also, Opilion and Gaudencius, haue accused me: albeit, so that the justice regall had whilome demed theim both, to gone into exile, for her tretcheries and frauds without number.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. i.

And yf he come hyder wt puyssaunce, or sende, we shal close our towne agaynst hym, and sende you worde therof; and yf ye be stronger then he, we will abyde styll vnder you, for ye shall fynde in vs no maner of fraude.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 53.

Yet hauing red ouer this oration (which if thou fauour the truth, and hate the tiraunie of the Bishop of Rome, and his deuelish fraudulent falshod, shall doutles wonderfullie content the) throw downe thine errour, and acknowledge the truth now frely offered the at length.
Boner. Pref. to Gardner on True Obedience.

For the Frenchmen fraudulently haue broken all couenauntes, and haue taken agayne possessyon of all the landes and lordeshyppes that were yelded and delyuered at the peace makyng to our sayd souerayne lorde and father, and to our predecessours.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. ii. c. 204.

Cæsar was informed of all their plots: he knew their designments, their places, their open and secret deuises, and turned the enemies fraud to his owne destruction.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 38.

At least our envious foe hath fail'd, who thought
All like himself rebellious, by whose aid
This inaccessible high strength, the seat
Of Deitie supream, us dispossest,
He trusted to have seis'd, and into fraud
Drew many, whom their place knows here no more.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Take heed, my lord, the welfare of us all
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudful man.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 1.

Therefore to Tryphon she againe doth haste,
And him doth chide as false and fraudulent,
That fayld the trust which she in him had plac't,
To cure her sonne, as he his faith had lent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

Some fearing fraude, some fraudulently fayning,
As euery one had cause of good or ill.—Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 10.

And now fierce traitors, studious to destroy
His only son, their ambush'd fraud employ:
Who, pious, following his great father's fame,
To sacred Pylos and to Sparta came
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. v.

If he knowingly subscribes in any sense contrary to, or different from, the sense of the imposers, he prevaricates, and commits a fraud in so doing.
Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 284.

Though the Egyptians lost what they had lent them, yet it was without any fraudulence or injustice on their part, who were the borrowers.—South, vol. v. Ser. 8.

No man can Proteus cheat, but, Proteus, leave
Thy fraudful arts, and do not thou deceive.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

Many, who are very just in their dealings between man and man, will yet be very fraudulent or rapacious with regard to the publick.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 148.

He [a holy man] dares no more deal unjustly or fraudulently with his neighbour, than he dares to neglect his daily prayers and praises unto God.—Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 95.

Though the faith was to be propagated only by the mild measures of persuasion, yet even this would provoke the wolfish disposition of the powers of darkness, to put in use all the iniquitous contrivances of fraud and violence for its suppression.—Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 6.

Still if you glory in the lion's force,
Come nobly emulate that lion's course!
From guarded herds he vindicates his prey,
Not lurks in fraudful thickets from the day.
Lovibond. Julia's Printed Letter.

Euryalus in Virgil wins the race by downright fraudulence.
Hart. Statius, b. vi. Note

Or meanly fraudulent or madly gay,
Abdalla, while he waited near the palace,
With ill-tim'd mirth propos'd the bowl of love.
Johnson. Irene, Act v. sc. 4.

Upon any insolvency they ought to suffer who were weak enough to lend upon bad security, or they who fraudulently held out a security that was not valid.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

FRAUGHT, v. FRAUGHT, adj. FRAUGHT, n. FRA'UGHTAGE. } Dut. Vrachten, vectare, portare; Ger. Fretter, onerare; Fr. Freter, (which Caseneuve derives from the Lat. Fretum.) Low Lat. Frettare. Cotgrave says, "to hire a ship of burden; and to fraught or load her, hired." (See FREIGHT.) The edition of Chaucer quoted by Junius reads "Fret her shippes new."

To load or lade, to fill with a load, to burthen, to fill completely; to charge, to surcharge.

These marchants han don fraught hir shippes newe.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4591.

Of these commodities there are laden yeerely ten or twelue great ships of Genoa, besides fiue or sixe that do belong to the towne of Chio, which ships are fraughted for Genoa, Messina, and Ancona.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 115.

A pen of no auayle, a fruitles labour eke,
My troubled hed with fansies fraught, doth paine itself to seke. Vncertaine Auctors. State of Louers.

He thought the flatt'ring face which seareth still,
Had bene full fraught with all fidelitie,
And that such wordes as courtiers vse at will
Could not haue varied from the veritie.
Gascoigne. Hearbes. Woodmanship.

——— Here did the shepheard seeke
Where he his little boate might safely hide,
Til it was fraught with what the world beside
Could not outvalew.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

The fruitfull vine: whose liquor bloudy red,
Hauing the minds of men with fury fraught,
Mote in them stirre vp old rebellious thought,
To make new warre against the gods againe.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 7.

From Milford Haven to the mouth of Tweed,
Ships of a l burthen to Southampton brought,
(For there the king the rendezvous decreed)
To bear abroad his most victorious fraught.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

And for that their ships had their ful fraught & charge of pilage, they sailed not farther forward.
Holland. Livie, p. 801.

In summer as oft with the bird that first rouses, or not much tardier, to read good authors, or cause them to be read, till the attention be weary, or memory have its full fraught.—Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

——— Our frautage, sir.
I haue conueid aboord, and I haue brought
The oyle, the balsamum, and aqua-vitæ.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act iv. sc. 2.

To Tenedos they come,
And the deepe-drawing barke[s] do there disgorge
Their warlike frautage.—Id. Troil. & Cress. Prol.

Nothing could better serve this popular purpose, than the way of miscellany or common essay, in which the most confused head, if fraught with a little invention and provided with common-place-book learning, might exert itself to as much advantage, as the most orderly and well settled judgment.—Shaftesbury. Miscell. Reflections, Mis. i. c. 1.

To me in vain the bold Maeonian lyre
Awakes the numbers fraught with living fire.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 3.

FRAY, v. FRAY, n. FRA'YING. } Fr. Frayer, frayeur, de fragor, (Menage.) Fray, Skinner says, —nobis dicitur de panno, qui attritu vel complicaturâ dehiscit, from the Fr. Frayer, strictly, to grate upon, to rub, to raise or ruffle by rubbing, from the Lat. Fricare. See AFFRAY.

To rub, to ruffle, to put out of order, to disorder, to confuse or confound, to disturb, to harass; to raise a broil or quarrel, to quarrel. And, consequentially, to alarm, to terrify, to raise apprehensions of danger.

The passage from Scot on Witchcraft (quoted by Mr. Drake) throws sufficient light upon Bale's word, fray-bugged.

A deer is said to fray her head, when she rubs it against a tree to cause the outward coat of her new horns to fall off; and frayings, are the parts so rubbed or frayed off. See Whalley, note on the passage quoted from B. Jonson.

Wele I wote all frayed he wente fro that cite
Vnto Rome mispayed [displeased] to the pape's se.
R. Brunne, p. 323.

As oft as night doth cloke with shadowes darke
The earth, as oft as flaming starres apere,
The troubled ghost of my father Anchises
So oft in sleepe doth fray me, and adulse.
Surrey. Virgil. Æneis, b. iv.

And me, whom late the darte which enmies threw,
No prease of Argive routes could make amazde,
Echo whispering wind hath power now to fray.—Id. b. ii.

This one word ought to fraie and wt draw vs fro al congregatiõ & felosliip of idolatours, be cause that we huing in ye cõgregatiõ may easel be wrapped in & defiled.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. i.

But incontynent after dyner, there began a great fraye betwene som of the gromes and pages of the strangers, and of the archers of Inglande.
Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 16.

Because they could no lõger defende their auctoritie by honest meanes, they doe their endeuoure to mayntaine their tyranny with deceipts, frayinges, wiles, traynes, threteninges, and wicked conspiracies.—Udal. John, c. 10.

They fraybugged thẽ with the thunderboltes of their excommunycacyons, interdiccyons, and thretened to set all other nacyons vpon them.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii. The Conclusion.

They have so fraid us with bull-beggers, spirits, witches, urchens, elves, hags, fairies, &c. &c. and other such bugs, that we are afraid of our own shadowes.
Scot. Discoverie of Witchcraft, (1580.)

Swiftly she ran; the sweet bryers to receive her
Slip their imbracements, and (as loath to leave her)
Stretch'd themselves to their length. yet on she goes.
So great Diana frayes a heard of roes,
And speedy followes.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

And even so was the other consul Lucretius hurt in like case; which so discouraged and frayed the Romans, that they all took them to their legs and fled towards the city.
North. Plutarch, p. 88.

The only way and remedie is to make head directly affront them, and to begin with them first, and so to terrifie them, for they are not so terrible to a man, but they are as fraid of him againe.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 46.

——— The Paynim lay
Deuoyd of outward sense and native strength,
Couer'd with charmed clowd from view of day,
And sight of men, since his late luckless fray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

As for Hanno, the other generall, he together with them who came last, and to the verie end of the fray, was taken alive.—Holland. Livie, p. 668.

For by his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, fewmets, he doth promise sport,
And standing 'fore the dogs
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act i. sc. 2.

Constables may by the law, disarme and imprison peace breakers, fray-makers, rioters and others, to prevent bloodshed, quarrels, and preserve the publke peace.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iv. p. 28.

An ass will with his long ears fray
The flies, that tickle him, away.
Butler. Miscellaneous Thoughts.

What towns, what garrisons, might you,
With hazard of this blood, subdue,
Which now y'are bent to throw away
In vain untriumphable fray. Id. Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

Foil'd, bleeding, breathless, furious to the last,
Full in the centre stands the bull at bay,
Mid wounds, and clinging darts, and lances brast,
And foes disabled in the brutal fray
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

FRAYNE. A.S. Frægn-ian, to ask, to inquire, to seek. In Lancashire, to frayne; Dut. Vraeghen; Ger. Frag-en; Sw. Fræg-a, (Somner, Junius, and Skinner.) See Frane, in Jamieson.

Thys folke frayned hym furst fro wennes he come.
Fro Sinay he sayde. and fro the Sepulcre.
Piers Ploukman, p. 119.

And ich frayned hym furste fro wennes he come,
What he hihte, and woder he wolde. Id. p. 320.

Yet wil I fonden forth, and frayned the Carmes. [Carmelytes.] Id. Crede.

She freyneth, and she prayeth pitously
To every Jew that dwelled in thilke place,
To telle hire, if hire child went ought forthby.
Chaucer. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,530.

Priam full oft, and eke his mother dere,
His brethren and his sustren gan him frain
Why he so sorrowfull was in all his chere,
And what thing was the cause of all his pain.
Id. Troilus, b. v.

And whether Dame Prudence saw hire time, she freined & axed hire Lord Melibee, what vengeaunce he thoughte to taken of his adversaries.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

With that she freygneth companie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Than the lordys apperceyuinge and heryng this clayme thus made by this noble man [Henry D. of Lancastre] eyther of theim frayned of other what he thought, and after a dystaunce or pause of tyme the Archebysshop of Canterbury hauynge notycion of the lordys myndes, stode vp and askyd, &c.—Fabyan, an. 1388, vol. ii. p. 158.

Whenne the fame was aboute that they were none enemies, anone he caused ye leders of theym to be brought vnto his presence, freynynge of them the cause of theyr landynge, and of theyr nacyon and countre.—Id. pt. v. c. 52.

I, musing, frain'd her meaning: she
Her meaning thus did tell.
That flaming region, euer such,
(Quoth she) is Pluto's hell.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii.

FREAK, n. FRE'AKISH. FRE'AKISHNESS. } Ger. Frech, too free, loosed from fear or shame. Wachter, who adds, — Anglo Saxones liberum dicunt, Freah, freoh. (Also Fryg.) Skinner calls it an act insolent, daring, and unexpected. And it is applied to—

A sudden, wanton whim, or caprice; a flighty humour or fancy.

By Chryst quod Fauell Drede is soleyne freke.
Skelton. The Bunge of Courte

"O, but I fear the fickle freaks," quoth shee,
"Of Fortune false, and oddes of armes in field"
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

For many of their actions and opinions were very wild freaks of fancy and humour, and would gain men in these days (as foolish and bad as they are) no better name, than of lunaticks, or bedlams.—Glanvill, Ess. 2.

Thus, as in giddy freaks he bounces,
Clack goes the twig, and in he flounces!
Gay. The Quidnuncs.

If highly born, intolerably vain,
Vapours and pride by turns possess her brain,
Now gayly mad, now sourly splenetic,
Freakish when well, and fretful when she's sick
Pope. The Wife of Bath. Her Prologue, from Chaucer.

To pretend to the spirit now a days either for preaching or praying or prophesying or denouncing God's judgment, or for any other thing, in such a way as implies immediate inspiration. or to set up a light within us contrary to the light of reason, or different from the light of scripture without us: I say, to do this is such a piece of folly and freakishness, that if all of us should incline this way, it would presently render mankind fitter for a Bethlehem, or an hospital of lunaticks, than to live in free society.—Sharp, vol. v. Dis. 2.

The forms of religion are various and different; and not to be reduced to any fixed and constant standard; but they commonly appear in some one or more of these shapes: 1. An external devotion. 2, 3, &c. 8th. Silliness or freakishness, and either a pretended or real ignorance in the common affairs and concernments of human life.
Tillotson, vol. ii. Ser. 150.

Perhaps loose Luxury's enchanting smile
Shall lure my steps to some romantic dale,
Where Mirth's light freaks th' unheeded hours beguile,
And airs of rapture warble on the gale.—Beattie. Elegy

But 'tis not easy with a mind like ours
Conscious of weakness in its noblest pow'rs,
And in a world where, other ills apart,
The roving eye misleads the careless heart,
To limit Thought, by nature prone to stray
Wherever freakish Fancy points the way
Cowper. Retirement.

You see, then, my notion is, that Chivalry was no absurd and freakish institution, but the natural and even sober effort of the feudal policy; whose turbulent genius breathed nothing but war, and was fierce and military even in its amusements.—Hurd. Letters on Chivalry & Romance.

FREAK, v. FRE'CKLE. FRE'CKLED. } Perhaps from It. Freg-are; Lat. Fric-are, to rub.—In Ger. Fleck, is macula, a spot. (See Wachter.) In Chaucer,—Frakens, or frekens, (which, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is Saxon,) are spots. In the North of England, flecked is spotted, and fretten, also, as pock fretten, i. e. spotted with the small pocks. (See Grose, and Brocket.) The Goth. Fret-an; A.S. Frat-an, or fret-an, to eat, to prey upon, may be the origin: thus, pock-fretten, may be, eaten by the small pocks; eaten in spots, and thus, spotted. And a freckle will be—

A spot, eaten into the skin; and, generally, a spot.

To freak,—to spot, to colour with various spots, to variegate.

A fewe frakenes in his face ysprcint
Betwixen yelwe and blake somdel ymeint.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2171.

If there appeare in theyr fleshe a glysterynge whyte somewhat blackishe, then it is but freckels groen vp in the skinne; and he is cleane.—Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 12.

So farre was he frō the geuyng of any diligēce to erthly thynges, that he seemed somwhat besprent wᵗ the frekell of negligence.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 7.

The white pink and the pansy freak'd with jet.
Milton. Lycidas.

If women desire to be rid of the foule freckles, spots and morphew that doe injurie to their beautie; if they would looke young and have their skin plumpe and void of all rivels, let them take the ashes of burrets and purple shells calcined, incorporat the same with honey into the forme of a liniment: within one week's space if they plie it with annointing, they shall see the effect thereof.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 7.

Now do the farewell-frosts, and easterly winds prejudice your choicest tulips, and spot them; therefore cover such with mats or canvas to prevent freckles, and sometimes destruction.—Evelyn. Kalendarium Hortense. April.

And near to these our tricks, the wild and frightful herds,
Not hearing other noise, but this of chattering birds,
Feed fairly on the lawns; both sorts of season'd deer;
Here walk the stately red, the freckled fallow there.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Should these knacks win you, you will be
(Of all the Nymphs that with their beams
Gild sweet Columbia's crystal streames)
Lost to the world, yourself, and me,
And more despis'd than freckled Lalage.
Cotton. Old Tityrus to Eugenia.

Sables, of glossy black; and dark embrowned,
Or, beauteous, freak't with many a mingled hue.
Thomson. Winter.

His freckled corpse before the victor fell,
His soul indignant sought the shades of hell.
Parnell. The Battle of the Frogs and Mice, b. ii.

The freckles, blotches, and parch'd skins,
The worms, which, like black-headed pins,
Peep through the damask cheek, or rise
On noses bloated out of size,
Are things which females ought to dread.
Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

A serpent dire, of size minute,
With necklace brown, and freckled side,
Then hasten'd from her path to shoot,
And o'er the narrow causey glide.
Sir W. Jones. Plassey-Plain.

FREE, v. FREER, adj. FRE'EDOM. FRE'ER, n. FRE'ELY. FRE'ENESS. } Goth. Frija; A. S. Freah, freoh, frig; liber, ingenuus, qui sui generis est, (Somner.) Dut. Vrii, vrijen; Ger. Frei; Sw. Fry. Wachter thinks the Thracians or Phrygians were first authors of the word. The A. S. verb is Freolsian; Sw. Frälsa, liberare, to free, to liberate.

To liberate or deliver, (sc.) from bound or limit, from confinement or restraint, from custody, from slavery; and thus—to loose or release, from the power or possession of; to let loose, to make clear, quit or rid of; to clear, quit or exempt.

Free, the adj.—frank, liberal, generous, bounteous, kind; and it may also be supplied by certain negatives:—

Unbounded, unlimited, unconfined, unconstrained, unreserved, unrestricted, uncompelled, uncontrolled.

Free is much used prefixed.

Vor he sei ther nas bote o wey, other he moste stif be,
Other holi churche was lasent that mid riste was so fre.
R. Gloucester, p. 474.

When min hosbond is fro the world ygon,
Som Cristen man shal wedden me anon,
For than the Apostle saith, that I am fre
To wedde, a' goddes half, wher it liketh me.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5631.

They wolden that her husbondes shulden be
Hardy, and wise, and riche, and therto fre.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,106.

—— This song, I have herd say,
Was maked of our blisful lady fre,
Hire to salve, and eke hire for to prey
To ben our help, and socour when we dey.
Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,462

A knight ther was, and that a worthy man,
That fro the time that he first began
To riden out, he loved Chivalrie,
Trouthe and Honour, Fredom and Curtesie.
Id. The Prologue, v. 46.

This Phebus, that was flour of bachelerie,
As wel in fredom, as in chivalrie,
For his disport, in signe eke of victorie
Of Phiton, so telleth us the storie,
Was wont to beren in his hond a bowe.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 17,075.

Yes (qd. she) there is liberty of free will, ne there was neuer no nature of reason, that it ne had liberty of free will.
Id. Boecius, b. iv.

This louing woll come in mine heart by freenesse of arbitrement, as in this booke fully is shewed.
Id. The Testament of Loue, b. iii.

And ouer this for his countree.
In tyme of werre, a man is free
Hymselfe, his house, and eke his londe
Defende with his owne honde. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

And whereas our soueraigne lorde the king that now is, graunted vnto them by their charter, that the said marchants should be exempted and freed from all custome and imposition of small clothes, as in pieces and in narrow clothes which were not of assize, and in such other clothes of like qualitie.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 172. Hen. IV.

Fie, fie on loue, quoth I,
I now perceiue his craft·
For reason hath declared at large,
How hee my freedome raft.
Turbervile. Answer in Disprayse of Wit.

Paul saith there is no difference, for all haue sinned and lacke that glorie whiche before God is allowed, but they are iustified freely by his grace, through the redemption yᵗ is in Christ Jesu. Rom. iii. What say you now, shall they yet go into purgatory?—Frith. Works, p. 10.

Than the disciples vnderstode that he called John Baptiste Helias, for the likenes of lyfe and freenesse in reprouyng of kynges.—Udal. Matthew, c. 17.

Freenesse of speech, is when we speake boldly and without feare, euen to the proudest of them, whatsoeuer we please or haue list to speake.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 203.

In all, I believe him most, which freest from affection and hate (causes of corruption) might best know, and hath with most likely assertion delivered his report.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, Pref.

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maides that weaue their thread with bones,
Do vse to chaunt it: it is silly sooth,
And dallies with the innocence of loue:
Like the old age.—Shakes. Twelfth Night, Act ii. sc. 4.

But come, thou Goddess fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men, heart-easing Mirth. Milton. L'Allegro.

For Bacchus, thou art freer
Of cares, and overseer
Of feast, and merry meeting,
And still begin'st the greeting.
B. Jonson. Dedication of the King's Cellar.

Thus he long while in thraldome there remained,
Of both beloued well, but little frended;
Vntill his owne true loue his freedome gayned,
Which in another canto will be best contained.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 5.

But in a body, which doth freely yield
His parts to Reason's rules obedient,
And letteth her that ought the sceptre weeld;
All happy peace and goodly gouernment
Is settled there in sure establishment.—Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 9.

Satan deviseth against the glory of God, by disparaging his grace, which he doth by detracting from the fulness, under pretence of exalting the freeness of it.
Glanvill, Ser. 10.

Where liberty and property are destroyed, there must always be a state of force and war, which however pleasing it may be unto the invaders, it will be esteemed intolerable by the invaded, who will no longer remain subject, in all human probability, than while they want as much power to free themselves as their adversaries had to enslave them.
State Trials, an. 1670. Penn & Mead.

For powers are relations, not agents: and that which has the power, or not the power to operate, is that alone which is or is not free, and not the power itself, for freedom, or not freedom, can belong to nothing, but what has or has not a power to act.—Locke. Of Humane Understanding, b. ii. c. 21.

For he had not yet learned a secret, discovered or at least practised since that time, of princes declaring themselves free from the obligations of their treaties, and departing from them at their pleasure.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1523.

Nigh where Fleet ditch descends in sable streams
To wash his sooty Naiads in the Thames;
There stands a structure on a rising hill,
Where tyros take their freedom out to kill.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 3.

In this then consists freedom, viz. in our being able to act or not to act, according as we shall choose or will.
Locke. On Humane Understanding, b. ii. c. 21.

The Scripture on the contrary always speaks even of the satisfaction of Christ, not as a price or equivalent which made our pardon due by a claim of right; but as a means freely appointed and freely accepted, by the mere mercy and compassion of the Father, who, as supreme governor of all things, remits voluntarily of his own right, in what measure and upon what terms he pleases.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 27.

Satire has always shone among the rest,
And is the boldest way, if not the best
To tell men freely of their foulest faults,
To laugh at their vain deeds and vainer thoughts.
Dryden. An Essay upon Satire.

He was a clear asserter of the sovereign freeness, and infallible efficacy of divine grace in the conversion of souls.
Bates. Mr. Richard Baxter's Funeral Sermon.

No sooner was this war ended, than William, freed from an enemy, which had given himself and his father so many alarms, renewed his ill treatment of his brothers, and refused to abide by the late treaty.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, b. iii. c. 3.

Thus, how much so ever we may be abridged or confined in our powers, while there is any thing left that we can do, our free agency subsists entire, for this relates only to our manner of doing those actions we perform, that is, by willing them.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. iii. c. 26.

And thou, fair Freedom, taught alike to feel
The rabble's rage, and tyrants' angry steel;
Thou transitory flow'r, alike undone
By proud contempt or favour's fost'ring sun;
Still may thy blooms the changeful climes endure.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

An estate of freehold, liberum tenementum, or frank tenement, is defined by Britton to be "the possession of the soil by a freeman." And St. Germyn tells us, "that possession of the land is called in the law of England the frank tenement, or freehold."—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. ii. c. 7.

FREEZE. v. FRE'EZING, n. } A. S. Frysan, gelare; Dut. Vriesen; Ger. Frieren. The past tense is Frose; the past part. Frosed, fros'd, frost. See FROST.

To bind a fluid or liquid substance into a solid by cold; to congeal; to chill.

The emperice it held, was it the wynter tide,
The snowe lay in the feld, the water frese biside.
R. Brunne, p. 121.

—— And lente seedes alle
Aren nouht so worthy as whete, ne so wel mowen
In the feld with the forst, and hit freese longe.
Piers Plouhman, p. 211.

In wynter doth he nouht for colde,
In somer male he nouht for hete,
So whether that he frese or swete,
Or be he in, or be he out,
He woll ben ydell all about. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

I burne and am a colde,
I frese amide the fire,
I se she doth withold,
That is my most desire.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Lover refused of his Love, &c.

And wynter increasyng with many great snowes and freesyng of the earth, there felle on him another maladie.
Golden Boke, c. 38.

Such rage as winter's reigneth in my hart
My life-bloud freesing with unkindly cold:
Such stormie stours do brade my baleful smart,
As if my yeare were wast and woxen old.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. January.

How should a thought be united to a marble statue, or a sun-beam to a lump of clay! The freezing of the words in the air in the northern climes, is as conceivable, as this strange union.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 3.

The wand'ring rivals gaze with cares oppress'd,
And chilling horrours freeze in every breast.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

Sharp blows the rigour of the piercing winds,
And the proud floods as with a breast-plate binds:
Ev'n the proud seas forget in tides to roll
Beneath the freezings of the northern pole.
Brome. Ecclesiasticus, c. 43.

Where polar skies congeal th' eternal snow,
Or equinoctial suns for ever glow,
Smote by the freezing or the scorching blast,
A ship-boy on the high and giddy mast.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. 1.

FREIGHT, or FRAIGHT, v. & n. FRE'IGHTAGE. FRE'IGHTER. } Fraught is in common use as a verb; generally, to load, &c. See FRAUGHT. Freight, v. and n. now usually restricted to the lading, &c. of a ship.

Saying that they would not again tempt God so much, who had given them so many warnings, and delivered them from so wonderfull dangers: that they rather desired to lose wages, freight, and all, than continue and follow such desperate fortunes.—Hacklugt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 87.

About the month of March, in the year 1653, they freighted a certain ship of Sunderburg, called the Saviour, Nicolas Weinskinks master, with woolen cloth, and other commodities, to the value of above three thousand pounds.
Milton. Letters of State. To the K. of Denmark.

[Martius] went home to his house, full freighted with spite and malice against the people, being accompanied with all the lustiest young gentlemen.—North. Plutarch, p. 191.

And so he dispatched away the ships a second time fraight and laden with the spoiles of enemies.
Holland. Livie, p. 736.

For it fell out by chance that in this publicke famine word came of a ship of Alexandria, how it was arrived fraight with a kind of dust for the wrestlers of Nero his court.
Id. Suetonius, p. 203.

Your majesty has order'd, that what money is owing to 'em by the Brasile Company, shall be carry'd into your treasury, and that no more than one half of the duty of freightage shall be expended toward the payment of their debts.
Milton. Letters of State. To the K. of Portugal.

Those various squadrons variously design'd,
Each vessell fraighted with a several load;
Each squadron waiting for a several wind,
All bind but one, to burn them in the road.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

——— Yon sail, that, from the sky-mixt wave,
Dawns on the sight, and wafts the royal youth,
A freight of future glory to my shore.
Thomson. Britannia.

He represented in behalf of himself and other owners and freighters of the London gally, that the said gally sailed from Jamaica the latter end of February last.
Parliamentary History. 6 Anne, 1706. The Lords' Address.

At the beginning of that war (as in the commencement of every war) traders were struck with a sort of panick. Many went out of the freighting business.
Burke. On a late State of the Nation.

Now as I trod yon verdant side,
Where Ladon rolls its silver tide,
All gayly deck'd in gorgeous state,
Sail'd a proud barge of richest freight.—Lloyd. Arcadia.

FREM'D. A. S. Fremd; Dut. Vremd, forain, strange. A. S. Fremd-ian; Dut. Vremden, to estrange, to alienate. Ray derives from the preposition Fram, from. See also Jamieson in v. Fremyt. Spenser writes Frenne, which his Glossarist E. K. thinks is a corruption of Forrene.

That chyld wax so wel & y-then, as seyde fremde,
That he wolde be a noble mon, gyf he moste lybbe
& sybbe. R. Gloucester, p. 346.

A faucon peregrine, semed she
Of fremde lond, and ever as she stoop,
She swouned now and now for lack of blood.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,743.

Whilome on him was all my care and joye,
Forcing with giftes to winne his wanton heart,
But now from me his madding minde is start,
And wooes the widdowes daughter of the glenne:
So now fayre Rosalind hath bredde his smart;
So now his friend is chaunged for a frenne.
Spenser. The Shepheard's Calender. April.

FRE'NCHIFY, v. To act, to make any thing, after the manner of the French.

Before the Conquest they misliked nothing more in King Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified, and accounted the desire of forraine language then to be a foretoken of the bringing in of forraine powers, which indeed happened.—Camden. Remaines. Languages.

Can ye not know a man from a Marmasett in theis Frenchified dayes of ours?
Sir Gyles Goosecappe, Act i. sc. 1. (1606.)

He is a proud lord,
And you may challenge him: has he familiarly
Dislik'd your yellow starch, or said your dublet
Was not exactly Frenchified?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act i. sc. 1.

His haire, French-like, stares on his frighted head,
One lock Amazon-like dischivelled,
As if he meant to wear a native cord,
If chaunce his fates should him that bane afford
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 7.

Now if we can cook up our messes of both sorts in such Frenchifyed manner as that the eye cannot presently distinguish which is which, our guests must cull and carve for themselves, and taste before they eat.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. ii. pt. ii. c. 23.

FRE'NZY. FRE'NETICK. FRE'NETICAL. FRA'NTICK. FRA'NTICKLY. FRA'NTICALLY. FRE'NZICAL. (Also written Phrensy. qv.) Fr. Frenesie; It. and Sp. Frenesiá; Lat. Phrenitis; Gr. Φρενιτις, from φρην, the mind. It is, says Minshew, a delirium of the mind, arising with an acute fever from an inflammation of the brain, or of its membranes. And Vossius, απο του φρεν-os, hoc est, mente, quia in eâ semper mens læditur; because in it the mind is always diseased.

A disease of mind; delirium; raving, a paroxysm approaching to raving madness.

Bules and botches, and brennyng aguwes,
Frenesyes and foule uvelus.—Piers Ploughman, p. 396.

Wel art thow wys quath hue to wit suche wisdome shewe
To eny fol other flatorere, other to frentik puple.
Id. p. 183.

——— And than in feare
Was Pandarus, lest that in frenesye
He should fall or els sone deye.—Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

And whan that he it vnderstode
Anone into melancolie,
As though it were a fransie,
He fell. Gower. Con. A. b. iii

And in his throwes, frenetike and mad
He curseth Juno, Apollo, and eke Cupide.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. v.

Thou swarst alone that I
thy fancie did subdue,
Why then should frensie force thee now
to shew thyselfe vntrue.
Turbervile. To his Friend that refused him, &c.

And therfore among many folishe wordes of Luther, as foolishe as euer heretyke spake, he neuer spake a more frantike, than in that he saith that God hath nede of our faith.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 270.

Lykewise for the Frenche part, thether came Isabell, the Frenche Quene, because the King her husband was fallen into hys old frenetical desease.—Hall Hen. V. an. 7.

Thus spake the owl, whose talk could not be heard,
"So little fools good counsel do regard,"
But thinking frenzy him his wits beguil'd,
The honest bird despitefully revil'd.—Drayton. The Owl.

If he (the civil magistrate) find on his complexion, skin, or outward temperature the signs and marks, or in his doings the effects of injustice, rapine, lust, cruelty, or the like, sometimes he shuts up as in frenetick or infectious diseases, or confines within doors, as in every sickly estate.
Milton. Reasons of Church Government, b. ii.

There she half frantick, hauing slaine her sonne,
Did shrowd herselfe, like punishment to shonne
Spenser. Virgil's Gnat, s. 22.

This solemn sympathy poor Venus noteth;
Over one shoulder doth she hang her head;
Dumly she passions, frantickly she doteth,
She thinks he could not die, he is not dead.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

What frenzy, shepherd, has thy soul possess'd,
The vineyard lyes half prun'd and half undress'd!
Dryden. Virgil, Ecl 2.

These fight like husbands, but like lovers those:
These fain would keep, and those more fain enjoy:
And to such height their frantic passion grows,
That what both love, both hazard to destroy.
Id. Annus Mirabilis.

And all amidst them lay the hoary sire,
(Sad scene of woe!) his face, his wrapt attire
Conceal'd from sight, with frantic hands he spread
A shower of ashes o'er his neck and head.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiv.

The narrowness of her [Vanessa's] income, the coldness of her lover, [Swift,] the loss of her reputation, all contributed to make her miserable, and encrease the frenzical disposition of her mind.—Orrery. Rem. on Dr Swift. Let. 9.

Nor do we madly, like an impious world,
Who deem religion frenzy, and the God
That made them, an intruder on their joys,
Start at His awful name, or deem his praise
A jarring note. Cowper. Task, b. iv.

Oh! sovereign of the willing soul
Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
Enchanting shell! the sullen Cares,
And frantic Passions, hear thy soft controul.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

She [Medea] herself when opening to the chorus her last horrid purpose says, fiercely indeed, but not frantically.
Hurd. Notes on the Art of Poetry.

FREQUE'NT, v. FRE'QUENT, adj. FRE'QUENCE. FRE'QUENCY. FREQUE'NTABLE. FREQUENTA'TION. FREQUE'NTATIVE. FREQUE'NTER. FRE'QUENTLY. Fr. Frequenter; It. Frequentare; Sp. Frequentar; Lat. Frequentare, from frequens. Ferre quem, (or fert qui) quæ oportet, is frequens, (Varro, lib. vi.) Vossius cannot coincide. He suggests that coens, from coesse, might formerly be used pro una esse; and that from ferè (plurimum) and coens might arise frecoens or frecuens.

To come or go to often, in common; to visit much, resort to,—many times, in numbers.

But he, wherby he might prolonge his bedred father's dayes:
Chose rather skill in power of herbes, and physickes noble praise,
And such like knowledge dumb, devoid of honour to frequent. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xii.

Lord God, how frequente and familiar a thynge with euery estate and degree throughout Christendome, in this reuerent othe on the Gospelles of Christ!
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 7.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour, not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous.—Sidney.

Vbi rem rescui, after that I had knowledge of the matter: rescio, rescis, rescivi, rescitum, and a verbe frequentatiue of the same: rescisco.
Udal. The Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 115.

In the excellent & most noble emperour Octauius Augustus, in whome reygned all nobilitie, nothinge is more cõmended, than that he had frequently in his mouthe this worde, matura, do maturedly.
Sir T. Elyot. Governor, b. i. c. 23.

I, as I undertook, and with the vote
Consenting in full frequence was impowr'd,
Have found him, view'd him, tasted him, but find
Far other labour to be undergon
Than when I dealt with Adam, first of men.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

Looke into the universall course of the Catholike life; there shall you finde the decalogue professedly broken, besides the ordinary practise of idolatry, and frequence of oathes.—Bp. Hall. Quo Vadis, s. 20.

Alon. O sir, I grant
These sins are deadly ones; yet their frequency
With wicked men makes them more dreadful to us.
Massinger. The Bashful Lover, Act iv. c. 3.

The people with great frequencie brought gifts unto Palatium, which they offred unto the Goddesse, and solemnized a lectisternium.—Holland. Livie, p. 719.

A subject often handled must become trite, and Piscatory Eclogue has the advantage over Pastoral in displaying a field less beaten and less frequented.
P. Fletcher. Piscatory Eclogues. Introd.

Accuse me thus:
That I have frequent been with unknown minds,
And given to time your own dear purchas'd right;
That I have hoisted sail to all the winds,
Which should transport me furthest from your sight.
Shakespeare, son. 116

And besides, it is most evident, that one and the same verb goes through all the conjugations in the Hebrew, but doth not so in Greek, and accordingly there is no such thing in the Greek language, as the variation of frequentatives, transitive, and reciprocal.—Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 70

The miserable spectatours, and frequenters of these infernall pleasures,—they lose their time, their modestie, their honestie, their credit, and respect with God, and all good men.—Prynne. Histrio Mastix, pt. i. Act ii. Chorus.

——— Her [the Muse's] Majestie,
(Like that of Princes) when the vulgar see
Too frequently, respect and awe are fled,
Contempt and scorn remaineth in their stead.
Brome. From a Friend.

Th' oraculous seer frequents the Pharian coast,
From whose high bed my birth divine I boast.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

There is nothing more frequent among us, than a sort of poems, intitled Pindaric Odes; pretending to be written in imitation of the manner and style of Pindar, and yet I do not know that there is to this day extant in our language one ode contrived after his model.
Congreve. Discourse on the Pindaric Ode

Swift at the word descending to the shores,
They moor the vessel and unlade the stores
Then moving from the strand, apart they sate,
And full and frequent form'd a dire debate.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii

The miracles which they saw, grew by their frequency familiar unto them; the impressions, which the visible power of God made upon their minds, wore out insensibly by degrees.—Clarke, vol. ii. Ser. 150.

These inhabitants were much more civilized than those of the inland country, by the commerce and frequentation of other nations, especially the Gauls, who had long before been civilized by the Roman colonies.
Sir W. Temple. An Introd. to the Hist. of England.

[John Rawlinson was] a great frequenter of the pulpits in Oxon.—Wood Athenæ, vol. i.

Though he [Mr. Cowley] wrote in couplets, where rhyme is freer from constraint, he frequently affects half verses.
Dryden. Dedication to the Æneis.

Lewis Du Guernier studied under Chatillon at Paris, and came to England in 1708, but with very moderate talents, though he was reckoned to improve much here by drawing in the Academy, which was then frequented, though established only by private contributions among the artists.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. v.

He had frequent meetings and conferences all this while with his old friends of the opposite party, the late ministers of Cæsar's power, Pansa, Hirtius, Balbus, Matius, &c.
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

Though he did not persecute to death by laws, that being directly contrary to his edicts of toleration, which he had with so much ostentation and frequency repeated; yet he connived at the fury of the people, and the brutality of governors of provinces.
Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple.

The verbs called deponent, desiderative, frequentative, inceptive, &c. need not be considered here, being found in some languages only, and therefore not essential to speech.
Beattie. Moral Science, pt. i. c. 1. s. 3.

Continual experience testifying that nature hath established such a connection between the motions of matter and perceptions of mind, that one frequently begets the other.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 8.

FRE'SCO. See Fresh.

Nitre condenseth the spirits by cold, and by a kinde of frescour (as we now-a-days speak) (quandam frescuram.)
Bacon. The History of Life and Death, p. 31.

Ev'n the bare walls, whose breathing figures glow'd
With each warm stroke that living Art bestow'd,
Or slow decay, or hostile time invades,
And all in silence the fair fresco fades.
Hart. An Essay on Painting.

On the accession of Sextus V. Zucchoro was invited to Spain by Philip II. to paint the Escurial, but his frescos not pleasing, he returned to Rome, and founded the Academy of Painting for which Gregory XIII. had given him a Brief, and of which he was elected the first Prince.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 7.

FRESH, v. FRESH, n. FRESH, adj. FRE'SHEN, n. FRE'SHING, n. FRE'SHET. FRE'SHLY. FRE'SHNESS. A. S. Fersc; Dut. Versch: Ger. Frisch; Sw. Fersk; Fr. Frez, frais; It. and Sp. Fresco. The It. Fresco is thus traced by Menage from the Lat. Frigus, frigidus, frigidi, frigidiscus, frigdiscus, freydiscus, frediscus, frescus, fresco! Or else from Frigo; frixi, frixum, friscum. Other etymologists from Virescens; Ihre is not pleased with either, but suggests nothing else. Wachter observes, that the word perhaps has reference to cold, (ad frigus,) by which the vigour of natural things is preserved, and thinks that the Ger. Frisch may be from friesen, frigere, (see Freeze,) and properly signify frigidus, cool, and thence transferred to recens, a state in which things are preserved by coolness. Cotgrave says,

Fr. Frez, m., fresche, f.; new, fresh, recent, raw, green; sound, lusty, newly come, lately done; also, cool; also, fresh or without salt. To which may be added,—

Having the bloom or vigour of any thing new or young; and thus, blooming, vigorous, brisk.

To fresh, (now re-fresh,)—to reinvigorate, to recruit, to renew the strength, the spirits, to brisken.

So that fram the other ost there com at laste
Syre Hue the gret erl, & Aunsel de Rypemound
Myd an hondred knygtes, pur [quite] fersse & sound.
R. Gloucester, p. 397.

Thei brak in tuo his schankes, to mak the toumbe mete;
The blode was bothe warme & fresh, that of the schanke lete.
R. Brunne, p. 36.

Bote hit be fressch fleesch other fysch, fried other ybake.
Piers Ploughman, p. 145.

Whan he was to that wel ycomen
That shadowed was with braunches grene,
He thought of thilke water shene
To drinke, and fresh him well withall.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Ful freshe and newe hir gere ypiked was.
Id. The Prologue, v. 367.

And with a sigh he [Arcite] sayde pitously:
The freshe beautee sleth me sodenly
Of hire that rometh in the yonder place.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1120.

And swore, and hertely gan her hete [promise]
Euer to be stedfast and trew,
And loue her alway freshly new,
And neuer other lady haue. Id. The Dreame.

More loylife than the byrde in Maie:
He maketh him euer freshe and gaie.
Gower. Con. A. b. i.

The 15th of September—being come from the pilgrimage, we went aborde our shippe, and sett saile, and kept our course west toward the island of Ciprus, but al that night it was calme, and the 16th the winde freshed, and we passed by Mount Carmel.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 107.

But yet remember good readers, that in the conclusion of al the tale, he knitteth it vp with a freshe lusty point, and foileth al the reason in this wyse.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 675.

The most forcible windes make the greatest flood-tides, whereby the freshes, when they take their ordinarie course of ebbe, doe grow strong and swift, setting directly off to sea against the wind.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol iii. p. 673.

But Cato hym selfe, so lyttel regarded that repulse, that where allwayes he wente very homely, he the nexte day folowynge, decked and trymmed hym selfe more freshlye than he was wonte.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 13.

And thus speaking did ferthermore also declare the lustie freashnes & hertinesse of spirite in him.—Udal. Luke, c. 12.

I walkt abroad to breathe the freshing ayre
In open fields, whose flowring pride oppreast
With early frost, had lost their beauty faire.
Spenser. Daphnaida.

——— When that's gone
He shall drink naught but brine, for I'le not shew him
Where the quicke freshes are.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iii. sc. 2.

Or whilst we spend the freshest of our time,
The sweets of youth in plotting in the air;
Alas! how oft we fall, hoping to climb.
Daniel. The Complaint of Rosamon.

And that her skill in herbs might help remove
The freshing of a wound which he had got
In her defence, by envie's poysond shot.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 5.

——— All fish from sea or shore,
Freshet, or purling brook, of shell or fin.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. ii.

At last, dul wearinesse of former fight
Hauing yrockt asleepe his irkesome spright,
That troublous dreame gan freshly toss his braine,
With bowres, and beds, and ladies deare delight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

Till, on a day, as he disposed was
To walke the woods with that his idole faire,
Hir to disport, and idle time to pass,
In th' open freshnesse of the gentle aire,
A knight that way there chanced to repaire.
Id. Ib b. iii. c. 8.

The kite affecteth not so much the grosness of the aire, as the cold and freshness thereof, for being a kind of prey, therefore hot, she delighteth in the fresh aire.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 824.

With thoughts lower than any beadle he [Bishop Hall] betakes him to whip the sign-posts of Cambridge ale-houses, the ordinary subjects of freshmen's tales, and in a straine as pitiful —Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

Well, wise Sir Pol., since you have practis'd thus
Upon my freshmen-ship, I'le trie your salt-head,
What proofe it is against a counter-plot.
B Jonson. The Fox, Act iv. sc. 3.

But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous treat,
On birth days, festivals, or days of state,
A salt, dry flitch of bacon to prepare:
If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.
Congreve. Juvenal, Sat. 11.

One rear'd a dagger at a captive's breast,
One held a living foe, that freshly bled
With new-made wounds.—Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

Who nurs'd in idleness and train'd in Courts,
Pass'd all their precious hours in plays and sports,
Till death behind came stalking on, unseen,
And wither'd (like the storm) the freshness of their green.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

The river nobly foams and flows,
The charm of the enchanted ground,
And all its thousand turns disclose
Some fresher beauty varying round.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 3. s. 4.

How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe, besides the murmuring Loire,
Where shading elms along the margin grew,
And freshen'd from the wave the zephyr flew.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

To night, Lord Conrad?
Ay, at set of sun:
The breeze will freshen when the day is done
Byron. The Corsair, c. 1.

Yells the mad crowd o'r entrailes freshly torn,
Nor shrinks the female eye, nor ev'n affects to mourn.
Id. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1. s. 68.

Let but some new desire give play to a quite different set of organs, and the mind runs after it with as much freshness and eagerness, as if it had never done any thing.
Search. The Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

FRET, v. FRE'TFUL. FRE'TFULNESS. FRE'TTER. FRE'TTING. Goth. Fretan; A. S. Fretan, fretan; Dut. Vreten, vressen, fretten; Ger. fressen; to eat, to devour, to prey upon. Junius says, he thinks that fret was formerly used for comedere, rodere, manducare, to eat, to gnaw, to chew or chaw, and afterwards was tranferred to those whose bitter cares corrode their irritated mind, mordent atque arrodunt. A fretful man, like the envious man in Ennius, is one, ipse suum cor edens. Frett, he adds, the English apply ad animum ægrè ferentium aliquid, quod minimè possunt concoquere; to the mind of those who bear impatiently any thing, which they cannot digest.

Sir T. Brown probably took his fret or channel immediately from the Lat. Fretum.

To eat, to gnaw, to corrode, to wear or rub; and (met.) to ruffle, to chafe, to vex, to prey upon.

To the rode he sturte, & bygan to frete and gnawe
The armes vaste, and thyes myd hys teth to drawe.
R. Gloucester, p. 417.

And fastyng dayes to frete, by fot noon an drynke
Wt spicerie. Piers Ploughman, p. 29.

They freten vp the firste froyt and falsliche sybleth.
Id. Crede

Hise disciples pluckiden eeris of corn, and thei frotynge with her hondis eeten.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 6.

Ther saw I Atteon an hart ymaked,
For vengeance that he saw Diane all naked:
I saw how that his houndis have him caught,
And freten him for that they knew him naught.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2070.

Thise wormes, ne thise mothes, ne thise mites
Upon my parailе frett hem never a del.
And wost thou why? for they were used wel.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6143.

Who rubbeth now, who froteth now his lippes
With dust, with sond, with straw, with cloth, with chippes,
But Absolon? Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3745.

And as the law, which fretteth thy conscience, is in thine hart, and is none outward thing, euen so seeke within thy hart the plaister of mercy, the promises of forgeuenes in our Sauiour Jesus Christ.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 31.

For sometyme the fyer toke by itself in the woodes by the mountaynes, through the vehemente confriction, frettinge and gatheringe of the trees, whyche happened by force of wynde, wherby arose a greater fyer and flame.
Nicolls. Thucidides, fol. 64.

For the more glory of God that these thinges wer done, the more the Pharisels wer fret with enuye against Jesus.
Udal. Matthew, c. 15.

Also if they be not well boyled, they cause wyndes, and annoye the stomake, and make sometyme frettinges.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

No wooll is lesse subiect to mothes, or to fretting in presse, then this, as the old parliament robes of kinge, and of many noble peeres to be shewed may plainly testifie.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 161.

He chauft, he griev'd, he fretted, and he sight,
And fared like a furious wyld boare,
Whose whelpes are stolene away, she being otherwhere.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 9.

By this salve, the sore rather festered and rankled, than healed up, and the sedition thereby fretted more and more.
Holland. Livius, p. 228.

We first advertise, it [Euripus] generally signifieth any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 13.

The fret or channel of Euripus not ebbing or flowing seven times a day, according to common report.—Id. Ib.

A woody hill there stood, at whose low feet
Two goodly streames in one small channel meet,
Whose fretfull waves, beating against the hill,
Did all the bottome with soft mutt'rings fill.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

Cook. A hot day, a hot day, vengeance, a hot day boys,
Give me some drink, this fire's a plaguy fretter.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Bloody Brother, Act ii. sc. 2.

The kernels of the pine nuts quench thirst; they pacifie the frettings and gnawings of the stomack.
Holland. Pinie, b. xxiii. c 13

Take your bow into the fielde, shoote in him, sincke him with deade heavye shaftes, look where he cometh moste, provide for that place betimes, least it pinch, and so freate.
Ascham. Toxophilus.

Freates be in a shaft as well as in a bowe, and they be much like a canker, creepinge and increasinge in those places in a bowe, which be weaker then other.—Id. Ib.

And if it ferment not at all, it will want that little fret which makes it grateful to most palates.
Evelyn. Silva, pt. ii. Aphorisms concerning Cider.

He thump'd his cushion, fretted, vext,
Thump'd o'er again each useful text;
Rebuk'd, exhorted, all in vain,
His parish was the more profane.
Somervile. The Devil Outwitted.

Meanwhile the kindred souls of every land,
(Howe'er divided in the fretful days
Of prejudice and errour) mingled now,
In one selected never jarring state,
Where God himself their only monarch reigns,
Partake the joy.—Thomson. The Memory of Lord Talbot.

Ah, monarchs! could ye taste the mirth ye mar,
Not in the toils of glory would ye fret;
The hoarse dull drum would sleep, and man be happy yet.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. i. s. 47.

By indulging this fretful temper you both aggravate the uneasiness of age, and you alienate those on whose affection much of your comfort depends.—Blair, vol. i. Ser. 12.

Fretfulness of temper, too, will generally characterise those who are negligent of order. The hurry in which they live, and the embarrassments with which they are surrounded, keep their spirits in perpetual ferment.
Id. vol. ii. Ser 1.

But be it winter, summer, autumn, spring:
To nurture fretting is a simple thing.
A weed so useless, to the use of reason,
Can, absolutely, never be in season.
Byron. An Epistle from the Author to his Sister.

FRET, v. } Junius thinks from A. S. Fræt-
FRET, n. } wian, ornare, adornare, exornare,
FRE'TISH. } to trim, to deck, to adorne, to garnish. (Skinner.—from It. Fratto, fractus, as it is a kind of work distinguished by frequent fractures and incisions; or by being broken or cut into many parts. Fret (in music) is probably from this It. Fratto, denoting a break or stop to the continuity of sound.

To cut or carve into many parts, which rise, jet forward or project.

And on her hedde she had a croune
Her semed well an high persoun,
For round enuiron her crownet
Was full of rich stones fret.—Chaucer. Rom of the Rose.

And she was clad in roiall habite grene,
A fret of gold she had next her heare
And vpon that wite croune she beare.
Id. Prol. to Cleopatra Queene of Egypte.

Small double rolles, all of flatte golde of damaske, fret with fryzed golde.—Hall. Henry VIII. an. 1.

—— Amongst the which was seen
A goodly armour, and full rich aray,
Which long'd to Angela, the Saxon queene,
All fretted round with gold and goodly wel beseene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

And in each knot that doth compose
A mesh, shall stick a full-blown rose,
Red, damask, white, in order set,
About the sides shall run a fret
Of Primroses.—Drayton. Muses Elysium, Nym. 2.

I did but tell her she mistooke her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her fingering.
(When with a most impatient deuilish spirit)
Frets call you these? (quoth she) I'le fume with them:
And with that word she stroke me on the head.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

—— All organs of sweet stop,
All sounds on fret by string or golden wire
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or unison. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Roses, lyons-heads, escalops and other decorations, are allowable under the corona with this rule, that whether here, or under any roof or ceiling, interlacing frets be ever made at right angles.—Evelyn. Of Architects and Architecture.

So as when we meet with the greatest industry, and expensive carving, full of fret and lamentable imagery, sparing neither paine nor cost, a judicious spectator is distracted and quite confounded.—Id. Ib.

Again, if it be in a great hall, then (beholding) of the fair embowed or vawted roofs, or of the fretted seelings curiously wrought, and sumptuously set forth.
North. Plutarch, p. 36.

Plashe serveth passing well to white walls or seeling; also for to make little images in fretworke, to set forth houses; yea, and the browes of pillars and wals, to cast off rain.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 24.

Their (bases and mezzo relievo) ordinary placing was in fronts of edifices, as is yet to be seen in divers palaces at Rome, and especially in their villas and retirements of pleasure, which are frequently incrusted with them, but vilely imitated in our exposed fretworks about London, to the reproach of sculpture, especially where it pretends to figures on the outside of our citizen's houses.
Evelyn. Of Architects and Architecture.

Yet then no proud aspiring piles were rais'd,
No fretted roofs with polish'd metals blaz'd.
Pope. Statius. Thebais, b. i.

—— The moonbeam shone
Through the dim lattice o'er the floor of stone,
And the high fretted roof, and saints, that there
O'er Gothic windows knelt in pictur'd prayer,
Reflected in fantastic figures grew,
Like life, but not like mortal life to view.
Byron. Lara, c. i. s. 11.

FRI'ABLE. } Fr. Friable; Lat. Friabilis,
FRIABI'LITY. } from friare, to separate or sunder.

That can or may be separated or sundered; easy to be sundered or reduced to small particles, easily crumbled.

Nor do they become friable or easily powderable by philosophical calcination, that is from the vapour or steam of water, but split and rift contrary to other horns.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 23.

If needs you must alter their station, let it be done about November, and that into a light friable ground, or moist gravel.—Evelyn. Sylva. Of the Chest nut.

Sixthly, in its rigidness and friability, being not at all flexible, but brittle like a flint insomuch that with one knock of a hammer I broke off a small piece of it, and with the same hammer quickly beat it to a pretty fine powder upon an anvil.—Id. Ib. Of the Age, &c. of Trees.

For the liver, of all the viscera, is the most friable and easily crumbled or dissolved.—Arbuthnot. On Diet, c. 3.

The sharpness to which the point of all of them is wrought: the temper and firmness of the substance of which it is composed; the strength of the muscles by which it is darted out, compared with the smallness and weakness of the insect, and with the soft and friable texture of the rest of the body; are properties of the sting to be noticed, and not a little to be admired.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

FRI'AR. } Fr. Frere; It. Frate; Lat.
FRI'ARLY. } Frater, a brother. Generally
FRI'ARLING, n. } applied to—
FRI'ARY. } A brother of a religious order or community.

The nexte ser ther after the gode King Louis
Of France to the Holi Lond wende, & thoru Paris
Barefuot edo, & open heued, and then holi wey bigan
With procession of freres, & of mani good man.
R. Gloucester, p. 530.

Thise duse pers to the freres, tham for to schriue,
The jugement ageyn tham went, to schorte ther liue.
R. Brunne, p. 281.

Ich wolde ne forther afot. for no freres prechinge.
Piers Ploughman, p. 125.

A frere ther was, a wanton and a mery.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 208.

And so should the Scripture stand thē in as good stede, as a paire of spectacles should stand a blinde frere.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 147.

Time and place being to him assigned, hee in the audience of the pope and of frierlie cardinals & other doctors, was straitlie examined of his articles.
Fox. Martyrs, fol. 376. Learned Men against Friars.

Then Master Latimer first repeating the frierly reasons of Doctour Buckneham whereby he would proone it a dangerous thing for the vulgar people, to haue the Scripture in the vulgare tongue, so refuted the frier, so answered to his obiections, so dallied with his bald reasone of the ploughman looking back, and of the baker leauing his breade unleauened, that the vanitie of the frier might to all men appeare.—Id. Ib. p. 1574. Answer of M. Latimer to Dr. Buckneham.

And I haue laboured with mine owne hands, and will labor, and will that all my frierlinge shall labor, and live of their labor, whereby they may support themselues in an honest meane.—Id. Ib. p. 381. The Rule of Friar Francis.

And to the end of time, the tales shall ne'er be done,
Of Scarlock, George-a-Green, and Much the Miller's son,
Of Tuck the merry friar, which many a sermon made
In praise of Robin Hood, his out-laws and their trade.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 26.

Their friar like general would the next day make one holyday in the Christian calendars in remembrance of 30,000 Hungarian martyrs slain of the Turks.
Knolles. History of the Turks.

Witness the tale of Hans Boobiken, a rich Boor's son, who his father had sent abroad a frygering, that is shroving in our language.—Howell, b. iv. Let. 7.

St. Michael in Ariosto seeks out Discord, to send her amongst the Pagans, and finds her in a convent of friars, where Peace should reign, which indeed is a fine satire.
Dryden. On the Origin and Progress of Satire.

So the first year of his coming over I was in the friery at Armagh, I was an acquaintance of the friars, and they invited me.—State Trials, an. 1681. Oliver Pluncket.

It was fashionable for persons of the highest rank to bequeath their bodies to be buried in the friery churches, which were consequently filled with sumptuous shrines and superb monuments.
Warton. History of English Poetry, vol. i p. 293.

FRI'BBLE, v. } Corrupted from the Fr.
FRI'BBLE, n. } Frivole. See FRIVOLOUS.
FRI'BBLER. } To be weak, to act weakly, trivolously, triflingly, idly; to trifle.

And what is worse, they speak but
What they list of it, and fribble out the rest.
Middleton. The Mayor of Quinborough, Act v. sc. 1.

From flight of birds, or chickens pecking,
Success of great'st attempts would reckon:
Though cheats, yet more intelligible,
Than those that with the stars do fribble.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

They whom my correspondent calls male coquets, shall hereafter be called fribblers. A fribbler, is one who professes rapture and admiration for the woman to whom he addresses, and dreads nothing so much as her consent.
Spectator, No. 238.

While namby-pamby thus you scribble
Your manly genius, a mere fribble,
Pinn'd down, and sickly, cannot vapour,
Nor dares to spring or cut a caper.—Lloyd. On Rhyme.

FRI'BORGH. A. S. Freo-borh, fide-jussor, from A. S. Freo, liber, free, and borh, vas, a security. See BOROUGH; and see also Friborga, in Spelman, Gloss.

For its legal usage, see FRANK-PLEDGE.

As touching the king's peace, every hundred was divided into many freeborgs or tithings consisting of ten men, which stood all bound one for the other; and did amongst themselves punish small matters in their court for that purpose called the lete.—Spelman. Ancient Govern. of England

A man who could not find the security of some tithing, or friborgh, for his behaviour, he, that was upon account of this universal desertion called friendless man, was by our ancestors condemned to death.
Burke. An Abridgement of English History, c. 7.

FRI'CACE, or } Lat. Fricare, frictum, to FRI'CASIE. } rub, (which Vossius derives FRICA'TION. } from the Chaldee and Syriac.)
FRI'CTION. } Sir T. Elyot has a chapter "Of fricasies, or rubbynges." And B. Jonson appears to use the word fricace in an exactly similar manner, though by some supposed to apply it to the medicament rubbed.

I will not here speke of oyntementes used in olde tyme amonge the Romayns and Greekes, in fricasies or rubbinges.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32

Mos. —— I know not, sir.
But some on't, there they pour'd into his eares
Some in his nostrils, and recover'd him,
Applying but the fricace.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iii. sc. 6.

—— A lord, that is a leper;
A knight, that has the bone-ach, or a squire
That hath both these, you make him smooth, and sound.
With a bare fricace of your medicine.
Id. The Alchemist, Act iii. sc. 2.

The like, saith Jorden, we observe in canes and woods, that are unctuous and full of oyle, which will yield fire by fricasion or collision, not by kindling the air about them, but the inflamable oyle within them.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 21

Fricasions used in the morning, serve especially to this intention; but this must evermore accompany them, that after the fricasion, the part be lightly anointed with oyl, lest the attrition of the outward parts, make them by perspiration, drye and juycelesse.—Bacon. History of Life and Death.

Hard and vehement friction doth constipat and bind the body.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 4.

Frictions make the parts more fleshie, and full, as we see both in men: and in the currying of horses, &c.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, s. 877.

The inhabitants [of Brazil] do strange things, both in preserving health and in curing diseases, by friction and unction, using the first in cold and chronical, the latter in acute diseases.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 180.

Cheselden has observed, that the contrivance of a loose ring is practised by mechanics, where the friction of the joints of any of their machines is great: as between the parts of crook-hinges of large gates, or under the head of a male screw of large vices.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

A late improvement in what are called friction-wheels, which consist of a mechanism so ordered, as to be regularly dropping oil into a box which encloses the axis, the nave, and certain balls upon which the nave revolves, may be said in some sort, to represent the contrivance in the animal joint; with this superiority, however, on the part of the joint, viz. that here the oil is not only dropped but made.
Id. Ib.

FRI'CASSEE, v. } A word, says Skinner,
FRICASSE'R, n. } lately introduced into our country. From the Fr. Fricassee, from the verb Fricasser; and this from the Lat. Frigere, q. d. cibus frixus, frixura, frixatura.
To parch, to dry, to fry.

Common sense and truth will not down with them unless they be hashed and fricassed.—Echard. Observ. (1606.) p. 63.

Hotter than all the roasted cooks you sat
To dress the fricasse of your alphabet,
Which sometimes would be drawn dough anagram,
Sometimes acrostic parched in the flame.
Lovelace. Posthume Poems. On Sanazar.

Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricasee of frogs.
King. Art of Cookery.

When art and nature join, the effect will be
Some nice ragout or charming fricasee.—Garth. Claremont.

No cook with art increas'd physicians' fees,
Nor serv'd up death in soups or fricasees.—Id. Ib.

FRI'DAY. A. S. Frige-dæg; Dut. Vriid-dagh; Ger. Frey-tag; which Wachter thinks is so called from Friga, the wife of Woden and mother of Thor, from whom Wednesday and Thursday are respectively named. See also Marschal on the word Frige-dæg, and Verstegan. Junius, (Gloss. Goth. 409,) from a Deity called Fricco, whose province it was to bestow peace and pleasure upon mortals.

This by fil on a Fryday, a lytel by fore Paske.
Piers Ploughman, p. 313.

This should have happened the 7th of April, 1615, being Good Friday, but was deferred till Munday following, when early in the morning they sent word to the Jewes into their streets, that trussing vp their choicest goods, they should within one houre depart, which with much lamentation they did.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. ii. c. 10. s. 6.

FRIDGE, v. } "To fridge or frig about,
FRI'DGING, n. } from A. S. Fric-an, to dance," (Skinner.) It is from It. Freg-are; Lat. Fric-are, to rub.

The little motes or atoms that fridge, and play in the beams of the sun.—Holyoell. Melampoon, (1681.) p. 3.

Is it certain, that cogitation (phancy, intellection, and volition) are not local motions; nor the meer fridging up and down of the parts of an extended substance, changing their place and distance; but it is unquestionably an internal energie.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 831.

FRIEND, v. } Goth. Frigonds; A. S.
FRIEND, n. } Freond; Dut. Vriend. Manifestly (says Junius) from the FRI'ENDLESS. } Goth. Frigon, to love, whose FRI'ENDLY, adj. } part. is frigonds, loving. And FRI'ENDLY, ad. } Tooke,—"Friend, i.e. friand,
FRI'ENDLILY. } freond, the pres. part. of frian,
FRI'ENDLINESS. } freon, to love, means (subaudi
FRI'ENDSHIP. } any one, some one,) loving." (Div. of Purley, ii. 51.) Upon this part. the verb to friend has been formed; befriend is now the usual word.
To act as a friend or wellwisher, as one who loves, who wishes well; who would benevolently serve or favour; support or protect.

Tho this folc to gadere com, and Brut Corineus fond,
Tho strengest mon & the meste that hym thoste in eny lond,
Heo acoyntede hym a nou, and bi comen frendes gode,
Bothe for here prowes, and for heo were of on blode.
R. Gloucester, p. 15.

Tho he was feyne and frendeles, mo than thrutty ger.
Id. p. 343.

Mid wuche bodi dar y come in thi sigt ene,
That bi nom the myn frenschipe for thi sothnesse al clene!
R. Gloucester, p. 35.

Fulle so frendes he had, & fele foos inowe,
Unto the Duke of Normundie he went for to wouwe.
R. Brunne, p. 40.

And Jhesus seide to hem, frend, whereto art thou come?
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 26.

And Jesus sayde vnto hym, frende, wherfore arte thou come?—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For o thing, sires, saufly dare I seie,
That frendes everich other must obeie,
If they wol longe holden compagnie,
Love wol not be constreined by maistrie.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Prologue, v. 11,074.

——— Soth to saine
Of him that loueth trew and well
Frendship is more than is catell,
For frend in court ale better is
Than peny in purse certis. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Their stedfastnes endureth but a season,
For they faine friendlines & worchen treason.
Id. Balade. Deceitfull Woman.

He semed frendly, to him that knew him nouht,
But he was fendly, both in werk and thought.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,770.

And gan his loke on Pandarus vp cast
Full soberly, and frendly on to see. Id. Troilus, b. iii.

Loue of frendshippe also there is
Which maketh no man don amis,
Of wil knitte betwixt two
That wol not breke for wele ne wo.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

A frende that delyteth in loue, dothe a man more frendshype, and stycketh faster vnto hym then a brother.
Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 18.

A faithful frende is a stronge defece: whoso fyndeth suche one, fyndeth a notable treasure. A faythfull frende hathe no peare, y^e^ weight of golde & syluer is not to be cõpared to the goodnes of hys fayth.—Id. Of Jesus Syrach, c. 6.

Hee found him a very gentle person who intertained him friendly, and shewed him many things, and among other a large mappe of the world, with certaine particular naugations.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 7.

The Frenche Kyng sent the Erle of Vandosme, greate master of his hous, and the Archebushop of Reyns, first pere of Fraunce, and diuerse other into Englande, which were ioyously receiued, and frendly entertained.
Hall. Hen. VI. an. 22.

The faithfull frends ar fled and bannyshed from my sight:
And such as I haue held full dere haue sett my frendship light. Surrey, Ps. 88.

Lelipa, your garland thus you finish'd have,
Then as we have attended
Your leisure, likewise let me crave
I may the like be frended.
Drayton. The Muses Elysium, Nymph. 5.

The naturall inborne tounsmen and common people, who favoured and frended still the name of Constantius, put to their helping hands to set forward this horrible and fearfull tumult.—Holland. Ammianus, p. 177.

Oh, where have I been all this time! how frended,
That I should loose myself thus desperately,
And none for pity show me how I wandered?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid's Tragedy, Act iv.

It may breed such a quarrel to your kindred
And such an indiscretion fling on you too,
For she is nobly frended.
Id. The Wild Goose Chace, Act iii. sc. 1.

In this sad plight, friendless, unfortunate,
Now miserable I Pideasa dwell,
Craving of you, in pitty of my state,
To do none ill, if please ye not doe well.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

That true faith, wheresoever it is; worketh and frameth the heart to friendlike dispositions unto God, and brings forth friendlike carriage in the life towards God.
Goodwin. Works, vol. v. pt. ii. p. 48.

Long they thus trauelled in friendly wise
Through countries waste, and eke well edifiede;
Seeking adventures hard to exercise
Their puissance, whylome full dernly tryde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 1.

So fires and frosts, to make a perfect hell
Meet in one breast, in one house friendly dwell.
P. Fletcher. Miscellanies. Contemnenti.

Sicin. Why eyther were you ignorant to see't?
Or, seeing it, of such childish friendliness,
To yeeld your voyces.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc. 3.

'Tis a disposition quite unchristian, that we show in such bad actions, being wholly contrary to that intermutual amity and friendliness that should be in the world.
Feltham, pt ii. Res. 52.

Then those two knights, fast friendship for to bind,
And loue establish each to other true,
Gaue goodly gifts, the signes of gratefull mind,
And eke, as pledges firme, right hands together ioyn'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9

God having mingled friendship with this life of ours, hath made all things joyous, sweet, pleasant, and acceptable, where a friend is present and enjoyeth his part.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 70.

True and perfect friendship requireth these three things especially; virtue, as being honest and commendable; society, which is pleasant and delectable; and profit, which is needfull and necessary.—Id. Ib. p. 185.

Henceforth I call you not servants, for the servant knoweth not what his lord doth, but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my father I have made known unto you.—Bible. John xv. 15.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.
Dryden. The Wife of Bath's Tale

Have you less pity for the needy cheat,
The poor and friendless villain, than the great?
Pope. Horace, Dial 2

Friendlike, and side by side, two brethren fought,
Whom, at a birth, their fruitful mother brought.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. ii.

While, conscious of the deed, he glares around,
And hears the gathering multitude resound,
Timely he flies the yet untasted food,
And gains the friendly shelter of the wood.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvi.

Tell me if it is not better to be suppress'd, freely and friendlily.—Id. To Warburton, Nov. 1742.

There are several texts of the New Testament which interpret the love of our neighbour to mean universal benevolence, or friendliness towards the whole kind, as opportunities may offer.—Waterland. Works, vol. ix. p. 26.

We have here, John xv. 15, an account of Christ's friendship to his disciples; that is, we have the best of things represented in the greatest of examples. In other men we see the excellency, but in Christ the Divinity of friendship.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

For 'tis the bliss of friendship's holy state,
To mix their minds, and to communicate,
Though bodies cannot, souls can penetrate.
Dryden. Eleonora.

The man who hails you Tom or Jack,
And proves, by thumping on your back,
His sense of your great merit,
Is such a friend, that one had need
Be very much his friend indeed,
To pardon or to bear it. Cowper. On Friendship.

The lamb fourfold he likewise shall restore,
To recompense the friendless and the poor:
Because his heart no soft compassion felt,
At others woe unknowing how to melt.
Fawkes. Nathan's Parable.

I am greatly obliged to our friend Trebatius, for giving me this assurance of your sincere and friendly regard for me, and for making it my duty to respect and observe a man, whom I had esteemed always before with inclination
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

Your extreme friendliness hath even tempted you to act a part which your true sense and the very decorum of your profession, I have observed through all your disguises, has rendered painful to you.—Hurd. On Retirement.

FRIEZE. } Dut. Vries, frise; Fr. Frize, drap
FRI'ZED. } de frize; Sp. Frisa, perhaps so called from the Frisians. See Menage, and Skinner.

Old Thomas shall keep home, I warrant him,
I will ascend to the groom porter's next,
Fly higher games, and make my mincing knight
Walk musing in their knotty frieze abroad.
Carturight. The Ordinary, Act ii. sc. 3

The studded cassockes that senatours and noblemen of Rome doe weare, begin but now for to be woven after the manner of deep, frieze rugges.
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 48.

As for our mantles, friezed deep both without and within, they were invented and came to be used first, no longer since than in my father's dayes.—Id. Ib.

For how hard a task must obedience needs be to a spirit accustomed to rule, and to dominion! how uneasy must the leather and the frieze sit upon the shoulder that used to shine with the purple and the ermin.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 8.

Hence Ostentation here, with tawdry art,
Pants for the vulgar praise which fools impart;
Here Vanity assumes her pert grimace,
And trims her robes of frieze with copper lace.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

FRIEZE, or Frize. } Fr. Frise; It. Fregio; Sp. Friso, which Menage thinks may be from the Lat. Phrygiones, a Phrygis; who were the reputed inventors of ornaments in dress, architecture, &c. See the quotation from Pliny, in v. Embroider.

In Architecture, the flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice.

In a word, 'tis that in the Doric architrave which cymatium is in the other order, and separates the epystylium or architrave from the freeze.
Evelyn. Of Architects & Architecture.

Their proprieties or distinctions will best appear by some reasonable description of them together, with their architraves, frizes, and cornices, as they are usually handled.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 22.

The ruines too of some majestick piece,
Boasting the power of ancient Rome or Greece,
Whose statues, freezes, columns, broken lie,
And, though defac'd, the wonder of the eye.
Dryden. To the Memory of Mrs. A. Killegrew.

I have seen the figure of Thalia, the Comic Muse, sometimes with an entire head-piece in her hand, [and] sometimes with about half the head, and a little friz, like a tower, [i. frieze like tower] running round the edges of the face.
Addison. Remarks on Italy. Rome.

FRIGATE. Fr. Frégate; It. Fregata; Sp. Fragata; which, Skinner thinks, may be from the Italian Fregare, to rub or polish, or fregiare, to adorn; a ship much rubbed or polished, or adorned. Wachter, from Goth. Farjan, remigrare, to move with oars; but a name so originating would, as Ferrarius objects, apply to all vessels moved with oars. Evelyn fixes the time when the name was applied first to our present warlike vessel.

[May, 1590] we landed on the North-West end of S. John, where we watered in a good riuer called Yaguana, and the same night following we tooke a frigate of tenne tunne, comming from Gwathanelo laden with hides and ginger.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 289.

No more shall the tall frigate dance
For joy she carries this victorious lord,
Who to the capstan chain'd Mischance,
Commanding on her lofty board
Cotton. On the Death of the Earl of Ossory.

But under those verie bridges, he left certain spaces betweene from whence the light pinnaces and frigats might make out to charge and recharge the enemie, and retire themselves thither againe in safetie.
Holland. Livius, p. 745.

He [Commissioner Pett] not only restored our naval affairs, but he invented that excellent and new ornament of the navy which we call frigate, formidable to our enemies, to us most useful and safe.—Evelyn. Mem. vol. i. p. 671.

On the third day of May [1693] the admiral [Russell] sail'd from St. Helen's with the combined squadrons of England and Holland, amounting to ninety ships of the line besides frigates, fire-ships, and tenders.
Smollet. History of England. William & Mary, an. 1693.

FRIGHT, v. FRIGHT, n. FRI'GHTEN. FRI'GHTFUL. FRI'GHTFULLY. FRI'GHTFULNESS. } See AFFRIGHT. Goth. Faurhtan; A. S. Frihtan, terrere, to fright or affright, to terrific, frighten or make affraid, (Somner.) Dut. Vruchten; Ger. Furchten; Sw. Frukta.

To feel or cause the feeling or sensation of dread or terror; to terrify.

Fright-ful, (as in Browne,) full of the sensation of fright or terror;—

In Ford, full of things or appearances which cause the sensation of fright or terror.

So Love's inflamed shaft or brand,
May kill as soon as Death's cold hand;
Except Love's fires the vertue have
To fright the frost out of the grave.
B. Jonson. Sad Shepherd, Act I. sc. 5.

Tarquinius thinking it good to take the time, and follow hard upon them whiles they were frighted, after he had sent to Rome the bootie with the prisoners, and burned on a great heape together (as he had vow'd to Vulcane) the spoils of the enemies, march'd on still forward, and led his armie into the territorie of the Sabines.—Holland. Livius, p. 27.

The Mazices not able to abide our hot charging so violently with men and munition (a warlike nation though they were and fierce) thus beaten down in sundry slaughters, in a foul fright, brake their arraies.—Id. Ammianus, p. 369.

The flowers, that frighten'd with sharp winter's dread,
Retire into their mother Tellus' womb,
Yet in the Spring, in troops new mustered,
Peep out again from their unfrozen tomb.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 6.

——— Heare! O heare!
A hundred eechos striking every where:
See how the frightful heards run from the wood.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

——— Yet then a dawning glimmer'd
To some few wandring remnants, promising day
When first they ventur'd on a frightful shore,
At Milford Haven.—Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act v. sc. 2.

No man in his right mind will fear God in this sense: 'tis no less than madness to have frightful apprehensions of that which is most benign and beneficial; nor can true love consist with this kind of fear.
Wilkins. Of Natural Religion, b. i. c. 15.

Those few horses that remaine are sent forth for discovery, they find nothing but monuments of frightfulnesse, pledges of security.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Samariaes Famine Relieved.

Against his will, you chain your frighted king
On rapid Rhine's divided bed;
And mock your hero, whilst ye sing
The wounds for which he never bled.
Prior. Imitation of Horace, b. iii. Ode 2. (1692.)

Which Hudibras, as if they'd been
Bestow'd as freely on his skin,
Expounding by his inward light,
Or rather more prophetic fright,
To be the wizard, come to search,
And take him napping in the lurch,
Turn'd pale as ashes or a clout,
But why, or wherefore, is a doubt.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

But, oh, the change! the winds grew high;
Impending trumpets charge the sky;
The lightning flies, the thunder roars,
And big waves lash the frighten'd shores.
Prior. The Lady's Looking-glass.

Death was denounc'd; that frightful sound,
Which ev'n the best can hardly bear,
He took the summons void of fear;
And unconcern'dly cast his eyes around:
As if to find and dare the grisly challenger
Dryden. Threnodia Augustalis.

Then to her glass, and, "Betty, pray
Don't I look frightfully to-day."—Swift. Lady's Journal.

It is esteemed a piece of respect to commit their bodies to the grave with the decency at least, if not with the pomp, of a funeral: and yet farther to perpetuate their memories by the magnificence of monuments, and the eloquence of inscriptions, though all this serveth chiefly to cover the frightfulness of mortality.—Nelson. The Life of Dr. Bull.

To add servile dread to this impressed reverence, the Gods, he told them, inhabited that place, which he found was the repository of those mormos, and panic terrors, which man was so dexterous at feigning, and so ready to fright himself withall, while he adds imaginary miseries to a life already overburthened with disasters.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 6.

When, lo! the doors burst open in a trice,
And at their banquet terrified the mice.
They start, they tremble, in a deadly fright,
And round the room precipitate their flight.
Fawkes. Horace, b. ii. Sat. 6.

Antony on the other hand was desirous to have him there, fancying that he would either be frightened into a compliance, which would lessen him with his own party, or, by opposing what was intended, make himself odious to the soldiery.—Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

One cannot conceive so frightful a state of a nation. A maritime country without a marine, and without commerce, a continental country without a frontier, and for a thousand miles surrounded with powerful, warlike, and ambitious neighbours.—Burke. Remarks on the Policy of the Allies.

FRI'GID, adj. FRIGI'DITY. FRI'GIDLY. FRI'GIDNESS. FRIGORI'FICK. FRIGRFA'CTIVE. } Fr. Froid; It. and Sp. Frigido; Lat. Frigidus, from Frig-ere, which Vossius says, is either from the Gr. Πηγ-ειν, rig-ere, to stiffen, or from Φριξη, shuddering.

Chill or cold; (met.) without vivacity or liveliness, sensibility or spirit; dull, heavy, torpid.

There's a whole map behind of names
Of gentle loves i' th' temperate zone,
And cold ones in the frigid one.—Cowley. The Account, 6.

Pretty rogue! what ingenious comparisons he always makes us! may you for ever be banished, whither you yourself condemn an absolute kingdom to be, that is, to the frigid zone, which when you are there will be doubly cold to what it was before.
Milton. A Defence of the People of England, c. 8.

Ice is water congealed by the frigidity of the air.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Having begun loftily in heaven's universal alphabet, he [Bishop Hall] falls down to that wretched poorness and frigidity, as to talk of Bridge street in heaven, and the hostler of heaven.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

There is also a great difference betwixt the degrees in coldness in the air of frigid regions and of England.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 509.

Bleak level realm, where frigid styles abound,
Where never yet a daring thought was found,
But counted feet is Poetry defin'd;
And starv'd conceits, that chill the reader's mind.
Parnell. To Lord Viscount Bolingbroke.

If in the Platonical Philosophy there are some things directing to it [sc. a communion with God,] yet they are but frigidly expressed.
Bates. Harmony of the Divine Attributes, c. 17

And when the frigorifick power was arrived at the height, I several times found, that water thinly placed on the outside, whilst the mixture within was nimbly stirred up and down, would freeze in a quarter of a minute by a minute watch.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 147.

We will no longer delay to say something of this matter, namely, in what line, or, if you please, towards what part the frigefactive virtue of cold bodies does operate the furthest and most strongly.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 524.

Then, crush'd by rules, and weaken'd as refin'd,
For years the pow'r of Tragedy declin'd;
From Bard to Bard the frigid caution crept,
Till Declamation roar'd whilst Passion slept.
Johnson. Prologue at the Opening of Drury Lane, (1747.)

FRIM. Grose says, "Handsome, rare, well-liking, in good case; as, a frim tree or beast, a thriving tree or beast," (North.) In A.S. Freom, or freomlic, is strong, stout, (Somner.)

As still the year grows on, that Ceres once doth load,
The full earth with her store; my plenteous bosom strow'd
With all abundant sweets; my frim and lusty flank
Her bravery then displays, with meadows hugely rank.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

FRINGE, v. FRINGE, n. FRI'NGY. } Fr. Frange; It. Franjia; Sp. Franja; Dut. Frangie, frenqie; Ger. Fransen, which Wachter would derive from the Gr. Περιζωσθαι, cingere, circumdare, inserto N! Others derive the word fringe, from the Lat. Fimbria. See FIMBRIATE.

"Fr. Franger; to fringe, to edge or set with fringe; also, to crumple, wrimple, jug or snip on the edges," (Cotgrave.)

Moreouer the place where the king tooke his rest was couered with white couerlettes embroydered with deuises of very wittie and fine workemanship, and fringed round about with a fringe dyed in the colour of skarlet.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 316

——— Mean while murmuring waters fall
Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her crystal mirror holds, unite their streams
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

And as she sleeps
See how light creeps
Through the chinks, and beautifies
The rayey fringe of her faire eyes.
Cotton. Song, set by Mr. Coleman

The root hath beards or fringes as it were hanging about it, and is in fashion shaped to a filberd nut
Holland Plinie, b. xxv. c. 6

In that glad season from the lakes and floods,
Where pure Niemi's fairy mountains rise,
And fring'd with roses Tenglio rolls his stream,
They draw the copious fry. Thomson. Winter

Next winter a player, hired for the purpose, by the corporation of fringe-makers, acted his part in a new comedy all covered with silver fringe, and according to the laudable custom gave rise to that fashion.—Swift. Tale of a Tub, s. 2

All manner of works of Venice gold and silver, damask gold and silver, and of silk, as passemain, fringe ribband, and such other work, &c.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. an. 1550.

She [Fancy] bids the fringed osiers bow,
And rustle round the lake below,
To suit the tenour of her gurgling sighs,
And sooth her throbbing breast with solemn sympathies.
Mason, Ode 7.

And the fringe of the foam may be seen below,
On the line that it left long ages ago:
A smooth short space of yellow sand
Betwixt it and the greener land.
Byron. The Siege of Corinth, s. 16

Lord of my time, my devious path I bend,
Through fringy woodland, or smooth shaven lawn;
Or pensile grove, or airy cliff ascend,
And hail the scene by Nature's pencil drawn.
Shenstone, Elegy 24.

FRI'PPER. } From the Fr. Fripperie; It. FRI'PPERY, n. } Fripperia, a shop for worn-out FRI'PPERY, adj. } clothes. From Lat. Frivolum, worthless, (see FRIVOLOUS,) Vossius deduces Frivolarii, sellers of worthless furniture, clothes, &c. And hence may the French and Italian have sprung. See Skinner, and the quotation from Bacon.

A dealer in things worthless; furniture, clothes, or other articles.

Which kind of collections are like a fripper's or broker's shop that hath ends of every thing, but nothing of worth.
Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. c. 2.

How you fool'd me sometimes, and set me to pin pleats in your ruff, two hours together, and made a waiting frippery of me.—Marmion. The Antiquary, Act iii. sc. 1.

A world of desperate undertakings, possibly,
Procures some hungry meals, some tavern surfeits,
Some frippery to hide nakedness.
Ford. Fancies Chaste & Noble, Act i. sc. 1.

Or dost thou thinke us all Jewes that inhabit there, yet? If thou dost, come over, and but see our fripperie: change an old shirt, for a whole smock, with us.
B. Jonson. Every Man in his Humour, Act i. sc. 2.

Ant. I, there it goes: my masters bo-peep with me,
With his flye popping in and out again,
Argued a cause, a frippery cause.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Chances, Act ii. sc. 2.

Rag fair is a place near the tower of London, where old cloaths and frippery are sold.—Pope. Dunciad, b. i. Note.

If this its fate, let all the frippery things
Be-plac'd, be-pension'd, and be-starr'd by kings,
Frown on the page and with fastidious eye,
Like old young Fannius call it blasphemy.
Mason. An Heroic Postscript.

FRISK, v. } Skinner (without noticing the FRISK, adj. } A. S. Fricc-ian, saltare) says from FRISK, n. } It. Frizzare, alacriter saltitare;
FRI'SKAL. } and this from the Fr. Frisque,
FRI'SKER. } alacer, vividus, agilis, lætus.
FRI'SKFUL. } "Fr. Frisque; frisk, lively,
FRI'SKING, n. } jolly, blithe, brisk, fine, spruce,
FRI'SKY. } gay," (Cotgrave.)

To dance briskly; to jump, leap, skip or caper, gaily, blithely, frolicksomely.

Their horsys fryske in harnays of the selfe.
Leland. Departure of Margaret, Daughter of Hen. II.

And so to make him prounce, and plunge,
to friske and gambolls fetche.
Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 1.

——— About them frisking play'd
All beasts of the earth, since wild, and of all chase
In wood or wilderness, forest or den.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

It [Death] comes, like an arrest of treason in a jollity: blasts us, like a lightning-flash, and like a ring put to our noses, checks us in the frisks and lavaltoes of our dancing blood.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 13.

When, lest her laughter should her gums bewray,
Her hands must hide her mouth if she but smil'd;
Faine would she seem all frize and frolicke still.
Bp. Hall, b. iv. Sat. 1.

Ixion is loos'd from his wheele, and turn'd dancer, does nothing but cut capreols, fetch friskals, and leads lavaltoes, with the Lamiæ.—B. Jonson. Chloris and her Nymphs.

All new fashions be pleasant to mee,
I will haue them whether I thriue or thee:
Now I am a frisker, all men on me looke,
What I should doe but set cocke on the hoope?
Dr. Bourd, in Camden's Remaines. Inhabitants.

One delighteth in mirth, and the friskings of an airy soul: another findeth something amiable in the saddest look of melancholy.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 59.

——— Other objects that are
Inserted 'tween her mind and eye, become the pranks
And friskins of her madness.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act iv. sc. 3.

——— Whilst others frisk
In mazy dance, or Cestrian gambols show,
Elate with mighty joy. J. Philips. Cerealia, (1706.)

See! how the younglings frisk along the meads,
As May comes on, and wakes the balmy wind;
Rampant with life, their joy all joy excells.
Thomson. Castle of Indolence.

Around him feeds his many bleating flock,
Of various cadence; and his sportive lambs
This way and that convolv'd, in friskful glee,
Their frolics play. Id. Spring.

Here Dryads, scorning Phœbus' ray,
While Pan melodious pipes away,
In measur'd motions frisk about
Till old Silenus puts them out. Green. The Spleen.

And when the frisky wanton writes
In Pindar's (what d'ye call 'em)—flights,
Th' uneven measure, short and tall,
Now rhyming twice, now not at all,
In curves and angles twirls about,
Like Chinese railing in and out.
Lloyd. Epistle to C. Churchill.

FRITH. Skinner says, Frith, æstuarium, from the Lat. Fretum; but, as the word exists neither in Italian nor French, this is very improbable; and Dr. Jamieson remarks, that Fretum itself may, with more probability, be viewed as originally Gothic. The Sw. Fiaerd, Ihre thinks, may be from Fara, proficisci, seu terrâ, sive mari, and thus, navigare. Frith, or firth, seems properly applied to an outlet or passage out; from the A. S. verb Far-an, to go; of which ford, (qv.) also is the past part.

Into this wild abyss the warie fiend
Stood on the brink of hell, and look'd awhile
Pondering his voyage, for no narrow frith
He had to cross. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

He [Suetonius Paulinus] makes him boats with flat bottoms, fitted to the shallows, which he expected in that narrow frith; his foot so pass'd over, his horse waded or swam.—Id. History of England, b. ii.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And, streak'd with red, a troubled colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war;
What desp'rate madman then would venture o'er
The frith, or haul his cables from the shore.
Dryden. Virgil, Georg. i.

Lands intersected by a narrow frith
Abhor each other. Cowper. Task, b. ii.

FRITH. } The A. S. Frith-ian is—protegere;
FRI'THY. } immunem vel quietum præstare, vel custodire; to protect, to defend, to acquit, keep and save harmlesse, secure, (Somner.) And from this verb the n. frith, as Skinner thinks, was applied to a wood; because among the Saxons woods and groves were esteemed sacred, and considered as places of asylum or sanctuary.

Elles foweles fedden hem, in frythes ther thei woneden.
Piers Ploughman, p. 285.

Celestiall Goddesse, that woldest fryth and woode,
The wylde bore & beestes, thou feryst by thy might.
Fabyan, pt. i. c. 2.

Thus stode I in the frythy forest of Galtres.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

The sylvans that about the neighbouring woods did dwell,
Both in the tufty frith and in the mossy fell,
Forsook their gloomy bow'rs and wand'red far abroad,
Expell'd their quiet seats, and place of their abode.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 17.

FRI'TINANCY. Lat. Fritinnire; formed from the sound. Spoken of swallows and other small birds, (Vossius.) In some editions of Brown this word is used; in others, the Lat. Fritinnitus.

The fritinnitus, or proper note thereof, [our grasshopper,] is far more shrill than that of the locust.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 3.

FRI'TTER, v. } Fr. Friteau; friture, a fry-
FRI'TTER, n. } ing; frit, fried. From frire, to fry. See FRY.

A fritter,—any thing small—fried. To fritter,—To prepare in small portions for frying; and, generally, to reduce to small particles.

Moreouer, even in our time wherein we live, the sacred and ceremonious feasts which we obserue in memorial of our birth-days, and nativitie, standeth much upon furmentie, gruell, fritters, and pancakes.—Holland. Plin. b. xviii. c. 8.

Fal. Seese and Putter! Haue I liu'd to stand at the taunt of one that makes fritters of English?
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act v. sc. 5.

Here to her chosen all her works she shows;—
How Prologues into Prefaces decay,
And those to Notes are fritter'd quite away.
Pope. Dunciad, b. i.

Keep it from pasty bak'd or flying,
From broiling steak, or fritters frying.
Swift. To Dr. Sheridan. On his Art of Punning.

Some pluck out the black hairs, some the grey; one point must be given up to one; another point must be yielded to another; nothing is suffered to prevail upon its own principle; the whole is so frittered down and disjointed, that scarcely a trace of the original remains.
Burke. On Economical Reform.

What pretty things imagination
Will fritter out in adulation.—Lloyd. Poetry Professors.

FRI'VOLOUS. } Fr. Frivole; It. and Sp.
FRI'VOLOUSLY. } Frivolo; Lat. Frivolus.
FRI'VOLOUSNESS. } Vossius adopts the etymo-
FRIVO'LITY. } logy of Budæus, friare, i. e. conterere, to bruise, to crumble; frivolum, being equivalent to friabile, that may be bruised, broken, or crumbled; and thus—infirm, weak, of no value.

See FRIBBLE, and FRIPPER.

Weak, trifling, idle; of no value, no stability.

Finally, at all tymes as much as may be, eschew all vayne, friuolous, and vnfruitfull thoughtes, that cumber and disturbe the minde from the beholdynge of those heauenly contemplations.—Fisher. A Godly Treatise on Prayer.

This Juan Vasilowich vpon certaine friuolous reasons calleth himselfe the naturall Lord of Liuonia.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 224.

Colax. You, sir, are far above such frivolous thoughts; You fear not death.
Aphe. Not I.
Randolph. The Muse's Looking-Glass, Act ii. sc. 3.

For how can it be that others should be thought frivolous and absurd, in praysing any such things, and himself not worthy to be mocked and laughed at for taking ioy and pleasing himself in such ridiculous toys as these?
Holland. Plutarch, p. 871.

If you require a further answer, it will not misbecome a Christian to be either more magnanimous, or more devout than Scipio was, who instead of other answer to the frivolous accusations of Petilius, the Tribune, "This day, Romans," saith he, "I fought with Hannibal prosperously, let us all go, and thank the Gods that gave us so great a victory."—Milton. Animad. upon Remonstrants' Defence, s. 4.

Only before I leave it, I shall first mind him of one fallacy (oft before discernable) in accusing the frivolousness of my digression, to prove that kings may remove patriarchs, when, saith he, the papal is greater than patriarchal power.
Hammond. Works, vol. ii. p. 132.

His wisdom did his happiness destroy,
Aiming to know the world he should enjoy:
And wit was his vain frivolous pretence
Of pleasing others at his own expence.
Rochester. A Satire against Mankind.

The closing sounds of all the vain device,
Select by trouble, frivolously nice,
Resound through verse, and with a false pretence
Support the dialogue, and pass for sense.
Parnell. To Henry Lord Viscount Bolingbroke.

Never did the masculine spirit of England display itself with more energy, nor ever did its genius soar with a prouder preeminence over France, than at the time when frivolity and effeminacy had been at least tacitly acknowledged as their national character by the good people of this kingdom
Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. i.

Around him some mysterious circle thrown
Repell'd approach, and show'd him still alone.
Upon his eye sate something of reproof,
That kept at least frivolity aloof. Byron. Lara, c. i

It is the characteristic of little and frivolous minds, to be wholly occupied with the vulgar objects of life.
Blair, vol. i. Ser. 9

By following this practice often he will become acquainted with the degrees of evidence so as to measure them almost upon inspection, and judge of the weight or frivolousness of objections.—Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i.

FRIZZ, v. } Fr. Friser; Sp. Frisar; Dut.
FRI'ZZLE, v. } Friseren. From the noun frieze,
FRI'ZZLE, n. } (qv.) Fr. Frise, Menage thinks
FRI'ZLING, n. } the verb is formed, "Fr. Frizer;
FRIZER, or } to frizzle, crisp, curl, (as water)
FRI'ZER. } blown on by a gentle wind, ruffle, braid," (Cotgrave.)

Mæcenas, if I meete with thee
without my frizled top,
Not notted fyne, and fashion lyke,
thy mannour is to stop,
And ieste at me. Drant. Horace. Epistle to Mæcenas.

Trembling as when Apollo's golden hairs
Are fann'd and frizzled in the wanton airs
Of his own breath. Crashaw. Musick's Duel.

Ans. The peremptory analysis that you call it, I believe will be so hardy as once more to unpin your spruce fastidious oratory, to rumple her laces, her frizzles, and her bobins, tho' she wince, and fling never so peevishly.
Milton. Animadversions upon Remonstrants' Defence, s. 1.

Upon meretricious paintings, frislings, pouldrings, attyrings, and the like, many squander away their very choicest morning houres, more fit for study and deuotion than such vnchristian practices.—Prynne. Hist. Mast. pt. i. Act vi. sc. i.

Who there frequents at these unmodish hours,
But ancient matrons with their frizzled towers,
And gray religious maids?—Gay. Eclogues. The Toilette.

Is't not enough you read Voltaire,
While sneering valets frizz your hair,
And half asleep with half an eye
Steal in dear infidelity?—Whitehead. The Goat's Beard.

Just then a council of the hares
Had met on national affairs.
The chiefs were set; while o'er their head
The furze its frizzled covering spread.
Beattie. The Hares. A Fable.

Writings which make part of the furniture of every circulating library through Great Britain, from whence they pass into the hands of our idle young people of fashion, while under the discipline of the frisseur, in the metropolis, or at the watering places.—Bp. Horne. Works, vol. vi. Let. 17.

FRO. See FROM. Fro, in old writers, and still in common speech, is used as a preposition. It is of constant use adverbially, in opposition to to.

Fro the by gynnyng of the world, to the tyme that now is,
Sene agee ther habbeth y be, as sene tyme y wys.
R. Gloucester, p. 9.

After that bataile Egbriht, thus herd I say,
Seized Kent & Estsex, Southsex & Surray,
& alle the grete lond, fro Douer to Grymsby.
R. Brunne, p. 15.

This world n'is but a thurghfare ful of wo,
And we ben pilgrimes, passing to and fro,
Deth is an end of every worldes sore.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2850.

By God, right by the hopper wool I stand,
(Quod John) and seen how that the corn gas in.
Yet saw I neuer by my fader kin,
How that the hopper wagges til and fra.
Id. The Reves Tale, v. 4037.

Thus was it spoken to and fro
Of them, that were with him, tho'
All prively behinde his backe. Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Charl. And for my selfe, most part of all this night,
Within her quarter, and mine own precinct,
I was imploy'd in passing to and fro
About relieuing of the centinels
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act ii. sc. 1.

Or hath mine vnkle Beauford, and my selfe,
With all the learned counsell of the realme,
Studied so long, sat in the councell house,
Early and late, debating to and fro
How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act i. sc. 1.

—— By which [bridge] the spirits perverse
With easie intercourse pass to and fro
To tempt or punish mortals, except whom
God and good angels guard by special grace.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

When toss'd to and fro, by the huge swelling wave,
They rise up to heav'n, or sink down to the grave.
Byrom. A Thanksgiving Hymn.

FROCK. Menage, from the Lat. Floccus; Vossius (more probably in Skinner's opinion) from Ger. Rock; but whence, he adds, is rock? from the A. S. Wreon, tegere, to cover, q. d. wreoc, tegumentum, a covering. Vossius (de Vitiis, c. 6) calls it vestis monachalis. (See ROCK, ROCKET.) Spelman also has said,—Idem forte quod Roccus. The London labouring people at this day call the garment, which they draw on over their other clothing, a froc, (Spelman, Gloss. Arch.) See F.

An upper garment or vesture, (sc.) to cover the whole body, or the rest of the clothing.

And in freres frocke. he was yfounde ones.
Piers Ploughman, p. 283.

The Sadducees, thei crie: behold, here he is. The Ebeonites, thei crie: behold, he is here: and other pointeth to some one of the Pharasaicall sort, clad in a blacke frocke or cope, and saith: loke this wale, here is Christ.
Udal. Luke, c. 19.

And on her loins a frock, with many a swelling plait
Emboss'd with well-spread horse, large sheep, and full fed neat. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

Encumber'd with his frock, without defence,
An easy prize, they led the prisoner thence,
And, as commanded, brought before the prince
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

As the frock of no religious order ever was green, this cannot be meant for a Friar.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 3.

FROE. From the Dut. Vrouw; Ger. Frau, a woman. Applied in the passages below to—

A Bacchanalian woman. Mr. Brocket says,—A slattern, a lusty female. Grose,—An idle, dirty woman.

Thro' the thick hair, that thatch'd their browes,
Their eyes upon me stared,
Like to those raging frantic froes,
For Bacchus feast s prepared.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 4.

Witty. 'Tis thus then,
I have had late intelligence, they are now
Buxsom as Bacchus froes, reveling, dancing,
Telling the musick's numbers with their feet.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act v. sc 1.

A boor hugging a frightful frow is a frequent incident even in the works of Teniers
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 3.

FROG, n. } A. S. Frocca, frocx; Dut.
FROG-HOOD. } Vorsch; Ger. Forsch; so called, Skinner thinks, from the hoarse sound they utter; a rauco quem edunt sono. See the quotation from Plinie.

And clepede the court Laterane, aftur the frogge y wis,
For in the langage of Rome, Rane frogge ys.
R. Gloucester, p. 69.

And I saigh three uncleane spiritis bi the maner of froggis go out of the mouth of the dragoun, and of the beaste, and of the mouth of the fals prophete.—Wiclif. Apocalips, c. 16.

And I saw thre uncleane spirits lyke froggis, came out of ye mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaste, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

In places saw I welles there,
In which there no frogges were
And faire in shadowe was euery well.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Onely these marishes and myrie bogs
In which the fearefull ewftes do build their bowres,
Yield me an hostry mongst the croking frogs,
And harbour here in safety from those ravenous dogs.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 10.

Frogs have their tongues in the fore part fast to the mouth the hinder part within toward their throat, is free and at libertie, whereby they keep the croking which we hear at one season of the year, namely, when the males call unto the females for to engender.
Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 37.

Even slime begets the frogs loquacious race:
Short of their feet at first, in little space
With arms and legs endued, long leaps they take,
Rais'd on their hinder part, and swim the lake,
And waves repel: for nature gives their kind,
To that intent, a length of legs behind.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xv.

The mouse, averse to be o'erpower'd,
Gave him the lie, and call'd him coward;
Too hard for any frog's digestion,
To have his froghood called in question.
Smart. The Duellist.

FROISE, FROYSE, more modernly Fraize, frixura, either from the Lat. Frixare, frigere, or from the Fr. Froisser, to bruise, crush, break or crumble; because in the preparation of this kind of food eggs are beaten up, and mixed with meal softened with water, (Skinner.)

Mr. Moore (Suffolk words) calls it—a pancake.

Whan he is fulle in suche a dreme,
Right as a ship against the streme
He routeth with a sleepie noyse,
And broustleth as a monkes froyse,
When it is throwe into the panne.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

FRO'LICK, v.
FRO'LICK, n.
FRO'LICK, adj.
FRO'LICKLY.
FRO'LICKNESS.
FRO'LICKSOME.

Dut. Vrolick; Ger. Frölick. Ger. Froloken, præ gaudio exilire, to leap through joy; from fro, lætus, and loken, exultare, (Wachter.) The Ger. Fro, from the A. S. Freo, free, and laken, from A. S. Lic-an, ge-lik-an, to like, to please.

To leap through joy; to bound, to spring with joyfulness or gaiety; to be sportively gay or joyful, to play gay or sportive tricks.

I set aside to tell the restlesse toyle,
The mangled corps, the lamed limbs at last,
The short'ned yeares by fret of feuer's foyle,
The smoothest skinne with skabbes and skarres disgrast,
The frolicke fauour frounst and foule defast.
Gascoigne. The Fruites of Warre.

The shag hair'd Satyres, and the tripping Fawnes;
With all the troope that frolicke on the lawnes,
Would come and gaze on him, as who should say
They had not seen his like this many a day.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 2.

King. These words, these deeds, become thy person well,
But now, knight marshal, frolick with thy king,
For 'tis thy son that wins this battle's prize.
Anonymous. Spanish Tragedy, Act i.

Now shepherds lay their winter weeds away,
And in neat jackets minsen on the plaine,
And at the rivers fishing day by day,
Now who so frolic as the shepherd swaines.
Drayton, Ecl. 7.

These now shall be refresh't; while the bold drumme
Strikes up his frolick, through the hall they come.
Corbet. To the Lord Mordant.

——Two as noble swains
As ever kept on the Elysian plains,
First by their signs attention having won,
Thus they the revels frolicly begun.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymphal 3.

Coming to see you, I was set upon;
I and my men, as we were singing frolickly,
Not dreaming of an ambush of base rogues.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Progress, Act ii. sc. 1.

Mirth, jollity, frolickness of youth, as you call them.
Goodwin. Works, vol v. p. 199.

Now, as fame does report, a young duke keeps a court,
One that pleases his fancy with frolicksome sport.
Percy. Reliques, vol. i. p. 255. The Frolicksome Duke.

Even in our own case, (upon any disastrous occurrence to ourselves) it would not be seemly to frollick it thus: it would signify want of due regard to the frowns of God, and the strokes of his hand.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 14.

Thus whilst Belshazzar was gulping down his frolick cups and taking his fill of earthly pleasures, there appears but an hand writing upon the wall, and the man presently falls a trembling.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 137.

Make 'em an appointment 'twixt jest and earnest; 'twill look like a frolick, and that you know 's a very good thing to save a woman's blushes.
Vanbrugh. The Provok'd Wife, Act iii.

See how the world its veterans rewards;
A youth of frolics, an old age of cards.
Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 2.

There is another affection nearly related to this, which is, a gay frolicksome delight in what is injurious to others; a sort of wanton mischievousness and pleasure in what is defective, a passion which instead of being restrained, is usually encouraged in children.
Shaftesbury. An Enquiry concerning Virtue, b. ii. pt. ii. s. 3.

While many a pastime circled in the shade,
The young contending as the old survey'd;
And many a gambol frolick'd o'er the ground;
And slights of art, and feats of strength went round.
Goldsmith. Deserted Village.

Now may each nymph, and frolick swain,
O'er mountain steep, or level plain,
Court buxom health, while jocund horn
Bids echo wake the sluggard morn.
Lloyd. Arcadia, sc. 2.

We may be led by our own curiosity, or inclined to gratify the curiosity of others, in seeing how far the capriciousness of wanton wit can go in its frolics towards perplexing the plainest and most evident of useful truths.—Warburton. Of Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temple, b ii. c. 1.

As they say the first Brutus, suspected of treason,
With madness disguis'd the bright lustre of reason,
So she, with the frolicsome shows she puts on,
Would cover the wisdom must one day be shown
Boyse. To Hilaria

FROM. } A. S. Fram, fra: a, abs, ex, de,
FRO. } (Somner.) In Ger. Fram, the significations of which Wachter undertakes to settle; and he says that Fram signifies, 1st. Motum de loco. motion from a place; whence the A. S. Fram-fleon, aufugere, procul fugere, to fly from, to fly far. 2d. Absentiam a loco, absence from a place; whence the A. S. Fram-standan, abstare, to stand from. 3d. Fram is an adverb of order, signifying prae; whence, he observes, the Goth. and A. S. Fruma, principium, beginning.

Harris says, that from denotes the detached relation of body, as when we say, "These figs came from Turkey. So as to motion and rest, only with this difference, that here the preposition varies its character with the verb. Thus, if we say, 'That lamp hangs from the ceiling;' the preposition from assumes the character of quiescence. But if we say, 'That lamp is falling from the ceiling;' the preposition in such case assumes a character of motion," (Hermes, b. ii. c. 3.)

Tooke denies that from (or indeed any other word) can have so versatile a character as that ascribed to it by Wachter and Harris; and asserts this preposition to be that same Gothic and A. S. noun Frum or fruma, which Wachter conceives to be itself derived from the preposition; and he considers the word, (though used as a preposition,) to have one clear, uniform, and unequivocal meaning, viz. beginning, origin, source, fountain, author. He further proceeds to show, that the characters of quiescence and motion, attributed to the preposition, belong to the respective verbs hang and fall. Johnson, he observes, gives seventy different instances of the use of from, and twenty different meanings; a few of these instances it will be proper to explain, whence it will appear, that Johnson has transferred to the preposition the meaning of some other word in the sentence.

Thus, "to take from your power, to take from your side, to draw from a case;" privation, (ascribed to the preposition) is expressed by the verbs take and draw.

"From steel receives;" reception, by the verb receives.

"From his secret cloud uttered;" emission, by the verb utter.

"To start from the goal, to free from jealousy;" separation and exemption, by the verbs start and free.

From refers to time as well as motion.

From South to North he ys long eigte hondred myle
R. Gloucester, p. 1.

Fro the by gynnyng of the world, to the tyme that now is,
Sene ages ther habbeth y be, as sene tyme y wys,
The firste age and tyme was from our firste fader Adam
To Noe. Id. p. 91.

To sauy vs synneuol men from the Deuele's poer.
Id. p. 173.

& Sir Lowys therfore bad him tille Ingland go,
To praye Henry restore tho tounes he tok him fro.
R. Brunne, p. 99.

If we knowlechen oure synnes, he is feithful and iust that he forgyue to us oure synnes, and clense us fro al wickidneese.—Wiclif. 1 Jon, c. 1.

He knew wel alle the havens, as they were,
Fro Gotland to the Cape de Finistere,
And every creke in Bretagne and in Spaine.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 410.

Ever fro the higher degree that man falleth, the more is he thral, and more to God and to the world vile and abhominable.—Id. The Persones Tale.

The chaffe is take from the corne.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

For I was further fro my loue
Than erthe is from the heauen aboue. Id. Ib.

And when the seas waxe calme againe,
To chase from me annoye,
My doutful hope doth cause me plaine:
So drede cuts off my ioye.
Surrey. Complaint of the Absence of her Louer, &c.

In silence then, yshrouding him from sight
But dayes twise fiue he whisted, and refused
To death by speche to further any wight.
Id. Virgile Æneis, b. ii.

He that endures for what his conscience knows
Not to be ill, doth from a patience high
Look only on the cause wherto he owes
Those sufferings, not on his misery:
The more h' endures, the more his glory grows.
Which never grows from imbecility.
Daniel. To Henry Wriothesly.

—— So from the root
Springs lighter the green stalk, from thence the leaves
More aerie, last the bright consummate floure
Spirits odorous breathes. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

—— That fixt mind
And high disdain, from sence of injur'd merit,
That with the mightiest rais'd me to contend.—Id. Ib. b. i.

—— To bow and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deifie his power,
Who from the terrour of this arm so late
Doubted his empire,—that were low indeed.—Id. Ib.

For heav'nly mindes from such distempers foule
Are ever cleer. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

Some few, whose lamp shone brighter, have been led
From cause to cause, to Nature's secret head;
And found, that one first principle must be:
But what, or who, that universal He!
Dryden. Religio-Laici.

But errs not Nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns when livid deaths descend,
When earthquakes swallow, or when tempests sweep,
Towns to one grave, whole nations to the deep!
Pope. Essay on Man, Ess. 1.

Thus then to man the voice of Nature spake—
"Go, from the creatures thy instructions take:
Learn from the birds what food the thickets yield;
Learn from the beasts the physic of the field;
Thy arts of building from the bee receive;
Learn of the mole to plough, the worms to weave"
Id. Ib. Ess. 3.

God loves from whole to parts. but human soul
Must rise from individual to the whole.—Id. Ib. Ess. 4.

I cannot truckle to a fool of state,
Nor take a favour from the man I hate.
Churchill. Epistle to William Hogarth.

From labour health, from health contentment springs:
Contentment opes the source of every joy.
He envied not, he never thought of, kings;
Nor from those appetites sustain'd annoy,
That chance may frustrate, or indulgence cloy.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

—— Retreat
Cannot indeed to guilty man restore
Lost innocence, or cancel follies past;
But it has peace, and much secures the mind
From all assaults of evil. Cowper. The Task, b. iii.

FRONDA'TION. Fr. Fronde; Lat. Frons, frondis, a leaf, which Vossius derives from the Gr. Βρυ-ειν, pullulare, to put forth, to bud.

The example explains the usage.

Lastly, frondation or the taking off some of the luxuriant branches and sprayes, of such trees, especially whose leaves are profitable for cattle, is a kind of pruning.
Evelyn. A Discourse of Forest Trees, c. 28.

FRONT, v.
FRONT, n.
FRO'NTAL.
FRO'NTIER, n.
FRO'NTIER, adj.
FRO'NTIER, v.
FRO'NTLESS.
FRO'NTLET.

Fr. Front; It. Fronte; Sp. Frente; Lat. Frons, perhaps, says Vossius, from φροντις, quia frons cogitationum curarumque index. But Varro (he adds) ab oculorum foraminibus nominatam ait. Front is equivalent to the English—Fore,—the fore-part; the face. And to front, v. or affront, (qv.)—

To be, to stand with the front or fore-part to or towards, or opposed to; to be or stand in the front or fore-part; to oppose, to face.

Vor the Kyng Arture agen the fraunt he smot atte laste.
R. Gloucester, p. 185.

In her failed nothing, that I could gesse
One wise nor other, priuie nor perte;
A garrison she was, of all goodlinesse
To make a frountier for a louer's herte
Right yong and fresh.
Chaucer. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

Thus was the hore in sorie plight
And for all that a sterre white
Amiddes in hir front she had. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

He seeth hir front is large and playne,
Without frounce of any grayne. Id. Ib. b. vi.

He feared more the Flemynges than any other; and sent the Lord of Beauiewe to Mortayn, to kepe the frontiers agaynst Heynalt; and he sent many mē of war to Saynt Omers, to Ayre, and to Saynt Venaunt, and purueyed suffycyently for all the fortresses frontyng of Flanders.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 51.

The water was depe, and round about full of maryshes, so that no man coude passe but by a lytell way, so narowe, that two horses coude nat passe a front.
Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 57.

When they take their houses from off the cartes, the principal wife placeth her court on the west frontier, and so all the rest in their order: so that the last wife dwelleth upon the East frontier: and one of the said ladies courts is distant from another about a stone's cast.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 95.

Then he wrote to Sir Bertram of Clesquy, desyring him and his Bretōs to kepe fronter warr with the Kyng of Nauer, promyssyng to send hym people ynowe to fight agaynst the power of the Kyng of Nauer.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 219.

Such as stode in ye hinder partes of the battailes, were ordered to turn their faces from the frontwards, because, that beynge in a readynes eurye waye, the battailes in euery place should be of lyke force.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 90.

On high hills top I saw a stately frame,
An hundred cubits high by just assize,
With hundreth pilloure frontiny faire the same,
All wrought with diamond after Dorick wise.
Spenser. The Visions of Bellay.

First, Richmond rang'd his fights, on Oxford and bestows
The leading, with a band of strong and sinewy bows
Out of the army pick'd; the front of all the field.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

But if it be an old and inveterat paine of the head, then would there a frontale be made of the saide juice, tempered with barley floure and vinegre.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 13.

As touching the garden sorrell, there is a ilnament made thereof, which being applied in a manner of a frontall to the forehead cureth the distillation of the waterie humours to the eyes.—Id. Ib. b. xx. c. 21.

Part curb thir fierie steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels or fronted brigads form.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Gen. Where Spain and Portugal do jointly knit,
Their frontiers, leaning on each others bound,
There met our armies in their proud array.
Anonymous. Spanish Tragedy, Act i.

And so with readie minds and active bodies they breake through the frontier bankes over against them, whiles the enemies were amused on the fires that our men made.
Holland. Ammianus, p. 106.

Yet now that it is no more a border, nor frontired with enemies, why should such priviledges bee any more continued?—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

Hee is a narrow-minded man, that affects a triumph in any glorious study: but to triumph in a lye, and a lye themselves have forged, is frontless.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

—— But thee, thou frontless man,
We follow, and thy triumphs make, with bonfires of our bane. Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

And it shalbe as a token upon thine hande, and as frontlets betweene thine eyes, that the Lord brought us out of the land of Egypt by a mightie hand.
Bible, 1583. Exodus, xiii. 16.

The left wing of the king's fleet, flanked with the maine sea, was commaunded by Annibal. and Apollonius one of his galiants and courtiers led the right: so as now they had raunged their ships broad in a front-ranke.
Holland. Livie, p. 957.

Here, awful Newton, the dissolving clouds
Form, fronting on the sun, thy showery prism,
And to the sage instructed eye unfold
The various twine of light, by thee disclos'd
From the white mingling maze. Thomson. Spring.

When Æneas and Turnus stood fronting each other before the altar, Turnus looked dejected, and his colour faded in his face, as if he desponded of the victory before the fight.
Dryden. A Discourse on Epic Poetry.

Her sparkling eyes she still retains,
And teeth in good repair;
And her well furnish'd front disdains
To grace with borrow'd hair. Congreve. Doris.

And all the raging regiments restrain
In stated limits, that the swelling main
May not in triumph o'er the frontier ride
And through the land licentious spread its tide.
Blackmore. The Creation, b. i

But to return to the charge of Popery made against the church of England, it is certainly the most frontless, barefaced lie, and the most senseless calumny, that ever was dictated by the father of lies, or uttered by any of his sons.
South, vol. vi. Ser. 1.

In vain poor Nymph, to please our youthful sight
You sleep in cream and frontlets all the night,
Your face with patches soil, with paint repair,
Dress your gay gowns, and shade your foreign hair.
Parnell. To an Old Beauty.

This room was erected about the middle of White-Hall, running across from the Thames towards the Banquetting House, and fronting westward to the Privy Garden.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 2.

Here, there he points his threatening front, to suit
His first attack, wide waving to and fro
His angry tail, red rolls his eye's dilated grow.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1. s. 75.

Faith in the utmost frontier stands,
And Reason puts us in her hands,
But not till her commission giv'n
Is found authentic, and from heav'n.
Wilkie. The Rake & the Hermit.

The Athenian's [Socrates] modest irony was of another taste, and better suited to the decorum of conversation, than the Syrian's [Lucan] frontless buffoonery.
Hurd. On the Manner of Writing Dialogue, Pref.

But hills of milder air, that gently rise
O'er dewy dales, a fairer species boast,
Of shorter limb, and frontlet more ornate,
Such the Silurian. Dyer. The Fleece, b. I.

FRONTISPIECE. Fr. Fronti-spice, the frontispice or fore-front of a house, (Cotgrave.) It. and Sp. Frontispicio; Mid. Lat. Frontispicium, frontis inspectio, from Frons, the front or fore part, and specere, to see.

A view, sight, inspection of the front; the front-view; any thing viewed or seen in or at the front.

Thou'lt bear about a quire of wicked paper,
Defiled with sanctified rhimes,
And idols in the frontispiece.
Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act III. sc. 5.

But the greatest difficultie in this kind of worke, was about the verie frontispiece and maine lintle-tree which lay over the jambes or cheeks of the great door of the said temple.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 14.

When humbly on the royal babe we gaze,
The manly lines of a majestic face
Give awful joy. 'tis paradise to look
On the fair frontispiece of Nature's book.
Dryden. Britannia Redivivs.

The ev'ning on the frontispiece of heav'n
His mantle spreads with many colours gay.
Glover. On Sir Isaac Newton.

FRORE. } Mr. Todd, in his Spenser, (vol. i. p. 45,) calls Frorne, a passive part. of the verb to freeze. Frore (whence frorne) is more probably immediately from the Dut. Vroor; bevrooren, to freeze.

Frosted, frozen, rigid, stiff.

——— The parching air
Burns frore, and cold performs th' effect of fire
Milton. Paradise Lost, b iii.

My heart blood is well nigh frorne I feele.
Id. Shepheard's Calender. February.

Her up betwixt his rugged hands he rear'd,
And with his frory lips full softly kist,
Whiles the cold ysicles from his rough beard
Dropped adowne vpon her yuory brest
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iii. c. 8.

While she was young, she us'd with tender hand
The foaming steed with froary bit to steare,
To tilt and turney, wrestle in the sand,
To leaue with speed Atlanta in arreare.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b ii. s. 40.

——— When th' aged year
Inclines, and Boreas' spirit blusters frore,
Beware th' inclement heavens. J. Philips. Cider, b. II.

His beard, all white as spangles frore
That clothe Plinlimmon's forests hoar,
Down to his harp descending flow'd.
Warton. The Grave of King Arthur.

FROST.
FRO'STED.
FRO'STY.
FRO'STILY.
FRO'STINESS.
FRO'ZEN. } A. S. Frost; Dut. Vorst; Ger. Frost. "Frost (Tooke) is the past part. of frys-an, to freese, formed thus,—froased, fros'd, frost." See To FREEZE.

And so gret forst in wynter there com al so god,
That ther nas non so heuy charge of wayn, ne of other thyng,
That me ne mygte ouer grete wateres bothe lode & brynge.
R. Gloucester, p. 416.

——— And lente seedes alle
Aren nouht so worthy as whete. ne so wel mowen
In the feld with the forst. and hit freese longe.
Piers Ploughman, p. 211.

As colde as any froste now waxeth she.
Chaucer. The Legend of Hypermnestre.

And this was, as the bookes me remember,
The cold frosty season of December.
Id. Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,565.

No flower is so freshe, but frost can it deface;
No man so sure in any seate, but he may leese his place.
Gascoigne. Flowers.

Riding this daye six leagues to the Northwardes of Cape Race, the winde at North-North-West, with mist and frost, at noone the sunne appeared through the mist, so that I had the latitude in 67 degrees 29 minutes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 292.

The owle with feble sight
Lyes lurking in the leaues,
The sparrow in the frosty night
May shroude her in the eaues.
Incert. Auctors. That all things some time feel ease, &c.

Or finally for the great store of waters engendred in that frostie and colde climate, that the bankes are not able to holde them.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 27.

I sawe no sooner, how delight dyd dwell
Betweene those litle infantes eyes and thine,
But straight a sparkling cole of quicke desire,
Dyd kindle flame within my frozen heart.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

A fierie frost, a flame
that frozen is with ise.
A heavie burthen light to beare,
a vertue fraught with vice.
Turbervile. The Louer to Cupid for Mercie.

My Soul, Time posts away
And thou, yet in that frost
Which flow'r and fruit hath lost,
As if all here immortal were, dost stay.
Drummond. Flowers of Sion.

Courtling, I rather thou shouldst utterly
Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily:
When I am read, thou fain'st a weak applause.
B. Jonson. Epig. To Censorious Courtling.

Like as fond mothers use to send forth their daughters on frosting, early in cold mornings, (though into the midst of a vaporous and foggy ayre,) and whiles they striue for a colour loose their health.—Bp. Hall. A Censure of Travell, s. 3.

By that the welked Phœbus gan availe
His wearie waine; and now the frostie Night
Her mantle black through heaven gan overhaile.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. February.

The more she frieseth in her wilful pryde:
What then remaines but I to ashes burne,
And she to stones at length all frozen turne.
Id. son. 32.

Dal. ——— Lady, I return
But barren crops of early protestations,
Frost-bitten in the Spring of fruitless hopes.
Ford. Perkin Warbeck, Act iv. sc. 5.

O, roving Muse! recal that wond'rous year,
When Winter reign'd in bleak Britannia's air;
When hoary Thames, with frosted osiers crown'd,
Was three long moons in icy fetters bound.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii. v. 359.

And helpless Age with hoary, frosted head.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

What art thou, Frost? and whence are thy keen stores
Deriv'd, thou secret, all invading power,
Whom ev'n the illusive fluid cannot fly?
Thomson. Winter.

Restless, with these, through frosty night she goes,
Nor fears the cutting winds, nor heeds the snows.
Mainwaring. Ovid. Met. b. v.

But when the tedious twilight wears away,
And stars grow paler at th' approach of day,
The longing crowds to frozen mountains run,
Happy who first can see the glimmering sun.
Dryden. Prol. No. 14. To his Royal Highness.

How calm is my recess; and how the frost,
Raging abroad, and the rough wind endear
The silence and the warmth enjoy'd within.
Cowper. The Task, b. iv.

——— Is aught so fair
In all the dewy landscapes of the Spring,
The summer's noontide groves, the purple eve
At harvest home, or in the frosty moon
Glittering on some smooth sea, is aught so fair
As virtuous friendship?
Akenside. The Pleasures of Imagination, (1757.)

The evil consequence, which sometimes arises from the want of that timely intimation of danger, which pain gives, is known to the inhabitants of cold countries by the example of frost-bitten limbs.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

FROTH, v.
FROTH, s.
FRO'THY.
FRO'THINESS. } Sw. Fragga; Dan. Fraade. Ihre, Junius, and Skinner, content themselves with the etymology proposed by M. Casaubon; the Gr. Αφρος, spuma.

To throw or issue forth, froth or foam.
Frothy (met.)—insubstantial, vapid.

So that they march bumbast with buttred beere,
Like soppes of browesse puffed vp with froth,
Where inwardly they be but hollowe geere,
As weake as winde, which with one puffe vp goeth.
Gascoigne. Voyage to Hollande, an. 1572.

For that whiche is lightest in poyse or weight is best, also that, wherof cometh leest skymme or frothe, whan it doth boyle.—Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

By reason of this tenuity and continuity, when oyle doth froth or foame, it suffereth no wind or spirit to enter in.
Holland. Plutarch, p. 607.

Eng. Give me some drink.
Host. O, there's the Englishman.
Eng. Fill me a thousand pots, and froth 'em, froth 'em.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 6.

But drunke with frothes of pleasure,
Thirsts for praise above measure,
Imaginary treasure,
Which slowly comes, and flyes at every fit.
Stirling. Choruses to the Tragedy of Darius.

When hee [Protogenes] had done the dog in all parts to the contentment of his owne mind (and that ywis was a verie hard and rare matter with him) he could not satisfie and please himself in expressing the froth which fell from his mouth as hee panted and blowed almost windlesse with running.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 10.

Ulysses. ——— Much like to one
Who in a shipwrecke being cast upon
The frothy shores, and safe beholdes his mates
Equally cross'd by Neptune and the Fates.
Browne. The Inner Temple Masque.

If we survey the stile, or subiect matter of all our popular enterludes we shall discover them to bee either scurrilous, &c. or at the best but frothy, vaine, and friuolous.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. I. Act iii. sc. 1.

If the mind be full and embittered, it will assuredly have its vent, and like unsettled liquors, work over into froth and foulness.—South, vol. viii. Ser. 9.

Should I testify to such a one's face of the vanity of his conversation, and the profaneness and frothiness of his discourse, I should disoblige him for ever. I dare not do it. Dare not do it!—Id. Ib.

He swims luxuriant in the liquid plain,
And o'er his shoulder flows the waving mane:
He neighs, he snorts, he bears his head on high;
Before his ample chest the frothy waters fly.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b xi

She never knew the city damsel's art,
Whose frothy pertness charms the vacant art.
Falconer. Shipwreck, c. I.

The wild gas, the fixed air is plainly broke loose, but we ought to suspend our judgment until the first effervescence is a little subsided, till the liquor is cleared and until we see something deeper than the agitation of a troubled and frothy surface.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

FROUNCE, v.
FROUNCE, s.
FRO'UNCELESS. } Fr. Froncer, i.e. plisser et rider, to plait, to wrinkle, (Menage.) Salmasius says, Frontiam vulgo rugam aut plicam appellamus, a fronte, quæ rugis maximè contrahi solet et caperari.

To wrinkle, to contract or draw together as wrinkles, to ruffle up, to plait or twist, or fold; to froun, (qv.)

Her face frounced and forpined,
And both her hondes lorne fordwined.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

These words said she, and with the lappe of her garment, yplited in a frounce, she dried mine eyen that weren ful of the [illegible] of my wepings.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

——— Her flesh so tender
That with a brere small and tender
Men might it cleue, I dare well saie
Her forhedde frounceles all plaie.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Haue her min honde, I shall thee wedde:
And thus his trouth he leyth to wedde.
With that she frounceth vp the browe.
Gower. Con. A b i.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise:
Some pranke their ruffes, and others timely dight
Theyr gay attire. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

——— Why this is brave;
What Nymph can choicer presents have,
With dressing, braiding, flouncing, flow'ring,
All your jewels on me pouring.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

On the other side, the Commons frounced and stormed in these and such like tearmes. What should we live any longer? and why are we accounted cittizens?
Holland. Livie, p. 621.

The obscene studies of singing and dancing (pray mark his [Seneca's] epithite) doe possesse the effeminate: and to flounce and curle the haire, to become effeminate in speech and body, is the very patterne of our youth.
Prynne. Histrio-Mastix, pt. I. Act v. sc. 7.

Seb. Never perswade me, I will marry again;
What should I leave my state to, pins and pinking sticks,
To farthingals, and flounces?
Beaum. & Fletch. Mons. Thomas, Act iii. sc. 2.

FROUNCE. A disease among hawks; when a dirty white foam gathers in wrinkles about the mouth and palate.

From the Fr. Froncer, rugare, complicare. See FROUNCE, ante.

The hawke had no tyst
To come to his fyst,
She loked as she had the fronce.
Skelton. Were the Hawke.

FRO'UZY. } The Glossarist to Spenser says, Fro'wy. } "Mustie or mossie." Perhaps from the Dut. Frow, a woman; in the North, frow is applied to an idle, dirty woman, (Grose.) Dr. Jamieson says,—a lusty woman. See Frow.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,
they soone might be corrupted:
Or like not of the frowie fede,
or with the weeds be glutted.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. July.

Here pettycoats in frowzy heaps.
Swift. The Lady's Dressing-room.

Here frouzy housewives clear their loaded reins.
Pitt. Imitation of Spenser.

FRO'WARD. } From A. S. Fram-weard,
Fro'wardly. } (aversus, morosus,) averse or
Fro'wardness. } averted, and therefore morose; opposed to—toward, towardly, (Skinner.) Averse or perverse; morose.

Whan I began my prluitie
To Bialacoil all for to tell,
Whom I ne founde froward refell
But toke agree all whole my plaie.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

So [youthe] is froward from sadnesse. Id. Ib.

Oure language is so rustye
So cankered and so ful
Of frowardes and so dul,
That if I wold apply
To write ordinately,
I wot not where to finde
Termes to serue my minde.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

Mine old dere enemy, my froward maister,
Afore that quene I causde to be acited,
Which holdeth the diuine part of our nature;
That like as golde in fire he mought be tryed.
Wyat. Complaint upon Loue.

And albeit they frowardly mayntayne that the laitee ought to receue both kyndes.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1383.

And [Clytus] goyng further & further, not only throughe dronkennesse, but euen by a frowardnesse of a contencious mynde, at length sayed, If wee must dye through thee, Clytus is ye firste?—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 210.

Yet shall he long time warre with happy speed,
And with great honoure many battles try:
But at the last, to th' importunity
Of froward fortune shall be forst to yeeld.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

This force left off that doth to us belong,
Will in opinion lessen our offence:
Men are not ever incident to loss,
When Fortune seems them frowardly to cross.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

To whom (halfe weeping) shee thus answered:
That she her dearest sonne Cupido sought,
Who in his frowardnes from her was fled:
That she repented sore, to haue him angered.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

Thus my Patroclus in his grief appears:
Thus, like a froward girl, profuse of tears.
Yalden. Patroclus's Request.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother, how many indignities does he pass by, and how many affronts does he put at our hands: because his love is invincible, and his friendship unchangeable.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 2.

It is nothing but a little sally of anger, like the frowardness of peevish children, who, when they cannot get all they would have, are resolved to take nothing.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

FROWN, v. } Fr. Froncer, to contract or Frown, n. } wrinkle the forehead, from the Fro'wner. } Lat. Frons. See Frounce.
Fro'wnful. } To contract or draw together,
Fro'wning, n. } (sc.) the forehead, the brow.
Fro'wningly. }

And eke whan I say ya, ye say not nay,
Neither by word ne frowning countenance:
Swere this, and here I swere our alliance.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8232.

Your grene eyen frowning and not glad.
Id. Balade. The Discriuing of a Faire Ladie.

For all to true it is that prouerbe sayth:
Where hedge is lowe, that euery man treads downe,
And friendship failes when fortune list to frowne.
Gascoigne. Weedes. The Fruite of Petio.

What needes this frowning face?
what means your looke so coye?
Is all this for a ring,
a trifle and a toye?
Turbervile. To a Gentlewoman from whome he looke a Ring.

That is to wete, entier loue instede of hatred: for bitter frowning, godly ioye & lightnes of hearte, for discorde, peace.
Udal. Luke, c. 5.

Peruerting crimes he checks with angry frownes,
Straight leuell'd vertues he rewards with crownes.
Beaumont. Ausonius, Idyll 16.

For now again upon them frowningly
Stands Pow'r with Fortune, trampling on their States,
And brands them with the marks of infamy,
Rebellions, treasons, and assassinates.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

But as together in a bed they lay,
The younger had a dream at break of day.
A man he thought stood frowning at his side
Who warn'd him for his safety to provide,
Nor put to sea, but safe on shore abide.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The Almighty Thunderer with a frown replies,
That clouds the world and blackens half the skies.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. viii.

As long as he stays, I will seem to whisper with you and look frowningly upon you.
State Trials, an. 1682. Lord Grey & Others.

Boy! let your liquid ruby flow,
And bid thy pensive heart be glad
Whate'er the frowning zealots say.
Jones. Arcadia. A Persian Song of Hafiz.

Meanwhile beneath the frown of angry heav'n,
Unworthy ev'ry boon its smile had given,
Involv'd in error's cloud, and scorn'd of light,
The guilty empire sunk.
Mason. Fresnoy's Art of Painting.

Observe His mild, but penetrating look;
Those bearded Sages poring o'er their book;
That meek old Priest, with placid face of joy,
That Pharisaic frowner at the Boy.
Byrom. Christ among the Doctors.

Like thy fair offspring, misapply'd,
Far other purpose they supply;
The murderer's burning cheek to hide,
And on his frownful temples die.
Langhorne. The Laurel and the Reed.

FRU'BBISH. See Furbish.

——— Hang your bread and water,
I'le make you young again, believe that, lady.
I will so frubbish you.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act III. sc. 1.

FRU'CTIFY, v. } Fr. Fructifier; It. Fruttare; Sp. Frutificar; Lat. Fructus, from Frui; and frui is a word—quod pertinet ad omnia, unde utilitatem capere est: from the Gr. Φορος, useful; and this, from Φερειν, to bear, (Vossius.)
Fructifica'tion. }
Fructi'ferous. }
Fru'ctifying, n. }
Fru'ctuary. }
Fructua'tion. }
Fru'ctuous. }

To bear or cause to bear, or bring forth or produce; to fertilize, to make or render productive, profitable, useful.

Fructified oliue of foiles (leaves) faire and thicke,
And redolent Cedre most dere worthy digned.
Chaucer. A Balade of our Ladie.

Telleth, quod he, your meditatioun,
But hasteth you, the sonne wol adoun,
Beth fructuous, and that in litel space,
And to do wel God sende you his grace.
Id. The Persones Prologue, v. 17,359.

Forsoth, that been tho, that with thornes, and prickings of talentes of affections, which that been nothyng fructuous nor profitable, distroien the corne, plentuous of fruicte of reason.—Id. Boecius, b. i.

For theee be they, which with the fruitlesse thornes of affections doe kill the fruitful crop of reason, and doe accustome men to sicknesse, and not free them.
Boetius. Philosophical Comfort, b. i. p. 3.

And in the sixt of Sainct John sayeth his worde is spirite and lyfe, so as by the teaching of Christ, spirite and lyfe maye fal vpon noughty men, although for theire malice it taineth not nor fructifieth not in them.
Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol. 78.

Rain water appearing pure and empty, is full of seminal principles, and carrieth vital atoms of plants and animals in it, which have not perished in the great circulation of nature; as may be discovered from several insects generated in rain water, from the prevalent fructification of plants thereby.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 21.

She thinks that babes proceed from mingling eyes,
Or Heav'n from neighbourhood increase allows,
As palm, and the marmora fructifies:
Or they are got by closse exchanging vows.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 7.

You have then, God's calling for his fruits in the time of harvest, sending his mowers into the field, his strict requiring and earnest expecting the plentifull issues of all his care, the growths and fructifyings of his grace.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 471.

In sum, at last we ought to determine that kings are not proprietors, nor fructuaries, but onely administratours; and since it is so, that verily they can much lesse attribute to themselues the propriety and profits of every man's private estate, or of the publicke wealth which belong to every town.
Prynne. Treachery & Disloyalty, pt. iv. p 170.

If water were of the oun nature fructuous, it must needs follow, that it self alone, and at all times, should be able to produce fruit.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 812.

Some experiments may be fitly enough called luciferous, and others fructiferous.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 423.

Altho' it be the heat and influence of the sun, which by God's blessing upon it, causeth the earth to fructify; yet it is the earth it self that bringeth forth herbs meet for them by whom it is dressed.—Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 103.

Knowing with what superabundant population the first fructuation of an advancing society is loaded.
Pownall. On Antiquity, (1782.) p. 60.

——— So rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'er abound.
J. Philips. Cider, b. i.

That part of the cane which shoots up into the fructification, is called by planters its arrow, having been probably used for that purpose by the Indians.
Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. i. Note.

FRU'GAL. } Fr. Frugalité; It. Frugalità;
Fru'gally. } Sp. Frugalidad, from Frugi, (see Frugality. } Fructify.) Frugi is—propriè, unde frugem possis habere, sive quo frui queas, (Vossius.) Also applied to one, who was fruitful or serviceable to himself or others, by his thrift; and thus,— Thrifty, husbanding, or careful of, his stores; temperate in the use of them; economical.

The father was more giuen to frugalitye, and the sonne more to ryotousnesse.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 49.

Captaine Timotheus (having for a time been at a sober and frugall scholar's supper, in the Academy with Plato) said that they who supped with Plato were merry, and well appaied the next day after.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 505.

He that cleareth by degrees, induceth a habit of frugality, and gaineth as well upon his minde, as upon his estate.
Bacon. Ess. Of Expence.

New men which were often taken out of free townes, colonies, and prouinces, and chosen to be senators, brought in with them the frugalitie which they had vsed before in their own houses.—Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 81.

But Plato seemed too frugally politick, who allowed no larger monument then would contain four heroick verses, and designed the most barren ground for sepulture.
Brown. Urn Burial, c. 5

Yet, labouring well his little spot of ground,
Some scattering pot-herbs here and there he found.
Which cultivated with his daily care
And bruis'd with vervain were his frugal fare.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

'Tis madness, not frugality, prepares
A vast excess of wealth for squand'ring heirs.
King. Imitation of Horace, b. i. Ep. 5.

That part of the Shows [yearly Panegyricks] being frugally abolished, the employment of City Poet ceased: so that upon Settle's demise there was no successor to that place.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. i. Note.

She [Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas] asserts, that Lady Elizabeth Dryden, after her husband's death, took a small house in Sherrard-street, and that she had wherewithal to live frugally genteel: which, according to her account, was eighty pounds a year.—Malone. Life of Dryden.

Say, what is now th' ambition of the great?
Is it to raise their Country's sinking state;
Her load of debt to ease by frugal care,
Her trade to guard, her harass'd poor to spare.
Littleton. To Mr. Glover.

I call it her ill policy, for unless it were rather owing to her excessive frugality one can hardly help thinking she designed to perpetuate the Irish distractions.
Hurd. On the Age of Elizabeth.

FRUGI'FEROUS. Lat. Frugifer, from frux, frugis, fruit, and ferre, to bear. See Fructify.
Bearing or bringing forth, fruit.

And God said, behold I give you every frugiferous herb which is upon the face of the earth.
More. The Literal Cabbala, c. 1. p 9.

FRUIT, v.
FRUIT, n.
FRU'ITAGE.
FRU'ITERER.
FRU'ITERY.
FRU'ITFUL.
FRU'ITFULLY.
FRU'ITFULNESS.
FRU'ITION.
FRU'ITIVE.
FRU'ITLESS.
FRU'ITLESSLY.
FRU'ITLESSNESS.

Fr. Fruict; It. Frutta, frutto; Sp. Frutto, from the Lat. Fructus, from Frui. See FRUCTIFY.

To bear or bring forth or produce.

The noun; that which is borne or produced; and thus, an effect or consequence, whether a benefit or the reverse.

Fruition,—the possession, use or enjoyment, of the fruit; and, generally, enjoyment.

Fruitestere,—(in Chaucer,) a female seller of fruit, (Tyrwhitt.)

Tho he say that feldes were fol of corne echon,
Al the contreye fol of frut whan he mygt mest harm do,
He let gadery hys knygtes & hys squyers al so.
R. Gloucester, p. 380.

——— And here with ich kepe
The frut of this faire tree.—Piers Ploughman, p. 305.

But whanne the erbe was growid and maad fruyt, thanne the taris apperiden.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 13.

When the blade was sprong vp and had brought forth frute, then appeared the tares also.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And with hire finger a signe made she,
That Damian shuld climbe up on a tre
That charged was with fruit, and up he went.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,085.

And right anon in comen tombesteres
Fetis and smale, and yong fruitesteres,
Singers with harpes.—Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 13,413.

And this is fruitful penance ayenst the three thinges, in which we wrathen our Lord Jesu Christ.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Of whome such impes did spring,
such fruite began to grow,
Such issue did proceede as we them by their braunches know.
Turbervile. Upon the Death of Elizabeth Arhundle.

And they wanne theyr stronge cyties, and a fat lande, and toke possession of houses that wer full of all maner goodes, welles dygged oute, vyneyardes, oylegardens, and many fruitful trees.—Bible, 1551. Nehemiah.

This countrey beinge fruitefull and aboundante of all thinges was taken by the Scithians, which possessinge parte of Asia and Europe, be troublous neighbours to them bothe.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 140.

By welles, floudes, ryuers, and springes, are vnderstande, the helpes, consolacions, and cofortes of God, and the fertilitie and fruitfulnes of the Holy Ghoste.
Bible, 1551. Psalm 36. Note c.

But the place is not so muche to be wondered at for the fruitfulnesse, as for the colenesse thereof.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 138.

Then in this wreatched vale our lyef I lothed playne,
When I beheld our fruitles paynes to compasse pleasures vayne.
Surrey. Ecclesiastes, c. 2.

He praieth God to giue him yt fruitiō of yt thing cōtinually which he had taken frō him but for a certaine space.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 3.

We departed herehence the 8th of June, and followed our course between West and North-West, vntill the 4th of July: all which time we had no night, but that easily, and without any impediment we had when we were so disposed, the fruition of our bookes, and other pleasures to passe away the time.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 33.

This ambassadour was sent for home in post haste, before he had receiued half the noble entertainment that was prepared for him, so that hee had but the fruition of the first banketting house.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 1134. Talk betweene the King and the French Ambassador, (1546.)

So we have seene the kernel of a well fruited plant degenerate into that crab, or willow, which gave the originall to his stock.—Bp. Hall. Cont. Manasse.

For that, which others hardly could acquire,
With lose of thousand liues and endlesse paine,
Is heap'd on him euen by their owne desire,
That thirst t' enioy the fruites of his blest raigne.
Stirling. Written to his Majesty.

[He may as well ask] why thou usest the influencies of heaven to fruiten the earth.
Bp. Hall. Cont. The Resurrection.

There are sundry other ornaments likewise belonging to the freeze, such as encarpa, festoons, and frutages.
Evelyn. Of Architecte & Architecture.

In Naples a common fruiterer hath raised such an insurrection, that they say above sixty men have been slain already upon the streets of that city alone.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 1.

We have forgot the artichoke.
Child. ——— No, sir.
I have a fruiterer, with a cold, red nose,
Like a blue fig, performs it.
B. Jonson. Neptune's Triumph.

But th' earth herself, of her owne motion,
Out of her fruitfull bosome made to growe
Most daintie trees, that, shooting up anon,
Did seeme to bow their bloosming heads full lowe
For homage unto her, and like a throne did show.
Spenser. Faerie Queene. Of Mutabilitie, c. 7.

You haue manie opportunities to cut him off: if you will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

The ioyes whereof and happy fruitfulness,
Such as he saw, she gan him lay before,
And all, though pleasaunt, yet she made much more.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

Whose happy and heaven-making company
Might I enjoy to Libia's continent,
Were blest fruition, and not banishment.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

Contemplation, is a fruitive possession of verities, which flowers the minde doth no longer gather or collect, but rather hold in her hand ready made up in nosegays that she is smelling to.—Mountague. Dev. Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 21. s. 4.

I perceive the soul spotted with the least defect, accounts it [purgatorie] an indulgent grace, as I have said, not making (in some respect) any reckonning of it compared with the impedemental stain, which intercepts her fruitive love.
Id. Ib. pt. ii. Treat. 7. s. 2.

Here also sprong that goodly golden fruit,
With which Acontius got his louer trow,
Whom he had long time sought with fruitlesse suit.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Since therefore after this fruit, curiosity fruitlesly enquireth, and confidence blindly determineth, we shall surcease our inquisition.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vii. c. 1.

It is no marvill if those that mocke at goodnesse, be plagued with continuall fruitlessnesse.
Bp. Hall. Cont. Mephibosheth & Ziba.

Upon the act of parliament that granted the king the first fruits and tenths of all spiritual preferments, commissioners (as was said) were appointed and sent forth to all parts, throughout all the dioceses, to take a just account of all the true yearly values of them.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. an. 1535.

Above, beneath, around his [Tantalus] hapless head,
Trees of all kinds delicious fruitage spread.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

——— Oft notwithstanding all thy care
To help thy plants, when the small fruitery seems
Exempt from ills, an oriental blast
Disastrous flies. J. Philips. Cider, b. ii.

These fruitful seeds within your mind they sow'd;
'Twas yours t' improve the talent they bestow'd.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

And these are the words, which if God will graciously afford us his help and presence, we may fruitfully entertain ourselves with, upon this sad occasion at this time. You will find them in John xi. 16.
Howe. Funeral Sermon on the Death of Dr. Bates.

The Goddess, present at the match she made,
So bless'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharp'ned either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

The prayer for departed souls was changed from what it had been. It was formerly in these words: ye shall pray for the soule that be departed, abiding the mercy of Almighty God, that it may please him, the rather at the contemplation of our prayers to grant them the fruition of his prescience.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, (1547.)

He drew his mighty fregates all before,
On which the foe his fruitless force employes:
His weak ones deep into his reer he bore,
Remote from guns, as sick men are from noise.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 91.

Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the Priestess, by those words, design'd.
Id. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

Bid Dolius quick attend, the faithful slave
Whom to my nuptial train Icarius gave,
To tend the fruit-groves.—Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv.

We heartily wish you well; wish to see you reap the fruit of your virtue, and to live in a republic, that may give you the opportunity not only to revive, but to increase the honor and memory of the two noble families from which you descend.—Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

Now loaded trees resign their annual store,
And on the ground the mellow fruitage pour.
Beattie, Past. 7.

We curse not wine; the vile excess we blame,
More fruitful than the accumulated board,
Of pain and misery.
Armstrong. Art of Preserving Health, b. ii.

Sandrart adds, that it is incredible what a quantity of drawings of this master Lord Arundel had collected, and surprizing, the fruitfulness of Holbein's invention, his quickness of execution and industry in performing so much.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

Desire then gave the glugs [of the bottle] their sweetness, for Sganarelle was in a state of desire, not of fruition, when he solaced himself with their music, the liquor having not yet entred his lips.
Search. Light of Nature, vol. i. pt. i. c. 6.

Revolving seasons, fruitless as they pass,
See it an unreform'd and idle mass:
Without a soul t' invite the tiller's care,
Or blade, that might redeem it from despair.
Cowper. Heroism.

One can scarcely read such accounts, as these, without condemning the vain efforts of dying Patriotism, which laboured so fruitlessly, may one not almost say, so weakly? to protract the liberty of such a People.
Hurd. Notes to the Epistle to Augustus.

The similar instances, proposed for their [men's] examination, show as well the absurdity of their complaints against order, as the fruitlessness of their enquiries into the arcana of the Godhead.—Warburton. A Commen. on Essay on Man.

For Sir William [Temple] it is just to observe, that his ideas centred in a fruit-garden.—Walpole. On Gardening.

FRU'MENT. } Minshew says,—Frumentie,
FRU'MENTY. } pottage made of wheat. Fr. Froumentée; Sp. Frumentada; Lat. Frumentum,—a frumento, of which it is made.

An honourable feest in the great halle of Westmynster was kepte, where the kynge syttynge in his astate, was serued with iii. courses, as herevnder ensuyth. Frument with venyson, &c.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1530.

In Fraunce and Spaine, bruers steep their wheat or frument in water, and mash it for their drinke of divers sorts.
Holland. Pliny, b. xviii. c. 7.

And say that the ground be not altogether so fat, yet it may be ordered so, that it be ever bearing by turns in this sort, that after the frumentie or spike corn be taken off, there be pulse sowed three times, one after another.
Id. Ib. b. xviii. c. 23

The fifth book is of pease-porridge; under which are included frumetary, water gruel, &c.
King. Art of Cookery, Let. 9.

FRUMP, v. } The etymology of this word,
FRUMP, n. } so common among our elder writers, must be considered as uncertain. Skinner transcribes from Minshew, who derives from the Ger. Krumb, crooked; or from crumpelen or rumpelen, (q.d. ferump, see F.) to turn up the nose, as those use who scoff or deride. In his second edition, Minshew decides for the latter. The Ger. Krumm, crooked; krumpen, to crook, to contract, to wrinkle, is cognate with the Eng. Crumple. Frump, whatever may have been its origin, and frampold, are probably connected.

To mock, to gibe, to flout, to scoff.

It appeareth that they which vtterly can be pleasaunt, and when time serueth can giue a merie answere, or vse a nipping taunt, shall be able to abashe a right worthie man, and make him at his wittes ende, through the sodaine quicke and vnlooked frumpe giuen.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 137.

They are all būgelers in cōparison of you, & I think the best of them may thank you for all that he hath but yet, sir, your cūning was such that you brought a shilling to ninepence, nay to sixepence, and a groat to twopence,—and so gaue him a frumpe euen to his face, because he sawe him so foolish.—Id. Ib. p. 188.

Cassius Chorea, Tribune of the Pretorian Cohort, took upon him to play the first part of this action: even hee, who being now farre stept in yeeres, Caius was wont to frumm and flout in most opprobrious termes as a wanton and effeminate person.—Holland. Suetonius, p. 149.

Those [lawyers] I meane, who having broken loose ouer soone from the grammer schoole, run to and fro in all corners studying for scoffes, and frumping flouts, not for meet pleas to help any cause.—Id. Ammianus, p. 366.

Whereat all about the King were mightily offended, and thought it was too broad a jest and frumpe intollerable.
Id. Plutarch, p. 103.

He [Fabius Maximus] nothing at all regarding such words, persisted still continually in his designes and councels particular to himself, saying thus to his friends, that he who would not abide a scoffe, but feared frumps and reviling words, was a greater coward then he who fled before his enemy.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 353.

And from the most of them the Embassadors were dismissed and sent away, with this frumpe and demand, whether they had set up a sanctuarie or lawlesse place for women to? For that were alone, and a fit marriage indeed to sort together.—Id. Livie, p. 8.

By how much I saw them taking little thought of their own injuries, I must confess I took it as my part the less to endure that my respected friends, through their own unnecessary patience, should lie thus at the mercy of a coy flurting stile; to be girded with frumps and curtall gibes, by one who makes sentences by the statute, as if all above three inches long were confiscate.

Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

FRUSH. As the "Fr. Froisser, —to crush, burst or break in pieces; also, to crush, quash, bruise; also, to dash, knock or clatter together," (Cotgrave.) See Froiss. The Fr. Froisser is by Caseneuve derived from fressus, the past part. of frendere, to bruise; and by Menage, with less plausibility, from franyere, to break.

And consequently all those, that they encoûtred, at that the furste charge, they frushed or sonke them, with suche strengthe, that they gaue not the ennemys leasure to ioyne themselfe agayne together.—Nicolls. Thucydides, fol. 66.

He shewed also to the abouenamed Albertus, and many other credible persones, that the Quene of Heauen came to hym that night with a maruelouse fragrant odour, refreshing all his mẽbres that were bruised and frushed with that feuer, and promised hym, that he should not vtterly dye.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 9.

Who, lying all to frusshed thus,
The sonne of Jove did bring
His cruell iades, that soone deuoure
Their more than cruell king.

Warner. Albion's England, b. ii. c. 12.

——— I like thy armour well,
Ile frush it, and vnlocke the riuets all,
But Ile be maister of it.

Shakespeare. Troyl. & Cress. Act v. sc. 6.

FRU'STRATE, v. FRU'STRATE, adj. FRUSTRA'NEOUS. FRU'STRATING, n. FRUSTRA'TION. FRU'STRATORY. } Fr. Frustrer; Lat. Frustrare, from frustra, which Vossius thinks is from fraudare, quia quod frustra sit, fraudat desiderium ejus, qui id facit. —Frustratory is used by Cotgrave.

To disappoint, to render fruitless, to avoid or annul; to deceive, defraud, balk or beguile,—the hopes or expectations.

And for a counterfayte and a false glory; they frustrate and defeact themselues of that blessed rewarde, whiche God would haue geuen them, yf they had offered in his sight the pure and sincere oblacion of their prayers.—Udal. Matt. c. 26.

And the peynes before taken with the time therein spente, is vtterly frustrate.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 10.

It is manifestly prouided, that the merchants of the Hans towns, vnder the colour of their priuiledges in England, shall not vpon paine of the perpetuall frustration and revocation of the foresayd priuiledges receiue any stranger of any other towne in their liberties, by whom the King's custom may in any sort be withholden or diminished.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 175.

For which attempt, (though it were frustrated
By their recov'ry, who were got again)
Aumarle (now Duke of York) is challenged
By his own sister to have laid that train.

Daniel. Civil Wars, b. iv.

——— But some God hath fill'd
Our frustrate sayles; defeating what we will'd.

Chapman. Hymn to Apollo.

——— 'Tis your rare temper
So wins upon me, that I would not live
(If that by honest arts I can prevent it)
To see your hopes made frustrate.

Massinger. The Great Duke of Florence, Act iii. sc. 1.

It was God's great design to advance grace, and therefore he calls their stepping aside from the doctrine thereof, a frustrating of the grace of God, Gal. ii. ult. which men do by mingling any thing with it: it is a frustrating of the grace of God, because it frustrateth the great design of God, for to frustrate is to make void a design.

Goodwin. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 205.

Though at first the eye preconceiv'd the way (over a plain) shorter, because it was undivided, yet if upon this supposition, an opinion possesse the imagination of a farre shorter space of ground than it proves to be, the frustrating of that vaine conceit makes it seem longer than the truth.

Bacon. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. vi. p. 298.

He breaks off the whole session, and dismisses them and their grievances with scorn and frustration.

Milton. An Answer to Eikon Basilikè.

But if subscribers may take the liberty of affixing their own sense to the public forms, in contradiction to the known sense of the imposers, all those ends are liable to be miserably defeated and frustrated.

Waterland. Works, vol. ii. p. 289.

The Trojan warrior, touch'd with timely fear,
On the rais'd orb to distance bore the spear:
The Greek, retreating, mourn d his frustrate blow,
And curs'd the treacherous lance that spar'd a foe.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xiii.

An exhortation is not frustrate, if a man be but able to come up to it partially, though not entirely and perfectly.

South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

And if God gives not repenting grace, there will be an hard heart, and a dry eye, maugre all the poor frustraneous endeavours of nature.—Id. vol. ix. Ser. 6.

Besides, the fruitless, frustraneous vanity of such an essay; for bring all the force of rhetorick in the world: yet vice never can be praised into virtue, a rotten thing cannot be painted sound.—Id. vol. viii. Ser. 7.

Surely the frustration of their hopes, and the huge contrariety of these things to their beloved pre-convinced notions, could not but enrage them to the greatest disdain and rejection of his person and doctrine imaginable.

Id. vol. iii. Ser. 8.

In short all frustration in the first essays of a vicious course, is a baulk to the confidence of the bold undertaker.

Id. vol. iv. Ser. 4.

The constraint which their presence [the aged] will impose, and the aversion which their manners will create, if the one be constantly awful, and the other severe, tend to frustrate the effect of all their wisdom.—Blair, vol. i. Ser 12.

Is it to be supposed, that he should disappoint his creatures, and frustrate those very desires [of immortality] which he himself implanted.

Beattie. Moral Science, vol. i. App.

By asking, "How long, Lord? wilt thou be angry for ever?" she tacitly pleadeth his promise not to be so: she urgeth the shortness of man's life here below, the universality of the fatal sentence, the impossibility of avoiding death, and, if nothing farther was to happen, the frustration of the divine counsels concerning man

Bp. Horne. Com. on Psalms, Ps. 39.

FRU'TICANT. Lat. Fruticans, from Frutex, fruticis, fruit.

Bearing fruit, fruiting.

These we shall divide into the greater or more ceduous, fruticant, or shrubby.—Evelyn, Introd. s. 3.

FRY, v. FRY, n. } Fr. Frire; It. Friggere; Sp. Freyer; Lat. Frig-ere, from the Gr. φρυγ-ειν, which Vossius considers to be formed from the sound.

To dry, to parch, to heat;—applied to a particular mode of dressing or cooking victuals.

Bote hit be freesch fleesch othr fysch. fried othr ybake.

Piers Ploukmãn, p. 145.

But certainly I made folk swiche chere;
That in his owen grese I made him frie
For anger, and for very jelousie.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6069.

He that wyll nedes eat them [gourdes] must boyle them, roste them, or frye them.

Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii.

For still I spurr'd up his untam'd desire,
Then sitting in the charriot of the sun;
My blandishments were fewel to that fire
Wherein he fry'd.—Drayton. Legend of Pierce Gaveston.

His stoutness hid such torments long,
As els could none abyde,
Yea till the baine his bowels and
His very marrow fryde.

Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 13.

Sale. This came from
The Indies, and eats five crowns a day in fry,
Ox-livers, and brown paste.

Mayne. The City Match, Act iii. sc. 1.

Continual burning yet no fire or fuel,
Chill icy frosts in midst of summer's frying,
A hell most pleasing, and a heaven most cruel,
A death still living, and a life still dying

P. Fletcher. Contemnenti.

Perhaps no salt is thrown about the dish,
Or no fried parsley scatter'd on the fish,
Shall I in passion from my dinner fly,
And hopes of pardon to my cook deny.

King. The Art of Cookery.

Our gudgeons, taking opportunity of jumping after they are flowered, give occasion to the admirable remark of some persons' folly, when, to avoid the danger of the frying-pan, they leap into the fire.—King. The Art of Cookery.

At the top a fried liver and bacon was seen,
At the bottom was tripe in a swinging tureen.

Goldsmith. The Haunch of Venison.

FRY. Fr. Fray, the spawn of fish; frayer, to rub; also, to spawn as fishes. Menage, from fricatus, quia pisces affricatu coeunt. Skinner, from the Dan. Fraade, spuma, froth. Applied to—

A numerous progeny or race, or offspring; a swarm (particularly of small young fishes.)

From which attempts a floud of mischiefe flowes,
An heape of hurtes, a frie of foule deeares,
A flocke of feares, and thrals a thousand waies.

Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 56.

For the Romanes had ever the commons of Rome; they had alwayes the youth of Latium readie at hand, who still increas'd more and more the new frie, and daily grew in number to make supplie, & to repair and furnish out so many armies that were defeated.—Holland. Livie, p. 711.

What a fry of fools is here? I see 'tis treason to understand in this house.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Coronation, Act i. sc. 1.

I am vext, vext to the soul, will rid my house of this unchristen'd fry, and never ope my doors again.

Id. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act iii. sc. 1.

Be still in gravest company: and flye
The wanton rabble of the youngest frye.

F. Beaumont. The Remedie of Love. The Conclusion.

So close behind some promontory he
The huge Leviathans t' attend their prey
And give no chase, but swallow in the frie,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.

Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 203.

What their [the herrings] food is near the pole, we are not yet informed, but in our seas they feed much on the oniscus marinus, a crustaceous insect, and sometimes on their own fry.—Pennant. Zoology. The Common Herring.

His [Johnson] the true fire, where creep the witling fry
To warm themselves, and light their rush-lights by.

Lloyd. Epistle to C. Churchill.

FUB, v. FUB, n. FU'BBERY. } See To Fon. A fub or fubs, is, perhaps, one fubbed or fobbed, cheated or gulled; and thus applied to a fat, chub-headed person.

Fubs, fubby,—are in common speech applied to children.

Mer. You should not make a laughing stock, good brother,
Of one that wrongs you not; I do profess
I won't be fubb'd, ensure yourself.

Cartwright. The Ordinary, Act iv. sc. 4.

Tho. Why doll, why doll, I say: my letter fub'd too,
And no access without I mend my manners.

Beaum. & Fletch. Monsieur Thomas, Act ii. sc. 2

That same foule deformed fubs.

Rub and a Great Cast, (1614.) Ep. 44.

Mal. O no; but dream the most fantastical,
O heaven! O fubbery, fubbery.

Marston. The Malcontent, Act i. sc. 3.

FU'CATE. Fu'cus. } Lat. Fucare, fucatum, to stain or tinge with a colour or dye.

For in vertue may be nothing fucate or counterfayte.

Sir. T. Elyot. Governour, b. iii. c. 4.

——— How do I looke to-day!
End. Excellent, cleer, beleeve it. This same fucus
Was well lay'd on. B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— She, and I now,
Are on a project, for the fact, and venting
Of a new kinde of fucus (paint, for ladies)
To serve the kingdome.

Id. The Divelle is an Asse, Act iii. sc. 4.

They make fukes to paint and embellish the eye-browes.

Holland. Plinie, b. xxiii. c. 4.

FUDDLE, v. Still a common word in the northern parts of England. Skinner observes, that the Scotch use full, and the Ger. voll, pro ebrio,—for drunk; and that hence fudle may be formed by the insertion of the letter d, (it is perhaps ful-dle;) and thus mean—

To fill (sc.) with strong drink, to intoxicate.

Host. That note's enough, he's mine, I'll fuddle him
Or lye 'ith the suds.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 4.

Full brimmers to their fuddled noses thrust.
Dryden. Juvenal, Sat. 6.

Warm'd by two Gods at once, they drink and write
Rhyme all the day, and fuddle all the night.
Pitt. Horace, b. ii. Ep. 19.

——— But earnest brimming bowls
Lave every soul, the table floating round,
And pavement, faithless to the fuddled foot.
Thomson. Autumn.

FU'DGE. Perhaps from fough or fugh, (qv.) and used as equivalent to—bamboozle, humbug.

But previously I should have mentioned the very impolite behaviour of Mr. Burchell, who, during this discourse, sate with his face turned to the fire, and at the conclusion of every sentence would cry out fudge, an expression which displeased us all, and in some measure damped the rising spirit of the conversation.—Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield.

FU'EL. See FEWEL.

FUE'LLEMORTE. See FEUILLEMORT.

FU'GITIVE, adj. FU'GITIVE, s. FU'GITIVENESS. FU'GACY. FUGA'CIOUS. FUGA'CIOUSNESS. FUGA'CITY. } Fr. Fugitif; It. Fuggitivo; Sp. Fugitivo; Lat. Fugitivus, from fugere; Gr. Φευγ-ειν, to fly. The noun is—One who can or may fly: applied to one who does fly; a runaway. The adj.—able to fly; volatile, fleeting.

But when Alexander was come to Taba, whiche is the cheefe citie of Paratacen, it was there shewed hym by fugitives that came out of Darius cāpe, how he was fled with al spede into Bactria.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 133.

Had I Hippomenes' bright fruit, which stay'd
The swifter speed of the Schœnelan maid,
They would not profit me; the world's round ball
Could not my cruel fugitive recall.
Sherburne. Metamorphoses of Lyrian & Sylvia.

Ariobarzanis dying by misfortune, the Armenians would endure none of his race; but tried the regiment of a woman called Eratus, whom they expulsed in a short time: and led an vncertaine and loose kinde of life, rather without a lord, than in libertie: and in the ende receiued the fugitiue Vonones againe.—Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 34.

The fickleness and fugitiveness of servants justly addeth a valuation to their constancy who are standards in a family
Fuller. Worthies. General Worthies, c. 11.

Notwithstanding any disposition made or to be made by virtue or colour of any attainder, outlawry, fugacy, or other forfeiture.—Milton. On the Articles of Peace.

Well therefore did the experienc'd Columella put his gard'ner in the mind of the fugaciousness of the seasons, and the necessity of being industrious.
Evelyn. Introduction to the Kalendar.

In youth alone, unhappy mortals live;
But, ah! the mighty bliss is fugitive!
Discolour'd sickness, anxious labours come,
And age, and death's inexorable doom.
Dryden. Virgil. Georgics, b. iii.

It so happened, that this year one Stafford had gone into France and gathered some of the English fugitives together, and with money and ships, that were secretly given him by that court, had come and seized on the castle of Scarborough.—Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1557.

And even the spirit and salt of sheep's blood itself did, by their penetrancy of taste, and fugitiveness in gentle heats, promise little less efficacy than those other so much celebrated medicines.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 215.

I have suspected that most of these volatile salts having so great a resemblance in smell, in taste and fugitiveness, differ but little, if at all, in their medicinal properties.
Id. Ib. vol. i. p. 534.

By this meane the volatile salt being loosened or disentangled from the rest, and being of a very fugacious nature, flies easily away itself, without staying long enough to take up any other salt with it.—Id. Ib. vol. iv. p. 300.

It is very likely, that the heat produced by a medicine, which by reason of its fugacity would stay but a very short time in the body, will not be so lasting as that of ordinary sudorificks.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 237.

By our experiment, its fugacity is so restrained, that not only the caput mortuum, newly mentioned, endured a good fire in the retort, before it was reduced to that pitchy substance we were lately mentioning; but, &c.
Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 78.

But I, who substantial nutrition require,
Would rather the Muses should feed than inspire
And whilst lofty Pindus my fancy explores,
To earth, the wild fugitive, hunger restores.
Blacklock. To a Friend.

FU'GUE. Skinner has Fugue, which, he says, he had nowhere seen, except in the English Dictionary; and which he explains, "A certain harmony or consent in musick." Cotgrave has the same word, and calls it, "A chace or report of musick, like two or more parts in one." In It. Fuga, from the Lat. Fuga, flight.

The reports, and fuges, have an agreement with the figures in rhetorick, of repetition, and traduction.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 113.

Either while the skilful organist plies his grave and fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony with artful and unimaginable touches adorn and grace the well-studied chords of some choice composer.
Milton. Of Education.

——— His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions low and high
Fled and pursu'd transverse the resonant fugue.
Id. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Apollo ceas'd—the Muses take the sound,
From voice to voice th' harmonious notes rebound,
And echoing lyres transmit the volant fugue around.
Hughes. The Court of Neptune.

The overture of Alexander ought to be great and noble; instead of which, I find only a hurry of the instruments not proper, in my poor opinion, and without any design or fugue.
Id. Letter to Steele.

FU'LCIMENT. FU'LCRUM. } Lat. Fulcimen, from fulcire; "Fr. Fulcir; to underset, underprop, support, sustain, uphold." (Cotgrave.) That which underprops, supports, sustains or upholds: applied to the centrical prop, upon which any thing may turn.

When we shall have every thought, word, &c. of our whole lives laid open and made known before all the world, (as at that day they shall be,) our hearts will need a most special strong fulcrum, support and sustainer (as the word imports,) to establish, or bear up their hearts, before the great God, and all the saints.—Goodwin. Works, vol. ii. pt. iv. p. 335.

It is certain, though there should be the greatest imaginable weight and the least imaginable power, (suppose the whole world, and the strength of one man or infant,) yet if we conceive the same disproportion betwixt their several distances in the former faculties, from the fulciment, or centre of gravity, they would both equiponderate.
Wilkins. Archimedes. On Mechanical Powers, c. 12.

When the balance hangs on a stable fulcrum, you have both your hands to help you, and need not be tempted by weariness to desist before the balance be brought to rest in a perfect equilibrium.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 469.

The same spine was also to serve another use not less wanted than the preceding, viz. to afford a fulcrum, stay, or basis (or more properly speaking, a series of these), for the insertion of the muscles which are spread over the trunk of the body.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 8.

FULFI'L, v. FULFI'LLER. FULFI'LLING, s. FULFI'LMENT. } See TO FILL, and FULL. To fill full, to complete, and thus, to accomplish, to perform fully or completely, to supply.

Thar wilkednes was fulfilled, venged behoued it be.
R. Brunne, p. 65.

For Cyvyl & thy selve, selde fulfilleth
That God wolde wer ydo w'oute som deceite.
Piers Ploughman, p. 30.

But that the Scripture be fulfilled, he that etith my bred, schal reise his heele agens me.—Wiclif. John, c. 13.

Therfore loue is the fulfylling of the lawe.
Id. Romans, c. 13.

This Alla king hath swiche compassioun,
As gentil herte is fulfilled of pitee
That fro his eyen ran the water doun.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5080.

The kynge hym graunted to fulfille
His askynge at his owne wille.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

For God confirmyng the lawe of nature, cōmanded earnestly that euery mā should honour & succour his father & mother, promising long lyfe and felicitie of thys lyfe vnto the doer & fulfiller thereof: threatnyng death to hym that doeth the contrary.—Udal. Matthew, c. 15

And so the lawe must bee content to admitte all these men to bee fulfillers & doers of ye law.—Barnes. Works, p. 240.

And here we offer and present vnto thee, O Lord, ourselves, our soules and bodies, to be a reasonable, holy, and liuely sacrifice unto thee, humbly beseeching thee, that all we which be partakers of this holy communion may be fulfilled with thy grace and heavenly benediction.
The Booke of Com. Prayer. The Communion.

You, who of God the will reveal'd neglect,
And do his law not labour to fulfill,
Mark how the Ethnicke idols did affect,
In dangerous times depending on their will.
Stirling. Doomes-day. The Fifth Houre.

It [the Christian religion] rectifies and confirms the law of nature: and purging man from corruption by faith, presents him justified, and a fulfiller of the law, which nature cannot do.—Feltham, pt. ii. Res. 3.

When wickednesses are such as hinder justice, they seldom yeeld a fruit that is commendable. as if vengeance followed the bestower for an injury to equity, or for not suffering the divine edicts to have their due fulfillings.
Id. pt. i. Res. 74.

He invited them, after they had fulfilled their prince's orders, and settled their own private affairs, to come again, and see him.—Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1538.

The Spirit dictates all such petitions, and God himself is first the author, and then the fulfiller of them.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

Let us carry on our preparation for heaven, not by abstracting ourselves from the concerns of this world, but by fulfilling the duties and offices of every station in life.
Blair, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Thus we see, from the nature, end, and condition of this political, ceremonial, and moral economy, that Jesus was the fulfiller of the law; and, from his doing this in the very manner the inspired men of old predicted, that he was likewise the fulfiller of the prophets.
Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 5

With what entire confidence ought we to wait for the fulfilment of all his other promises in their due time; even when events are most embroiled, and the prospect is most discouraging.—Blair, vol. i. Ser. 5.

FU'LGENT. FU'LGURANT. FU'LGURATE, v. FULGURA'TION. } Lat. Fulgens, pres. part. of fulgere; Gr. Φλεγ-ειν, ardere, to burn. Flaming, flashing light; bright, shining, splendid.

At last, as from a cloud, his fulgent head
And shape star-bright appear'd, or brighter; clad
With what permissive glorie since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. x.

Though pitchy blasts from Hell upborn
Stop the outgoings of the morn,
And Nature play her fiery games,
In this fora'd night, with fulgurant flames.
More. Philosophical Poems, (1647.) p. 314.

If enclosed in a glass vessel well stopped, it sometimes would fulgurate, or throw out little flashes of light, and sometimes fill the whole vial with waves of flames.
Philosophical Transactions, No. 134.

The shine gave such a lightning from one to another, so as you should be forced to turn them [the eyes] elsewhere, or not too stedfastly to behold their fulguration
Donne. History of the Septuagint, (1633.) p. 37.

But other Thracians, who their former name
Retain'd in Asia, fulgent morions wore,
With horns of bulls in imitating brass
Curv'd o'er the crested ridge. Glover. Leonidas, b. iv.

FULI'GINOUS. FULI'GINOUSLY. } Lat. Fuligo, (perhaps Fumiligo, from fumus, smoke,) nigrum illud, quod ex pingui ustorum fumo condensatur, et camino, vel parietibus adhæret, (Vossius.) That black substance, which is condensed from the fat smoke of things burnt, and which adheres to the flue or walls.

And the usual periphrasis of hell torments, fire and brimstone, is wonderfully applicable to the place we have been describing; since it abounds with fuliginous flames, and sulphurous stench and vapour.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

The leaf of burrage hath an excellent spirit to repress the fuliginous vapour of dusky melancholy, and so to cure madness.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 18.

These few particulars I have but mentioned to animate improvements and ingenious attempts of detecting more cheap and useful processes for ways of charking coals, peat, and the like fuliginous materials.
Evelyn. A Discourse on Forest Trees, c. 30.

In the fits of the strange distemper he laboured under, he divers times observed, that that part of his pillow which his breath passed along, would by the strange fuliginous steams, which that carried off with it, be blacked over, as if it had been held in some sooty smoke or other.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 82.

——— The lungs abhor
To drink the dun fuliginous abyss
Armstrong. Art of Preserving Health, b. i.

Her impulse nothing may restrain,
Or whence the joy 'mid columns, towers,
'Midst all the city's artful trim,
To rear some breathless vapid flowers,
Or shrubs fuliginously grim.
Shenstone. Rural Elegance.

FULL, adj. } Goth. Fuls; A.S. Full; Dut. Vol; Ger. Voll; Sw. Full, past tense and part. of A. S. Fyllan, to fill, (qv.)
FULL, n.
FULL, ad.
FU'LLY.
FU'LLNESS.

Full is much used prefixed. It is also much used affixed, with no other necessary limitation than of cautious discretion:—Fearful; i. e. full of the feeling of fear; also of that which causes or excites the feeling:—handful, mouthful; i. e. of any thing, any substance,—bread, water. It receives the terminations, ly and ness—with the same limitation.

An yle god & riche ynowe, the se goth al a boute:
Wule that lond was y fulled with geandes strong & proude.
R. Gloucester, p. 15.

Tho this schippes gare were, and ful of ruche gode.
Id. p. 13.

He dude hem schame ynow & tempredе hem fulwel,
And made hem sone milde ynow tho hee were rebel.
Id. p. 72.

The kyng askede, wad heo were I thei were adrad ful sore.
Id. p. 39.

Ac thys Hardeknout nas kyng nogt follyche gores tuo.
Id. p. 326.

Than blewe the trumpes fulle loud & fulle schille.
The kyng com in to the halle, that hardy was of wille.
R. Brunne, p. 30.

Lo a man ful of lepre.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 5.

And Jhesus ful of the holy Gost turnyde agen fro Jordan.
Id. Ib. c. 4.

A wreth of gold arm-gret, of huge weight,
Upon his hed sate ful of stones bright,
Of fine rubins and of diaments.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2149.

——— Thus spake the bull
The which they han published at the full.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8625.

When the orison was don of Palamon,
His sacrifice he did, and that anon,
Full pitously, with alle circumstances,
All tell I not as now his observances.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2205.

And with that word they risen sodenly,
And ben assented fully, that he sholde
Be wedded whan him list and wher he wolde.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9149.

Thus hath she fulliche ouercome
Myn idlenesse till I sterue,
So that I mot hir nedes serue.—Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

And now when his [Tyndall] argument is all made vp, ye shal find it as full of reason as an egge full of mustarde.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 582.

Christ full lowly and meekely washed his disciples feet.
Frith. Workes, p. 98.

It may be here demanded, why a matter of so great moment should be so slenderly regarded, as that the generall should march with such an army against such an enemy, before he knew either the fulnesse of his owne strength, or certaine meanes how he should abide the place when he should come to it.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 146.

——— Come, come, disclose
The state of your affection, for your passions
Haue to the full appeach'd.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc 3.

Win. ——— You have discharg'd
The true part of an honest man; I cannot
Request a fuller satisfaction
Than you have freely granted.
Ford. The Witch of Edmonton, Act i. sc. 1.

And they themselves made quarrell, and charged the Romanes with wrongs ofred first: and nevertheless they justified themselves for any thing by them done, and answered all objections that were laid against them full stoutly.
Holland. Livie, p. 297.

Jehovah here fully accomplish'd hath
His indignation, and pour'd forth his wrath,
Kindled a fire in Sion, which hath pow'r
To eat, and her foundations to devour.
Donne. Jeremy, c. 4.

Since he had received the Cardinal's letters, he seem'd to taste and feel a reformation of the whole ecclesiastical hierarchy of England, more full and exact, than he could before in that age have divined, much less hoped for.
Strype. Memorials. Henry VIII. an. 1523.

All hail, Patroclus! let thy vengeful ghost
Hear, and exult, on Pluto's dreary coast.
Behold Achilles' promise fully paid,
Twelve Trojan heroes offer'd to thy shade.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

A short sentence may be oftentimes a large and a mighty prayer. Devotion, so managed, being like water in a well, where you have fulness in a little compass.
South, vol. ii. Ser. 4.

There is however a circumstance attending those colonies, which, in my opinion, fully counterbalances this difference, and makes the spirit of liberty still more high and haughty than in those to the northward.
Burke. On Conciliation with America.

But long ere scarce a third of his pass'd by,
Worse than adversity the Childe befell;
He felt the fulness of satiety:
Then loathed he in his native land to dwell,
Which seem'd to him more lone than eremite's sad cell.
Byron. Childe Harold's Pilgrimage, c. 1.

FULL, v. } A.S. Fullian, fullare, polire vestes,
FU'LLER. } to full a piece of cloth, (Somner.) Dut. Vollen, telam laneam rudem subigere pedibus, subsaltando identidem fullonio saltu vestimenta calcare, premere, et densare; Kilian,—(to trample upon, press, and thicken cloths.) Fr. Fouller, to tread or trample on; from the Lat. Fullo, from the Gr. Πιλουν, or rather, Vossius thinks, βυλλουν, of the same signification, viz. to thicken.

To tread or trample down, beat or press down, and thus, to thicken.

And hise clothis weren maad ful schynyng & whight as snowe, whiche maner whighte clothis a fuller may not make on erthe.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 19.

And his rayment dyd shyne, and was made very whyte, euen as snow: so white as no fuller can make vpon the erth.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Also a wayuer or fuller, shuld be an vnmete capitaine of an army, or in any other office of a gouernour.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 1.

It is to be noted that foure miles to the northward of Dogsnose there growe no trees on the bank by the water side, and the bankes consist of fuller's-earth.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 291.

Only this faithful country case 'scap'd fist free; and, be it spoken in good hour, was never beaten yet since it came from fulling.—Tomkis. Albumazar, Act v. sc. 8.

To come then to the mysterie of fuller's craft: first they wash and scoure a piece of cloth with the earth of Sardinia, then they perfume it with the smoke of brimstone, which done they fall anone to burling it with Cimolia.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxv. c. 17.

This fuller's-earth, Cimolia, is of a cooling nature, and being used in the forme of a liniment, it stateth immoderat sweats. The same taken inwardly with wine in the baine or hote house, restraineth the breaking foorth of pimples
Id. Ib.

A purchase granted to the Lady Johan Denny for the sum of £202. 7*s* 0½*d*. of the lordships and manors of Waltham and Nasing, with the appurtenances, with a fulling-mill and two water-mills, late parcell of the dissolved abbey of Waltham Cross.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1553.

——— Thy oil-imbibing earth
The fullers skill assisting, safe defies
All foreign rivals in the clothier's art.
Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3.

They [our fair countrywomen] are surely, if I may say so, much more valuable commodities than wool or fuller's-earth, the exportation of which is so strictly prohibited by our laws, lest foreigners should learn the manufacturing of them.—Chesterfield, vol. ii. Miscellaneous Pieces, No. 19.

FU'LMINE, v. } Lat. Fulmen, ab eo, quod ignis propter splendorem fulget; fulgor, fulmenque et fulgur. (Varro, lib. iv.)
FU'LMINATE, v.
FULMINA'TION.

To throw forth light or lightning; to act with the effect of lightning, (or thunder, the accompaniment of lightning;) to menace or denounce with the noise or loudness, the awfulness of thunder.

And ever and anon the rosy red
Flasht through her face, as it had been a flake
Of lightning through bright heaven fulmined.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Water and wind guns afford no fulminating report, and depend on single principles.—Brown. Vulg. Err. b. ii. c. 5.

He [King Charles was] curst and devoted to perdition worse than any Ahab, or Antiochus, with exhortation to curse all those in the name of God, that made not war against him as bitterly as Meroz was to be curs'd, that went not out against a Canaaniteish King, almost in all the sermons, prayers, and fulminations, that have bin utter'd these seven years past by those cloven tongues of falshood and dissension, who now, to the stirring up of new discord, acquit him.—Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

Thence to the famous orators repair,
Those ancient, whose resistless eloquence
Wielded at will that fierce democratie,
Shook the Arsenal and fulmin'd over Greece
To Macedon, and Artaxerxes' throne.
Id. Paradise Regained, b. iv.

Another, who was a professour of the Reformed Religion, they at present wickedly prosecuted by force of arms and with Papall curses and fulminations.
Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1590.

And it is very probable, that if the Pope had not, with that violent passion, that Italians have for the advancing their families, run into the proposition for marrying his niece to the Duke of Orleans, he would have fulminated upon this occasion.—Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1531.

When the King's [Charles] ablest servant had, in the great wants of the treasury, encouraged his master to break his faith, so often pledged to his Parliament, never more to exert any of those branches of baleful prerogative, which they had so often fulminated; he little suspected that he was opening his way to his own ruin, by habituating his royal master to think slightly of his promises, in the number of which was protection to himself.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 19.

FU'LSOME. } Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets fulsumnesse, satiety; and Junius says, nauseous, whatever FU'LSOMELY.
FU'LSOMENESS. } from too great abundance provokes nausea; from full, plenus. Wallis also considers it to be a compound of full and some. Skinner adds, or q. d. foulsome.

Foul, gross, rank, and thus—nauseous.

The knotte, why that every tale is tolde,
If it be taried till the lust be colde
Of hem, that han it herkened after yore,
The savour passeth ever lenger the more,
For fulsomnesse of the prolixitee.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,719.

Wherefore leste in repeting a thing so frequent and commune, my boke shoulde be as fastidious or fulsome to the reders, as suche marchaunt preachers be nowe to their customers, I wylle reuerentely take my leaue of diuines.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 21.

A thousand silken puppets should have died
And in their fulsome coffins putrified.
Ere in my lines you of their names should hear
To tell the world that such there ever were.
Drayton. To the Lady L. S. Of Worldly Crosses.

Thirdly, God was sorely displeased with his people, because they builded, decked and trimmed up their own houses, and suffered God's house to be in ruine and decay, to be uncomely, and fulsomely.
Homilies. Serm. for repairing and keeping clean Churches.

It is not emptyness only, but fulsomness; for though a man is not nourish'd by them, and so satisfied, yet he is cloyed and daubed with them; and then loathing comes, which is joyned with sorrow.—Goodwin. Works, vol. iii. p. 389

That more sluggish dulcor of the blood will be sometime so quickened and actuated by the fiercenesse and sharpnesse of the melancholy humour (as the fulsomeness of sugar is by the acrimony of lemon) that it will afford farre more sensible pleasure.—Henry More. Of Enthusiasm, pt. ii. s. 20.

Could you but see the fulsome hero led,
By loathing vassals to his noble bed.
Dryden. Sueum Cuique.

And the act of consummation fulsomely described in the very words of the most modest among all poets.
Id. Dedication to Juvenal.

Mortals whose pleasures are their only care,
First wish to be impos'd on and then are:
And, lest the fulsome artifice should fail,
Themselves will hide its coarseness with a veil.
Cowper. Progress of Error.

FU'LVID. Lat. Fulvidus; fulvus, from fulgere. See FULGENT.

Tawny, yellow.

And in right colours to the life depaint
The fulvid eagle with her sun-bright eye.
More. Psychozoia, b. i. s. 3.

FU'MAGE. From the Lat. Fumus, smoke.

As early as the Conquest mention is made in Domesday Book of fumage or fuage, vulgarly called smoke farthings, which were paid by custom to the king for every chimney in the house.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 8.

FU'MBLE, v. } Dut. Fommelen; Sw. Famla.
FU'MBLER.
FU'MBLING, n.
FU'MBLINGLY. } Manibus ultro citroque pertentare ut solent, qui in tenebris obambulant,—Ihre, who thinks the Lat. Palmus to be of the same family. Skinner's interpretation is, Ineptè tractare seu rem aggredi; to handle, manage or attempt any thing foolishly or inaptly.

To do any thing, to act, inefficiently, inaptly, bunglingly, weakly:—to act with imbecile effort or exertion, where the thing aimed at is scarcely touched or reached.

Eche of them calleth other false fumblinge Heretikes
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 279.

If barreyn soyle, why then it chaungeth hewe,
It fadeth faste, it flits to fumbling yeares.
Gascoigne. Gardninges.

But being taken up in a trip & found fumbling in their answere, they were commaunded to void out of the counsel-chamber.—Holland. Livie, p. 1130.

In phrensie, wherein men are bestraught of their right wits, to have a care of the skirts, fringes and welts of their garments, that they be in good order; to keepe a fumbling and pleiting of the bed-cloths, &c. prognosticate death.
Id. Plinie, b. vii. c. 51.

He heard his wife Calpurnia, being fast asleep, weep and sigh, and put forth many fumbling lamentable speeches.
North. Plutarch, p. 613.

Imagine then your Highlander
Over a can of muddy beer,
Playing at passage with a pair
Of drunken fumblers for his fare.
Cotton, (Charles.) Epistle to the Earl of ———.

For that is the reason, why many good scholiars speake but fumblingly: like a rich man that for want of particular note and difference, can bring you no certaine ware readily out of his shop.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

For the atheist's pretence to wit and natural reason, (though the foulness of his mind makes him fumble very dotingly in the use thereof,) makes the enthusiast secure that reason is no guide to God.
More. Of Enthusiasm, pt. ii. s. 1.

Disabled wasting whore masters are not
Prouder to own the brats they never got,
Than fumbling, itching rhymers of the town
T' adopt some base born song that's not their own.
Otway. Prologue to N. Lee's Constantine the Great.

My hand trembles to that degree that I can hardly hold my pen, my understanding flutters, and my memory fumbles.
Chesterfield. Miscell. Works, vol. iv. Let. 71.

FUME, v } Fr. Fumer; It. Fumare; Sp. Humear, ahumar. By similar metaphor, says Junius, the English use the verb to vapour; He fumeth and vapoureth; from the Lat. Fumus, smoke, exhalation. Skinner prefers the Ger. Faum, foam; to foam through passion. In A. S. Faman, spumare, to foam.

FU'MID.
FU'MIGATE.
FUMIGA'TION.
FU'MING, n.
FU'MINGLY.
FU'MISH.
FU'MISHLY.
FU'MOUS.
FUMO'SITY.
FU'MOUSLY.
FU'MY.

To smoke, to vapour, to evaporate, to exhale; and (met.) to effervesce with any ebullition of passion; to swell or glow with any idle fancy or vain conceit.

Hir dremes shul not now be told for me;
Ful were hir hedes of fumositie,
That causeth dreme, of which ther is no charge.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,671.

Of which ther riseth swiche fumosites
That whan a man hath dronken draughtes three,
And weneth that he be at home in Chepe
He is in Spaigne.—Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,501.

But euen yet styll thei stand without the doores fuming and freatyng, for that the churche reioyeth for the Gentiles receiued to the saluacion of the Ghospell.—Udal. Luke, c. 15.

If they [egges] be fried harde, they be of yll nourishment, and do make stynkynge fumes in the stomake, and do corrupt other meates wyth whome they be mingled.
Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. ii.

The said house whiche Solomon builte in Hierusalem, was a busie thing, with slaughter of beastes, with fumigacions, wyth washynges, and verai troubleous with perfumes.
Udal. Luke, c. 24.

They [deuotion and knowledge] savour togither farre more sweetly than any fumigation either of juniper, incense, or whatsoeuer else, be they neuer so pleasant, doth sauour in any man's nose.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1017. Answer of John Lambert.

As touching the reproche in naming him a Samaritane, although it were commonly taken for great rebuke and slaundre, yet because it was naught elles but a fumishe checke spoken in a furie, he made no answere at al therevnto, as though they had but called hym a mushrome, or an oynion.—Udal. John, c. 8.

This Pope was not profytable for them, nor also to the church as they said, for he was a fumishe man and maincolyous.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 346.

And if he had not in the front of his booke intituled himselfe to be an Englishman, by his writing I woulde haue iudged him rather some wilde Irishman latelie crept out of S. Patrickes purgatorie, so wilde he writeth, so fumishlie he fareth.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 534. Defence of the Lord Cobham.

Wherefore if it be true, that M. More sayth in the sequell of his booke, that grace and charity increaseth in them that lye in the paynes of purgatory, then is it not agreeable, that such soules lying so long in purgatory should so soone forget their charity, and fall a railing in their supplication so fumishly.—Id. Ib. p. 927. Supplication for Soules in Purgatory.

And if in the mornynge he fele any fumosities ryssynge, than to drinke iulep of violettes, or for lacke thereof, a good draught of verie smalle ale or biere, somewhat warmed, without eatynge any thynge after it.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii.

And heaping wordes vpon wordes, would gladly belike that the partie should haue caried them away, and well remembred them, and therefore saied fumously vnto him, dost thou heare me?—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 151.

Even such is all their vaunted vanitie,
Naught else but smoke that fumeth soone away.
Spenser. Colin Clouts come out againe.

So corrosive is this smoke about the city, that if one would hang up gammons of bacon, beefe, or other fleshe to fume, and prepare it in the chimnies, as the good housewifes do in the country, where they make use of sweeter fuell, it will so mummifie, drie up, waste and burne it, that it suddenly crumbles away, consumes and comes to nothing.
Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. i.

Seeing that the one of them when the wine had a little fumed up into the head began both to speak and do foolishly, and contrariwise that the other held his own and dranke warily; he pardoned and let go the one, but the other he put to death.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 355.

Then there is a repulsion of the fume, by some higher hill or fabrick that shall overtop the chimney.
Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 38.

She, out of love, desires me not to go to
My father, because something hath put him
In a fume against me.
Shirley. The Merchant's Wife, Act iv. sc. 5.

Thus iron in aquafortis will fall into ebullition, with noise and emication, as also a crass and fumid exhalation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii.

Two or three of these fumid vortices are able to whirle it about the whole city, rendering it in a few minutes like the picture of Troy sacked by the Greeks, or the approaches of Mount Hecla.—Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. i.

Sub. ——— O, good sir!
There must be a world of ceremonies passe,
You must be bath'd and fumigated first.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act i. sc. 2.

O fancie fond, thy fumings hath me fed,
The stinking stench of thine inclin'd host,
Hath poysened all the virtues in my brest.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 250.

One loues soft musick and sweet melodie,
Another is perhaps melancholike,
Another fumish is and cholerike.—Id. p. 158.

That which we moove for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth to anger and choler in them: they grow altogether out of quietnesse with it, they answer fumishly, that they are ashamed to defile their pennes with making answers to such idle questions.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. s. 22.

Newcastle was besieg'd and blocked up in our late wars, so as through the great dearth and scarcity of coales, those fumous works many of them were either left off, or spent but few coales in comparison to what they now use.
Evelyn. Fumifugium, pt. i.

Eaten after meate when a man is drunken indeed, it riddeth away the fumosities in the braine, and bringeth him to be sober.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 9.

I bear them hence (so Jove my soul inspires)
From the pollution of the fuming fires.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvii.

But, least of all, Philosophy presumes
Of truth in dreams, from melancholy fumes.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

But if a pinching winter thou foresee
And would'st preserve thy famish'd family;
With fragrant thyme the city fumigate.
Id. Virgil. Georgics, b. iv.

I shall only subjoin this secret, which a friend of mine practises, in preserving the fumigated juices of herbs.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 144.

It was the custom of the ancients to force bees out of their hives by fumigation.—Fawkes. The Argonautics, b. ii. Note.

——— Tyrian garbe,
Neptunian Albion's high testaceous food,
And flavour'd Chian wines with incense fum'd
To slake patrician thirst. Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

And fum'd with frankincence on ev'ry side
He begs their flatt'ry with his latest breath,
And smother'd in't at last, is prais'd to death.
Cowper. Truth.

——— Great pity too
That having wielded th' elements and built
A thousand systems, each in his own way,
They should go out in fume, and be forgot.
Id. Task, b. iii.

Oppress'd with sleep, and drown'd in fumy wine,
The prostrate guards their regal charge resign.
Brookes. Constantia.

FU'METTE. Skinner thinks from the Lat. Fimus. Menage,—Fumées de Cerf. Cervorum stercus; from fimata, fumata, fumée.

"Fr. Fumées; the dung or excrements of deer, called by woodmen fewmets or fewmishing," (Cotgrave.)

For by his slot, his entries, and his port,
His frayings, fewmets, he doth promise sport,
And standing 'fore the dogs.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act i.

FUN. } Not in our old Lexicographers,
FU'NNY. } Skinner, Junius, or Minshew. Perhaps from Fain, A. S. Fægen, lætus, hilaris; and thus, Jocosus, jocose, jesting.

Sportive, mirthful drollery.

Funny, adj. common in speech.

Here Whitefoord reclines, and deny it who can,
Though he merrily liv'd, he is now a grave man:
Rare compound of oddity, frolic, and fun,
Who relish'd a joke, and rejoic'd in a pun.
Goldsmith. Retaliation.

Such wit had current pass'd alone,
Tho' Selwyn's fun had ne'er been known,
And must for ever stand the test,
When each bon mot is gone to rest.
Verses to Mr. Cambridge, from George Birch, Esq.

FUNA'MBULATORY. } Fr. Funamble; It. and Sp. Funambulo; Lat. Funambulus, from funis, a rope, and ambulare, to walk, to move about. Evelyn, in his Numismata, speaks of a Cat under the name of a Funamble Turk.
FUNA'MBULO.
FUNA'MBULUS.

Funambulo,—a walker or dancer upon a rope.

I make no more estimation of the like, [tricks of artificial memory] whereof in the faculties of the mind there is great copia, and such as by device and practice may be exalted to an extreme degree of wonder, than I do of the tricks of tumblers, funamboloes, &c.—Bacon. Adv. of Learning, b. ii.

We see the industry and practice of tumblers and funambulos, what effects of great wonder it bringeth the body of a man unto.—Id. Letters. Temp. Jac. To Sir Henry Saville.

You have so represented ——— unto me as methinks I see him walking not like a funambulus upon a cord, but upon the edge of a razor.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 567.

Tread softly and circumspectly in this funambulatory track and narrow path of goodness.—Brown. Chr. Mor. i. 1.

FU'NCTION. } Fr. Function; It. Funzione;
FU'NCTIONARY. } Sp. Funcion; Lat. Functio, from Fungi, inest in hac voce notio, (says Vossius,) perficiendi ac perdu cendi ad finem; a notion of performing and bringing to an end. And he derives it from finis, the end.

Performance of an object, of an office or duty; an office, faculty or power.

Neyther had God's open veryte condempned them, for preferynge vyrgynyte as the better or more comodyouse gyfte, or as S. Paule noteth it, more free to all godly functions.—Bale. Apology, fol. 106.

Yea, Peter and Andrewe both were fishers, therfore temporall men may bee called, if they bee worthi, and desire this spirituall function.—Wilson. Arte of Logike, fol. 56.

Thus for certaine daies, the king being dead, and his death concealed, he under colour of executing the function of another, gathereth strength to himselfe.—Holland. Livie, p 30.

What I have loosely or profanely writ,
Let them to fires, their due desert, commit.
Nor when accus'd by me let them complain:
Their faults, and not their function, I arraign
Dryden, Ep 12.

So slow th' unprofitable moments roll,
That lock up all the functions of my soul:
That keep me from myself; and still delay
Life's instant business to a future day.
Pope. Imitation of Horace, b. i. Ep. 1.

All human bodies, for example, though each of them consists of almost an infinite number of parts, are perfectly uniform in their structure and functions; and the same thing may be said of all the animals and plants of any particular species.—Beattie. Moral Science, pt. ii. c. 1.

We ought to fall in with the ideas of Mons. Montmorin's circular manifesto; and to do business of course with the functionaries, who act under the new power, by which that king, to whom his majesty's minister has been sent to reside, has been deposed and imprisoned
Burke. Thoughts on French Affairs

Their republick is to have a first functionary, (as they call him) under the name of king, or not, as they think fit.
Id. Ib.

FUND, v. }
FUND, s. }
FUND-HOLDER. } The Lat. Funda, a sling, a net, was also applied to a bag or purse, formed like a net, (a reticule,) fortasse quia nummos iis infunderent effunderentque, or from its likeness to a sling. Cotgrave says,—the tax or aide which in the year 1412 should have been imposed on every arpent (acre) was called fond de terre. Fond, he says, is also,—a merchant's stock, whether it be money or money's worth. (See REFUND.) It is now applied to—

Any stock; and to fund, to place or invest money in the (public) stocks.

The parliament went on slowly in fixing the fund for the supplies they had voted.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1698.

It has been said, that our funding system has contributed to preserve the effects of our revolution, to preserve the interests, and keep up the spirit of the country, to enable us to thwart the ambitious views of the house of Bourbon.
Fox. Speech on the Assessed Tax Bill, Dec. 14. 1797.

On the 31st of December, 1697, the publick debts of Great Britain funded and unfunded amounted to £21,515,742. 13*s.* 8½*d.*—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 3.

In 1697, by the 8th of William III. c. 20, the deficiencies of several taxes were charged upon what was then called the first general mortgage or fund, consisting of a prolongation to the first of August 1706, of several different taxes which would have expired within a shorter term, and of which the produce was accumulated into one general fund.
Id. Ib.

In Great Britain, from the time that we had first recourse to the ruinous expedient of perpetual funding, the reduction of the publick debt, in time of peace, has never borne any proportion to its accumulation in the time of war.—Id. Ib.

Would you tax the land proprietor by a direct impost? No, it is not attempted. Would you tax the property of the fund holder? No, no minister has yet been either blind or abandoned enough to attempt it.
Fox. Speech on the Assessed Tax Bill, Dec. 14, 1797.

FU'NDAMENT. }
FUNDAME'NTAL, s. }
FUNDAME'NTAL, adj. }
FUNDAME'NTALLY. } Fr. Fundamentel; Sp. Fundamental; It. Fondamentale; Lat. Fundamentalis, from fundamentum, from fundare, to lay deeply. See FOUNDATION.

The bottom, ground, or basis, i. e. that upon which any thing may stand or rest, be set, raised or established, from which any thing may rise or spring.

He is lyk to a man that bildeth an hous, that diggide depe and sette the foundement on a stoon.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 6.

And yet, God wot, uneth the fundament
Parfourmed is, ne of our pavement
N'is not a tile within our wones:
By God we owen fourty pound for stones.
Chaucer. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7685.

The stone was hard of adamaunt
Wherof they made the foundemaunt
The tour was round made incompas.—Id. Rom. of the R.

The which thinge is sustayned, by as stronge foundements of reason, that is to sain, that more mischie ben thei, that don wronge to other folke, then thei that wrong suffren.
Id. Boecius b. iv.

Her cercles more or less bee
Made after the proporcion
Of the erthe whose condicion
Is set to be fundament
To sustaine vp the firmament.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Now suppose that Heraclitus or Eriostratus the physicians; nay Æsculapius himself whilst he was a mortall man, should come to an house furnished with druge, medicines and instruments requisite for the cure of diseases, and ask whether any man there had a fistula in ano, that is, an hollow and hidden ulcer within his fundament.
Holland. Plutarch, p 114.

And this I take to be a great cause, that hath hindered the progression of learning, because these fundamental knowleges have been studied but in passage.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b. ii.

For as Philippe de l'Orme observeth, the breaking or yielding of a stone in this part [substruction,] but the breadth of the back of a knife, will make a cleft of more than half a foot in the fabrick aloft: so important are fundamental errors.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 19.

The law of nature is the only law of laws truly and properly to all mankind fundamental, the beginning and the end of all government; to which no parliament or people that will thoroughly reform, but may and must have recourse.—Milton. Free Commonwealth.

It [is] thus manifest that the power of kings and magistrates is nothing else, but what is only derivative, transferr'd and committed to them in trust from the people to the common good of them all, in whom the power yet remains fundamentally, and cannot be taken from them, without a violation of their natural birthright.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

Fundamental is a metaphor taken from the foundation of a building, upon which the fabrick is erected, and without which it cannot stand. So that fundamental principles are such as are presupposed to the duties of religion (one or more) and such, as are absolutely necessary to the doing of them.—Granvil, Ess. 5.

Lord Verulam, at the beginning of the last century, expressed his judgment of the great importance of distinguishing rightly between points fundamental and points of further perfection, so he worded the distinction, though I think not accurately.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 87.

And this examinant further saith, that the fundamentals in this examinant's last examination mentioned to be prepared by Mr. Wade, Col. Romzey and this examinant, were only rough drawn up by the said Mr. Wade's own hand.
State Trials, an. 1683. Introd. to the Rye-House Plot.

But I am able to prove, from the doctrine of Calvin and the principles of Buchanan, that they set the people above the magistrate; which, if I mistake not, is your own fundamental, and which carries your loyalty no farther than your liking.—Dryden. Epistle to the Whigs.

When we apply the epithet fundamental either to religion in general or to Christianity in particular, we are supposed to mean something essential to religion or Christianity; so necessary to its being, or at least to its well being, that it could not subsist, or not maintain itself tolerably without it.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 88.

This notion shows the extreme folly and absurdity of all those who (fundamentally erring from the truth and nature of things,) found their religion here, and their expectation of happiness hereafter, in any thing else (what soever it be) distinct from virtue, and righteousness, and charity, and true holiness.—Clarke, vol. i. Ser. 32.

He did not reflect that a fundamental truth (which he will not venture to dispute any more than the believer) stands very much in the way of his conclusion; namely, that God, in the moral government of the world, never does that in an extraordinary way, which can be equally well effected in an ordinary.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iv. s. 6.

One, bred up in the arts of Egyptian legislation, could never, on his own head, have thought of reducing an unruly people to government on maxims of religion and policy fundamentally opposite to all the principles of Egyptian wisdom.—Id. On Several Occasional Reflections.

FU'NERAL, s. }
FU'NERAL, adj. }
FU'NERALLY. }
FUNE'REAL. }
FUNE'RIAL. }
FUNE'ST. } Written by our old writers, Funeralls. Fr. Funérailles; Lat. Funus. Either from funis, a torch; because funerals were performed by torch light; or more probably from φονος, cædes, slaughter, because properly it is—of a man slain, (Vossius.) It is applied to—

The performance of the rite or ceremony of burial or sepulture of the dead; the burial, sepulture or interment.

Funest (Fr. Funeste; It. and Sp. Funesto; Lat. Funestus, deadly, pernicious,) seems a favourite word with Evelyn.

And after that came woful Emelie,
With fire in hond, as was that time the gise
To don the office of funeral service
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2914.

After that he had thrust forth from the funerals the mournyng multitude, he taking the father and mother of the mayden, entred into the parlour, where the corps of the mayden dyd lye.—Udal. Matthew, c. 9.

For before he came to his campe, hee was aduertised of the death of Erigius, one of his most notable captaynes; whose funeralls were bothe celebrated wyth greate pompe and ceremonies of honour.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 216.

This noble prince [Edward IV.] deceased at his palice of Westminster, and with greate funerall honoure and heauynesse of his people from thence conueyde, was entered at Windesor.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 35.

Nowe put me hereunto the trumpettes that sounde vnto the deafe, the singing menne that sing vayne funerall songes vnto y^e dead bodie, which heareth them not.
Udal. Marke, c. 5.

Yet was I with such bloodshed bought full dere,
And priz'd with slaughter of their generall:
The monument of whose sad funerall,
For wonder of the world, long in me lasted.
Spenser. The Ruines of Time, s. 17.

It was agreed, that Siccius forthwith should be convaied to Rome, had not the Decemvers made haste to solemnise his funerals souldiour-like, at the publike charges of the common treasurie.—Holland. Livie, p. 116.

[Though] he cannot raise thee a poor monument,
Such as a flatterer or a usurer hath;
Thy worth, in every honest breast, builds one,
Making their friendly hearts thy funeral stone.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act ii. sc. 1.

Even crows were funerally burnt.
Brown. Urn Burial, c. 1.

Thus we see them walk and converse in London, pursu'd and haunted by that infernal smoake, and the funest accidents which accompany it wheresoever they retire.
Evelyn. Fumifugium. To the Reader.

[Mushrooms are] generally reported to have something malignant and noxious in them; nor without cause, from the many sad examples, frequent mischiefs, and funest accidents they have produc'd, not only to particular persons but to whole families.—Id. Acetaria, s. 39.

One of these crowns or garlands is most artificially wrought in filigree work with gold and silver wire, in resemblance of myrtle (with which plants the funebrial garlands of the ancients were composed).—Brown. Miscell. Tracts, p. 29.

The work once ended, all the vast resort
Of mourning people went to Priam's court;
There they refresh'd their weary limbs with rest,
Ending the funeral with a solemn feast.
Congreve. Helen's Lamentation.

From the red field their scatter'd bodies bear;
And nigh the fleet a funeral structure rear;
So decent urns their snowy bones may keep,
And pious children o'er their ashes weep.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. vii.

Unless with filial rage Orestes glow,
And swift prevent the meditated blow;
You timely will return a welcome guest,
With him to share the sad funereal feast.
Id. Odyssey, b. iv.

Near the end of two years, at the anniversary of his mother's funeral, who had died but a few years before, having lived long mad, he [Charles V.] took a conceit that he would see an obit made for himself, and would have his own funeral-rites performed, to which he came himself, with the rest of the monks, and pray'd most devoutly for the rest of his own soul, which set all the company on weeping.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reformation, an. 1556.

Its [asbestos] principal use, according to Pliny, was for the making of shrouds for royal funerals, to wrap up the corps so as the ashes might be preserved distinct from that of the wood whereof the funeral pile was composed.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iv.

We are not to imagine, however, as it is commonly believed, that these violences were owing to the general indignation of the citizens against the murderers of Cæsar, excited either by the spectacle of his body, or the eloquence of Antony, who made the funeral oration
Middleton. Life of Cicero, vol. iii. s. 9.

Sighs from a breaking heart my voice confound,
With trembling steps to join yon weeping train,
I haste, where gleams the funeral glare around,
And mix'd with shrieks of woe the knells of death resound.
Beattie. The Minstrel, b. ii.

FUNGE. }
FU'NGOUS. }
FUNGO'SITY. }
FU'NGOUS. } Fr. Funge; Lat. Fungus, from fundere, (in the opinion of Scheidius,) effundens se, et latè crescens; pouring itself forth, and spreading widely. Funge is applied by Burton to—

One who has no more brains than a toadstool has substance; an empty-headed fellow.

When as indeed, in all wise men's judgments, quibus cor sapit, they are mad, empty vessels, fungos.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 113.

Touching those excrescences in manner of mushromes, which be named fungi, they are by nature more dull and slow.—Holland. Pinie, b. xxii. c. 23.

We may be sure of raine, in case we see a fungous substance or soot gathered about lampe and candle snuffe.
Id. Ib. b. xviii. c. 35.

Thou, late exulting in thy golden hair,
As bright as Phœbus, or as Cynthia fair,
Now view'st, alas! thy forehead smooth and plain
As the round fungus daughter of the rain.
Fawkes. From Petronius.

Eggs cast into the matrix of the earth, or certain little pustulæ, or fungosities on its surface.
Biblioth. Bibl. (Ox. 1720.) i. 292.

The chief sign of life she [the Church of England] now gives is the exuding from her sickly trunk a number of deformed fungusses; which call themselves of her, because they stick upon her surface, and suck out the little remains of her sap and spirit.—Warburton. Introduction to Julian.

FUNK, v. } A word (says Lye) familiar in FUNK, n. } the university at Oxford: to be in a funk. In old Flemish, he adds, Fonck, is, turba, perturbatio. Skinner thinks from the Ger. Funk, scintilla, q.d. nidor seu odor, e lignis seu carbonibus exhalans. In R. Brunne, "Be beten alle fonkes," be beat all to funks, or till they stink again, (Hearne.) Perhaps from the A.S. Fynigean, to corrupt, to spoil in any manner; past part. Fynig-ed, fyng'd or fungd, funk, corrupted, spoiled, and consequentially—

Stinking;—stewing, fuming.

Now of this olde & this new kyng,
That was not worth a fonk, don as his endyng.
R. Brunne, p. 172.

& of the fourtene monkes, where men not tham finde,
Be beten alle fonkes or in prison tham binde.—Id. p. 211.

The best part of the veal, and the Greek for hanc,
Is the name of a man that makes us funk.
Epigram on J. Burton, when a Proctor at Oxford.

In the mean time, tobacco strives to vex
A numerous squadron of the tender sex,
What with strong smoke, and with his stronger breath
He funks Basketia and her son to death.
King. The Frumentary, c. 3.

FU'NNEL. Quasi, fundell, (Junius.) Contracted from Lat. Infundibulum, (Skinner,) from in, and fundere, to pour in.

That through which any thing pours, or is poured, usually, into other vessels:—and shaped suitably to its purpose.

If you poure a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it: but with a funnell, and by degrees, you may fill many of them, and spill little of your own, to their capacity they will all receive and be full.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd;
Some the long funnel's curious mouth extend,
Through which ingested meats with ease descend.
Blackmore. The Creation, b. vi.

The gullet [the passage for food] opens into the mouth like the cone or upper part of a funnell, the capacity of which forms indeed the bottom of the mouth.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

FUR, v. }
FUR, n. }
FU'RRER. }
FU'RRERY. }
FU'RRING, n. }
FU'RRY. }
Fr. Fourrer; It. Foderare; Sp. Aforrar; Dut. Voederen; Ger. Futtern. In A.S. Fodder, and Goth. Fodr, is theca, vagina; and Junius says, "Notum est thecas lino lanâque duplicari, instar vestium levidensâ pellibusque suffulturam, atque inde nomen hoc vaginæ inditum," (Goth. Gloss. p. 164.) In Low Lat. Fodratura, or fordatura. (See Spelman.) I see (says Wachter) the tree and branches, but not the root. Applied to—

Skins with soft, downy hair; also, to a coating or covering formed upon the tongue, from the exhalation of the stomach; within a kettle or other vessel, from the ebullition of water.

—— Ich darre legge myn eres
That fysyk shal hus forrede hodes for hus fode sulle [sell.]
Piers Ploukman, p. 143.

And fewe robis ich fonge, oth[r] forrede gounes.—Id. p. 253.

Hem fayleth no furryng, ne clothes atte fulle.—Id. Crede.

Thus as I stode musing ful busily
I thought to take good hede of her array,
Her gowne was blewe, this wote I verily,
Of good fashion, and furred with gray.
Chaucer. The Assemblie of Ladies.

A burnette cote hong therewithall
Furred with no menluere,
But with a furre rough of here,
Of lambe skinnes heauy and blacke.
Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And he ware scarlet gownes, furred with myneuer, lyke as the Duke of Brabant, or Erle of Haynalt dyd.
Bernere. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 403.

All the world seeth, that their whole life is spent in nothing else than in eating and drinking, in idle walking and pastimes, and in providing for furring of their backs and fattening their bellies, and in gorgeously decked chambers and soft sleeping.—Martin. Book of Priests' Marriages.

Also at the going vp of the maister chancellor into the Lollardes tower: wee haue good proof that they lay on the stockes a gowne neither of murrey or crimosin in graine furred, with shankes.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 740. The Verdict of the Inquest concerning the Murdering of R. Hun.

And man, the painter, now presents to view;
Haughty without, and busie still within;
Whom, when his furr'd and horned subjects knew,
Their sport is ended, and their fears begin.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. ii. c. 6.

Their arrow-heads are sharpned stones, or fish bones, which latter serve them also for needles; their thread being the sinews of certain small beasts, wherewith they sow their furs which clothe them; the furry side in summer outward, in winter inward.—Milton. A Brief History of Moscovia.

With honie it (a gargarism of milke) cureth the roughnesse & furring of the tongue.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 14.

Underneath is the picture of Sir William Cecil, after Lord Burleigh, in his gown and furs, and holding in his left hand a Hebrew psalter.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 320.

Winter! thou hoary, venerable sire,
All richly in thy furry mantle clad;
What thoughts of mirth can feeble age inspire
To make thy careful wrinkled brow so glad.
Rowe. Ode for the New Year, 1717.

From Volga's banks, th' imperious Czar
Leads forth his furry troops to war.
Fenton. Ode to John Lord Gower.

Let me, less cruel, cast the feather'd hook
With pliant rod athwart the pebbled brook,
Silent along the silent margin stray,
And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey.
Gay. Rural Sports, c. 1.

The original painted by himself [Cleeve] with a black cap and furred gown, upon a greenish ground, and a portrait of his wife, were purchased by King Charles I.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 6.

The fur of the ermine, in every country, changes by time; for as much of its beautiful whiteness is given it by certain arts known to the furriers, so its natural colour returns and its former whiteness can never be restored again.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. iv. c. 3.

No labour can ever be turned to so good account as what is employed upon their furrieries.
Cook. Voyages, vol. vii. b. vi. c. 6.

Horace, mild sage, refin'd with ease,
Whose precepts, whilst they counsel, please;
Without the jargon of the schools,
And fur-gown'd pedants' bookish rules,
Here keeps his lov'd academy.
Cooper. The Apology of Aristippus.

FU'RBELOW, v. }
FU'RBELOW, n. }
Sp. Farfala or falbala; It. Falbala, which Duchat derives from the Ger. Fald-plat.

To plait or fold, in many folds; to supply, to overlay with plaits or foldings; (met.) to overlay with ornaments.

When arguments too fiercely glare,
You calm them with a milder air
To break their points, you turn their force,
And furbelow the plain discourse. Prior, Alma, c. 2.

But thou, vain man! begull'd by Popish shows,
Doatest on ribbands, flounces, furbelows.—Gay. Espousal.

A furbelow of precious stones, a hat buttoned with a diamond, a brocade waistcoat or petticoat, are standing topicks.
Spectator, No. 15.

Her keys he takes; her doors unlocks:
Through wardrobe and through closet bounces;
Peeps into every chest and box.
Turns all her furbelows and flounces.—Prior. The Dove.

FU'RBISH. Variously written frobish, frubbish, furbush. Fr. Fourbir; It. Forbire, detergere, polire, nitorem conciliare, to wipe or rub, to polish, to give brightness to. Skinner derives from Ger. Farb, colour: Menage traces it from the Lat. Purus.

To rub, to polish, to give brightness or polish to; to rub till bright; to rub up. See F.

The 2d day he commanded them to scour and furbish their harnesse and weapons before their tents.
Holland. Livie, p. 624.

Certes, not by filing and sharpening the edge of his sword; not by grinding and whetting the point of his speares head: not with scouring and forbishing his head-piece or motion.
Id. Plutarch, p. 809.

Him he cashered presently and chased from among the other bands, as being a naughty souldier, and not worthy to have place in any company, who would be so frobishing and trimming his weapons at the very instant when there was more need to use them.—Id. Ib. p. 339.

The second day, there was carried upon a number of carts, all the fairest and richest armour of the Macedonians, as well of copper as also of iron and steel, all glistering bright, being newly furbushed, and artificially laid in order.
North. Plutarch, p. 219.

—— Hang your bread and water,
I'le make you young again, believe that, lady,
I will so frubbish you.
Beaum. & Fletch. Custom of the Country, Act i. sc. 3.

Again they furbish up their holy trumpery
Relics, and wooden working Saints,
Whole loads of lumber and religious rubbish
Rowe. Lady Jane Gray, Act iii.

Their ancient houses running to decay,
Are furbish'd up, and cemented with clay.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Which being furbished up, patched and varnished, serves well enough for those who, being unacquainted with the conflict which has always been maintained between the sense and the nonsense of mankind, know nothing of the former existence and the ancient refutation of the same follies.—Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

FURCA'TION. Lat. Furca, a fork, (qv.) Division like a fork.

But when they grow old, they grow less branched, and first do lose their brow antlers, or lowest furcations next the head.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 9.

FU'RDLE, v. }
FU'RDLING, n. }
To fardle, (qv.) i. e. to bundle or pack up.

The rose of Jerico, being a dry and ligneous plant, is preserved many years, and though crumpled and furdled up, yet if infused in water, will swell and display its parts.
Brown. Miscell. p. 34.

Nor to urge the thwart enclosure and furdling of flowers, and blossomes, before explication, as in the multiplied leaves of piome.—Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

FURL, v. Velum contrahere seu complicare, to draw together or fold the sail. Lye says, He knows not whether from the verb to curl. It is probably a contraction of furdle or fardle, (qv.) It is written furle by Beaum. & Fletch. Fearle, noun, in the Mirrour for Magistrates, may mean, the flag, q. d. the flag of triumph; the palm.

To bundle or pack; to roll, fold or wrap up

Promising that what victuals were in his ships, or other things that might doe vs pleasure vntill the end, we should haue the one halfe of it, offering vs if we would to furle his flags and to bee at our commaundment in all things.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 37.

My father hight Sir Edmund Mortimer,
True Earle of March, whence I was after Earle,
By just descent these two my parents were,
Of which the one of knighthood bare the fearle,
Of womanhood the other was the pearle.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 273.

Down with the main mast, lay her at hull,
Furle up her linnens, and let her ride it out.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Sea Voyage, Act i. sc. 1.

Disdaining, furls his mane and tears the ground,
His eyes enflaming all the desert round.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel

Along the coast he shoots with swelling gales,
Then lowers the lofty mast, and furls the sails.
Tickell. Iliad, b. i.

For, while aloft the order those attend
To furl the mainsail, or on deck descend;
A sea, up surging with stupendous roll,
To instant ruin seems to doom the whole.
Falconer. The Shipwreck, c. 2.

FU'RLONG. A.S. Furlang; Low Lat. Furlongus, quasi, (says Spelman,) a furrow long, that is, bounded or terminated by the length of a furrow; i. e. id quod uno progressu aratrum describit antequam regreditur; and this, he adds, equals 40 perches, (or poles, each = 217½ feet,) or the eighth part of a mile. And see the quotation from Bale.

It is likewise, as Minshew says, the eighth part of an acre.

As ich can fynde in a felde, and in a forlong an hare.
Piers Ploukman, p. 111.

Whan they were come almost to that citee,
But if it were a two furlong or three,
A yonge clerke roming by himself they mette,
Which that in Latine thriftily hem grette.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,483.

The small pathe, the large strete,
The furlonge, and the longe mile,
All is but one for thilke while.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

A furlong is the eyghte parte of a myle and contayneth a hundreth and xxv. passes, which is in length vi. hundreth and xxv. fote.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

This said, they both a furlong's mountenance
Retir'd their steeds, to ronne in even race:
But Braggadochio with his bloody launce
Once having turn'd, no more return'd his face,
But lefte his love to losse, and fled himselfe a pace.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

Hee affirmeth that Saturn gave warning to Sisuthrus of this deluge, and willed him to prepare a great vessel or ship, wherein to put conuenient food and to saue himselfe and his kindred and acquaintance, which he builded of length five furlongs, of breadth two.—Purchas. Pilgrimage, b. i. c. 8.

Pliny and Herodotus say, the narrowest part of the channel [Hellespont] is about seven stadia, or furlongs.
Fawkes. Hero & Leander, Note.

FU'RLOUGH. Dut. Ver-lof, leave or permission to go forth, out, or away.
Leave of absence.

Captain Irwin, whom I believe you know, son to the old General, goes by the next packet-boat to Holland, he has got a furlow from his father for a year, during which time he intends to see as much as he can abroad.
Chesterfield. Miscellaneous Works, vol. iv. Let. 42.

FU'RMENTY. See FRUMENTY, and the first quotation from Pliny there, and the second below.

When maltemen make vs drink no frmentie.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glass.

And ye shall eate neither bread, nor parched corn, nor furmenty of newe corne: vntill the selfe same daye that ye haue broughte an offringe vnto your God.
Bible, 1551. Leuiticus, c. 23.

And to speake generally of all graine, there are two principall kinds thereof, to wit, first fourment, containing under it wheat and barley, and such like: secondly, pulse, comprising beanes, pease, chiches, &c.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 7.

Some there bee who take of spring-corne, millet, panicke, lentus, cich pease, and the graine whereof fourmentie is made.—Id. Ib.

——— He'll find you out a food
That needs no teeth, nor stomach; a strange furmity.
Beaum. & Fletch. Bondman, Act i. sc. 2.

I can't endure to have a perfumed sir
Stand cringing in the hams, licking his lips
Like a spaniel over a furmenty-pot, and yet
Has not the boldness to come on, or offer
What they know we expect.
Massinger. The Bondman, Act i. sc. 3.

FU'RNACE, v. } Fr. Fournaise; It. Fornace;
FU'RNACE, n. } Sp. Hornaza; Lat. Fornax, from the ancient formus, calidus; Gr. Θερμ-ος, from θερειν, to heat, to burn.

That which heateth; usually applied to an enclosed fire, burning on that account with greater force.

To which image bothe young and old
Commanded he to loute, and have in drede,
Or in a fournais, ful of flames rede,
He should be brent, that wolde not obeye.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,169.

And the Lord said vnto Moses and Aaron: take youre hande full of ashes oute of the fornace & let Moses sprynkel it vp into the ayre in the sight of Pharao, and it shal turne to duste in all the lande of Egypte.—Bible, 1551. Exodus, c. 9.

——— He furnaces
The thicke sighes from him; whiles the jolly Britaine,
(Your Lord I meane) laughes from's free lungs.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline, Act i. sc. 7.

Therein an hundred raunges weren pight,
An hundred fournaces all burning bright;
By euery fournace many fiends did byde,
Deformed creatures, horrible in sight,
And euery feend his busy paines applyde
To melt the golden metall, ready to be tryde.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Earth kindling inward, melts in all her caves,
And hissing floats with fierce metallic waves,
As iron fusile from the furnace flows,
Or molten ore with keen effulgence glows.
Broome. Battle of the Gods & Titans.

——— Whence convey'd
To the fierce furnace, its intenser heat
Melts the hard mass, which flows an iron stream,
On sandy beds below. Dodsley. Agriculture, c. 3

FU'RNISH, v. }
FU'RNISH, n. }
FU'RNISHEDNESS. }
FU'RNISHER. }
FU'RNISHING, n. }
FU'RNITURE. }
FU'RNIMENT. }
Fr. Fournir; It. Fornire; Sp. Fornir. Menage derives the French from the Italian, and the Italian from the Lat. Ornare; ornatum armis, furnished with arms.

To supply, to administer, to accoutre, to provide, to fit, suit, equip or accommodate with, (sc.) certain articles of usefulness, convenience or ornament.

Neyther the men nor the horse glistered so with golde nor precious furnamentes, but only with the brightnesse of their harnesse.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 24.

And beyng in a heate entered naked into the water in euery man's syght, thinkinge it should be a contentacion to hys souldyers, to se that the furnamentis about hys bodye were none other but suche as they commonlye vsed to weare.
Id. Ib.

Like when Apollo leaueth Lycia
His wintring place, and Xanthus floods likewise,
To visit Delos his mother's mansion,
Repairing oft and furnishing her quire.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b iv.

Than all these went to a strong castell standynge on a hyghe mountayne, called Chastocoaulx: ther was thentre of Bretayne; it was furnyshed with men of warre.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 71.

Therle of Neuers laye thus styll at Venyce, for his entēt was nat to departe thens tyll euery thynge was payed and discharged: for the furnyshing of this fynaunce Sir Dyne of Responde toke great payne.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 224.

Lo, where they spide with speedy whirling pase,
One in a charet of strange furniment,
Towards them driuing like a storme out sent.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 3.

Next these, Newcastle furnisheth the fleet
With nine good hoyes, of necessary use.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

In such a sense it was [attributed] to the fornace in respect of the fulness and well furnishedness of the earth.
More. An Appendix to the Defence, c. 4.

——— What hath bin seene,
Either in snuffes and packings of the Duke's,
Or the hard reine which bothe of them hath borne
Against the old kinde King; or something deeper,
Whereof (perchance) these are but furnishings.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 1.

When all men had with full satietie
Of meates and drinkes their appetites suffic'd,
To deedes of armes and proof of chivalrie
They gan themselues addresse, full rich aguiz'd,
As each one had his furniture deviz'd.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

Hereupon he [Romulus] commanded to proclame these games over the country adjoining, and with as great preparation and furniture, as in those dates either their skill or abilitie might afford, they celebrate the same, and all to make the show more goodly and worthie of great expectation.—Holland. Livius, p. 8.

Not content with the simplicity and plainness of the Gospel, which could possibly furnish no materials for strife and contention, vain men soon began to mix their own uncertain opinions with the doctrines of Christ.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 14.

And some gave out the Dutchess of Lauderdale as a rusetter of Argyle since his forfeiture, and a furnisher of him with money.—State Trials, an. 1677. J. Mitchel.

It [the Gospel] does not dwell in the mind like furniture, only for ornament, but for use, and the great concernments of life.—South, vol. vii. Ser. 5.

Soon after, viz. Feb. 12, the King sealed his [Wolsey's] pardon, and three days after restored him to his bishoprick of York, and sent him money, plate, and furniture for his house and chapel.—Strype. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1530.

The palaces erected in the reign of Elizabeth by the memorable Countess of Shrewsbury, Elizabeth of Hardwicke, are exactly in this style. The apartments are lofty and enormous, and they knew not how to furnish them.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 1.

The Protector was magnificent, and had he lived to complete Somerset-house, would probably have called in the assistance of those artists, whose works are the noblest furniture.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 6.

FU'RROW, v. }
FU'RROW, n. }
Dut. Voren; Ger. Furchen; A. S. Fyr-ian, proscindere, sulcare, to cleave or cut asunder.

To cut or cleave asunder; to cut or mark out in hollowed lines; to hollow out, to indent lineally.

A long exile thou art assigned to bere;
Long to furrow large space of stormy seas.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

O that the raging surges great that lecher's bane had wrought
When first with ship he forowed seas, and Lacedemon sought.
Incertaine Auctors. Penelope to Ulisses.

How can she weepe for her sinne, that must bare her skin therewith, and furroue her face!
Vives. The Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 9.

She learn'd the churlish ax and twybill to prepare,
To steel the coulter's edge, and sharp the furrowing share.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 18.

Though his attire were miserably base,
And time had worn deep furrows in his face,
Yet, though cold age had frosted his fair haires,
It rather seem'd with sorrow than with years.
Drayton. Legend of Robert Duke of Normandy.

When they have traced out all the said place where the walls should stand, they measure out as much ground as will serve for the gates, but take out the plough-share, and so pass over that space with the bare plough, as if they meant thereby, that all the furrow which they cast up and cared should be sacred and inviolable.—Holland. Plutarch, p 703.

——— [I] expose no ships
To threatnings of the furrow-faced sea.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act i. sc. 1.

Ray. See my Philippi, her rich colours fled, and like that soule
The furrow-fronted Fates have made an anvill
To forge diseases on; she's lost herself
With her fled beauty.—Rowlins. Rebellion, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Why he was met euen now
As mad as the vext sea, singing alowd,
Crown'd with ranke fenitar and furrow-weeds.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 4.

His lamp, his bow and quiver, laid aside,
A rustic wadet o'er his shoulders ty'd,
Sly Cupid, always on new mischief bent,
To the rich field and furrow'd tillage went.
Prior. Cupid turned Ploughman.

Joyous the impatient husbandman perceives
Relenting Nature, and his lusty steers
Drives from their stalls to where the well-us'd plough
Lies in the furrow, loosen'd from the frost.
Thomson. Seasons. Spring.

That brow in furrow'd lines had fix'd at last,
And spake of passions, but of passions past.
Byron. Lara, c. 1.

——— And fame reports,
While he broke up new ground, and tir'd his plough
In grassy furrowes, the torn earth disclos'd
Helmets and swords, (bright furniture of war
Sleeping in rust) and heaps of mighty bones.
Watts. Victory of the Poles.

FU'RTHER, v. }
FU'RTHER, adj. }
FU'RTHER, ad. }
FU'RTHERANCE. }
FU'RTHERER. }
FU'RTHERING, n. }
FU'RTHERMORE. }
FU'RTHEROVER. }
FU'RTHEST. }
A. S. Forth-ian, ge-forthian, promovere, juvare, to promote, further, advance, assist or help. Dut. Voorderen; Ger. Befuerdern; from Forth, (qv.) See also FAR.

Further, or forther, (improperly written farther,) is the regular comparative of Forth; and the English verb is formed upon this comparative.

To move or cause to move forth, on the way, away, to a greater distance; to remove; to promote, to prefer, to advance, and thus, to aid, assist or help.

And thei camen nygh the castel whidir thei wenten: and he made countenaunce that he wolde go ferther.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 24.

But ferther thei schulen not profite, for the unwisdom of hem schal be knowen to alle men as hern was.
Id. 2 Tymothy, c. 3.

But natheles it is my will (qd. she)
To forthren you, so that ye shal nat die
But turnen sound home to your Thessalie.
Chaucer. Legend of Hypsiphile & Medea.

For wel we knowen that youre liberal grace and mercie stretcheth hem forther into goodnesse, than don our outragious giltes and trespasses into wickednesse.
Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

In thy study so thou writest
And euermore of loue enditest
In honour of hem and praisings
And in his folkes furtherings.—Id. House of Fame, b. ii.

——— And furthermore wot I,
Ther speketh many a man of mariage,
That wot no more of it than wot my page,
For which causes a man should take a wif.
Id. The Marchantes Tale, v. 9316

And furtherover, ther as the lawe sayth, that temporall goddes of bondfolk ben the goddes of hir lord.
Id. The Persones Tale.

Receiue and take a new feith,
Whiche shall be forthrynge of thy life,
And eke so worshipfull a wife,
The daughter of an emperour
To wedde, it shall be great honour.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

Next vnto this planete of loue
The bright sonne stont aboue
Which is the hinderer of the night,
And fortherer of the dales light.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

And ferthermore with good courage
He saith, be so he mine hir haue,
That Christ, that came this worlde to saue,
He woll beleue, and thus recorded
Thei ben on either side accorded.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

For whan I wende next haue bee
(As I by my wenyng caste)
Than was I forthaste at laste.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Here that thyng hindred the matter of the Ghospel, which ought to haue furthered it.—Udal. Matthew, c. 13.

And had made him to beleeue that he should take the towne in fiftoene dayes, or a moneth at the furthest.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. i. p. 85.

What thinkest thou that if I wold require it of hym, I coulde not haue more than twelue legions of Aungelles? and that oute of hand by and by withoute anye further delaye?
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1393.

When I gave it my commaundment, makinge dores and barres for it, sayinge: hither to shalt thou come, but no forther, and here shalt thou lave downe thy proude and hye waues.—Bible, 1551. Job, c. 38.

For though that man's law, and ordinaūce make not a man good before God, neither iustifie him in the hart, yet are they ordeined for the furtheraunce of the comon wealth, to mainteine peace, to punish the euill, and to defend the good.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 49.

In this nyghtes passe tyme, for the furtheraunce of this purpose, the Lorde of Bressy with a chosen company of knyghtes, lodgyd hym in busshement nere vnto the towne, towarde the gate of Seynt Andrewe
Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1548.

For next God's providence, surely that day was, by that good father's meanes, dies natalis to me for the whole foundation of the poore learnyng I have, and of all the furderance that hitherto elsewhere I have obteyned.
Ascham. Schole-Master, b. ii.

There were also as fortherers of the matyer, the cardynall of Cypris, &c.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1535.

Misguided haue I beene
and trayned all by trust,
And loue was forger of the fraude,
and furtherer of my lust.
Turbervile. The Penitent Louer.

And, in middes of outward injuries, and inward cares, to encrease them withall, good Sir Richard Sackville dieth, that worthie gentleman; that earnest fauourer and furtherer of God's true religion.—Ascham. Schole-Master, b. i.

Whom when I saw assembled in such wise,
So desperatly the battaile to desire
Then furthermore thus sayd I vnto them.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

They ran vp and downe the citie, went about to wrest open the gates of the temples: the night furthered their credulousnes, and in the dark euery man more readie to affirme.
Greneway. Tacitus. Annales, p. 60.

Theoc. You gripe it too hard, sir.
Maisf. Indeed I do, but have no further end in it
But love and tenderness, such as I may challenge,
And you must grant.
Massinger. The Unnatural Combat, Act ii. sc. 3.

Therefore God, to the intent of further healing man's depraved mind, to this power of the magistrate, which contents itself with the restraint of evil doing in the external man, added that which we call censure to purge it, and remove it clean out of the inmost soul.
Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

I still to prompt his power with me to act
Into those secrets got so deep a sight,
That nothing lastly to his furtherance lack'd.
Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell.

——— Be resolute, thy foot
Is guided by a power, that, though unseene,
Is still a furtherer of good attempts
Rawlins. The Rebellion, Act iv. sc. 1.

And furthermore, the leaves, body, and boughs, of this tree, by so much exceed other plants as the greatest men of power and worldly ability surpass the meanest.
Sir Walter Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 4. s. 3.

They are her furthest reaching instrument,
Yet they no beams unto their objects send;
But all the rays are from their objects sent,
And in the eyes with pointed angles end.
Davies. The Immortality of the Soul, s. 14.

Nature gave him a child, what men in vain
Oft strive, by art though further'd, to obtain.
Dryden. The Death of Lord Hastings.

As the last year appeared abroad a declaration of the mass, so about this time, still for the further humiliation of that Popish service, came forth an examination of the mass made by Dr. William Turner, a physician about this time living in the Duke of Somerset's family, afterwards Dean of Wells, a witty as well as learned man.
Strype. Memorials. Edward VI. an. 1548.

He further said, he did not say, "The King had shed the blood of the saints at Charing Cross this time twelve month."
State Trials. John James, an. 1601.

Our Saviour in these words suggests to us, that it is more difficult for a rich man than for a poor man to get to heaven; and by consequence that his riches are no furtherance, but rather an hindrance, in his way thither.
Bp. Beveridge, vol. ii. Ser. 137.

The first [end] was to represent his lordship's acceptance of that employ as an argument that he had undergone a political regeneration, and that he was not only satisfied with his Majesty's measures, but ready to further them to the utmost in his power.—Chesterfield. Memoirs, by Maty.

In the short account that is given of the other Apostles in the former part of the history, and within the short period which that account comprises, we find, first, two of them seized, imprisoned, brought before the Sanhedrim, and threatened with further punishment.
Paley. Evidences, vol. i. c. 5.

FU'RTIVE. Fr. Furtif; It. and Sp. Furtivo; Lat. Furtivus, from Fur, a thief.
Obtained by theft, stolen.

Or do they (as your schemes, I think, have shown)
Dart furtive beams and glory not their own,
All servants to that source of light, the Sun
Prior. Solomon, b. i.

FU'RY, v. / FU'RY, n. / FU'RIOUS. / FU'RIOUSLY. / FU'RIOUSNESS. / FU'RIAL. / FU'ROR. } Fr. Furie; It. and Sp. Furia; from the Lat. Furor; for which Vossius proposes four different etymologies. It is probably from the Gr. Φερεσθαι, ferri, impetu quodam ferri et abripi, whence (as Vossius remarks) θεοφοροι, qui numine afflantur, quales dicuntur furere. Fury is applied to—

A violent act, energy or exertion of malevolent feeling, of anger, of rage, of madness, of raving passion, of fervid enthusiasm; also, to persons.

Of swiche matere made he many layes,
Songes, complaintes, roundels, virelayes
How that he dorste not his sorwe telle,
But languisheth, as doth a furie in helle.
Chaucer. The Frankeleines Tale, v. 11,262.

What is the cause, if it be for to tell,
That ye ben in this furial peine of hell?
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,762.

All faith and loue, I promitted to thee,
Was in thy selfe fekeel and furious,
O false Creseide, and true knight Troilus.
Id. The Complaint of Creseide.

For that if they were irritated, he doubted much some great inundation by their furor over all Italy and Christendom.—Sir T. Wyatt. To the King, 9th March, 1540.

For two thousande whom the fury of the slaughter had left on lyue, were afterwardes hanged vpon crosses, along the sea coast.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, b. iv. fol. 63.

When with such words she gan my hart remoue:
What helps to yeld vnto such furious rage,
Swete spouse, quod she, without wil of the Gods
Thus chaunced not. Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

So staies the streame, when furiouslie it flouth,
And filles the dikes where it had wont to swimme,
Vntill by force it breakes aboue the brimme.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

But malicious enuie gotte the vpper hand of this their decree or counsayle, and furiousnesse in them, shooke of all feare.—Udal. Acles, c. 5.

Thou shalt stretche forth thyne hande vpo the furyousnes of mine enemyes, and thy right hande shall saue me.
Bible, 1551. Psalm 138.

As I would not neglect a sodain good opportunity; so I would not fury myself in the search.—Feltham, pt. i. Res. 10.

O! fly from wrath; fly, O my liefest lord!
Sad be the sights, and bitter fruits of warre,
And thousand furies wait on wrathful sword.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 2.

Aris. Plato, what dost thou think of Diogenes?
Pla. To be Socrates, furious.
Lely. Alexander & Campaspe, Act i. sc. 3.

I do not find yet that aught for the furious incitements which have been us'd, hath issu'd by your appointment, that might give the least interruption, or disrepute, either to the author, or to the book.—Milton. Tetrachordon.

With that so furiously at him he flew,
As if he would haue ouerrun him streight;
And with his huge great yron axe gan hew
So hideously uppon his armour bright,
As he to pieces would haue chopt it quight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

I'll rend the miscreant into a thousand pieces,
And gnash his trembling members 'twixt my teeth:
Drinking his live-warm blood to satisfy
The boiling thirst of pain and furiousness
That thus exasperates great Polypheme.
Brewer. Lingua, Act v. sc. 6.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell;
The rattling drums (which trumpet's voice confounds)
The cries, th' encouragements, the shouting shrill,
That all about the beaten air rebounds.
Daniel. Civil War, b. iv.

Oppos'd in arms not long they idly stood,
But thrice they clos'd, and thrice the charge renew'd,
A furious pass the spear of Ajax made,
Through the broad shield, but at the corselet stay'd.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii. v. 965.

The clergy must be brought out of their ignorance by degrees, and then the people to be better instructed; but to drive furiously, and do all at once, might have spoil'd the whole design, and totally alienated those who were to be drawn by degrees.—Burnet. Hist. of Reformation, an. 1536.

Come, gentle God of soft desire,
Come, and possess my happy breast;
Not, fury-like, in flames and fire,
In rapture, rage, and nonsense, drest.—Thomson. Song.

When Alexander had in his fury inhumanly butchered one of his best friends and bravest captains, on the return of reason he began to conceive an horrour suitable to the guilt of such a murder.
Burke. A Vindication of National Society.

You have, indeed, winged ministers of vengeance, who carry your bolts in their pounces to the remotest verge of the sea. But there a power steps in that limits the arrogance of raging passions and furious elements, and says, "So far shalt thou go, and no farther."
Id. On Conciliation with America.

That is, Julian never attempted to rebuild the Temple; an inference so furiously sceptical, as would overturn the whole body of civil history.
Warburton. Julian's Attempt to Rebuild the Temp b. i. c. 5.

Pour out on every side the furiousness of thy wrath.
Lowth. Lectures by Gregory. From Job, c. 40.

FURZE, n. / FU'RZEN. / FU'RZY. } A. S. Fyrs, genista spinosa, ruscus, furz, gorse, whinne, furzen bushes, thorne broom, butchers' broom, (Sommer.) Perhaps (says Skinner) from fire, because this plant, from a dryness peculiar to itself, is especially fitted for fires. It is perhaps from the A. S. v. Yrs-ian. See GORSE and F.

Gonz. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea, for an acre of barren ground, long heath, browne furze, any thing.—Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 1.

For we must not alwaies choose that which is easie to be had and willing to be gotten; for we put by gorse and furzen bushes we tread underfoot briers, and brambles, though they catch hold of us.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 186.

No furzy tuft, thicke wood, nor breake of thornes
Shall harbour wolfe, nor in this ile shall breed,
Nor live one of that kind: if what's decreed
You keepe inviolate.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 5.

——— Then to the copse,
Thick with entangling grass, or prickly furze,
With silence lead thy many-colour'd hounds,
In all their beauty's pride.—Somerville. The Chase.

Wide through the furzy field their route they take.
Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake
Gay. Rural Sports, c. 1.

These thorny, furzy hills should ne'er be trod
With legs unguarded, and by feet unshod.
Fawkes. Theocritus, Idyl. 4.

Wild round them stubborn thorns and furze increase,
And creeping briars. Dyer. The Fleece, b. v.

FU'SCOUS. Fr. Fusque; Lat. Fuscus; Παρα το φασκειν, ustulare, to scorch.
Having the appearance of any thing scorched, browned, or burnt.

In buildings, when the highest degree of the sublime is intended, the materials and ornaments ought neither to be white, nor green, nor yellow, nor blue, nor of a pale red, nor violet nor spotted, but of sad and fuscous colours, as black, or brown, or deep purple, and the like.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful. s. 16.

FUSE, v. / FU'SIBLE. / FUSIBI'LITY. / FU'SIL, adj. / FU'SION. } Lat. Fundere, fusum, to pour. To melt, to reduce to a liquid or fluent state; to liquify. See the quotation from Sir T. Brown.

And also of hir induration,
Oiles, ablutions, metal fusible,
To tellen alle, wold passen any bible,
That o wher is
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,325

The ancients, observing in that material [flint] a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolved it into nobler use.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 20.

—— From which [liquid ore] he form'd,
First, his own tools, then, what might else be wrought
Fusil or grav'n in metal.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Common fusion, in metals, is also made by a violent heat, acting upon the volatile and fixed, the drie and humid parts of those bodies.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

The consistent phosphorus is fusible enough.
Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 475.

By Pallas taught, he frames the wondrous mould,
And o'er the silver pours the fusile gold.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. vi.

The chemists define salt, from some of its properties, to be a body fusible in the fire, congealable again by cold into brittle globes, or crystals.—Arbuthnot. Of Aliments, p. 25.

The ground he builds upon is not his own;
I know the quarry whence he had the stone:
The forest, too, where all the timber grow'd,
The forge wherein his fused metals flow'd.
Byron. Verses intended to have been Spoken.

Philosophers have taught, that the planets were originally masses of matter struck off in a state of fusion from the body of the sun, by the percussion of a comet, or by a shock from some other cause with which we are not acquainted.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 22.

FU'SEE. } From the Lat. Fusus, a spindle,
FU'SIL. } that around which any thing is spun, winded, or wound.

Fusil, in Heraldry, Fr. Fuseau, a charge either resembling a spindle, or somewhat longer than a lozenge.

For instance, it is indeed a very great evidence of an artist that can make a wheel of a watch, or the spring, or the ballance; but the destination of the spring to the string, and the string to the fusee, &c. is so great an evidence of an intellectual being, that works by intention, by election, by design, and appropriation, that nothing can be opposed against it.—Hale. Origin. of Mankind, p. 326.

Thinking men considered how it [a clock] might be made portable, by some means answerable to a weight; and so instead of that, put the spring and fuse-wheel, which make a watch.—Grew. Cosmologia Sacra, b. ii. c. 6. s. 86.

Heralds have not omitted this order or imitation thereof, whiles they symbollically adorn their scuchions with muscles, fusils and saltyrs, and while they disposed the figures of ermins, and varied coats in this quincuncial method.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

Thus referring the spring to the wheels, he [an observer] sees in it that which originates and upholds their motion; in the chain, that which transmits the motion to the fusee: in the fusee, that which communicates it to the wheels; in the conical figure of the fusee, if he refer back again to the spring, he sees that which corrects the inequality of its force.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

FU'SEL. } Fr. Fusil; It. Focile, fucile, igniarium. Caseneuve, from focillus,
FU'SIL. } a diminutive of focus. Menage,
FUSILE'ER. } focus, foci, fociles, focile, and fusile. Cotgrave calls it, a fire-steel for a tinder-box. Menage, igniarium; or any thing easily fired or ignited.

They have seized the artillery at Ipswich, and have made proclamation for King James. The regiment of fusileers is at Harwich; they say, they will declare with them.—Parl. Hist. Wm. & Mary. 1688-9. Deb. on a Muting in the Army.

A small anonymous Military Treatise, printed in the year 1680, says the fusil or firelock was then in use in our army, especially among the fusileers and grenadiers; in all likelihood the appellation of fusileers was given to those troops who were armed with fusils.
Grose. Military Antiquities, vol. i. p. 159.

FUSS. A. S. Fus, promptus, ready, very prompt, ready, quick, and nimble, (Somner.) Fys-an, agere, abigere, fugare, festinare, to hasten, to hurry, to drive hastily away.

A hurry; an unnecessary haste or bustle, undue importance. Fussy is a common word in the North: a fussey fellow; a busy, self-sufficient fellow.

With your humanity you keep a fuss;
But are in truth worse brutes than all of us,
We prey not on our kind, but you, dear brother,
Most beastly of all beasts, devour each other.
Lansdown. The Wild Boars' Defence.

From those conceited gentlemen, perchance,
That rush to hail him with such complaisance;
Ay—that's the reason of this fawning fuss;
I like him not—he never stole from us
Byron. Verses intended to be Spoken.

FUST, n. See FOIST.

Meeting them at the cape of Negrais, the Admirall of Arracan, Marucha, was with his fust, taken and slaine.
Purchase. Pilgrimage, b. v. c. 6.

FUST, v. } Fr. Fuste; fusty, tasting of FU'STY. } the cask, smelling of the vessel
FUSTILA'RIAN. } wherein it hath been kept,
FU'STILUGS. } (Cotgrave.) The Fr. Fuste, a cask, Skinner thinks, may be from the A. S. Fast, firmus, (q d. vas firmum.) See FOISTY, FOISTINESS.

To taste or smell of a foul or mouldy cask; to be or become mouldy or musty.

Fustilugs may be found in Sherwood and Cotgrave: the former explains it—Coche, femme bien grasse; and the latter explains—Coche, a fustilugs, a woman grown fat by ease and laziness.

If a feast, being never so great, lacked breade, or had fowstye and weightye breade, all the other daintyes should be unsaverye.—Ascham. Toxophilus, b. i.

Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before, and after, gave us not
That capability and godlike Reason
To fust in us unus'd.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 5.

But Nummius eas'd the needy gallant's care
With a base bargain of his blowen ware
Of fusted hops, now lost for loss of sale.
Bp. Hall, Sat. 5. b. iv.

At last, and in good hour, we are come to his farewel, which is to be a concluding taste of his jabberment in law, the flashiest and the fustiest that ever corrupted in such an unswill'd hogshead.—Milton. Colasterion.

Tuc. Hang him, fustic Satire, he smells all goat.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 4.

Page. Away you scullion, you rampallian, you fustillerian.
Shakespeare. 2 Part Henry IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

You may daily see such fustilugs walking in the streets, like so many tuns, each moving upon two pottle pots.
Junius. Sin Stigmatized, (1639.) p. 39.

For if I stay till I grow grey,
They'll call me old maid, and fusty old jade;
So I'll no longer tarry.
Vanbrugh. Provoked Husband, Act iv. Song.

FU'STIAN, n. } Fr. Fustaine; It. Fustagno;
FU'STIAN, adj } Sp. Fustan; Low Lat. Fustanum; which, Bochart thinks, FU'STIANIST. } is so called from Fustat, a city of Egypt, whence the cloth, called fustian, was first introduced into Europe. Applied met. to—

A style of speaking or writing affectedly fine, or inflated; mere stuff, bombast.

Of fustian he wered a gipon,
Alle besmotred with his haubergeon.
Chaucer. Prologue, v. 75

Harde to make ought of that is naked nought
This fustian maistres and this giggishe gase.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

This was it which had dampt the glory of Italian wits; that nothing had been there written now these many years but flattery and fustian.—Milton. Unlicensed Printing.

—— He does not mean
To rub your galls with a satiric scene;
Nor toil your brains, to find the fustian sence
Of those poor lines that cannot recompense
The pains of study. May. The Heir, Prol.

Pye. Puh! any fustian invocations, captain, will serve as well as the best, so you rant them out well
Anonymous. The Puritan, Act iii. sc. 4.

In their choice preferring the gay rankness of Apuleius, Arnobius, or any modern fustianist, before the native Latinisms of Cicero.—Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

A warrant was sent to Humphrey Orme, keeper of the standing wardrobe of the Tower of London, to deliver to Thomas Chappel, the king's bed-maker, one bed and a bolster of fustian, filled with down; which, I suppose, was the king's travelling bed.—Strype. Mem. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

Let fustian poets, with their stuff be gone,
And suck the mists that hang o'er Helicon;
When Progne or Thyestes' feast they write;
And for the mouthing actors verse indite.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

Let dull, unfeeling pedants talk by rote
Of Cato's soul which could itself subdue;
Or idle scraps of Stoic fustian quote,
And bravely bear the pangs they never knew.
Whitehead. On the Death of a Relation.

But if she frown, why farewell she
With all her medley trumpery,
With all her fustian, forced conceit,
And limping rhimes, and would-be wit.
Verses to Cambridge, by Henry Berkley.

FU'STIGATE, v. } Fr. Fustiguer, to cudgel,
FUSTIGA'TION. } from Lat. Fustis, a cudgel or stick.

That is to say, six fustigations or displings about the parish church of Aldborough aforesaid, before a solemne procession, sixe seueral Sundaies, &c.—Fox. Martyrs, p. 609.

Falling out with his steward Rivaldus de Modena an Italian, and fustigating him for his faults, the angry Italian poysoned him. [Cardinal Bambridge.]
Fuller. Worthies. Westmerland.

FU'TILE. } Fr. Futilité; It. Futilità; Sp.
FUTI'LITY. } Futilidad; Lat. Futilis, that can
FU'TILOUS. } or may pour forth, from obsolete futere, to pour forth; and thus, to pour forth nonsense, to talk overmuch, to blab, talk sillily.

Silly, trifling, nonsensical; talking overmuch, loquacious; empty, inane.

As for talkers and futile persons, they are commonly vain and credulous withal.
Bacon. Ess. Of Simulation & Dissimulation

The parable (Prov. xxix.) (it seems) especially corrects, not the futility of vaine persons, which easily utter, as well what may be spoken, as what should be secreted: not the bold roveing language of such as without all discretion and judgment flie upon all men and matters; not garrulity, whereby they fill others even to a surfeit: but another vice, more close and retired; namely the government of speech, of all adventures the least prudent and politique.
Id. On Learning, by G. Wats, b. viii. c. 2.

I received your answer to the futilous pamphlet, with your desire of my opinion touching it.—Howell, b. ii. Let. 48.

Mankind hath an appetite of posthumous memory, which would be senseless, and to no purpose if there be no life but this: now God implants no instincts in his creatures that are futilous and in vain, and therefore hence also we may conclude, that there is a future being.—Glanvill, Ser 6.

He was prepared to shew the madness of their declaration of the pretended rights of man, the childish futility of some of their maxims; the gross and stupid absurdity, and the palpable falsity of others.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

Contrary qualities can never subsist together in the same substance, without one destroying the other. Hence we understand the futility of Mr. Locke's superinduction of the faculty of thinking to a system of matter; conceived, by that excellent writer, in the modest fear of circumscribing Omnipotence.—Warburton. Divine Legation, b. ix. Notes.

FU'TURE, n. } Fr. Futur; It. and Sp. Futuro; Lat. Futurus, from the FU'TURE, adj. } ancient Fuo; Gr. Φυ-ειν, nasci,
FU'TURELY. } fieri, esse.
FUTURI'TION. }
FUTU'RITY. } That which is to come, which is to be, or to happen in time to come, hereafter.

That but aforne her she may see
In the future some socour
To leggen her of her dolour,
To graunt her time of repentaunce,
For her sinnes to do penaunce.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

Swiche supposing and hope is sharp and hard.
I warne you wel it is to seken ever,
That future temps hath made men dissever,
In trust therof, from all that ever they had.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,343.

And hee reigneth in so great peace and tranquillitie, that if his successors follow the same course of gouernment, there is no likelihood of future sedition or perturbation in any of the kingdoms.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 860.

Him God beholding from his prospect high,
Wherin past, present, future he beholds,
Thus to his onely Son foreseeing spake.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

But if we shall suffer the trifling doubts and jealousies of future sects to overcloud the fair beginnings of purposed reformation, let us rather fear that another proverb of the same wise man be not upbraided to us, that the way of the wicked is as darkness, they stumble at they know not what.
Id. The Reason of Church Government, b. i. c. 7.

—— It more imports me
Than all the actions that I have foregone,
Or futurely can cope.
Beaum. & Fletch. Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 1.

Had we been at first establisht in an impossibility of lapeing into evill; then many choise vertues, excellent branches of the divine life had never been exercis'd, or indeed have been at all. Such are patience, faith, and hope; the objects of which are, evill, futurity, and uncertainty.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 8.

Oh, blindness to the future! kindly given
That each may fill the circle mark'd by heaven.
Pope. Essay on Man

As for Duncombe's argument of building ships futurely, money may be had; the East India Company had it at four per cent. for the prizes.

Parl. Hist. Ch. II. 1673. Commons refuse a Supply.

The future use I shall make of it is to come directly to the point in question; for when it is certainly known what the drift, design, and meaning of an author is, much pains may be spared, and a dispute shortened.

Waterland. Works, vol. i. pt. ii. p. 160.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption, should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect to its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no.—South, vol. i. Ser. 8.

This seems to me to be the great art of Divine Providence, so to adjust the two worlds, human and natural, material and intellectual, as seeing through the possibilities and futuritions of each, according to the first state and circumstances he puts them under, they should all along correspond and fit one another, and especially in their great crises and periods.—Burnet. Sacred Theory of the Earth, b. i. c. 8.

And thou, O sacred maid! inspir'd to see
Th' event of things in dark futurity,
Give me, what Heaven has promised to my fate,
To conquer and command the Latian State:
To fix my wandering Gods, and find a place
For the long exiles of the Trojan race.

Dryden. Virgil. Æneis, b. vi.

Gentlemen who are, with me, verging towards the decline of life, and are apt to form their ideas of kings from kings of former times, might dread the anger of a reigning prince, they who are more provident of the future, or by being young are more interested in it, might tremble at the resentment of the successor: they might see a long, dull, dreary, unvaried vista of despair and exclusion, for half a century before them.—Burke. On the Economical Reform.

So when remote futurity is brought
Before the keen inquiry of her thought,
A terrible sagacity informs
The Poet's heart, he looks to distant storms;
He hears the thunder ere the tempest low'rs,
And arm'd with strength surpassing human pow'rs,
Seizes events as yet unknown to man,
And darts his soul into the dawning plan.

Cowper. Table Talk.

FU'ZZ. Fu'zzy. Fu'zz-ball. } Skinner says, Fusbals, quasi foist or feist balls, a species of fungus; whence fuzzy is applied to any thing fungous and light. See Fitchat.

As touching all the sorts of mushromes, toadstooles, puffes, fusbals or fuzzes, these particulars following are observed.

Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 3.

I enquire, whether it be the thin membrane, or the inward and something soft and fuzzy pulpe it contains, that raises and represents to itself these arbitrarious figments and chimeras.—Dr. H. More. Appendix to the Antidote, c. 10.

FU'ZZLE, is probably a corruption of fuddle, (qv.)

The first night, having liberally taken his liquor (as in that country they do) my fine scholler was so fuzzled, that he no sooner was laid in bed, but he fell fast asleep, never waked till morning, and then much abashed

Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 600.

FY. See Foh. The imperative of the Goth. and A.S. verb Fi-an, to hate.

Hate this, abhor this, shame upon this.

He easte, wat hil costenede? thre ssyllyng, the other seyde,
Fy a debles, quath the kyng, wo sey so vyl dede,
Kyng to werye eny cloth, bote yt costenede more?

R. Gloucester, p. 390

Of all swiche cursed stories I say fy.

Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Prologue, v. 4500.

What kynde of disease did he crie fye vpon or turne his face from? not lepree.—Udal. Luke, c. 24.

Fye, my lord, fie, a souldier, and affear'd? what need we feare who knowes it, when none can call our power to account.—Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 1.

G.

G is of double force in our tongue, and is sounded with an impression made on the midst of the palate. Before A, O, and U strong or hard, or before the aspirate H, or the liquids L and R; or in the ends of words, except the qualifying E follow it; and then the sound is weak (or soft,) rag, rage. Before U the force is double, (or two-fold;) as in guile, and lan-guish. Before E and I the powers are confused; and uttered, now strong, (or hard,) now weak, (or soft.) See B. Jonson's English Grammar, c. 4.

It is softened into the guttural Y. As, gon, yon; get, yet; gate, yate; ge, or ghe, ye; ghou, you.

Wilkins remarks, that G has the same affinity with C, as D with T; G having in the pronunciation an almost imperceptible compression of the larynx, which C has not.

GA, i. e. go, (qv.)

GAB, v. Gab, s. Ga'bber. Ga'bbing, s. Ga'bble, v. Ga'bble, s. Ga'bbling, s. } A. S. Gabban, deridere, ludere, illudere, to scoff, to mock, to delude, to flout, to gibe or jest. Hence, perhaps, the Fr. Gaber, (It. Gabbare,) Dut. Gabberen, our own Gabbe, gabber, nugari, jocari. Hence also, I take it, our gibberish, (Somner.) Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "Gabbe, Fr. to talk idly, to lye. Gabbe I of this? (b. ii. p. 5.) Num id mentior?" Gab, the noun, is still in vulgar use: "To have the gift of the gab," i. e. the gift of speaking plausibly and fluently; of making the best of a bad cause. Hence, to gabble,—

To talk quickly, rapidly, noisily, and thence, senselessly; to make a confused noise; similar to rapid, indistinct utterance. See to Jabber.

Holland translates, exserti (sc. dentes,) gabbing teeth and gabbed tusks, standing forth or out of the mouth.

Wel thou wost wytly, bote yf thou wolle gabbe
Thou hast hanged on mine hals.—Piers Ploukman, p. 49.

With glosynges and with gabbyinge, he gyleth the peuple.

Id. p. 398.

That folweth fulliche the feith, and non other fables
Withouten gabynge of glose, as the Godspelles telleth.

Id. Crede.

And certes in the same book I rede,
Right in the nexte chapitre after this,
(I gabbe not, so have I joye and blis,)

Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,072.

I swere you, sir, it is gabbing.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

My sonne,
That I shall aske, gab nought,
But tell, &c.

Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

For, as Seint Isidor saith, he is a japer and a gabber, and not veray repentant, that eft doth thing for which him oweth to repent.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Sire Edrich, selde the kyng,
Thou ne gabbest nothing,
With gile and wyth suykedom,
Thou lettest the lord to do the don,
That the dude muche honour,
Ant thou were his traitour.

Chronicle of Englelande, in Ritson, vol. ii.

Of teeth there be three sorts: for either they be framed like sawes, or else set flat, even and levell, or last of all stand gabbing out of the mouth.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 25.

None have gabbed tusks standing forth of the mouth, whose teeth are fashioned like a saw.—Id. Ib.

He doth not perceiue what is fitting or decent for euerie season, or gabbeth more than he hath commission to doo.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, vol. vi. c. 1.

Choughes language, gabble enough, and good enough.

Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act iv. sc. 1.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders, each to other calls
Not understood, till hoarse, and all in rage,
As mockt they storm. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xii.

The talkativeness of those who love the ill-nature of conversation made them turn into assemblies of geese, their lips hardened to bills by eternal using, they gabbled for diversion, they hissed in scandal.—Guardian, No. 56.

Barbarians, who are in every respect scarce one degree above brutes, having no language among them, but a confused gabbling which is neither well understood by themselves or other.—Spectator, No. 389.

Where'er she trod grimalkin purr'd around,
The squeaking pigs her bounty own'd:
Nor to the waddling duck or gobbling goose
Did she glad sustenance refuse.—Smollett. Burlesque Ode.

The noisy geese that gabbled o'er the pool.

Goldsmith. The Deserted Village.

Whether the Muse the style of Cambria's sons,
Or the rude gabble of the Huns,
Or the broader dialect
Of Caledonia she affect,
Or take, Hibernia, thy still ranker brogue.—Lloyd, Ode 1.

GA'BARDINE. Fr. Galleverdine, galvardine; It. Gavardina; Sp. Gabardina; Fr. Gaban; It. Gabbano; Sp. Gaban. Gaban is derived, by Menage, from Cappa; cappanum, gappanum, gaban, (see Cape.) By Skinner, from Fr. Cabane; Sp. Cabanna; a cabin, a cot, q.d. a cottager's garment; perhaps (he also says) from the Ger. Gabe, a gift, q.d. a garment given annually by masters to servants and dependants: by us called a livery, from the Fr. Livrer, to deliver.

An upper garment; a loose coat or frock; thrown over the other clothing.

——— My cote is bare,
my gawbardyne amis,
Thou lestes at me: I maruaile muche
what sport thou fyndes at this.

Drant. Horace. Ep. to Mæcenas.

You call me misbeleever, cutthroate dog,
And spet vpon my Jewish gaberdine,
And all for vse of that which is mine owne.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 5.

They had also about this time a kind of gowne called a git, a loose iacket like an herald's coate of armes, called a tabard, a short gabbardin, called a court pie.

Camden. Remaines. Apparel.

——— The shot, let fly
At random 'mong the enemy,
Pierc'd Talgol's gabardine. Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

GA'BLE. Ga'beller. } Low Lat. "Gabella, gabellum, gablum; vectigal, portorium, tributum, exactio, census, from the Sax. Gaf-ol or gaf-el," (Spelman.) See also Vossius, de Vitiis, lib. ii. c. 8. "Gaf-el, tribute, tol, custome; a subsidy; yearly rent, payment or revenew," (Somner.) "Fr. Gabeler,—to pay custom for; also, to impose a custome, lay an impost, on," (Cotgrave.) Ger. Gabel; from Gabe, donum, (says Wachter,) and this from the A. S. Gefe, gyfe, a gift. Skinner also derives the A. S. Gaf-el, (i. e. gaf-dæl,) from the A. S. verb Gif-an, dare, to give.

A portion given; and hence, a tax raised or levied (in England) with common consent by act of parliament. And such taxes were commonly called, gifts, and benevolences.

The thre estates ordenid that the gabell of salt shulde ron through the realme.

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 155.

They wolde that these impocycions, subsedyes, and gables shulde be layde downe in all Parys.—Id. Ib. c. 388.

——— Whispering in his ear,—
If he would have their fear,—no man should dare
To bring a salad from his country garden,
Without the paying gabel.

Massinger. The Emperor of the East, Act i. sc. 2

To their tumultuous burning the gabellers goods I think I may, not unaptly, compare our burning the Pope.

Wright. View of the late Troubles, (1685.) Pref.

Which they could not levy upon meat and drink, as they were wont, there being already so many new imposts and gables, beside the ordinary excise, as the poor commons were not able, and worse willing, to bear it.

Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1552

The gabels of Naples are very high on oil, wine, tobacco, and indeed on almost every thing that can be eaten, drank or worn.—Addison. Travels. Naples.

GA'BION, v. } Fr. Gabion; It. Gabbione;
GA'BION, n. } Sp. Gabion, corbis terrâ oppletus, a basket filled with earth, from the It. Gabbia, which Menage derives from the Lat. Cavea, a cave; for (Skinner adds) it is like a large cave; but see CAOR.

Baskets filled with earth for the defence of cannoniers, (Minshew and Cotgrave.)

The other side which was toward the riuer was inclosed with a pallisado of plankes of timber after the maner that gabions are made.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 325.

The fourth day were planted vnder the gard of the cloister two demy-canons, and two coluerings against the towne, defended or gabbioned with a crosse wall, thorow the which our battery lay.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 140.

GA'BLE. I. e. Cable, (qv.)

But the reason of their foolishnes in striking up their drums before they were come neere them, the Cassaks discouering the boats, cut their gables, and put out to sea.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 397.

For that they had neither oares, masts, sailes, gables, or any thing else ready of any gally.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 134.

GA'BLE. } Ger. Gibel; Dut. Gevel; Sw.
GA'BLE-END. } Gafwel; Low Lat. Gabulum: summitas vel frontispicium domûs. Of which (says Wachter) three origins have been proposed: one German, by Kilian, from Heben, to raise, to heave, upwards, as if properly written Gehevel; a second, the Gr. Κεφαλη, the head, by Junius; and a third, Hebrew, by Helvigius. The Goth. Gibla, Junius explains, summa structuræ totius extremitas; the highest extremity of the whole building.

Glase the gable, and grave thē goure name.
Piers Ploughman, p. 40.

——— That we may go,
And breke an hole on high upon the gable
Unto the gardin ward, over the stable.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3572.

All the seid fynyshing and performing of the seid towre with fynyalls, ryfaat gabbletts, batelments, orbis, or crosse quarters, and every other thynge belongyng to the same to be well and workmanly wrought.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. App.

The houses stand sidewales backward into their yards, and onely endwaies with their gables towards the street.
Fuller. Worthies. Exeter.

I affect not these high gable-ends, these Tuscan tops, nor your coronets, nor your arches, nor your pyramids.
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 1.

GAD. } A. S. Gad, cuspis, stiga, stimulus,
GAD-FLY. } the point of a weapon, a spear or arrow-head, a sting, prick or goad. Gad, gadd, gade, i.e. gaad. Hence (happily) our gad of steele or iron, I. massa chalybis vel ferri, (Somner.) And gad-fly, q. d. goad-fly, quia instar stimuli pungit; because it pricks, like a goad. See Skinner and Lye (in Junius:) Minshew, because she makes the cattle gadde up and downe with stinging them. See GAD, the verb, and GOAD.

Before theis were fastened altogether within the grounde scatteringlye enerye where wyth a littell space betwyxt them, stakes of a foot long stickt full of iron hookes, and theis thei called gaddes, [quos stimulos nominabant]
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 226.

You are a young huntsman, Marcus, let it alone:
And come, I will goe get a leafe of brasse;
And with a gad of steele will write these words
And lay it by.—Shakes. Titus Andronicus, Act iv. sc. 1.

Glo. Kent banish'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? Prescrib'd his powre,
Confin'd to exhibition? all this done
Vpon the gad? Id. Lear, Act i. sc. 1.

All the medicines before-named which are to be taken warme, ought to bee heat with a gad of steele, quenched in the liquor.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 8.

To fawning dogs some times I gaue a bone,
And flung some scraps to such as nothing had:
But in my hands, still kept a golden gad.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 517.

——— Like some young
Heifer, (which by a furious gad-fly stung,)
Quitting the fields, in shady forests strays.
Sherburn. The Rape of Helen.

Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a flight
Of angry gad-flies fasten on the herd;
That startling scatters from the shallow brook,
In search of lavish streams. Thomson. Summer.

In the mitrum or gad-fly, the wimble draws out like the pieces of a spy-glass; the last piece is armed with three hooks, and is able to bore through the hide of an ox. Can any thing more be necessary to display the mechanism, than to relate the fact.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

GAD, v. }
GA'DDER. }
GA'DDING, n. }
GA'DDINGLY. } Probably formed upon the past part. of the verb to go or ga, go-ed, gode, or ga-ed, gade.
GA'DDISHNESS. } To go, to go about, in and
GA'DLING, n. } out, up and down, to be frequently, constantly going; to stray, wander, rove or ramble about.

Ac thys luther gadelyng, that thys gode kyng so slou
To Kyng Knout wende anon glade ynou.
R. Gloucester, p. 311.

That othē gates ben gete for gadelynes aren holde
And fals folke and foundelynges, faitours and Ivers.
Piers Ploughman, p. 181.

This likede lyf, and fortune hus lemman
And geten in hire glorie, a gadelyng atte laste
On that muche wo wrouhte. Sleuthe was hus name.
Id. p. 400.

These bowes two held Swete Loking
That semed like no gadling.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

If they were widowes, yet was the sight vncomely and the example vngodly, specially among the Gentyles to gadde after men in so long a tourneye, as is Corinth from Hierusalem.—Bale. Apology, fol. 131.

It was about Easter at what time maides gadded abroade, after they had taken their Maker, as they call it.
Wilson. Art of Logike, fol. 84.

Gadders, pylgrymes and ydoll sekers.
Bale. Apology, fol. 98.

The superstitious idolatrours of al generations the most execrable, as masse mongers, bede babblers, salt seckers, image lyghters, gadders to Compostel, Rome, &c.
Id. Image, pt. iii.

Gapynges, gaddynges, ydoll sensynges, & watter cōlurynges, wyth many other fine toyes, whych all came from Rome
Id. Apology, fol. 109.

He that dothe belch out puffing rymes,
and gaddingly doth straye,
Is like the fowler, who to catche
his birdes, as olde men say,
Gaue backe for nonce, into a trenche, &c.
Drant. Horace. Arte of Poetry.

The wandering gadling in the sommer tide,
That finds the adder with his rechlesse foote,
Startes not dismayde so sodeinly aside
As iealouse desyte did, though there were no boote.
When that he saw me sitting by her side,
That of my health is very crop and roote.
Wyatt. Of the Jelous Man, &c.

A quiet mind, a patient mood,
And not disdaining any:
Not gybing, gadding, gawdie; and
Her faculties were many.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

Whereas on the shores stoode closely together great numbers of Brytaines, and among them wommen gadding vppe and downe frantickly in mourning weedes, theyr hayre hanging about their eares, and shaking firebrandes.
Stow. The Romaynes, an. 62.

Thee, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrown,
And all their echoes mourn. Milton. Lycidas.

In the mean while the priestes within England had prouided them a false and counterfeated prophet called Peter Wakefielde, a Yorkshireman, who was a hermite, an idle gadder about, and a prattyng marchant.
Grafton. King John, an. 13.

Finally thus he concludeth, saiyng that in case in this his request he be not heard, he will so prouide by the seas, that there shall be no such gadding nor coursing ouer any more to Rome, suffering the riches of the lande anye more to be exported ouer, whereby he should himself be the lesse able to withstand his enemies.—Id. Ib an. 10.

Ye elders, be such in grave & pious carriage, whatsoever be your years; for young men may be so, and possibly grey haires may have nothing under them but gadishness, and folly many years old.—Leighton. On 1 Peter, iii. 13.

One would be apt to think, that, as some have conjectured, their keeping up their fondness for this fashion were a stratagem of the men's, to keep them from gadding and gossiping about, and to confine them at home.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1687.

Whilst we are environed with numerous outward objects, which, smiling on us, give our gaddings to them, the temptation of an inviting welcome; how inclined are we to forget, and wander from our great Master!
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 384.

Hie thee, poor pilgrim, to yon neighb'ring bow'r,
O'er which an old oak spreads his awful arm,
Mantled in brownest foliage, and beneath
The ivy, gadding from th' untwisted stem,
Curtains each verdant side. Mason. Elfrida.

Could any curtain lectures bring
To decency so fine a thing!
In short, by night, 'twas fits or fretting;
By day, 'twas gadding or coquetting.
Goldsmith. The Double Transformation.

GA'FFER. "A. S. Ge-fæder, compater, susceptor, a God-father. Hence happily, our Gaffer," (Somner.) See GAMMER. Junius thinks it may be corrupted from the A. S. Gefere; "a fellow, a companion, a mate." (See FERE.) Lye (in Junius), a corruption of good-father.

They'll break up school to bear thee company,
Thou wilt be such a pastime, and whoot at thee,
And call thee bloody bones, and space, and spit-fire,
And gaffer madman.
Beaum & Fletch. The Captain, Act iii. sc. 5.

And soon the loving pair agreed
By this same system to proceed;
And through the parish, with their how d'ye,
Go to each gaffer and each goody.
Faukes. On a Country Vicar.

GA'FFLE. Minshew says,—A Gaffell for a cross-bow. Sp. Gafa, from the Dut. Gaffel, a fork; (in A. S. Gaflas.) Delpino calls gafas, the bender of a cross-bow. The gaffell, Mr. Nares asserts, is the lever by which the bow was drawn. Cotgrave renders,—Bandage, the gaffle of a crossebow.

My cross-bow in my hand, my gaffle on my rack,
To bend it when I please, or if I list to slack.
Drayton. Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6.

GAG, v. }
GAG, n. } From the A. S. Cægg-ian, obserare; (Tooke) to shut fast or lock.
GA'GGER. } To shut up, block up, (sc. from speaking,) to confine from speaking.

The gag was a species of torture. See Goggare, in Du Cange.

Musicians in England have vsed to put gagges in children's mouthes, that they might pronounce distinctly, but now with the losse and lacke of musick, the loue also is gone of bringing up children to speak plainly.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 223.

A christian boy in Constantinople had like to have been stoned for gagging in a waggishness, a long billed fowl.
Bacon. Ess. Of Goodness.

Who being moved at the strange report,
That one alone the monster should assaile,
And gag him with an anker in such sort
To make his strength, and life, and all to faile,
Then draw him to the shore as ship to port
Is tow'd with ropes, without or oares or saile.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xi. s. 48.

Procuring a command from him (his Majesty) to prohibite all writing or preaching about those points, having thereby gagged their adversaries, did let the press and the pulpit loose more than ever to propagate their own doctrines.
Marvell. Works, vol. iii. p. 76.

——— Tigelline
But touch, thou shalt in that taper shine
Wherein they stand and burn; whose own foul smoke,
And a sharp gag under their throats half-choke.
Holiday. Juvenal, Sat. 1.

When I first undertooke to answer that very worthless author, the gagger of all Protestants' mouthes for ever, I did it with a firmed purpose to leave all private opinions, and particular positions or oppositions whatsoever, unto their owne authors or abettors, eyther to stand or fall of themselves.—Mountagu. Appeale to Cæsar, Epis. Ded.

Is it peace, because the man is gagged and cannot, or overawed and dares not, cry out of oppression?
South, vol. x. Ser. 6.

Some have their mouths gagged to such a wideness, for a long time, whereat such quantities of water are poured in, that their bellies swell to a prodigious degree, and then being pierced with a faucet, spigot, or other instrument for the purpose, the water spouts out in great abundance.
Fortescue. De laudibus, by Gregor, c. 22.

Under the professed design of confuting and decrying the usurpations of a Popish hierarchy, they virtually deprived the church of every power and privilege, which, as a simple society, she had a claim to, and on the matter, delivered her up gagged and bound, as the rebel-creature of the state.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. Ded.

GAGE, v. } Fr. Gager, gage; It. Gaggia,—
GAGE, n. } all, Skinner asserts, from the Lat. Vas, vadis. Tooke,—from the A. S. Cægg-ian, obserare, (to shut up, to confine,) and he defines gage, "that by which a man is bound to certain fulfilments," (ii. 375.) See To ENGAGE.

To bind to certain performances or fulfilments; to pledge, to stake.

And if there be any man wyll saye (except your persone) that I wold any thinge otherwise than well to you or to your people, here is my guage to the cõtrarie.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 15.

Num ille oppignerare filiam meam me invito potuit? Myght he lay my daughter in pledge, or to gage whether I would or not?—Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 173.

Considering also with howe many benefites and specialll gages of loue we are bound both to God and Christ
Id. Romaines, c. 8.

Against the which, a moity competent
Was gaged by our King.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 1.

——— But my cheefe care,
Is to come fairely off from the great debts
Wherein my time somethinge too prodigall
Hath left me gag'd.—Id. Merchant of Venice, Act i. sc. 1.

Sir John Philpot, cittizen of London, deserues great cõmendacions, who wt his own money released the armour which the souldiours had gaged for their victualls, more than a thousand in number.—Stow, an. 1380. Rich. II.

There take my gage, behold I offer it
To him that first accused him in this cause,
Or any else that dare, and will maintaine
That for his pride the Prince was justly slaine.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. v. s. 58.

In any truth that gets not possession of our minds by the irresistible light of self evidence, or by the force of demonstration, the arguments that gain its assent are the vouchers and gage of its probability to us.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iv. c 19.

The sheriff is commanded to attach him, by taking gage, that is certain of his goods, which he shall forfeit if he doth not appear; or by making him find safe-pledges or sureties who shall be amerced in case of his non-appearance.
Blackstone. Commentaries, b. iii. c. 19.

GA'GGLE, v. } Dut. Gaghen, gaghelen; Ger.
GA'GGLING, n. } Gayen.

To gaggle like a goose, from the sound or noise, (says Minshew) which they make, gag, gag.

But when the priest is at service no man sitteth, but gagle and ducke like so many geese.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p 241.

And land birds, also, (many of them) delight in bathing, and moist aire, for the same reason also, many birds doe prune their feathers; and geese doe gagle; and crowes seem to call upon raine: all which is but the comfort they seem to receive in the relenting of the aire.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 823.

Once they were like to haue surprised it by night, but being descried by the gagling of geese, M. Manlius did awaken, and keep them from entrance
Raleigh. History of the World, b. iv. c. 7. s 1.

If I have company they are a parcel of chattering magpies; if abroad, I am a gagling goose.—Guardian, No. 132.

GAIN, v.
GAIN, n.
GA'INER.
GA'INFUL.
GA'INFULLY.
GA'INING, n.
GA'INLESS.
GA'INLESSNESS.
GA'INLY.

Skinner says,—from the Fr. Gaigner; Menage and Junius derive the Fr. Gaigner; Sp. Ganar; It. Guadagnare, from the Ger. Ge-winnen, lucrari. (See also Winnen, in Wachter.) And Tooke,—"Gain, i. e. any thing acquired, is the past part. gewan of the verb Ge-winnan, acquirere," to acquire, that is, to seek for, to labour to obtain; and, consequentially, to obtain.

The A. S. Ge-winful, (gainful,) is, striving, labouring or contending for; and thus, in Beaum. & Fletch. may signify, full of strife, contention or resistance: and gain, used adjectively, is consequentially,—

Diligent, active, expert, apt, fit, suitable, convenient, ready.

See Ray, Grose, Brocket, Moore, and Nares, and also Gain in Jamieson. All the provincial usages noted by the four former come easily within this consequential application. To gain is—

To acquire; and thus, to attain or obtain, to reach, to get, to procure, to win.

I trowe the gaynage of the ground, in a gret shyre,
Nold aparaile that place, oo poynt tyl other ende.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

But for all this, whan that he seeth his time
He held his pees, non other bote him gained.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. i.

God loved he beste with alle his herte
At alle times, were it gain or smerte,
And than his neighbour right as himselve.
Id. The Prologue, v. 536.

They passed thorow Pole and Chawmpayn,
Even sperying ther gatys gane
Unto the cyte of Rome.
La Bone Florence of Rome. Ritson, 243.

The Emperowre calde Syr Egravayne,
And Syr Sampson, that was hym gayne,
Armed well and ryght. Id. Ib.

Yea, though he gaine and cram his purse with crownes,
And therewith scape the foeman's force in fielde,
He nought foreseeth what treasons dwells in townes,
No what mishappes his yll got goods may yeelde.
Gascoygne. The Fruites of Warre.

But ware, I say, so gold thee helpe and spede,
That in this case thou be not so unwise,
As Pandar was in such a like dede,
For he the foole of conscience was so nice,
That he no gaine would haue for all his paine.
Wyatt. How to vse the Court and Himselfe therein.

Emongest so many good chaunces some euell are accustomed to fall and happen, or else the gayners will not knowe themselues.—Hall. Hen. VI. an. 12.

We haue this saiyng, the force of England hath and doth, surmount the force of France: but the engenious witte of the Frenchemen excell the dull braynes of Englishmen, for in al battailes you haue been the gainers, but in leagues and treaties, our wittes haue made you losers.
Id. Edw. IV. an. 13.

But to do good to them that haue little or nothing that is worth thanks, therefore pay they the last [legacy] before the first, for that there intent seemeth rather to be vertuous than gainefull.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 74.

And therefore, whereas men liued brutishly in open fieldes, hauing neither house to shroude them in, nor attire to clothe their backes, nor yet any regard to seeke their best auaile: these appointed of God called them together by vtterance of speche, and perswaded with them what was good, what was bad, and what was gainful for mankind.
Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, Pref.

God which counteth that to be doone vnto hym, whiche is for hys loue bestowed upon saintes, is sufficiently able, albeit ye receyue no recompence of menne, to make your almes deedes gaynfully to returne vnto you.—Udal. Corinth c. 9.

So, ladie, now to you I doo complaine
Against your eies, that iustice I may gaine.
Spenser, son. 12.

For so the wise man sayth, he which showeth mercy to the poore, doth lay his money in banke to the Lord, for a large interest, and gaine: the gaine being chiefly the possession of the life euerlasting, through the merits of our saviour Jesus Christ.—Homilies. Homily of Alms deeds, pt i.

Here is the triall of a loyal heart to God, to prefer virtue before vice then, when in humane reason vertue shall be the looser, vice the gainer.—Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 53.

And yet full few, which follow them I see
For vertue's bare regard advaunced bee,
But either for some gainfull benefit,
Or that they may for their owne turnes befit.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

Now concerning David, it is not unlikely, but that those captives which were not employed in husbandry, were many of them used by him in all sorts of gainful profession, as the ancient Romans in like manner used their slaves
Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 17. s 9.

Jul. He will be very rough.
Mast. We are us'd to that, Sir,
And we as rough as he, if he give occasion.
Jul. You will find him gainful,—but be sure ye curb him,
And get him, if ye can fairly, to his lodging.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iv. sc. 3.

He was inflexible to any mercy, unsatiable in his gainings, equally snatching at small and great things, so much that he went shares with the thieves.—Usher. Annals, an. 4008.

Dear, tell me where thy purchase lies, and show,
What thy advantage is above, below:
But if thy gainings do surmount expression,
Why doth the foolish world scorn that profession,
Whose joys pass speech!
Donne. To Mr. T. on his taking Orders.

[A sin] so absolutely gainless to himself in his vilest capacity, even as a sensual brute.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 514.

Why has he four knees, and his hinder legs bending inwards, as also a protuberancy under his breast to lean on, but that, being a tall creature, he might with ease kneel down, and so might the more gainly be loaden!
H. More. An Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 10.

Let Maestricht's siege enlarge your name;
And your retreat at Charleroy;
Warriors by flying may gain fame,
And, Parthian-like, their foes destroy.
Waller. To the Prince of Orange.

Luxurious Cæsar shamefully supine,
Foregoes his gains, and for a kiss or smile
Sells the dear purchase of his martial toil.
Hughes. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. x.

Besides the Lord Saint-John, and Colonel Essex, the names of the rest of that party were so obscure, that neither the one side seemed to be gainers, by having taken or kill'd them, nor the other side to be losers by being without them.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 58.

No gainful office gives him the pretence
To grind the subject, or defraud the Prince.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness, as well as the laboriousness of the work: those wretched creatures [miners] buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digged; no more is the insatiate miser.
Decay of Christian Piety.

A gentleman who farms a part of his own estate, after paying the expense of cultivation, should gain both the rent of the landlord and the profit of the farmer. He is apt to denominate, however, his whole gain, profit, and thus confounds rent with profit, at least in common language.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6.

Many important advantages have incidently arisen from the agitation of the question, [Slave-trade,] and the cause of humanity has upon the whole been a considerable gainer by the conflict.—Porteus, vol. i. Ser. 17. App.

This weakness in human nature gave occasion to a party of men to make such gainful markets as they have done of our credulity.—Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 8.

The saving of so very small a sum, or even the gaining of another, which could not well be much larger, are objects too inconsiderable, it may be thought, to deserve the serious attention of government.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. iv c. 6.

GAIN-COME. Coming again; return.

But whan he saw passed both day and hour
Of her gaincome, in sorow can oppresse,
His woful hart, in care and heauiness.
Chaucer. The Testament of Cresside.

Soon ther tresowre up they drowe,
And ther stedys strong ynowe,
And made ther schyppys tome; [teem]
They lefte a burges feyre and wheme,
All thir schyppys for to yeme, [take care of]
Unto thir gayne-come.
La Bone Florence of Rome, Ritson, vol iii.

GAIN-GIVING. A giving against; giving way against; misgiving.

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kinde of gaingiving as would perhaps trouble a woman.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

GAIN-SAY, v. }
GA'INSAYER. }
GA'INSAYING, n. } 'Gainst, and say, contra, and dicere.
To contradict, to deny, to oppose, to object.

If he it peynsay, I wille proue it on him.
R. Brunne, p. 154.

His brother Henry is heyre of all his tenement,
Of alle Normandie, withouten peynsaying. Id. p. 104.

Haf alle that ge wan withouten peynsaying.—Id. p. 184.

Yet I nill gainsaie matrimonie,
But melius est nubere quam uri.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Love.

That is, ye determine sodenly in hard thynge of grauitie, as if ye had studied for it a thousand yeres: and if any peynsay you, ye take him as a mortal enemy.
Golden Boke, Let. 14.

They after a few dayes tarlaunce, brought in a great masse of grayne out of the country of the Cadurks, who partly were wyllyng to help them therwith, and partly durst not gainsaye theyr takinge of it, bycause they were not able to make their part good against them.—Goldyng. Cæsar, fol. 261.

The fearfull chorl durst not gainsey nor dooe,
But trembling stood, and yielded him the pray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

If St. Paul had not foreseene that there should be gainsayers, he had not neede to haue appointed the confutation of gainsaying: was there ever yet preachers, but there were gainsayers that spurned, that winst, that whimpered against him, that blasphemed, that gainesayed it.
Latimer. The Third Sermon before King Edw.

Sithence which time God's people hath alwaies in all ages, without any gainsaying, used to come together upon the Sunday, to celebrate, and honour the Lord's blessed name, and carefully to keep that day in holy rest, and quietnesse.
Homilies. Of the Place and Time of Prayer.

The gainsaying or resisting mentioned in the text, may either signify the bare acts of gainsaying or resisting, or the success and prevalence of the said acts against the persons so gainsaid or resisted.—South, vol. v. Ser. 11.

It is most probable, that God (to prevent controversies, occasions of doubt, and excuses for errour about so grand a matter) would not have failed to have declared it so plainly, as might serve to satisfie any reasonable man, and to convince any froward gainsayer.—Barrow. The Pope's Suprem.

When self-esteem, or others' adulation,
Would cunningly persuade us we are something
Above the common level of our kind;
The Grave gainsays the smooth-complexion'd flattery,
And with blunt truth acquaints us what we are.
Blair. The Grave.

You will carefully observe, my reverend brethren, that when I compare the effect and fruit of study with the gift and operation of the Holy Ghost, I speak of that operation only which produced a miraculous information of the understanding of the first preachers, and chiefly for the purpose of controversy with gainsayers.—Horsley. Charge, 1796.

GAINST. For against, (qv.)

They marched fayrely forth of nought ydred,
Both firmely arm'd for every hard assay,
With constancy and care, gainst daunger and dismay.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II. c. 12.

GAIN-STAND. Gainst, and stand.
To stand against, to resist, to oppose, to withstand.

Durynge which Parliamēt, dissēciō fell atwene y^e Kyng and Thomas, Archebyshop of Caũterbury, for dyuerse actis & ordynaũcis y^t the Kyng there procured to passe agayn the lyberties of holy churche, y^e which Thomas gaynstode & denyed.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 237.

This wise aduice notwithstanding, destiny so driuing him, he gainstood, imputing it a part of dishonour, and not be fitting a souldier, (as hee alwaies had beene,) to leaue the field coward-like, when greatest glory was to be wonne.
Speed, b. viii. c. 7. s. 33. Harold, an. 1063.

And why? because none was found so faithfull to God, that he durst enterprise to resist, nor gainstand the manifest impietie of their princes.
The Apellation of John Knox, p. 21.

GAIN-STRIVE. Gainst, and strive.
To strive, struggle, or contend against, to resist.

For on the spoyle of women he doth liue,
Whose bodies chaste, when euer in his powre,
He may them catch, vnable to gaine-striue,
He with his shameful lust doth straite defloure,
And afterwards themselves doth cruelly deuoure.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 7.

In case yet all the Fates gainstrive us not,
Neither shall we, perchance, die unreveng'd.
Now have I liv'd, O Rome, enough for me.
Nicholas Grimoald. M. T. Cicero's Death, in Ellis, vol. ii.

GAIT. } Also written Gate. Skinner says,
GA'ITED. } —Gate, via, (i. e. the way gone,) a common word in Lincolnshire; q.d. iter, transitus. Dut. Gat; Ger. Gasse, from the A. S. Gan, to go. It is not only applied to the—

Way gone; but to the going, the motion in going; the manner of, the gesture in going, whether running, walking, flying or swimming,—on earth, in air or water; also, to the state or condition for motion or action.

Peter the Apostel parceyvede hus gate,
And as he wente upon the water wel hym knewe and seyde
Domine jube me venire ad te.—Piers Ploughman, p. 352.

Wherein was conteynyd y^t he shulde beware & haue hym selfe in good gayte, for the vnyte & peace whiche lately was stablyshed atwene the Kynge and Charlye his brother, was prynceypallye to dere & warre vpō hym, and to brynge hym in subiecyon.—Fabyan, vol. ii. an. 1458.

For well I weene, thou canst not but envie
My wealth, compar'd to thine owne misery,
Thou art so leane and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs vphold thy feeble gate.
Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

With as unwearied wings, and in as high a gait
As when we first set forth, observing every state,
The Muse from Cambria comes, with pinions summ'd and sound. Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 11.

My verse with wings of skill may fly a lofty gait
Id Ib. s 1.

Alb. Methought thy very gate did prophesie
A royall noblenesse.—Shakespeare. Lear, Act v. sc. 6.

——— Dull of tongue, and dwarfish!
What maiestie is in her gate? remember
If ere thou look'dst on majestie.
Mess. ——— She creepes;
Her motion and her station are as one.
Id. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 3.

She had a mind as calme as she was faire;
Not tost or troubled with light lady-ayre,
But kept an even gaite; as some straight tree
Mov'd by the wind, so comely moved she.
B. Jonson. Elegie on my Muse.

——— For I descrie
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly host, and by his gate
None of the meanest. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

——— Part huge of bulk
Wallowing unwieldie, enormous in their gate,
Tempest the ocean. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Boy. Marrie, sir, you must send the asse upon the horse, for he is verie slow gaited.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iii. sc. 1.

But let thy spiders, that suck vp thy venome,
And heauie-gaited toades lye in their way,
Doing annoyance to the trecherous feete
Which with vsurping steps doe trample thee.
Id. Rich. II. Act iii. sc. 2.

Gay Bacchus little Cupid stung
By reckoning his deceits;
And Cupid mock'd his stammering tongue
With all his staggering gaits. Parnell. Anacreontic.

He had very narrow shoulders, and no calf; and his gait might be more properly called hopping than walking.
Fielding. Joseph Andrews, b. iv. c. 9.

GA'ITER, n. } The Fr. Guestres, Cotgrave
GA'ITER, v. } calls "startups, high shooes, or gamashes for countrey folks;" and "Guestré, having startups on." Menage derives from gamache; thus, "gamacha, gamaxtra, gastra, guaistre, guestre." His editor is conscious of the harshness of this etymology, but pretends to none better. The word is of no great antiquity in English.

GA'LAXY. Gr. Γαλαξιας κυκλος, lacteus circulus, from γαλα, γαλακτος, milk. See the quotation from Derham.

Lo (qd. he) cast up thine eye
See yonder lo, the galaxie,
The which men clepe the milky way
For it is white. Chaucer. House of Fame, b. ii.

His spotless soul did from his body fly,
And hover in the heav'nly galaxy,
Whence he looks down, and lets the living see,
What he was once and what we ought to be.
Brome. A Funeral Elegy on Mr. Aubrey.

A broad and ample rode, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the Galaxie, that milkie way,
Which nightly as a circling zone thou seest
Pouder'd with stars. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii

The Galaxy being well known to be the fertile place of new stars, the region in which they commonly appear, I am much inclined to be of opinion, that the whiteness there is not caused by the bare light of the great number of fixt stars in that place, as hath commonly been thought, but partly by their light, and partly (if not chiefly,) by the reflections of their Planets.—Derham. Astro-Theology, Prel. Disc.

But the relation and connexion between the 12th and 13th verses [Job. xxvi.] not being observed, several eminent commentators, both Jews and Christians, were inclined to understand the crooked serpent as signifying the great constellation so named, situate near the arctic pole, or, at least, that enormous trail of light called the Galaxy, or via lactea.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 2.

GALE, v. } Probably from the A. S. Gyllan,
GALE, s. } gullan, galan, to yell; fremere, stridere, canere. Applied to—

The sound of a singing, howling wind; to such wind itself; also, to winds less violent.

In the first two passages from Chaucer, Gale, v. seems (Mr. Tyrwhitt says,) to be used metaphorically: in the third, it is used literally.

And when the sompnour herd the frere gale.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6414.

Now telleth forth, and let the sompnour gale.
Id. The Freres Tale, v. 6918.

To matens went the lusty nightingale
Within a temple shapen hauthorn wise,
He might not sleepe in all the nightertale
But Domine labia gan he cry and gale.
Id. The Court of Love, v. 1357.

Freend Palinure, lo how the tydes themselues conueye the fleete,
This gale by measure blowes: an houre of rest, to take is meete. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. v.

We sailed on Munday and Tewsday til noon with contrary wind in sight of the Island, and at noone we had a fresh gale in the poupe, which brought vs ouer against the cottages of the Indians.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 424.

Both shores were lost to sight, when at the close
Of day a stiffer gale at East arose:
The sea grew white, the rolling waves from far,
Like heralds, first denounce the watery war.
Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. x.

I feel the gales, that from ye blow,
A momentary bliss bestow,
As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to sooth,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second Spring.
Gray. Ode on a Distant View of Eton College.

GALL, v. }
GALL, n. }
GA'LLESS. } A. S. Gealla; Dut. and Ger. Galle; Sw. Galla, which Junius thinks are not far removed from the Gr. Χολη, bilis. Becan (he adds) considers galle so called as if geale or geele, on account of its yellow colour The A. S. Ge-ælan, accendere, to kindle, is given by Tooke as the origin of the English yellow: and it is not improbable that the A. S. Gealla, the gall, may have sprung from this same verb; being, as Gower expresses it, the proper seat "of the drie coler with his heate." See also the quotation from Pliny.

GA'LLINGNESS.

And the English verb to gall, Fr. Galler,—

To heat, to irritate, to exasperate, to chafe, to fret, to vex, to corrode, eat or wear into; to harass.

Gall, the noun, (from its taste,) met.—bitterness, angriness, rancour, malignity, ill will.

And who that is ielous, & aye in a drede
Is full of melancolie and gallie ire,
His wiue's nose if she misse trede
He woll cutte off, yea and conspire
His death who that woll her desire,
Which she perceiuing braideth his gall
And anon his great woodnesse doth fall.
Chaucer. The Remedie of Love.

The drie coler with his heate,
By wele of kynde, his propre sete
Hath in the galle, where he dwellith.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

And the Gabriell riding asterne the Michael, had her cable gauld asunder in the hawse with a piece of driuing yce
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 60

Such proofes bifore the just, to cause the harts to waver
Be set, lyke cuppe myngled with gall, of bitter tast and saver. Surrey, Ps. 73.

——— The Scot, on his vnfurnisht kingdome,
Came pouring like the tyde into a breach,
With ample and brimfulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned land with hot assayes.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 2

The necks of mortal men having been never before galled with the yoke of foreign dominion, nor having had experience of that most miserable and detested condition of living in slavery.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. ii. c. 1. s. 12.

Leisly then commanded three hundred horse to advance into the riuer, whom the musqueteers from behind the works so galled, as they were enforced to retire.
Baker. Charles I. an. 1640.

But of all those things which are generally to be found in every living creature, the gall is that which is of greatest efficacie in operation: for power it hath naturally to heat, bite, draw, discusse, and resolve.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxviii. c. 9.

The nuts called galls doe ever breake out all at once in a night, and namely about the beginning of June, when the sunne is out of the signe Gemini.—Id. Ib. b. xvi. c. 7.

And where the goodly herds of high-palm'd harts did gaze
Upon the passer by, thereby now doth only graze
The gall'd-back carrion jade, and hurtful swine do spoil
Once to the silvan powers our consecrated soil
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 7.

Or do the relic ashes of his grave
Revive and rise from their forsaken cave?
That so with gall-wet words and speeches rude,
Controul the manners of the multitude.
Bp. Hall. Satires, b. ii. Prol.

A man that is in slavery may submit to the will of his master, because he cannot help it; and that it is to no purpose to fret at his chains and fetters, which will but gall him the more.—Stillingfleet, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

Forbad at any time or any place,
To name the person, or describe the face.
The Stage its ancient fury thus let fall,
And Comedy diverted without gall.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry

As I never found that people discontented with their own church-government (the gallingness of whose yoke is the grand scare-crow that frights us here), so could I never observe it in any such transcendent excellency, as could oblige me to bolt heaven against, or open Newgate for, all those, that believe they may be saved under another.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 39. Life.

We must earnestly pray to him to work it in us, to send his Holy Spirit, which once appeared in the form of a dove, a meek and gallless creature, to frame our hearts to the same temper, and enable us rightly to perform this duty.
Whole Duty of Man. Sunday 17. s. 19.

Some, by a rare privilege, are exempted from those tyrannous passions that so frequently disorder the lives of men; and in their childhood are of such mild and gaulless spirits, so receptive of virtuous impressions, that at the sight of their dispositions and carriage we may have a conjecture of the felicity of the innocent state, of which one ray, or rather shadow, is so amiable.—Bates. Ashurst's Funeral Sermon.

He had at divers times found worms in the gall-bladder in persons he had opened at Duseldorp.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6. Note.

My opinion still is, that a large demand at once, with a prospect of being thereby relieved from certain galling taxes, would be more willingly submitted to than the present mode of fluctuating and irritating taxation.

Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 183.

——— 'Tis ever thus
With noble minds, if chance they slide to folly:
Remorse stings deeper, and relentless conscience
Pours more of gall into the bitter cup
Of their severe repentance. Mason. Elfrida.

GALLA'NT, v.
GA'LLANT, n.
GA'LLANT, adj.
GA'LLANTLY.
GA'LLANTNESS.
GA'LLANTRY.
GA'LA.

Fr. Galant; It. Galante; Sp. Galante. The Sp. has also Galan, It. and Sp. Galu; the latter of which has obtained very common usage in England. G. Douglas (as Dr. Jamieson has noted) renders Juvenes (Æn. i. 631, and ix. 163.) Galandis; possibly (he adds) the modern Scotch Callan or callant. Skinner thinks it not wholly absurd to take the etymon of this word from the nation of the Gauls, who, both now and from all times past, affected splendid dress (splendidum vestitum) beyond other nations. Galant and gallard have the same origin; and the latter, Cæsar Scaliger and Vossius derive—ab ardore et alacritate Gallicæ genti, præ aliis omnibus Europæ, insitâ. The Gr. Γαληνος, serenus, is resorted to by other etymologists. — The A. S. Gyl, splendet, Ger. Gall, splendor, brightness or brilliancy, (probably from the A. S. Ge-ælan, accendere, to kindle,) may supply the true origin. Gallant, adj. is,— Splendid, brilliant, magnificent; and (met.) magnanimous, or noble-minded, high-minded, of lofty spirit, high courage:—daring, brave, frank. Gallantry is applied to—

The generous spirit, which protects the female sex; the courtesy and courtship, which is shown or offered to it; and further, to such courtship carried to excess.

Thus these four rode night and day, lyke yong lusty gallãtes.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 105.

No teeth of shining pearle, no gallant rosie hiew,
No dimpled chinne, no pit in cheeke, presented to my view.
Gascoigne. Complaint of the Greene Knight.

The wayes echwhere are gaiantly paued with foure square stone, except it be where for want of stone they use to lay bricke.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 69.

Page. Clown, sir! he is transform'd,
And grown a gallant of the last edition;
More rich than gaudy in his habit.
Massinger. City Madam, Act i. sc. 2.

That brave French gallant, when the fight began,
Whose lease of lackies ambled by his side,
Himself a lackey now most basely ran,
Whilst a ragg'd soldier on his horse doth ride
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i.

These sprightly gallants lov'd a lass,
Call'd Strope the bright,
In the whole world there scarcely was
So delicate a wight.—Id. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 2.

What might have been, if (Roman-like and free)
These gallant spirits had nobler ends pursu'd,
And strain'd to points of glory and renown,
For good of the republic, and their own?
Daniel. Civil War, b. viii.

Then who would not gladly
Live in this brave town,
Which flourishes gallantly
With high renown?
Rixon. Ancient Songs. Shrewsbury for Me.

Between two hills, the highest Phœbus sees,
Gallantly crown'd with large skie-kissing trees,
Under whose shade the humble vallyes lay.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

That which gives to human actions the relish of justice, is a certain nobleness or gallantness of courage (rarely found,) by which a man scorns to be beholding for the contentment of his life, to fraud or breach of promise.

Hobbs. Of Man, pt. i. c. 15.

When Suffolk, procurator for the king,
Is shipp'd for France t' espouse the beauteous bride,
And fitted to the full of every thing,
Follow'd with England's gallantry and pride.
Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margaret.

Who made thee a bloudy minister,
When gallant-springing braue Plantaganet,
That Princely nouice was struck dead by thee!
Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act i. sc. 4.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

They cannot demean themselves toward God as miserable sinners, who fansie themselves as admirable worthies, and gallants in vertue.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 19.

He [Lesley] told them, by lying there all was sure; but that by engaging in action with gallant and desperate men all might be lost; yet they still called on him to fall on.

Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

The foot behaved themselves very gallantly, and had not only the better of the other foot, but bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken.—Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 474.

As these [the fair sex] compose half the world, and are by the just complaisance and gallantry of our nation the more powerful part of our people, I shall dedicate a considerable share of these my speculations to their service, and shall lead the young through all the becoming duties of virginity, marriage, and widowhood.—Spectator, No. 4.

Our gallants now to town repair;
What endless pleasures wait 'em there;
One half the day in sleep is past,
They study how the rest to waste.
Cambridge. Learning. A Dialogue.

As to Theodora, they who had been her gallants when she was an actress, related that dæmons, or nocturnal spirits, had often driven them away to lie with her themselves.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

Fair laughs the Morn, and soft the Zephyr blows,
While proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes.—Gray. The Bard.

——— As man to man,
As friend to friend, now, Athelwold, I call thee
Straight to defend thy life with thy good sword.
Nay, answer not; defend it gallantly—Mason. Elfrida.

As a friend to the House of Brunswick, I cannot but rejoice in the personal safety, and in the personal gallantry too, of so distinguished a branch of it [the Duke of York]

Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 369.

My lords, it seems his [Lord Auckland's] grave and weighty occupations as a Public Minister at foreign Courts have kept him retired like us from scenes of gayety and dissipation; and he is destitute of all that ability for the present discussion which is not to be acquired without much experience in the arts of practical gallantry.

Horsley. Speech upon the Adultery Bill.

He [Sir Paul Pindar] brought over with him a diamond valued at 30,000*l.*; the king wished to buy it on credit; this the sensible merchant declined; but favoured his majesty with the loan on gala days: his unfortunate son became the purchaser.—Pennant. London, p. 613.

GA'LLATURE. Sp. Galladura; from gallus, a cock. The cock's tread.

Whether it be not made out of the grando, gallature, germ or tread of the egg, as Aquapendente and stricter enquiery informeth us, doth seem of lesser doubt.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 28.

Whether it be not more rational epicurisme to contrive whole dishes out of the nobbes and spirited particles of plants, than from the gallatures and treddles of egges.

Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

GA'LLERY. Fr. Galerie; It. Galleria; Dut. Galerie. Nicot and others (see Menage) suppose it said, quasi allerie, from aller, to go. Menage himself from the Fr. Galère, a galley; à cause de la ressemblance qu'a une galerie. Wachter,—that both aller and gallerie are from the Ger. Wallen, ire, to go. It may be from the A. S. Ge-lædan, ducere, to lead.

Cotgrave calls Gallery,—"a long room to walk in;" it is a name also given to certain raised portions of a church or theatre, erected along the sides or end.

But loe Polites, one of Priam's sons,
Escaped from the slaughter of Pyrrhus,
Comes fleeing through the wepons of his foes
Searching all wounded the long galleries;
And the voyd courtes.—Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

I was brought afore my lorde Cardinall into his galary, and there hee reade all myne articles.—Barnes. Workes, p. 201.

Thirty pounds given to the gallery-keepers at St. Margaret's church.—Whitelock. Memorials. Charles I. an. 1645.

Not only in the gallery below, but above, upon the scaffolds, I tried, and found that a whisper would be carried over one's head round the top of the arch, notwithstanding there is a large opening in the middle of it unto the upper part of the dome.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 3.

The galleries would certainly lose much of their veneration for the theatrical kings, queens, and nobles, if they were to see them behind the scenes, unbedizened.

V. Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 23.

GA'LLEY.
GA'LLERAS.
GALLE'ON.
GA'LLEOT.

Fr. Galie, galère; It. and Sp. Galea, galera; Dut. Galeye. Fr. Galéasse; It. Galeazza; Sp. Galeaza. Fr. Gallion; It. and Sp. Galeon. In Low Lat. Galea; and also galeonium and galiassa, a larger sort of gallies, (Spelman.) Some (says Vossius, de Vitiis, lib. i. c. 1.) think that galea (a galley) is from the Lat. Galea, q. d. navis galeata. After quoting the two first lines of Ovid's Tristia, (i. 9.) he adds, "In puppi erat Minerva; in prorâ autem cassis; unde ei Galea, vel Cassidis nomen." And Joseph Scaliger, quoting the same lines, observes, that it was usual to give names to ships, απο του παρασημου, from an ensign displayed, or rather painted upon them. See also Menage, in Galère.

The City barge used on Lord Mayor's day was called a galley-foist, (Whalley,) and so were other vessels of a similar description, or used for similar purposes, (i. e.) for galas, as some have imagined. See Foist.

Herfor Kyng Richard wrathes him & sais
Dight vs thider ward our busses & galass,
Me sister I wille out wyn or I ferrer go.
R. Brunne, p. 149.

——— He take galeis twenty,
& busses that were gode o hundreth of the most,
To fare opon the flode, to waite well by that coste.
Id. p. 164.

That sodenliche in a great galeis
Fro Rome londe thei went their weie,
And londed vpon that other side.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

The Tirians durst not aduenture the sea fyght although they had a great nauye, but set all their galeis in a front before the walles of their citie.—Brende. Quint. Curt. fol. 58

We now haue had experience of a gally fight: wherein I can assure you, that onely these of her maiesties ships will make no accompt of 20 gallies, if they may be alone, and not busied to guard others.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p 122.

As before I haue said, the choice being made for the place to build the gally-frigat, ashore it was brought.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p 709

The peasant, and the post, that serues at all assayes;
The ship-boy, and the gally-slaue, haue time to take their ease. Surrey. The Faithful Lover.

A gally-slave I seeme
unto my selfe to bee:
The maister that doth guide the ship
hath neare an ele to see.
Turbervile. All Things haue Release, &c.

And while they were proceeding on in this maner, one of their great galliasses was so furiously battered with shot, that the whole nauy was faine to come vp rounder together for the safegard thereof.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol i. p. 597.

The second of April, 1582, I departed with the Edward Bonauenture from Blackwall, and the 19th of the same arriued in Nettle rode at Hampton, where I found riding the gallion Leicester.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 757.

Finding the same deep enough to harbour therein gallies and galliots in good number, proceeding further, he found a very open place.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 313.

And for those boats, longæ naves, or gallies, Pliny saith, that Ægestas ascribeth the device to Paralus: and Philostephanus to Jason: Ctesias to Samyras, and Saphanus to Semiramis. Archimachus to Ægeon.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. i. c. 8. s. 3

Out of my doores, you sons of noise and tumult, begot on an ill May day, or when the gally-foist is afloate to Westminster.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act iv. sc. 2.

They within Hunflew perceiuing this, made out their great galliasse with 50 marriners and souldiers, who coming vpon the galliasse of Newhauen, put her in great danger of taking.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1563.

One of these was a great gallion, the vice-admiral of Gallica commanded by Don Antonio de Castro, which had 52 brass pieces of ordnance.—Baker. Charles I. an. 1639.

These galley-houses are 50 or 60 paces from the river side, and when they bring the galleys into them, there is a strong rope brought round the stern of the vessel, and both ends stretched along, one on each side.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1688.

The forts here could not secure the Spanish galleons from Admiral Blake, tho' they hall'd in close under the main fort

Id Ib. an 1699.

With four full banks of oars advancing high.
On either wing the larger vessels ply,
While in the centre safe the lesser galliots lie.
Rowe. Lucan. Pharsalia, b. iii.

Thus galley-slaves tug willing at the oar,
Content to work, in prospect of the shore;
But would not work at all if not constrain'd before.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

The Dromones, or light gallies of the Byzantine empire, were content with two tiers of oars; each tier was composed of five and twenty benches; and two rowers were seated on each bench, who plyed their oars on either side of the vessel.
Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 53.

Liberty blush'd, and hung her drooping head,
Beheld their progress with the deepest dread;
Blush'd, that effects like these she should produce,
Worse than the deeds of galley-slaves broke loose.
Cowper. Table Talk.

But the molestation, which her galleons may suffer from our station in Pensacola gives us advantages, for which we were not allowed to credit the nation for the Havannah itself.
Burke. Observations on a late State of the Nation.

We received a farther corroboration of the facts, from the gentlemen of the English factory (at Canton) who told us that a person had arrived there in a Russian galliot, who said he came from Kamtschatka.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. vi. c. 1.

GA'LLIARD, s. GA'LLIARD, adj. GA'LLIARDISE. } Fr. Gaillard; It. Gagliardo; Sp. Gallardo. (See GALLANT.) Besoldus (see Geil, in Wachter) refers the Fr. Gaillard to an alliance with the Ger. Geil; Dut. Gheyl; A.S. Gal, libidinosus, luxuriosus; and this is adopted by Dr. Jamieson. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, Brisk, gay. Cotgrave strongly expresses the usage:

"Lusty, lively; frolick, buxom, cheerful, blithe, jocund, pleasant, gamesome; brave, gallant; valiant; also rash, or somewhat indiscreet, by too much jollity."

Galliard is also the name of a dance. Sir J. Davies calls it "a gallant dance."

In all the toun n'as brewhous ne taverne,
That he ne visited with his solas,
Ther as that any galliard tapestere was.
Chaucer. The Millares Tale, v. 3336.

And what enormitie shoulde hit nowe be thought a thing to laugh at to se a iuge or sergeat at the lawe in a short coote garded and pounced after the galyarde faction, [i. e. fashion of galliards.]—Sir T. Elyot. The Governor, b. i. c. 3.

But let them be such as they were! by chance,
Our banquet done, we had our music by,
And then, you know, the youth must needs go dance,
First, galliards.—Nicholas Breton, in Ellis, vol. ii.

In answer of which claime the Prince our master
Sayes, that you sauor too much of your youth,
And bids you be aduis'd, there's nought in France,
That can be with a nimble galliard wonne.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. Act i. sc. 2.

The tripla's, and changing of times, have an agreement with the changes of motions; as when galliard time, and measure time are in the medly of one dance.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 113.

I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardize of company; yet in one dream I can compose a whole Comedy, behold the action, apprehend the jests, and laugh myself awake at the conceits thereof.
Brown. Religio-Medici.

Your May-pole deck with flow'ry coronal;
Sprinkle the flow'ry coronal with wine;
And in the nimble-footed galliard, all,
Shepherds and shepherdesses, lively, join.
Thompson. An Hymn to May.

GA'LLICISM. Lat. Gallicus, French. Gallicism,—

An expression or idiom, peculiar to or borrowed from the French.

It is a mere Gallicism, but perhaps may be excused; for I know not that our language affords any precise equivalent to it.—Malone. Life of Dryden, Note.

GALLIGA'SKINS. Galligaskins, or wide hose or slops, q. d. caligæ Gallo-vasconicæ, so called because the Vascones (i.e. Gascons) used them.

Jul. This is the Devil-thief, and if he takes me,
Woe be to my gallygaskins.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Pilgrim, Act iii. sc. 3.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdued (what will not time subdue!)
An horrid chasm disclos'd with orifice
Wide, discontinuous.—J. Philips. The Splendid Shilling.

GALLIMA'TIA. Fr. "Galimatias; jargon de Gal, gibberish, fustian language, pedlers' French," (Cotgrave.)

She became by this desire quite ridiculous, and ran into absurdities and a gallimatias scarce credible.
Fielding. Amelia, b. vii. c. 4.

And now Tacitus, so long famed for his political sagacity, will be made to pronounce this gallimatias from his oracular tripod, "The Jews were not convicted so properly for the crime of setting fire to Rome, as for the crime of being hated by all mankind."
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iv. Pref.

GALLIMAU'FRY. Fr. Galimafrée. Menage says, that galimatias and galimafrée are cousins german; but knows nothing of their origin. He calls it, "A hash of various sorts of viands." Cockeram,—"A confused heap of things together." Pistol applies the word to Ford's wife.

Whiles a comedy of Plautus is playing, and the vile bondmen scoffing and trifling among themselves, if you should suddenly come upon the stage in a philosopher's apparel, and rehearse out of Octavia the place wherein Seneca disputeth with Nero, had it not been better for you to have played the dumb person, than by rehearsing that, which served neither for the time nor place, to have made such a tragical comedy or gallimalfry!—More. Utopia, b. i.

They have a dance, which the wenches say is a galley-maufrey of gambols, because they are not in't.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act iv. sc. 3.

Pont. One of them there, the lower, is a good, foolish, knavish, sociable gallimaufry of a man, and has much caught my lord with singing.
Massinger. The Fatal Dowry, Act ii. sc. 2.

Delighting in hodge-podge, gallimaufries, forced meats, &c.—King. Art of Cookery, Let. 9.

GALLINA'CEOUS. Lat. Gallina, a hen.

Spallanzani has remarked a circumstantial resemblance between the stomachs of gallinaceous fowls and the structure of corn-mills.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

GA'LLIPOT. GA'LLITILE. } Perhaps a clay-pot and clay-tile. Skinner derives gallipot from the Dut. Gleye, (also written kleye, in Eng. Clay,)—a shining or glittering potters' earth, and pot. It has been supposed that galli is a corruption of gala, and that thus gallipot was a fine painted pot. It is evident that gallitile was a composition, into the nature of which Bacon deemed it necessary further to inquire. But this is not any objection to the etymology suggested above.

—— Who ever lives to see me dead,
Gentlemen, shall find me all mummie, good to fill gallipots.
Beaum. & Fletch. Passionate Madman, Act iii. sc. 1.

—— Then distill it,
And keep it in your galley-pot well glidder'd.
B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act iii. sc. 4.

It is to be known of what stuff galletyle is made, and how the colours in it are varied.—Bacon. Physiological Remains.

Inquire of the substance of galletyle.—Id. Ib.

Observe this small phial and this little gallipot, in this an unguent, in the other a liquor.—Spectator, No. 426.

He is usually drawn at the top of his own bills, sitting in his arm chair, holding a little bottle between his finger and thumb, and surrounded with rotten teeth, nippers, pills, pacquets, and gally-pots.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 67.

The other side is divided into wards, each of which is just big enough to contain a bed, and neatly lined with gallytiles.—Cook. First Voyage, b. i. c. 1.

GA'LLOGLASS. Spenser speaks of them as foot soldiers; Camden, (Annals of Ireland,) as horse.

Iren. No not as it is vsed in warre, for it is worne then likewise of footmen under their shirts of mayle, the which footmen they call gallo-glasses, the which name doth discover them to be auncient English: for Gall-ogla signifies an English servitour or yeoman.
Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

—— The merciless Macdonwald
(Worthie to be a rebell, for to that
The multiplying villanies of nature
Doe swarm vpon him) from the Western Iles
Of kernes and gallowgrosse is supply'd.
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act i. sc. 2.

The fourth degree is a galloglasse, using a kind of pollar for his weapon.—Stanihurst. Description of Ireland, c. 8.

GA'LLON. Of unknown etymology. The Mid. Lat. Galo is in Du Cange and Spelman; Lacombe has the word galon in his Supplement, and calls it an English measure containing deux pots.

A measure of four quarts or eight pints.

—— He bouht yt thr after
A galon for a grote. Piers Ploughman, p. 98

And who repentyd rathest shold aryse after
And grete Syre Gloton, whit a galon of ale.—Id. p. 107.

And he sendith tweyne of hise disciplis and seith to hem go ye into the citee and a man berynge a galoun of watir schal meete you, sue ye him.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 14.

N'ot I nat why, that me were lever to stepe,
Than the best galon wine that is in chepe.
Chaucer. The Manciples Tale, v. 16,973.

Tiberius called one Tricongius, for carowsing three gallons of wine.—Camden. Remaines. Surnames.

And when he had called many of his nobles and captains to that feast, he that drank most, was one Promachus, who drank off fower gallons and one pottle, and having received his talent for his prize, lived three days after, and then died.
Usher. Annals, an. 3679.

By the sea, on the south side of that high hill, there's fresh water comes out of the rocks, but so slowly, that it yields not above 40 gallons in 24 hours.
Dampier. Voyages, an. 1682.

I ordered the still to be kept at work, from six o'clock in the morning to four in the afternoon; during which time we procured from thirteen to sixteen gallons of fresh water.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 3

GALLO'ON. Fr. Galon, galonner,—to edge or lace with galloon. Skinner thinks it may be Gallic lace, or from the It. and Sp. Gala, vestis nitida, ornata et speciosa.

Whom kirtle red will much amaze,
Whilst clown his man on signes does gaze.
In livry short, galloone on cape,
With cloak-bag mounting high as nape.
Davenant. The Long Vacation in London.

I'le have him cut to the kell, then down the seames, oh for a whip to make him galloone-laces, I'le have a coach-whip.—Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act v. sc. 1.

In a word, lace and ribbons, silver and gold galloons, with the like glittering gew-gaws, are so many lures to women of weak minds or low educations.—Spectator, No. 15.

GA'LLOP, v. GA'LLOPER. GA'LLOPING. } Fr. Galoper; It. Galoppare. Probably no other than the ge-hleapan, ge-hlopen, salire, saltare, to leap or jump.

To move by leaps; to move, to run, fast, with speed, with swiftness.

Stylle he goloped forth right, tyll he came into Arthoys, and ther he was in suritie: and so then he rode into France to Kyng Philip, and shewed him all his aduenture.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 140.

They through the thornie downes wher neerest way no compas makes
In armour iointly ryde, hie shoutes vprise and clustring strakes,
They gallop, and vnder their trampling feete the ground with breaking quakes.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. viii.

I doubte not but where you now stande still musyng you woulde runne furth a galloppe, and where you runne on your fete, you woulde, if you had wynges, flie as faste, as euer did hawke to hys praie.—Hall Hen. VI. an. 3.

When the time came of her out riding none saw her, but her husbande and such as were present with him, and she and her gentlewomen to wayte vpon her galoped through the towne, where the people might here the treading of their horsse, but they saw her not Grafton. Edward the Confessor, an. 1043.

Know, Pegasus has got a bridle,
A bit and curb of crusted water,
Or if I call't plain ice, no matter,
With which he now is so commanded,
His days of galloping are ended,
Unlesse I with the spur do prick him.
Cotton. Upon the Great Frost

—— I did heare
The galloppyng of horse. Who was't came by?
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iv. sc. 1.

He that rides post through a countrey may be able, from the transient view, to tell how in general the parts lie, and may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain, there a plain, here a morass, and there a river; woodland in one part, and savanna in another. Such superficial ideas and observations as these he may collect in galloppyng over it.—Locke. On the Conduct of the Understanding, § 24.

Engag'd his [Publicola's] legions in fierce bustles,
With periwinkles, prawns, and muscles,
And led his troops with furious gallops,
To charge whole regiments of scallops.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

If I have company they are a parcel of chattering magpies; if abroad I am a gagling goose; when I return, you are a fine galloper; women, like cats, should keep the house.—Guardian, No. 132.

Master Blifil now, with his blood running from his nose, and the tears galloping after from his eyes, appeared before his uncle and the tremendous Thwackum.
Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. iii. c. 4.

GA'LLOW, Warburton says, is a West Country word, and Mr. Grose has "Galliment, a great fright. And Gallied, frightened. Exm." It is the A. S. A-gelw-an, to astony, abash, greatly affright. And see Gally, in Junius.

—— The wrathfull skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
And make them kepe their caues.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

GA'LLOWAY. Dr. Jamieson thinks this word may be the Sw. and Ger. Wallach, which Wachter refers to gall, sterilis, castratus, and Ihre to the Wallachians. But see the quotation from Berenger.

And on his match as much the western horseman lays
As the rank riding Scots upon their galloways.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 3.

Tradition reports that this kind [galloways] of horses are sprung from some Spanish stallions, which swam on shore from some of the ships of the famous Spanish armada, which were wrecked on the coast, and coupling with the mares of the country, peopled the kingdom with their posterity. They were much esteemed, and of a middling size, strong, active, nervous, and hardy, and were called Galloways, from being first known in the countrey which bears that name.—Berenger. On Horsemanship, vol. i. p. 205.

GA'LLOWS. Goth. and A.S. Galga; Dut. Galghe, which latter, Vossius thinks, approaches very near to the Lat. Gabalus, a cross. Gallows is anciently written Galwe, and, probably, from the A. S. A-gelw-an, to affright; being raised in public view to inspire terror.

It is generally formed like the Greek Π. The word is also applied to one deserving the gallows; deserving to be hanged.

Galwes do ge reise, and hyng this cheiteſe.
R. Brunne, p. 172.

First was he drawen for his felonie,
And as a theſe than slawen, on galwes hanged hie.
Id. p. 247.

But to beware no grace yet he hadde,
Til fortune on the galwes made him gape.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,688.

He that setteth a foole in hye dignite, that is euen as yf a man dyd caste a precyous stone upon the galous.
Bible, 1551. Prouerbes, c. 26.

The more buxum wyll he bee,
That he were borowyd fro the galow tree,
I hope be hevyn kyng.
Le Bone Florence of Rome. Ritson, vol. iii.

Had y not hyght to holde counsayle,
Thou shouldest be honged, wythowt fayle
Upon a galowe-tree.—The Erle of Toulous. Ib. vol. i.

Then went he to the market-place,
As fast as he coulde hye,
A payre of new gallows there did he vp set,
Besyde the pyllory.
Adam Bel. Ib. Ancient Popular Poetry.

A lytle boy stod them amonge
And asked what meaned that gallow-tre;
They sayde, to hang a good yeoman,
Called Wyllyam of Cloudesle. Id. Ib.

The viii. of Aprill there was a cat hanged vpon a gallow at the Crosse in Cheap, apparaled like a priest ready to say masse, with a shauen crowne.
Fox. Martyrs, p. 1335. A Cat hanged with a shauen crown.

Clo. What is he that builds stronger than either the mason, the shipwright, or the carpenter?
Other. The gallowes-maker; for that frame out-liues a thousand tenants.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 1.

At length him nayled on a gallow-tree
And slew the iust by most vniust decree.
Spenser, Hymne 3. Of Heavenly Love.

No Indian prince has to his palace
More followers than a thief to the gallows.
Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

Let him be gallows-free by my consent
And nothing suffer, since he nothing meant.
Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel.

What honour a man wins, or saves, by that which gives him an opportunity of being hanged, is hard to be understood; but he that mistakes the cart for a triumphal chariot, or the gallow-tree for a triumphal arch, may apply himself to the obtaining such victories as these.—South, vol. x. Ser. 6.

Hold him fast, the dog; he has the gallowes in his face.
Goldsmith. The Good-Natured Man, Act v.

GALO'CHE. } Skinner says, Galloshoes, cre-
GA'LLOSHOES. } pidæ ligneæ, wooden shoes, from the Fr. Galloches, galoches; Sp. Galocha; It. Galozza, calceus altior rusticus. Gallicæ, a kind of shoes, a word noticed by Aulus Gellius, as introduced not long before the age of Cicero, who uses it Phil. ii. 30; and hence the Fr. and It. are by Menage derived. See also Spelman, in v.

Cotgrave,—"A woodden shooe, or patten, made all of a piece, without any latchet, or tye of leather, and worn by the poor clown in winter."

—— And sprakliche he lokede
As is the kynd of a knyght, that cometh to be doubed
To geten hus gilte sporꝛe and galoches ytoped.
Piers Ploughman, p. 339.

No were worthy to unbocle his galoche.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,869.

Nay, all things yet remain so crusty,
That were I now but half so lusty
As when we kiss'd four months agone,
And had but Dutch galloshoes on,
At one run I would slide to Lon——.
Cotton. Upon the Great Frost.

GA'LVERLY, q. Ge-liverly; equivalent to deliverly, (qv.) cleverly, actively.

If you happen upon a light gennet that is young and trotteth galverly, of good making, colour, and fast going, if you buy him for me for reasonable money and send him over, your money shall be repaid.
Wriothesley. To Sir. T. Wyatt. Oct. 1537.

GA'MBAULD. } Fr. Gambader, gambiller;
GAMBAU'DING. } It. Sgambettare, which Me-
GAMBA'DOES. } nage derives from the It.
GA'MBOL, v. } Gamba; Fr. Jambe; Low
GA'MBOL, s. } Lat. Campa, a leg, and this from the Gr. Καμπη, a joint.

Est tibi Gambæ capri, is rendered by Fuller, Gamb'd like a goat, (Cornwall.)

"Fr. Gambiller,—to wag the legs in sitting, as children use to do. Gambader,—to turn heels over head, make many gambols, fetch many frisks, show tumbling tricks," (Cotgrave.) So, in English, to gambol, is—

To fetch many frisks or frolics; to skip, to caper, to play wantonly with the legs, to run about, jump about, playfully and nimbly; to jump or start aside.

Quid est quod sic gestis? What is the matter that you leape and skyppe so? for that you fet such gambaudes.
Udal. The Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 72.

With gambauding thriftles.
Skelton. Why Come ye not to Court?

One of them as soone as hee sawe the boate, beganne to leape forward and backeward with so great nimblenesse, that doubtless he seemd to all of vs a man of great agilitie, and we took no small pleasure while we beheld them fetching these gambols.—Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 412.

Some to disport them selfs their soondry maistries tried on grasse,
And some their gamboldes plaid, and some on sand their wrastling was. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. vi.

I know not whether he [James I.] or his son first brought up the use of gambadoes, much worne in the west, whereby, while one rides on horseback, his legge are in a coach, clean and warme, in those dirty countries.
Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Tita. Be kinde and curteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walkes, and gambole in his eies;
Feed him with apricocks, and dew-berries,
With purple grapes.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 1.

—— It is not madnesse
That I haue vttered; bring me to the test
And I the matter will reword; which madnesse
Would gambol from.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iii. sc. 1.

—— Beare, tygers, ounces, pards,
Gambold before them.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

And neither good cheare,
Mirth, fooling, nor wit,
Nor any least fit
Of gambol, or sport
Will come at the court.—B Jonson. To Mr. John Burges.

All kind of freedom in speech was then (in their Saturnalia) allowed to slaves, even against their masters, and we are not without some imitation of it in our Christmas gambols.—Dryden. Dedication to Juvenal.

Damœtas deftly on his lute could play,
And Daphnis sweetly pip'd, and caroll'd to his lay
Their heifers gambol'd on the grass green fields,
In singing neither conquers, neither yields.
Fawkes. Theocritus, Idyl 6.

Yet fairy elves (so ancient customs will)
The green-gown'd fairy elves, by starry sheen,
May gambol or in valley or on hill,
And leave their footsteps on the circled green.
Thompson. An Hymn to May.

I was in a manner stupified by the desperate boldness of a few obscure young men, who having obtained, by ways which they could not comprehend, a power of which they saw neither the purposes nor the limits, tossed about, subverted, and tore to pieces, as if it were in the gambols of a boyish unluckiness and malice, the most established rights, and the most ancient and most revered institutions, of ages and nations.—Burke. On Mr. Fox's East India Bill.

GA'MBONE. I. e. Gammon, (qv.)

And then came haltynge Jone
And brought a gambone
Of bakon that was reastye.—Skelton. Elinor Rumming

GA'MBREL, v. } From It. Gamba, a leg.
GA'MBREL, s. } See GAMBAULD.

To bind up the legs; to tie or bind by the legs.

Ge. Lay by your scorn and pride, they're scurvey qualities,
And meet me, or I'll box you while I have you,
And carry you gambril'd thither like a mutton.
Beaum. & Fletcher. The Nice Valour, Act iv. sc. 1.

As appears it hath, by the weight which the tendon lying on a horse's gambrel doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.—Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

GAME, v. }
GAME, s. }
GA'MESOME. }
GA'MESTER. }
GA'MING, s. } A. S. Gamian, ludere, illudere, to sport, to play, to make a sport of.
GA'MBLE, v. } To play; (sub.) for money staked or pledged, or betted.
GA'MBLER. } To make game or sport of, is, consequentially, to laugh at or deride, to mock.

Game, the noun, is, any sport or amusement, active or sedentary, among different persons, (usually) as a match for trial of skill or luck.

Game is also applied to the object played for or pursued; especially "to those species of wild animals which the arbitrary constitutions of positive law have distinguished from the rest by the well-known appellation of Game," (Blackstone, ii. 1.)

Gamester, in the passage quoted from Shakespeare, "does not signify a man viciously addicted to games of chance, but a frolicksome person,"—Steevens; (i. e. a gamesome person.)

Vpe the alure of the castles the laydes thanne stode,
And by hulde thys noble game, and wyche knygts were god. R. Gloucester, p. 192.

Tostus tok his leue aryued in Norweie,
& how the gamen gede lithe I salle gow seie.
R. Brunne, p. 67.

And if we grutche of hys game, he wol greve ous sarrer.
To hus clees clawen us, and in hys clooches holde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 9.

And yet is this the beste game of alle,
That she, for whom they have this jolite,
Can hem therfore as mochel thank as me
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1510.

Thereto she coude skip, and make a game,
As any kid or calf folowing his dame.
Id. The Millieres Tale, v. 3259

And thus was all the game shent.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

A citizen, in secret wyse
thy fame thou dost desyer:
A farmer, thou the townish games
doste burne for, hote as fyer.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to his Baile in the Countre

The more parte vainquyashed with tediousnesse eyther do abandone the lawes, and vnwares to theyr frendes, do gyue them to gamyng, and other (as I mought say) idle businesse, nowe called pastimes.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. c. 14.

Although al his gyles and disceats are none other thing, but certain folish visers & shewes triflyng and counterfaite pageants and juglings of game-players.
Calvine. Foure Godlie Sermons, Ser. 4

——— And as you say,
There was he gaming, there o'retooke in's rouse,
There falling out at tennis.—Shakes. Hamlet, Act ii. sc 1.

And therefore Johannes Sarisburiensis allows of every game, if it can ease our griefs, or aleviate our burdens without the loss of our innocence.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Lycaon hath the report of setting our first publicke games, and proving of maistries and feats of strength and activitee, in Arcadia.—Holland. Plinie, b. vii. c. 56.

——— Their reasons, like those toys
Of glassy bubbles, which some gamesome boys
Stretch to so nice a thinness through a quill,
That they themselues break, and do themselues spill.
Donne. The Progress of the Soul.

So may we oft a vent'rous father see,
To please his wanton son, his only joy,
Coast all about, to catch the roving bee,
And, stung himself, his busy hands employ
To save the honey for his gamesome boy.
P. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Sirra, young gamester, your father were a foole,
To giue thee all, and on his wayning age
Set foot vnder thy table.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act ii. sc. 1.

Said S. Cyprian, a common gamester, or dice player, may call himself Christian, but indeed he is not: and S. Clemens Alexandrinus says, idleness and wantonness provides these games for the lazy and useless people of the world.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iv. c. 1.

Roger Askam born in Yorkshire, notably skilful in the Greek and Latin tongues, who had some times been school master to Queen Elizabeth, and her secretary for the Latin tongue; but taking too great delight in gaming and cock fighting, he both lived and died in mean estate, yet left behind him sundry monuments of wit and industry.
Baker, an. 1602.

Could fools to keep their own contrive,
On what, on whom, could gamesters thrive?
Is it in charity you game,
To save your worthy gang from shame?
Gay. Fables, pt. ii. Fable 12.

From Lord Sunderland's returning to his post all men concluded that his declaring as he did for the exclusion was certainly done by direction from the King, who naturally loved craft and a double game.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1682.

As when the shepherd, on the mountain brow,
Sits piping to his flocks and gamesome kids.
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iii.

The losing gamester shakes the box in vain,
And bleeds, and loses on, in hopes to gain.
Dryden. Ovid. Art of Love.

Mr. Hyde going to a place called Pickadilly, (which was a fair house for entertainment, and gaming, with handsome gravel-walks with shade, &c.)
Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. i. p. 241.

Poetry and gaming, which usually go together, are alike in this too, that they seldom bring any advantage but to those who have nothing else to live on.—Locke. Educ. § 174.

Avarice itself does not calculate strictly when it games. One thing is certain, that in this political game, the great lottery of power is that, into which men will purchase with millions of chances against them.
Burke. On Shortening the Duration of Parliaments.

It is for fear of losing the inestimable treasure we have, that I do not venture to game it out of my hands for the vain hope of improving it.—Id. Reform of Representation.

The merry tabor's gamesome sound
Provok'd the sprightly dance around
Beattie. The Wolf & Shepherds.

Shall tell the story o'er and o'er,
H' has told a thousand times before;
Like gamesters, who, with eager zeal,
Talk the game o'er between the deal.
Lloyd. A Familiar Epistle, &c.

Gaming is a principle inherent in human nature. It belongs to us all.—Burke. On Economical Reform.

Some sneaking virtue lies in him, no doubt,
Where neither strumpets' charms, nor drinking-bout,
Nor gambling practices, can find it out.
Cowper. Tirocinium.

It is very remarkable that the people of these islands are great gamblers. They have a game very much like our draughts.—Cook. Third Voyage, b. v. c. 7.

GA'MMER. A. S. Ge-meder, commater, susceptrix, a God-mother, whence happily our Gammer, (Somner.) Others, from Good-mother. See GAFFER.

——— And with them came
Old gammer Gurton, a right pleasant dame,
As the best of them. Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

Jus. What's the matter.
Nig. Hee has stolne gammer Vrsla's panne.
B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fair, Act v. sc. 6.

Should gammer Gurton leave these helps at home,
To church with Bible, 'tis in vain to come.
Fawkes. A Pair of Spectacles.

GA'MMON. Fr. Jambone; Sp. Jamon; It. Gambone, and these, adds Skinner, from the Fr. Jambe; It. Gamba. (See GAMBAULD.) "The leg or shank, (extending from the knee to the ancle,)" Cotgrave. Skinner thinks all from the A. S. Ham.

——— I would have him buried
Even as he lyes, cross-legg'd, like one o' th' templers,
(If his Westphalia gammons will hold crossing.)
Beaum. & Fletch. The Captain, Act ii. sc. 1.

Upon speaking with the master, we learnt that they had broke their forestay, and the gammon of their bowsprit.
Anson. Voyage round the World, b. i. c. 7.

GA'MUT, i. e. Gamma-ut; the Gr. Γ. In Fr. Game; It. and Sp. Gamma, scala musica; the scale of music.

I must begin with rudiments of art,
To teach you gamouth in a briefer sort,
More pleasant, pithy, and effectual,
Then hath beene taught by any of my trade.
Shakespeare. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 1.

When by the gamut some musicians make
A perfect song; others will undertake
By the same gamut chang'd to equal it.
Donne, Elegy 2. The Anagram.

Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;
In songs and airs express their martial fire,
Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.
Addison. Prologue to Phædrus & Hippolita.

Birds chaunt their melodious notes, without labouring through the gamut, or squandering years by the side of an expensive music-master.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. ii. Dis. 3. c. 3. s. 2.

GAN, i. e. Began. See GIN.

GANCH. "Fr. Ganché; Let fall (as in a strappado) on sharp stakes pointed with iron, and thereon languishing until he die," (Cotgrave.) Sp. Gancho; It. Gancio, a hook; Skinner thinks from the Lat Uncus, a hook.

Take him away, ganch him, impale him, rid the world of such a monster.—Dryden. Don Sebastian, Act iii. sc. 2.

Their ganching is after this manner: he sitteth upon a wall, being five fathoms high, within two fathoms of the top of the wall, right under the place where he sits, is a strong iron hook fastened, being very sharp, then is he thrust off the wall upon this hook, with some part of his body, and there he hangeth, sometimes two or three days before his death.—Churchill. Voyages, vol. vii. p. 478.

GA'NDER. A.S. Gandra; Dut. Gans; Ger. Gansard, ganss; Sp. Ganzo; Lat. Ganza, anser, q. d. ganser, manifestly, says Skinner, from the Lat. Anser. See GOOSE, and the quotation from Pliny in v. Ganza.

I wisse (quod I) & yet though ye would believe one y^t wold tell you, that twise two ganders made alway four geese, yet ye would be aduised ere ye beleued hym, that woulde tell you that twise two gese made all waye four ganders.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 169.

Their gander feast, what Manlius and
Camillus did therein,
How this the cappitoll, and that
From Brenn his spoyles did win,
I pretermit. Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

Ganders and geese engender togither in the very water.
Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 59.

The female hatches her eggs with great assiduity; while the gander visits her twice or thrice a day, and sometimes drives her off to take her place, where he sits with great state and composure.
Goldsmith. Animated Nature, b. vii. c. 11.

GANG, v. } A. S. Gangan, (formed by the GANG, n. } reduplication of gan, to go;) Dut. Gaan, gan-ghen, to go. See GING.

A gang,—the road or way by which we go; also, a number going, or who go together, who go to or from work together, and thus, who work together.

Sche axis, no knyght that lifes now
Mai help hir half so well als thou:
Gret word sal gang of thi vassage, [i. e. vasselage,]
If that thou win hir heritage.
Ywaine & Gawine. Ritson, vol. i.

A poplar greene, and with a kerved seat
Under whose shade I solace in the heat;
And thence can see gang out and in my neat.
B. Jonson. The Sad Shepherd, Act ii. sc 2

Mons. Du Pre, accompanied by Du Broetti and Du Fargis, had lately given a meeting at Yvian to one of the Duke of Savoy's guard, who used to come into our parts, and a certain Frenchman living at the same place, was also suspected to be of their gang.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii p. 152.

In order to furnish, at the expence of your honour, an excuse to your apologists here for several enormities of yours, you would not have been content to be represented as a gang of Maroon slaves, suddenly broke loose from the house of bondage, and therefore to be pardoned for your abuse of the liberty to which you were not accustomed, and were ill fitted.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

As we were putting off the boat, they laid hold of the gang-board, and unhooked it off the boat's stern.
Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 4.

I had hardly got into the boat, before I was told they had stolen one of the ancient stanchions from the opposite gangway, and were making off with it.—Id. Ib. b ii. c. 9

GA'NGRENE, v. } Fr. Gangrène; It. Gancrena; Lat. Gangræna, Gr. Γαγγραινα, from Γραειν, signifying εσθιειν, 'to eat, (Vossius.)
GA'NGRENE, n.
GA'NGRENATED.
GA'NGRENOUS.

To eat, to consume, to corrode; to eat or consume the vital powers; and thus, consequentially, to mortify or become mortified.

Menen. The service of the foote
Being once gangren'd, is not then respected
For what before it was.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

These inclinations and evil forwardnesses, this dyscrasie and gangren'd disposition, does always suppose a long or a base sin for their parent, and the product of this is a wretchless spirit.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 20.

And my chyrurgeons apprehended some fear, that it may grow to a gangrene, and so the hand must be cut off.
Digby. A Discourse of the Sympathetic Powder.

So parts cauterized, gangrenated, siderated and mortified, become black, the radical moisture, or vital sulphur suffering an extinction and smothered in the part affected.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 20.

It being unsafe for any to carry him [Captain Bean] off by day, his wound gangrened before night, and he died about two days after.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 64.

The very substance of the soul is festered with them; the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured; the inflammation will rage to all eternity.—Spectator, No. 90.

A man, whom I suppose you have often seen, a while since received such a kick of a horse, as made the doctor and chirurgeon, who tended him, to conclude the part gangrenated, and the patient's condition by the accession of a violent fever, so desperate, that they desired to meddle with him no longer.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 116.

But to accuse the Gospel of severity on this account, would be just as rational and as equitable, as to charge the surgeon with cruelty for amputating a gangrened limb.
Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

It [fear] has occasioned gangrenes, indurations of the glands, epilepsies, the suppression of natural or beneficial secretions.—Cogan. On the Passions, vol. i. pt. ii. c. 3. s. 2.

Instead of defending these doctrines, it is the duty of a real disciple of Jesus Christ to reprobate them as gangrenous excrescences, corrupting the fair form of genuine Christianity.—Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. i. p. 413.

GA'NTLET. } "Gantlope, a military punish-GA'NTELOPE. } ment," says Skinner; who adds, "The author of the English Dictionary thinks it so called from Gant, (now written Ghent,) in Flanders, and the Dut. Loopen, currere, to run, because that punishment was first invented at Ghent."

Forgive me, therefore, if I say, I cannot with patience think, that a young gentleman should be put into the herd, and be driven with whip and scourge, as if he were to run the gantlet through the several classes, ad capiendum ingenii cultum.—Locke. Of Education, s. 147.

Some said he ought to be tied neck and heels; others, that he deserved to run the gantelope.
Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. viii. c. 11.

In this condition, I ran the gauntlope (as I think I may justly call it) through rows of sailors and watermen, few of whom failed of paying their compliments to me, by all manner of insults and jests on my misery.

Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

To print is to run the gantlet, and to expose ones self to the tongues-strappado.—Glanvill. On Dogmatizing, Pref.

GA'NZA. See GANDER, and FLYING.

The geese there [Germany] be all white; but lesse of body than from other parts: and there they be called ganzae.

Holland. Pliny, b. x. c. 22.

What modest indignation can forbear the stamping at the presumption of those men, who, as if Domingo Gonsales his engine, they had been mounted by his ganzaes from the moon to the empyreall heaven, and admitted to be the heralds, or masters of ceremonies in that higher world, have taken upon them to marshall these angelical spirits into their severall roomes.

Bp. Hall. The Invisible World, b. i. s. 7.

Although they promise strange and great
Discoveries of things far fet,
They are but idle dreams and fancies,
And savour strongly of the ganzaes.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3.

There are others, who have conjectured a possibility of being conveyed through the air by the help of fowls, to which purpose the fiction of the ganzas is the most pleasant and probable.—Wilkins. Dædalus, c. 7.

GAOL, n. GA'OLER. GA'OLING, n. } Also written Jail, and by Junius, Yail. Low Lat. Gaiola; Fr. Geôle, gaiole, gayole; Dut. Ghioole. All, says Skinner, from the Lat. Cavea. Menage says, Geôle, from gabiola, diminutive of gabia, (a cage, qv.) which he derives from cavea. Cotgrave,—"Geôle, a gaol or prison; also, a cage or coop for birds."

A prison, a place of imprisonment or confinement.

Hue leteth passe prisoners, and paieth for hem ofte.
And geveth the gayler gold, & grotes to gederes
To unfetetye the false. Piers Ploughman, p. 47.

And Palamon, this woful prisoner,
As was his wone, by leve of his gayler
Was risen, and romed in a chambre on high.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1066.

And on a day befell, that in that houre,
Whan that his mete wont was to be brought,
The gailer shette the dores of the toure;
He hered it wel, but he spake right naught.

Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,735.

And in this yere [1293] as one Richard Bagle, officer of the sheriffes of London, was ledynge a prysoner towarde the gayole, ye which he before arrested, three men rescowed the sayd prysoner.—Fabyan, an. 1293.

God our chiefe gayler, as himself is insensible, so vseth he in his punishments insensible instrumets, and therefore not of like fashion as the tother gaylers doo, but yet of like effect & as paynfull in feeling as those.

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1246.

There likewise was a long statute against vagabonds, wherein two things may be noted; the one, the dislike the Parliament had of gaoling of them, as that which was chargeable, penerous, and of no open example.

Bacon. Henry VII. p. 215.

Yet ere his happie soule to heaven went
Out of his fleshlie gaole, he did devise
Unto his heauenlie maker to present
His bodie, as a spotless sacrifise.

Spenser. The Ruines of Time.

The gailor, bribed, with his keyes
To stay or free him sent her.
"Loue (louely Richard) makes," quoth she,
"That I this hell-house enter:
Hence make escape, remembering me,
That thus for thee doe venter."

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 24.

She [Elizabeth] called him [Benefield] always her gaoler, which though she did in a way of raillery, yet it was so sharp, that he avoided coming any more to the Court.

Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1558.

It was their [the Council's] pleasure that I [Mountain] should be delivered, if that I would be a conformable man to the Queen's proceedings, and forsake heresy, or else to remain in prison until the next sessions of gaol-delivery.

Strype. Memorials, vol. iv. c. 23. an. 1554.

——— Small eggs appear,
Dire fraught with reptile life; alas, too soon
They burst their filmy gaol, and crawl abroad.

Grainger. The Sugar Cane, b. ii.

Gaolers are also the servants of the sheriffs, and he must be responsible for their conduct. Their business is to keep safely all such persons as are committed to them by lawful WARRANT.—Blackstone. Commentaries, b. i. c. 9.

They have, besides, a commission of general gaol-delivery; which empowers them to try and deliver every prisoner who shall be in the gaol when the judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever or before whomsoever indicted, or for whatever crime committed.—Blackstone. Comment. b. iv. c. 19.

GAP, n. A gap and a gape are the regular past tense and past part. of ge-yppan, (to open,) by the change of the characteristic y to a. (Tooke, ii. 199.)

An opening, an aperture, a hole, a vacuity, a vacant space.

And stoppe sone and deliverly
All the gappes of the hay, [i. e. hedge.]

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

The Kyng entendinge to stoppe two gappes with one bushe, sent Syr Gylbert Talbot, and the other two ambassadors, principally to Bishop July, and by theim sent also to the Duke of Urbyne, the whole habite and collier of the noble ordre of the garter.—Hall. Henry VII. an. 22.

But, as it fareth in such cases, the gap which for just considerations wee open unto some, letteth in others through corrupt practices, to whom such fauours were neither meant, nor should be communicated.

Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 81.

It is seldom that the scheme of his [St Paul's] discourse makes any gap; and therefore without breaking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to separate his discourse, and give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections.

Locke. The Epistle to Galatians, Pref.

Then follows an immense gap, in which, undoubtedly, some changes were made by time; and we hear little more of them [Germans] until we find them Christians, and makers of written laws.

Burke. Abridgement of English History, b. ii. c. 7.

GAP-TOOTHED. See GAT-TOOTHED.

GAPE, v. GA'PER. GA'PING, n. } A. S. Ge-yppan, to open. To open (subaud. the mouth,) to open, (sc.) with eagerness, as young birds do for their food; and thus, to crave, to desire or covet eagerly, to long for or after, to seek or look anxiously after.

And by gynne to gaipe.—Piers Ploughman, p. 247.

Then cam I to that cloystre, and gaped abouten,
Though it was pilered and poynt. Id. Crede.

This Nicholas sat ay as stille as ston,
And ever he gaped upward into the eire.

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3473.

See how she gaipeth, lo, this dronken wight,
As though he wold us swalow anon right.

Id. The Manciples Prologue, v. 16,984.

But alway cruel rauine deuouring all yⁱ they haue gottē, sheweth other gapings, that is to say, gapen and desiren yet after mo richesse.—Id. Boecius, b. ii.

That whan a man for payne cride,
The bull of bras, whiche gapeth wyde
It shulde seem, as though it were
A belowinge in a man's ere,
And not the crienge of a man.—Gower. Con. A. v. vii.

For whiles you know I was your own,
So long in vaine you made me gape,
And tho' my faith it were well knowne,
Yet small regard thou toke thereat.

Uncertaine Auctors. Lover not regarded in earnest suit, &c.

For they were not wont to brynge offerynges of theyr owne from round about, but theyr gaping was to receiue the offeringe and giftes from al quarters about, and to giue nothyng agayne.—Bale. Apology, fol. 88.

Only the lazy sluggard yawning lies
Before thy threshold, gaping for thy dole,
And licks the easy hand that feeds his sloth.

Carew. Cœlum Britannicum.

And though his language differ from the vulgar somewhat; it shall not fly from all humanity, with the Taberlanes, and Tamer-Chams of the late age, which had nothing in them but the scenicall strutting, and furious vociferation, to warrant them to the ignorant gapers.—B. Jonson. Discoveries.

For that that causeth gaping or stretching is, when the spirits are a little heavy, by any vapour, or the like. For then they strive (as it were,) to wring out, and expel that which loadeth them.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 296.

Studying his looks, and watching at the board,
He gapes to catch the droppings of my lord;
And, tickled to the soul at every joke,
Like a press'd watch, repeats what t'other spoke.

Pitt. Epistle to Mr. Spence.

Is there then any physical deformity in the fabric of the human body; because our imagination can strip it of its muscles and skin, and shew us the scragged and knotty back bone, the gaping and ghastly jaws, and all the sceleton underneath.—Bentley, Ser. 8.

The Dutch, who are more famous for their industry and application, than for wit and humour, hang up in several of their streets, what they call the sign of the gaper, that is, the head of an ideot dressed in cap and bells, and gaping in a most immoderate manner: this is a standing jest at Amsterdam.—Spectator, No. 47.

All eyes were fixed on them, all ears open to hear them: each party gaped, and looked alternately for their vote, almost to the end of their speeches.

Burke. On American Taxation.

GAR, v. A. S. Gearwian, gyrwan; Dut. Gaerwen, gerwen; Ger. Gar-en; Sw. Goera, parare, præstare, facessere, facere. Ihre observes, that the more general signification (facere) prevails among the northern English, and the Scotch. See GARE, GARNISH.

To prepare or make ready; to cause to do, to make; and thus, consequentially, to force.

Egbright gadred partie, and gared him fulle sone.

R. Brunne, p. 16.

Ageyn the Erle Godwyn he gart sette assise.—Id. p. 64.

Gregorie the grete clerk gart write in bokes
The rucle of alle religions. Piers Ploughman, p. 83.

But specially I pray thee, hoste dere,
Gar us have mete and drink, and make us chere,
And we sal paien trewely at full.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4130.

And yf he any gruchyng make,
Many a crowne y schall gar crake
And bodyes to drowpe and dare.

La Bone Florence of Rome. Ritson, vol. iii.

Tell me, good Holbinol, what gars thee greet?
What? hath some wolfe thy tender lambs yторne?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loued lasse forlorne?

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. April.

GARB. Fr. Garbe; It. and Sp. Garbo, which Skinner thinks are from the A. S. Ge-arwian, præparare, ornare, instruere, to prepare, to adorn. Menage confesses his difficulty.

The dress, the clothing or vesture; the habit, fashion, mode or manner.

And with a liaping garb this most rare man
Speaks French, Dutch, Spanish, and Italian.

Drayton. The Owl.

Pausanias upon these hopes grew more insolent than before, and began to live after the Persian garbe, and carryed himself more ruggedly and imperiously towards those who were in league with that state.—Usher. Annals, an. 3529.

His genius addicted him to the study of Antiquity; preferring rust before brightness, and more conforming his mind to the garbe of the former than mode of the moderne times.—Fuller. Worthies. Suffolk.

In this consists our putting on of the Lord Jesus Christ, namely, in imitating his manners, and following the garb and fashion of his conversation.

Scott. Christian Life, pt. i. c. 4.

When now advanc'd so near in sight they drew,
That by their Moorish garb the warriors knew
The hostile band. Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxvi.

GA'RBAGE. Of uncertain etymology. Junius thinks it strongly allied to the Sp. Garbear, diripere, to tear away, (sc.) a costis avium pisciumque. Skinner, — the A. S. Ge-arcian, præparare, apparare; garbage being the whole apparatus or furniture of the abdomen. Minshew says,—To garbage or garbish, to take out the entrails of any thing; from garble, to purify, to cleanse. And garbage is,—

That which is purged or cleansed away; the offal.

This gathers up the scum, and thence it sends
To be cast out; another, liquors base;
Another, garbage, which the kitchen cloys.

P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 2

These are of a diet like unto the Devil, for nothing but garbage and carrion are his dainties; the more rotten with sin, the more pleasing to his palate; that which stinks most in God's nostrils, that smells the sweetest in his.

Mede. Works, b. i. Dis. 39.

Rare taste, and worthy of a poet's brain,
To prey on garbage, and a slave adore!
In such to find out charms, a bard must feign
Beyond what fiction ever feign'd of yore.

Grainger. The Poems of Sulpicius.

The subsistence which they [the inhabitants of Canton] find there is so scanty, that they are eager to fish up the nastiest garbage thrown overboard from any European ship.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 8.

GA'RBLE, v. } Fr. Grabeler; It. Garbellare.
GA'RBLER. } Cotgrave says,—"Grabeller, to garbell spices, &c. (and hence) also, to examine precisely, sift nearly, look narrowly, search curiously, into." The statute 1 Rich. III. c. 11, was made "for the remedie of the excessiue price and badnesse of bowestaues, which partly is growen, because the merchants will not suffer any garbeling or sorting of them to bee made." And, after certain enactments, such bowestaues are forbidden to be sold ungarbelled. As usually applied in English, to garbell is—

To pick out, sift out, what may serve a particular purpose; and thus, destroy or mutilate the fair character of the whole.

—— When justice is refin'd,
And corporations garbled to their mind;
Then passive doctrines shall with glory rise.
Walsh. The Golden Age restored.

But there was a farther secret in this clause, which may best be discovered by the first projectors, or at least the garblers of it; and these are known to be Collins and Tindal, in conjunction with a most pious lawyer, their disciple.
Swift. The Examiner, No. 19.

Among all the excesses into which the Tories ran, in favour of the crown, and in hopes of fixing dominion in their own party, their zeal to support the methods of garbling corporations was, in my opinion, that which threatened publick liberty the most.
Bolingbroke. Dissertation upon Parties, Let. 6.

GA'RBOIL, v. } Dut. Graboeile; Fr. Gar-
GA'RBOIL, n. } bouil; It. Garbuglio. Menage deduces it from the Lat. Turba; thus, turba, turbula, turbulium, ciurbulium: ciarbuglium, carbulium, garbuglio. Minshew, — Garbaglio, q. granboglio, magna ebullitio. To garboil, is—

To throw into confusion, to involve in confusion or disorder, to cause a turmoil, ("a hurly-burly, great stir," Cotgrave.)

With great uproares and garboile shal there be arysinges of nacion against nacion, and royalme against royalme.
Udal. Luke, c. 21.

It is the deuillishe sort of men that insourgeth and raiseth garboyle against the veritie, whiche thei deadly hate and cannot abyde.—Id. Ib. c. 23.

—— She's dead, my queene.
Looke here, and at thy soueraigne leysure read
The garboiles she awak'd.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 3.

He sees another on a Frenchman fly,
And with a pole-ax dasheth out his brains
Whilst he's demanding what the garboil means.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Since they but garboils were, in a deformed mass,
Not ordered fitting war, we lightly overpass.
Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 22.

Give me the numb'red verse which Virgil sung,
And Virgil's self shall speak the English tongue,
Manhood and garboiles shall he chaunt with changed feet,
And head-strong dactyls making music meet.
Bp. Hall, b. i Sat. 6.

Hippocrates had caused it to be bruited at Syracusa, that Marcellus had put all the Leontines to the sword, not sparing little children; and afterwards Hippocrates coming thither on the sudden, in the fear and garboil of this false bruit, he easily took the city.—North. Plutarch, p. 260.

But by this means all Greece stood in marvellous garboil at that time, and the state of the Athenians specially in great danger.—Id. Ib. p. 278.

Here would be a precedent to tip down so many lords at a time, and to garboil the house, as often as any party should have a great majority.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1677.

GARD. Perhaps from the A. S. Ge-arwian, gyrwan, gyrian, præparare, instruere, ornare, to prepare, deck, adorn: (to gar, to gare, qv.) or, otherwise, from the A. S. Gyrd-an, to gird, to surround, (sc.) with a binding. Minshew says,—a gard, welt or border of a garment, from the Fr. Garder, conservare, because it preserves the garment.

A litter born by eight Liburnian slaves,
To buy diseases from a glorious strumpet,
The most censorious of our Roman gentry,
Nay, of the garded robe, the senators,
Esteem an easy purchase.
Massinger. The Roman Actor, Act i. sc. 1.

Those of the forewarde vnder the Duke of Norffolke, were apparelled in blue coats garded with redde.
Stow. Hen. VIII. an. 1544.

All the children were waiting in their goodly garded gowns of purple.—North. Plutarch. Cicero, p. 726.

When Edward, Earl of Rutland, the Lord Spencer and others accused the Earl of Arundel of treason, they appeared before the king at Nottingham, in red gowns of silk, garded and bordered with white silk, and embroidered with letters of gold.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

GA'RDEN, v. } Fr. Jardin; It. Giardino;
GA'RDEN, n. } Sp. Jardin; Dut. Gaerde;
GA'RDENAGE. } Ger. Garten; (Lat. Hortus,
GA'RDENER. } horetus, from the Gr. Ερετος,)
GA'RDENING, n. } Junius. Wachter derives the Ger. Garten, from gurten; A. S. Gyrdan, cingere. And Tooke, the English garden, (i. e. geard, with the participial termination en,) from the A. S. verb Gyrdan, cingere, to gird, to surround, to enclose.

A place girded, surrounded or enclosed, (sc.) for the growth of plants of various kinds. To garden—

To work in, till or cultivate a garden; to plan or lay out a garden.

By glosedest hem and gyledest hem, and my gardyn breke.
Ageyns my love and my leyve.—Piers Ploughman, p. 359.

Yeve me a plant of thilke blessed tree,
And in my gardin planted shal it be.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6346.

So came she to him priuely,
And that was, where he made his mone
Within a gardeine all him one. Gower. Con A b. i.

On a time he had at his table a peacocke which was vntouched, and therefore he commaunded that it should be kept for him till supper, for I wil (quoth he,) haue certain of my friendes with me at supper in my garden.
Bale. Pageant of Popes. Julius III. fol. 191.

The Lorde God also planted a garden in Eden from the beginnynge, and there he sette man whom he had formed. And the Lord God made to sprig out of the erth, al maner trees bewtyfull to the syght and pleasant to eate, & the tree of lyfe in y^e mydden of y^e garden, and also the tree of knowledge of good and euil.—Bible, 1551. Gen. c. 2.

Yf the husband manne be of thys disappointed, nothyng in maner preuayleth the gardiner, nor yet the waterer, but yf heauen bee seasonable, the whole increase ought to be acknowledged to come thence, and from God.
Udal. Corinthians, c. 3.

God Almighty first planted a garden. And indeed it is the purest of humane pleasures. It is the greatest refreshment to the spirits of man: without which, buildings and palaces are but grosse handy workes: and a man shall ever see, that when ages grow to ciuility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely: as if gardening were the greater perfection.—Bacon. Ess. Of Gardens.

Beneath him with new wonder now he views
To all delight of human sense expos'd
In narrow room Nature's whole wealth, yea more
A heav'n on earth; for blissfull Paradise
Of God the garden was, by him in the east
Of Eden planted. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

The Syrians are great gardeners; they take exceeding paines and bee most curious in gardening; whereupon arose the proverb in Greke, to this effect, many woorts and potherbs in Syria.—Holland. Pliny, b. xx. c. 5.

For in default of gardeninge what remedie was there then, but to draw the purse strings, and goe for every thing either to the butchery or the heard-market, and so to live upon the pennie.—Id. Ib. b. xix. c. 4.

Though Epicurus be said to have been the first that had a garden in Athens, whose citizens before him had theirs in their villas or farms without the city; yet the use of gardens seems to have been the most ancient and the most general of any sorts of possession among mankind, and to have preceded those of corn or of cattle, as yielding the easier, the pleasanter, and more natural food.
Sir W. Temple. On Gardening.

But the idea of the garden must be very great, if it answer at all to that of the gardener, [Solomon,] who must have employed a great deal of his care and of his study, as well as of his leisure and thought, in these entertainments, since he writ of all plants, from the cedar to the shrub.—Id. Ib.

I have had no share at all in publick affairs; but, on the contrary, I am wholly sunk in my gardening, and the quiet of a private life; which, I thank God, agrees with me as well as the splendour of the world, and gives me a great deal more quiet and satisfaction.—Id. Letter to Mr. Wickfort.

Or if the garden with its many cares,
All well repaid, demand him, he attends
The welcome call, conscious how much the hand
Of lubbard labour needs his watchful eye,
Oft loit'ring lazily, if not o'erseen,
Or misapplying his unskilful strength.—Cowper. Task, b. iii.

A gardener who cultivates his own garden with his own hands, unites in his own person the three different characters, of landlord, farmer, and labourer.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 6

Gardening was probably one of the first arts that succeeded to that of building houses, and naturally attended property and individual possession.
Walpole. On Modern Gardening.

GARE, or } "Clothed magnificently, splen-
GAURE, v. } didly, and for state," says Skin-GA'RISH. } ner; who adds, "I know not GA'RISHLY. } whether from the A. S. Gearwian, to prepare, to ornament."
GA'RISHNESS. } (See GARNISH, GARRISON.) Garish (says Mr. Steevens) is gaudy, showy; also sometimes, wild, flighty. The verb to gaure, (Chaucer,) or gare, (Phaer,) which Speight and Tyrwhitt explain to stare, is no doubt the origin of the adj. garish, ostentatiously, staringly fine or gay; and thus, gaudy, &c. Garish may be explained—

Gaudy, showy, ostentatious; ostentatiously, staringly fine or gay; staring.

Doun fro the castel cometh ther many a wight
To gauren on this ship and on Custance.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5331.

Now gaureth all the peple on hire, alas!
Id. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,353.

And said her, now cast it awaie anon
That folke may sene and gauren on va twey.
Id. Troilus, b. ii.

What faces! what a watch ther stands at eury gate in sight!
With fifty garing heades a monstrous dragon stands vpright!
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi

My glancing lookes are gone, which wonted where to prie
In euerie gorgious garishe glasse, that glistered in mine eie.
Gascoigne. Flowers. A Glose upon this Text, &c.

—— And when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little starres,
And he will make a face of heauen so fine
That all the world will be in loue with night,
And pay no worship to the garish sun.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act iii. sc. 1.

There in close covert by some brook,
Where no profaner eye may look,
Hide me from day's garish eye.—Milton. Il Penseroso.

They naked went; or clad in ruder hide,
Or home-spun russet, void of forraine pride.
But thou canst maske in garishe gauderie,
To suite a foole's far-fetched liverie.
Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat. 1.

Starting up and garishly staring about, especially on the face of Lhosto.—Hinde. Lhosto Libidinoso, 1606.

Not but that mercies are competent and apt instruments of grace, if we would, but because we are more dispersed in our spirits, and by a prosperous accident are melted into joy and garishness, and drawn off from the sobriety of recollection.—Bp. Taylor, vol ii. Ser. 12.

This [fasting] is a singular corrective of that pride and garishness of temper, that renders it impatient of the sobrieties of virtue; but open to all the wild suggestions of fancy, and the impressions of vice.—South, vol ix. Ser. 5.

Not more fair the star that leads
Bright Aurora's glowing steeds,
Or on Hesper's front that shines,
When the garish day declines.—Whitehead, Ode 33.

GA'RGARIZE, v. } Fr. Gargarizer, to GA'RGARIZE, n. } gargle; It. Gargarizzare;
GA'RGARISM. } Sp. Gargarizar; Lat. Gargarizo; Gr. Γαργαριζω, from Γαργαρεων, gurgulio, the wind-pipe: a name formed from the sound, (Vossius.)

For the application of the word, see the quotation from Burton.

Gargarising if it be not discretly vsed may do more harme than good, brynge downe moche aboundaunce of mater vndigested, but taken in order with water, hony, and pepper, or with issope and fygges boyled in white wine, and taken very hote in a gargarise is right conuenient.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 7

Therewith gargarise your mouth fastinge, vntill the fleume be purged oute of your heade.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 3.

Such as are not swallowed, but only kept in the mouth, are gargarismes used commonly after a purge.
Burton. Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 378.

The use of the juice drawne out of roses, is good for the eares, the cankers and exulcerations in the mouth, the gumbs, the tonsils, or amigdals, for gargarisms, &c.
Holland. Plinie, b xxi. c 19.

And vinegar put to the nosthrils, or gargarised, doth it also, [help somewhat to ease the hiccough.] For that it is astringent, and inhabiteth the motion of the spirit.
Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 686.

GA'RGET. "Fr. Gargate, the throat-pipe," (Cotgrave.)

And, Dan Russel, the fox stert up at ones,
And by the garget hente chaunteclere,
And on his back toward the wood him bere
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 15,341.

GA'RGLE, v. } Ger. Gurgel, gurgeln; Dut. GA'RGLE, n. } Gorghel, gorghelen; Fr. Gargouille, the weason of the throat. Gargouiller; It. Gargogliare; all, says Skinner, from the Lat. Gurges. It is applied by Holland to a disease in the throat; also, as in Lidgate and Hall, to "A gutter that receives and vouds the rain falling on divers roofs or houses;" frequently terminated with the heads of animals, (Cotgrave.)

To cleanse or wash the throat by regurgitating or throwing back, the liquid, by the action of the wind-pipe. In Waller and Fenton, to throw back sounds or notes of music in a similar manner.

And every house covered was with lead,
And many gargoyle, and many hideous heade,
With spouts through, and pipes, as they ought
From the stone worke to the kenel raught.
Lidgate. Troy. Ellis, vol. i.

In the fyrste worke were gargylles of golde fiersely faced with spoutes runnyng.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

——— Vpstands to skies a brasen towre,
Where sits Tisiphonee with blood read tooles, and visage sowre,
That combrous monster feend, both daies and nights the watch she keepes,
Before that entry grim, with gargell face, and never sleepe.
Phaer. Virgill. Æneados, b. vi.

The same is holden to be good for the heale of the squinancie or gargle in swine.—Holland. Pinie, b. xxv. c. 5.

Let the patient gargle this as often as need requires.
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 349.

Let those which only warble long
And gargle in their throats a song,
Content themselves with ut, re, mi;
Let words and sense be set by thee.
Waller. To Mr. Henry Lawes.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd awhile to dote
On nonsense, gargled in an Eunuch's throat.
Fenton. Prologue to Southerne's Spartan Dame.

GA'RLAND, v. } Fr. Garlande, ghirlande, guirlande; It. Ghirlanda, corona, sertum: "I believe," says Skinner, "a gyrando, i. e. from its surrounding the head, or from Corolla." Menage, from Gyrus. We have in A. S. the noun Gyrd-el, a girdle, (a diminutive from the A. S. verb Gyrd-an, to gird.) And hence Tooke supposes the verb Gyrdel-an, whose pres. part. would be Gyrdeland, encircling, surrounding; and (for which we now employ ing) being the A. S. and Old English termination of the participles present: and he doubts not that gyrdeland, gyrdland, gyrland, has become our modern garland, (Div. of Purley, ii. 275.) Garland is commonly applied to—

A collection of flowers or boughs, (sc.) to gird, encircle or surround, the head; a wreath, a crown.

A collection or selection of the flowers of poetry; of little pieces of prose or poetry.

The garland Roberd tok, that whilom was the right,
The lond for to loke, in signe of kynge's myght.
R. Brunne, p. 331.

——— And toke of kene thornes
And by gan of a grene thorne a garlande to make.
And sette hit sore in hus hefd.—Piers Ploughman, p. 341.

She gatherith floures, partie white and red,
To make a sotel garland for hire hed.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v 1056.

And faire abone that chapelet
A rose garland had she set.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Yet in remembraunce of Daphne's transformation
All famous poets ensuynge after me
Shall weare a garlande of the laurell tre.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Philip therefore as though he had bene the reuenger of sacrilege, and not of the Thebanes, commanding all his souldiours to put garlands of laurel vpon their heades, and in this wyse as hauing God the chiefe captaine of his enterpryse he marched into the field.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 42.

For the light bearers, sea green, waved about the skirts with gold and silver; their hair loose, and flowing, garlanded with sea grasse, and that stuck with branches of coral.
B. Jonson. The First Masque of Blackness.

And her before was seated ouerthwart
Soft Silence, and submisse Obedience,
Both link'd together neuer to dispart,
Both gifts of God not gotten but from thence,
Both garlands of his Saints against their foes' offence.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. x. c. 10.

The coronets or garlandes used in auncient time, were twisted very small and thereupon they were called strophia, i. wreaths, from whence came also women's gorgets and stomachers to be named strophiola.
Holland. Plinie, b xxi. c. 2.

Undrest at evening, when she found
Their odours lost, their colours past;
She chang'd her look, and on the ground
Her garland and her eye she cast.—Prior. The Garland.

But Jove's high will is ever uncontrol'd,
The strong he withers, and confounds the bold:
Now crowns with fame the mighty man, and now
Strikes the fresh garland from the victor's brow.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Some pious friend, whose wild affections glow
Like ours in sad similitude of woe,
Shall drop one tender, sympathizing tear,
Prepare the garland, and adorn the bier,
Our lifeless relics in one tomb enshrine,
And teach thy genial dust to mix with mine
Cawthorn. Abelard to Eloisa.

In the reign of James I they [Ballads of a certain description] began to be collected into little miscellanies, under the name of Garlands, and at length to be written purposely for such collections.—Percy. Essay on the Ancient Minstrels.

GA'RLICK. A. S. Gearlinc, garlic, allium. Skinner thinks from the A. S. Gar, as applied to a lance or javelin, and A. S. Leac, a leek, q. d. porrum jaculiforme vel lanceiforme; from the leaves rising like lances or javelins.

Ich have pip, and pionys, and a pound of garlick.
Piers Ploughman, p. 105.

Wel loved he garlike, oalons, and lekes.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 636.

Our general was taught by a negro, to draw the poyson out of his wound by a clove of garlike, whereby he was cured.
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol iii. p. 467.

As touching garlicke, it is singular good and of great force for those that chaunge aire and come to strange waters.
Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 6.

Honey new press'd, the sacred flower of wheat,
And wholesome garlic, crown'd the savoury treat,
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

——— Lest the Gods, for sin,
Should, with a swelling dropsy, stuff thy skin:
Unless three garlic-heads the curse avert,
Eaten, each morn, devoutly, next thy heart.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 6.

In describing the taste of an unknown fruit, you would scarcely say that it had a sweet and pleasant flavour like tobacco, opium, or garlick, although you spoke to those who were in the constant use of these drugs, and had great pleasure in them.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, Introd.

GA'RMENT, v. } The noun is written in GA'RMENT, n. } Piers Plouhman, and by Gower and Wiclif, Garnement, (q. d. garnishment, Skinner.) Fr. Garniment, from Garnir, to prepare. See GARNISH.

Any thing prepared or provided, (sc.) for the clothing or vesture; and thus, consequentially, clothing, dress or vesture.

For he sente hem forth selverles, in somer garnement.
Piers Ploughman, p. 153.

In manye gay garnements, that weren gold beten.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Oon lyk to the Sone of Man clothid with a long garnement.
Wiclif. Apocalips, c. i.

One lyke vnto the Sonne of Mā, clothed with a lynnen garmente downe to the grounde.—Bible, 1551. Id.

Maintaine thy selfe after thy rent
Of robe and eke of garment,
For many sithe fair clothing
A man amendeth in much thing.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

And many a perled garnement
Embroidered was again the daie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

Methought it was no garnement
Unto the God convenient,
To clothen hym the sommer tide.—Id. Ib. b. v.

When Somer take in hand the Winter to assail,
With force of might, and vertue great his stormy blasts to quail,
And when he clothed faire the earth about with grene,
And every tree new garmented, that pleasure was to sene.
Surrey. Complaint of a Lover that defied Love, &c.

When I had sayd these wordes, my sholders brode
And laied neck with garments gan I spred;
And thereon cast a yellow lion's skin,
And thereupon my burden I receiue.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

And on her now a garment she did wear,
All lilly white withoutten spot or pride,
That seem'd like silke and silver woven neare:
But neither silke nor silver therein did appeare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

And the constant, prevailing, habitual temper or disposition of any man's spirit can no way be set forth more expressively and affectionately; than under the similitude of bodily garments, so investing the person as to be his proper and distinguishing attire.—Clarke, vol. vii. Ser. 1.

From these, after two or three generations, came Upsouranios and his brother Ousous. One of them invented the art of building cottages of reeds and rushes, the other the art of making garments of the skins of wild beasts.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. ii. s. 4.

GA'RNER. Fr. Grenier; It. Granaio; Sp. Granero; Lat. Granarium, a granary. See GRAIN.

A place where grain is deposited or stored. To garner,—to lay up, to deposit, as in a granary or storehouse, or treasury; to store or treasure up.

The kynges oste at geese in the Est mad ladere,
Of tounes & hamelesse, of granges and garner.
R. Brunne, p. 321.

Wel could he keep a garner and a binne.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 595.

She [Wisdom] fylleth the whole house with gyftes, and the garners wyth her treasure
Bible, 1551. Of Jesus Syrach, c. 1.

But there where I haue garnerd vp my heart,
Where either I must liue, or beare no life,
The fountaine from the which my current runnes
Or else dries vp: to be discarded thence,
Or keepe it as a cesterne for foule toades
To knot or gender in.—Shakes. Othello, Act iv sc. 2

Provide your diet: you have seen
All libraries, which are schools, camps and courts;
But ask your garners, if you have not been
In harvest too indulgent to your sports
Donne. Letter to Sir Henry Goodyere

The mayor and aldermen of the city granted them divers liberties; as, to lay up their corn in inns, and to sell it in their garners.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1551.

Scarce could the reapers' arms the sheaves contain,
And the full garners swell'd with golden grain.
Harte. Christ's Parable of the Sower.

GA'RNET. Garnet or granat stone, (Fr. Grenat;) Sp. Granate; It. Granata; Low Lat. Granatus. A precious stone, so called from its resemblance in colour and form to the grains or seeds of pomegranate, (grenade.) Menage.

Deamondes and koralle,
Perydotes and crystall,
And gode garnettes bytwene. Emare. Ritson, vol. ii.

Without the aid of yonder golden globe
Lost were the garnet's lustre, lost the lily,
The tulip and auricula's spotted pride.
Smart. The Goodness of the Supreme Being.

We shall soon find them; and in the mean time you shall make use of my garnets till your jewels be found.
Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer, Act iii.

GA'RNISH, v. GA'RNISH, n. GA'RNISHING, n. GA'RNISHMENT. GA'RNITURE. } Fr. Garnir; It. Guarnire; Sp. Guarnecer. Menage, Caseneuve, and Wachter,—from the Low Lat. Warnire or warnitus, and this from the Ger. Waeren or warnen, to fortify, to provide with arms, (of which the A. S. Warnian, gewarnian, ge-warian, to take heed, to beware, is the root.) Skinner, with more probability, from the A. S. Gearwe, paratus, gearwian, præparare, to prepare. (See GARE, GEAR.) As the—

"Fr. Garnir,—to provide, store, supply, furnish, accommodate; fill with; deck, adorn, trim, beautifie, set forth with," (Cotgrave.)

Next in order came x. chariots garnished and wrought with siluer and gold.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 24.

And therefore this auctour's answere garnished with these three gaye wordes of astate, nature, and condicion, is deuised but for a shifte

Bp. Gardner. Explication. Of Transubstantiacion, fol. 130.

At whiche departing the king gaue to the admyral of Fraūce a garnishe of gilt vessell, a payre of couered basons gilt.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 10.

For the ornamentes & garnishing of ceremonies in dede make outwardli a shewe or semblaūce of godlinesse: but because thei are only certain vain countrefaictes of thinges, thei kepe not awai ye assaulte of wicked spirites, but rather are an occasio of a ferther vngodlinesse.—Udal. Luke, c. 11.

And also considering the goodly garnishment of this realme by the great and wise number of noble lordes and valiant knightes, which were suche, as no Christian realme for the number of them could then shewe the lyke.

Grafton. Rich. II. an 21.

And ye, brave lords, whose goodly personage
And noble deeds, each other garnishing,
Make you ensample to the present Age
Of th' old heroes.

Spenser. To the Right Hon. the Lord Charles Howard.

The gorgeous citty (garnish'd like a bride)
Where Christ for spouse expected is to passe,
With walles of jasper compass'd on each side,
Hath streets all pav'd with gold more bright than glasse.

Sterling. Doomes-day. The Twelfth Houre.

Why, 'tis an office of discouery, loue,
And I should be obscur'd.
Lor. So you are sweet,
Euen in the louely garnish of a boy.

Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act iii. sc. 6.

For what is more ordinary with them [architects] than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work.—H. More. Antidote against Atheism, b. ii. c. 5.

The hearse was garnished with great escutcheons, bossed with great crowns; and all under feet with black, and a great pall of cloth of gold, and coat-armour, target, sword, and crest.—Strype. Life of Abp. Grindal, b. i. c. 3. an. 1559.

Before they came to the Pope's bed-chamber, they passed three chambers, all naked and unhanged, the roofs fallen down, and, as was guessed, third persons, riff raff, and others standing in the chambers for a garnishment.

Id. Memorials. Hen. VIII. an. 1527.

I confess, where real kindnesses are done, these circumstantial garnitures of love (as I may so call them) may be dispensed with; and it is better to have a rough friend than a fawning enemy.—South, vol. iii. Ser. 3.

The table was garnished round with hot bread-fruit, and plantains, and a quantity of cocoa-nuts brought for drink.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. i. c. 13.

Courted by all, by few the fair is won,
Those lose who seek her, and those gain who shun;
Naked she flies to merit in distress,
And leaves to Courts the garnish of her dress.

P. Whitehead. Honour. A Satire.

Where then lies the difference between the food of the nobleman and the porter, if both are at dinner on the same ox or calf, but in the seasoning, the dressing, the garnishing, and the setting forth.

Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. i. c. 1.

O, how canst thou renounce the boundless store,
Of charms that Nature to her votary yields!
The warbling woodland, the resounding shore,
The pomp of groves, and garniture of fields.

Beattie. The Minstrel, b. i.

GA'RRET. GARRETE'ERS. GA'RRETTED. } Probably of the same origin as Garrison, (qv.) Fr. Garite, which, among other usages (see Cotgrave, and the quotations from Berners,) is applied "To a little lodge for a sentinel, built on high." G. Douglas renders the alta specula, upon which Misenus, and the moles upon which Caicus stood, "the hie garrit, the hie garrot." In common English it is now applied to what Skinner calls, Suprema domûs contignatio, i.e.

The highest story of the house.

Then he began to call and to knocke, but noo man wolde answere hym, yet he sawe men go vp and downe on the garrettes of the gate and walles

Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 51.

They of the towne on the walles and garettes stode styll and beheilde them.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 278.

All the galleryes and chambers were full of lords, knightes and gentlemen, & the garrattes aboue full of Frenche lackays & varlettes, which wer pleteously serued.

Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 19.

Now man that trusts, with weary thighs,
Seeks garret where small poet lies.
He comes to Lane, finds garret shut,
Then, not with knuckle, but with foot
He rudely thrusts.

Davenant. The Long Vacation in England.

Mount Edgcombe was the scene of this hospitality: a house new built, and named by the aforesaid knight, [Sir Richard Edgecumbe] a square structure with a round turret at each end, garretted on the top

Fuller. Worthies. Cornwall.

Go then, and as to thee, when thou dulst go,
Munster dul towns, and Gesner authors show,
Mount now to Gado belgicus, appear
As deep a statesman as a garreteer

Donne. Upon Coryatt's Crudities.

Then solitary walk, or doze at home
In garret vile, and with a warming puff
Regale chill'd fingers.—J. Phillips. The Splendid Shilling.

When they become my grandfather and grandmother, they mount to the two pair of stairs, and then, unless dispatched to the mansion house in the countrey, or crouded into the house-keeper's room, they perish among the lumber of garrets, or flutter into rags before a broker's shop at the Seven Dials.—Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

Priests who panted for preferment preached despotism in their pulpits, and garreteers who hungered after places or pensions, racked their invention to propagate its spirit by their pamphlets.—V. Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 9.

GA'RRISON, v. GA'RRISON, n. } Fr. Garnison; It. Guarnigione; Sp. Guarnicion. (See GARNISH.) Written by Chaucer and others as the Fr. Garnison. Præsidium ab apparatu bellico, sic dictum; a fortress, guard or defence against the preparations of war, so called, (Skinner) See Garnesoun, in Jamieson. It is applied to—

The force, provided or furnished for the defence of a place prepared or fortified against attack.

And geue hem gret garyson, hem no arm to do.

R. Gloucester, p. 409.

Ant nome wyth hyre gret garysone, to bryng him out of tene.

Id. p 413.

I can not seen how thou maist go
Other waies to garisoun.

Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

And after that, we conseille that in thin hous thou set suffisant garnisoun, so that they moun as wel thy body as thy hous defende.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

For thus sayth Tullius, that ther is a maner garneson, that no man may vanquish ne discomfite, and that is a Lord to be beloved of his citizeins, and of his peple.—Id. Ib.

In this yere also, as affermyth the Frōshe Cronycle, this mysery & vnkyndnesse thus reygning in Englonde, the Lorde Talbot than being in Normādy, and in defendynge of ye kynge's garysons, was beset with Frenshe men at a place named Castyllyon.—Fabyan. Hen. VI. an. 1454.

And I perswade me God hath not permitted
His strength again to grow up with his hair,
Garrison'd round about him like a camp
Of faithful souldiery, were not his purpose
To use him further yet in some great service.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

The seventh, he nameth Hippos or Hippion, a city so called of a colony of horsemen, there garrisoned by Herod, on the east side of the Galilean sea.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 7. s. 4.

Thy virtuous thoughts when all the others rest,
Like careful scouts, pass up and down thy breast,
And still they round about that place do keep,
Whilst all the blessed garrison do sleep.

Drayton. Black Prince to the Countess of Salisbury.

Let them be directed to Burlington or Whitby, for Scarborough is lost; but yet with some caution, as to inquire before they put in, lest by any accident the enemy should have garrisoned those places before we come thither.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii p. 307.

Then thus a herald—"To the States of Greece
The Roman People, uncompell'd, restore
Their countries, cities, liberties, and laws;
Taxes remit, and garrisons withdraw."

Thomson. Liberty, pt. iii.

But the moment in which war begins, or rather the moment in which it appears likely to begin, the army must be augmented, the fleet must be fitted out, the garrisoned towns must be put into a posture of defence; that army, that fleet, those garrisoned towns, must be furnished with arms, ammunition, and provisions.

Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v c. 3.

A few garrisons at the necks of land, and a fleet to connect them, and to awe the coast, must at any time have been sufficient irrecoverably to subdue that part of Britain.

Burke. Abridgement of English History, b. i. c. 4.

GA'RRON. Ger. Gurr, gorr, equus. Gorre, equa; caballus; dicitur, says Kilian, plerumque equus annosus et strigosus. Jamieson calls it a small horse, a galloway.

And when he comes forth he will make their cowes and garrons to walke, if he doe no other harme to their persons.

Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

Letters that some of the kerne in Ireland having got together in arms, Colonel Nelson with a party fell into their quarters by break of day, killed about 300 of them, took 900 cattle and 2 garrons.—Whitelock. Memorials, an. 1663.

Every man would be forced to provide winter fodder for his team (whereas common garrons shift upon grass the year round.)—Sir W. Temple. Advancement of Trade in Ireland.

GARRU'LITY. GARRULOUS. } Fr. Garrulité; It. Garrulità; Lat. Garrulitas; from the Lat. Garrire, to prate.

A prating or prattling, babbling, talkativeness, loquaciousness.

For if a prattling fellow chance to hear some short and little tale, such is the nature of this disease called garrulity, that his hearing is but a kind of taking his winde new, to babble it forth again immediately, much more than it was, or like a whirlpool which what ever it taketh once, the same it sendeth it up again very often with the vantage.

Holland Plutarch, p. 158.

——Let me here,
As I deserve, pay on my punishment;
And expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shamefull garrulity.

Milton. Samson Agonistes.

But where they were grave and wise counsellors, to make them garrulous, as grasshoppers are stridulous; that application holdeth not in these old men, though some old men are so.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iii. Comment.

Age too, shines out; and, garrulous, recounts
The feats of youth.

Thomson Autumn.

Excessive garrulity is certainly incompatible with solid thinking and a mark of that volatile and superficial turn, which, dwelling upon the surfaces of things, never penetrates deeply enough to make any valuable discoveries.

V. Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 11.

Pardon, my lord, the feeble garrulity of age, which loves to diffuse itself in discourse of the departed great.

Burke. Letter to a Noble Lord.

Arachne shrunk beneath Tritonia's rage;
Tithonus chang'd and garrulous with age.

Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. v.

GA'RTER, v. GA'RTER, n. GA'RTERING, n. } Fr. Jartier; It. Giartiera; Sp. Jarretera. A garter (says Tooke) is a girder; from the A. S. Gyrdan, to gird, to surround, to enclose. To garter,—

To put on, bind on, a garter; and thus, gartered, is, consequentially, invested with the order of the garter.

In the ende thereof [the xix. yere] he there deuysed the order of the garter, and after stablyshid it as at this daye is contynued.—Fabyan. Edward III. an. 1344.

Where to should I disclose
The gartering of her hose.

Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

Hee being in loue, could not see to garter his hose; and you, beeing in loue cannot see to put on your hose.

Shakespeare. Two Gent. of Verona, Act ii. sc. 1.

With a linnen stock on one leg, and a kersey boot-hose on the other, gartered with a red and blew list.

Id. Taming of the Shrew, Act iii. sc. 2.

——What boots it thee
To shew the rusted buckle that did tie
The garter of thy greatest grandsire's knee!

Donne, b. iv. Sat. 3.

What boon can faithful merit share,
Where interest reigns, or pride, or show!
'Tis the rich banker, wins the fair,
The garter'd knight, or feather'd beau.
Somervile. To Phyllis.

Troops of right honourable porters come,
And garter'd small-coal merchants crowd the room.
Pitt. On the Masquerades.

He now and then presents a pair of garters of his own knitting to their mothers or sisters, and raises a great deal of mirth among them, by enquiring as often as he meets them how they wear.—Spectator, No. 108.

When Combe her garter'd knights beheld
On barbed steeds advance,
Where ladies crown'd the tented field,
And love inspir'd the lance.
Lovibond. On Rebuilding Combe-Neville.

The very man who in his bed would have trembled at the aspect of a doctor, shall go with intrepidity to attack a bastion, or deliberately noose himself in his garters.
Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 12.

A vulgar story prevails, but is not supported by any ancient authority, that at a Court-ball, Edward's mistress, commonly supposed to be the Countess of Salisbury, dropped her garter; and the King taking it up, observed some of the courtiers to smile, as if they thought that he had not obtained this favour merely by accident; upon which he called out, Hons soit qui mal y pense, Evil to him that evil thinks.
Hume. Hist. of Eng. c. 16. Edw. III. an. 1349.

GA'RUM. } See the example from Pliny.
GA'ROUS. } Lennep says, that the reason of the name is not very clear

And yet is there one kind more of an exquisit and daintie liquor in manner of a dripping, called garum, proceeding from the garbage of fishes, and such other offall as commonly the cooke useth to cast away, as it lieth soaking in salt: so as if a man would speake properly, it is no other but the humour that commeth from them as they doe lie and putrifie. In old times this sauce was made of that fish which the Greeks called garon.—Holland. Pliny, b. xxxi. c. 7.

Offensive odour, proceeding partly from its [the beaver] food, that being especially fish: whereof this humour may be a garous excretion and oldous separation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 4.

GAS. } A general name applied originally,
GA'SEOUS. } by Van Helmont, to elastic fluids.

That also such subterraneal steams will easily mingle with liquors, and imbue them with their own qualities, may be inferred from the experiment of mixing the gas, [as the Helmontians call it] or the scarce coagulable fumes of kindled and extinguished brimstone, with wine, which is thereby long preserved.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 557.

The chymist is interested in the study of chymistry; in the various experiments he is making, he waits with a pleasing eagerness for the result, and triumphs in his success, without having an individual attachment to acids, alkalis, metals, earths, and gases.
Cogan. On the Passions, vol. ii. Div. 3. c. 3. s. 1.

The substance employed, [in the principal of muscular motion] whether it be fluid, gaseous, elastic, electrical, or none of these, or nothing resembling these, is unknown to us.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 7.

GASCONA'DE. From Gascon, a native of Gascony; to whom the vice of idle boasting was attributed.

Indeed his great volubility and inimitable manner of speaking, as well as the great courage he showed on those occasions, did sometimes betray him into that figure of speech which is commonly distinguished by the name of gasconade.—Tatler, No. 115.

I tell you, without any gasconade, that I had rather be banished for my whole life, because I have helped to make the peace, than be raised to the highest honour for having contributed to obstruct it.
Bolingbroke. Letter to the Earl of Peterborough.

The gascoons and the female three
Convers'd in idioms which belong
To Venus's great mystery.—Cooper. Ver-Vert, c. 3.

GASH, v. } Probably from the A. S. Ge-
GASH, n. } kaccan, contracted into gaccan, and the ca softened into ch or sh; concidere, dissecare, secando comminuere, to cut, to cut in pieces. See to HACK.

To cut; to cut (sc.) deeply, widely.

View & beholde you my handes & my feete, thei have manifest priētes of the nailes; touche and handle ye my side, it hath the gashe of the speare.—Udal. Luke, c. 24.

Upon his hurt she looks so stedfastly
That her sight dazzling makes the wound seem three;
And then she reprehends her mangling eye,
That makes more gashes where no breach should be.
Shakespeare. Venus & Adonis.

And so was this king after his death by a base souldier, gasht and hackt into the legge, whom Duke William rewarded for so unsoldierlike a deed, cashiering him for euer out of his wages and warres.
Speed. Harold, b. viii. c. 7. s. 50.

——— And from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd
Sanguin, such as Celestial Spirits may bleed,
And all his armour staind, erewhile so bright.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

——— The dames of Argive strain,
Who wept their fathers and their husbands slain,
Attir'd as mourners, or a captive band,
In sad procession move along the strand,
All gasht with wounds.—Lewis. Thebais of Statius, b. xii

This, when returning from the foughten field,
Or Noric, or Iberian, seam'd with scars,
(Sad signatures of many a dreadful gash!)
The veteran, carousing, soon restores
Puissance to his arm, and strings his nerves.
J. Philips. Cerealia.

282. Should he spit on him through pride, the king shall order both his lips to be gashed.
Sir W. Jones. The Ordinances of Menu, c. 7.

Ought we, like madmen, to tear off the plasters, that the lenient hand of prudence had spread over the wounds and gashes, which in our delirium of ambition we had given to our own body.
Burke. Speech at Bristol, previous to the Election, 1780.

GA'SKINS. See GALLIGASKINS.

——— I am resolu'd on two points.
Ma. That if one breake, the other will hold: or, if both breake, your gaskins fall.
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act i. sc. 5.

GASP, v. }
GASP, n. } Per epenthesin of the letter s,
GA'SPING, n. } from the verb to gape, (qv.) Skinner.

To open; to open (subaud.) with a struggle for, a convulsive emission of, breath: to pant; to pant after, and thus, (met.) to seek or desire eagerly.

And thries eke she gan downe loute,
And in the floode she weat her heare,
And thries on the water there
She gaspeth.
Gower. Con. A. b. v.

For thee I longde to liue, for thee nowe welcome death
And welcome be that happie pang, that stops my gasping breath.—Gascoigne. Flowres. In Trust is Treason.

Or beene thine eyes attemp'red to the yeere,
Quenching the gasping furrowes thirst with raine?
Like Aprill showre, so streames the trikling teares
Adowne thy cheeke, to quench thy thirsty paine.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. Aprill.

Those rugged names to our like mouthes grow sleek,
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp.
Milton, son. 11.

——— Egelred: shortly gaue
A quiet gaspe or twaine,
And being dead, his noble sonne
Succeeded him in raigne.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 22.

No snaky fiends with more remorseless spight
Rend one another's breasts, than man doth man's:
Wounds, shrieks and gaspings are his proud delight,
And he by hellishness his prowes scans.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 11. s. 27.

Now, for a sinner to neglect this, to slight and trample upon the conditions of pardon, what is it else but as if a man, that lay gasping under a mortal wound, should both throw away the balsam, and defy the physician.
South, vol. ix. Ser. 7.

Certainly there is no deceit more dangerous, nor I fear more common in the world, than for men to think that God is so easie to pardon sin, that though they spend their lives in satisfying their lusts; they shall make amends for all by a dying sorrow and a gasping repentance.
Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 10.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master; who seeing how dearly they loved one another, and gasped after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom.—Spectator, No. 198.

Let all be hush'd, each softest motion cease,
Be every loud tumultuous thought at peace,
And every ruder gasp of breath
Be calm, as in the arms of death.
Congreve. On Mrs. A. Hunt, Singing.

Hail, sacred names!—Oh guard the Muse's page.
Save your lov'd mistress from a ruffian's rage;
See how she gasps and struggles hard for life,
Her wounds all bleeding from the butcher's knife.
Lloyd. Epistle to C. Churchill.

GAST, v. or GHAST. }
GA'STFUL. }
GA'STLY. }
GA'STLINESS. }
GA'STNESS. } (Also written Ghast.) Skinner thinks that gastly is q. d. ghostly or ghostlike. "Aghast or agast may be the past part. agazed. (See the quotation from Shakespeare in v. Agast.) Agazed may mean, made to gaze; a verb built on the verb to gaze. Gasted, i.e. made aghast; which is again a verb built on the part. aghast. Gastered may be supposed an ignorantly coined or fantastical cant word, or corruptly used for gasted." See Tooke, (i. 460.) who considers that it may be an objection to this derivation, that the word agast always denotes a considerable degree of terror; which to gaze does not; for we may gaze with delight, with wonder or admiration; he, therefore, inclines to the Goth. Agids, territus, the past part. of agyan, timere; which agids might become agidst or agisd, agist, agast. But see AGAST.

To make aghast,—to terrify, to frighten. Gastful,—frightful. Gastly,—like one agazed, terrified; hideous with affright, terrific.

A tirant that was king of Cicile, that had assaid the peril of his estate, shewed by similitude the dredes of realmes by gastness of a sword, that hong ouer the heed of his familiar.
Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

——— And he [Phebus] the same throwe
With gastlie voyce, that all it herde,
The Romaines in this wise answerde.
Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

Then this beheste to me
O Joue betake, that I may be douoyde of all those goddes
That brews such banefull broyles, or brings of feare suche gastfull fluddes.
Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat. 1

A woulfe by hap espide
this sielie lamb in place,
And thought hir fittest for his pray:
not gastly was his face.
Turbervile. Upon the Death of Eliz. Arhundle.

But when he saw my best alarum'd spirits
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noyse I made,
Full sodainly he fled.—Shakespeare Lear, Act ii. sc. 1

These men vppon their submission were so pined away for want of foode, and so ghasted with feare within seuen or eight weekes, by reason they were so roundly followed without any interime of rest, that they looked rather like to ghosts than men.—Stow. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1580.

Either the sight of the lady has gaster'd him, or else he's drunk.—Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at several Weapons, Act ii. sc. 1.

——— Here will I dwell apart
In gastfull grove therefore, till my last sleep
Doo close my eyes.—Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. Aug.

I tell no lie, so gastly grew my name,
That it alone discomfited an host.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 315.

The messenger of death, the gastly owle,
With drery shriekes did also her bewray.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

Thence I behold the miserie of men,
Which want the bliss that wisdom would them breed,
And like brute beasts doo lie in loathsome den
Of ghostly darkness, and of gastlie dread.
Id. The Teares of the Muses.

——— Let gastliness
And drearie horrour dim the chearful light,
To make the image of true heaviness.—Id. Daphnaida.

What jealous, fearful Pallor doth surprise
Thy cheeks, what deadly ghastlyness thine eyes!
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 13. s. 24.

I wot not what strange things I haue design'd,
But all my gestures do presage no good:
My looks are gastly-like, thoughts are my food,
A silent pausing showes my troubled mind.
Sterling, son. 64.

Iago. Look you pale, mistris!
Do you perceiue the gastnesse of her eye.
Shakespeare. Othello, Act v. sc. 1.

——— But in the dead of night,
He dreamt his friend appear'd before his sight,
Who, with a ghastly look and doleful cry,
Said, help me, brother, or this night I die:
Arise, and help, before all help be vain,
Or in an ox's stall I shall be slain.
Dryden. The Cock and the Fox.

Before he commences his operations, in order to scare the publick imagination, he raises by art magick a thick mist before our eyes, through which glare the most ghastly and horrible phantoms.—Burke. On a late State of the Nation

GA'STRICK. From the Gr. Γαστηρ, the belly.

The gastric juice, or the liquor which digests the food in the stomachs of animals, is of this class. Of all menstrua, it is the most universal

Paley. Natural Theology, c. 7.

GATE. GA'TED. GATE-HOUSE. } Goth. Gagg; A. S. Gata, gæt; from Goth. Gaggan; A. S. Gangan, gan, ire, to go: the way gaed, gane or gone; that through which or along which, itur, it is gaed, gade, gate.

The way gone; a way, a road, path or passage. To take the gate, take the way or road; go away, depart. It is also applied to—

A large door, as the gate of the city; to a door into fields.

Gatehouse was the name of a prison over the gate at the north entrance of Dean's-yard, Westminster.

And made kynges fourme of bras al holu wythinne,
Vpe an hors ryde of bras, & that body dude therynne
And vpe the west gate of Londone sette hit wel hye.
R. Gloucester, p. 251.

Is wel he nom bi Oxenford, ac the borgeis anon
The zates made azen him of the toune ech on.—Id. p. 540.

Was ther non entre, that to the castelle gan ligge,
Bot a streite kauce, at the end a drauh brigge,
With grete duble cheynes drauhen ouer the gate,
& fyfti armed sueynes porters at that gate.
R. Brunne, p. 183.

The flom sone he left, ageyn toke his gate,
The duke fro tham he reft, welnere he com to late.
Id. p. 191.

And the peuple was plener come, the porter unpynnede the gate.—Piers Ploughman, p. 203.

Ther is no law as ich leyve, wol let hym the gate.
Ther God is gateward hymself. Id. p 219

For which thing Jesu, that he schulde halewe the peple bi his blood, suffride without the gate.—Wiclif. Ebreus, c. 13.

Therefore Jesus to sanctify the people with his own bloude, suffered wythout the gate.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

With that word reason went her gate.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

——— And forthe they gone
The foure gates for to assaile. Id. Ib.

He reineth, and the water gates
Undoth. Gower. Con. A. b iii

And also that he be right ware,
In what maner he ledeth his chare,
That he mistake not his gate. Id. Ib.

Of elephants' tethe were the palace gates
Enlosenged with many goodly plates.
Skelton. Answereth to Lidgate.

He com to the gateward.
The Geste of King Horn. Ritson, vol. ii.

The leaporous distilment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with bloud of man,
That swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and allies of the body.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act i. sc. 5.

The mountains within this tribe are few, and that of Sampson the chiefest; unto which he carried the gate-post of Gaza.—Raleigh. History of the World, b. ii. c. 10. s. 2.

But that that mooued him most, was, that being a king that loued wealth and treasure, hee could not endure to have trade sicke, nor any obstruction to continue in the gate-caine which disperseth that blood.—Bacon. Hen. VII. p. 160.

The gates of hell are open night and day;
Smooth the descent, and easy is the way;
But to return, and view the chearful skies;
In this the task, and mighty labour lies.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

But his [the king's] messenger being carried to the Earl of Essex, was by him used very roughly, and by the houses committed to the gate-house, not without the motion of some men, that he might be executed as a spy.
Clarendon. Civil Wars, vol. ii. p. 76.

Meantime a sudden jarring sound was heard,
When from a narrow gate a dame appear'd,
Ungirt, with feet unshod, with hair display'd,
Who by her name addressed the warrior-maid.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. iii.

——— What childish toys,
Thy watery columns squirted to the clouds!
Thy bason'd rivers, and imprison'd seas!
Thy mountains moulded into forms of men,
Thy hundred-gated capitals.—Young. Complaint, Night 9.

GA'THER, v. GA'THER, n. GA'THERABLE. GA'THERER. GA'THERING, n. } A. S. Gaderian, colligere, congregare; Dut. Gaderen. To bring or draw into one place; to collect, to assemble, to congregate; also, to select, or pick out; to contract, to accumulate; to get, to acquire.

Tho wende the quene forth to Cornewail a non,
And gonge staleworthe men gederede mony on.
R. Gloucester, p. 26.

Now rises Eilrid, & gadres oste stark
& chaces Kyng Knoute in tille Denmark.
R. Brunne, p. 45.

And yf glotenye greve poverte. he gadereth the lesse.
Piers Ploughman, p. 266.

And he gaderide togydre alle the princis of prestis and scribis of the puple; and enquirede of hem where Christ shoulde be borun.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 2.

And he gathered all the chief priests and scribes of the people, & asked thē where Christ shulde be born.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

But of the gederyngis of monei that ben maad into seyntis as I ordeynyde in the chirchis of Galathie, so also do ghe oo dai of the woke, ech of ghou kepe at hymsilf kepynge that that plesith to him, that whanne I come the gaderingis be not maad.—Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 16.

Of the gatherynge for the sainctes, as I haue ordeyned in the congregacions of Galacia, euen so do ye. Upon some Sondaye let euerye one of you put a syde at home, and laye up whatsoeuer he thynketh mete, that there be no gatherynges when I come.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For trusteth wel, that erles, dukes, kinges
Were gathered in this noble compagnie,
For love, and for encrese of chevalrie.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2185.

[He] gadred him a meinie of his sort.
Id. The Cokes Tale, v. 4379.

Hate is a wrath, not shewende
But of long tyme gatherende. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Thus sayth Bucer who understandeth Saincte Augustine, as I haue before alleaged him, and gathereth thereof a conclusion that no man can by the father's sayinges proue Christe to be absente in the holye souppere.
Bp. Gardner. Explication, fol. 85.

Mathew whiche was a toll gaderer, anon as he was called of God forsoke that life and folowed Christ.
Fisher. On the Seven Psalmes, Ps. 32.

Euery man did eate hys fill, and there was nothyng lackyng, insomuche that seuen basketfes wer fylled of the gatheringis of scrappes which remayned.—Udal. Matt c. 25.

Ween you it was for nothing, that wise men forbed you the rule & gouernance of countries; and that St. Paule biddeth, you shall not speak in congregations and gathering of people!—Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. ii. c. 8.

And, throwing downe his load out of his hand,
To weet, great store of forrest fruite which hee
Had for his food late gathered from the tree,
Himself unto his weapon he betooke.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

——— Not that faire field
Of Enna, where Proserpin gathering flowrs,
Her self a fairer floure, by gloomie Dis
Was gathered, which cost Ceres all that pain
To seek her through the world.—Milton. Par. Lost, b. iv.

He is the author of all that we think or do by virtue of that light which himselfe hath given. And therefore the lawes which the very heathens did gather to direct their actions by, so far forth as they proceeded from the light of nature, God himselfe doth acknowledge to haue proceeded euen from himselfe, and that he was the writer of them in the tables of their hearts.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. iii. § 9.

Eumenes committed the several cities of his government, to his most trusty friends, and appointed them garrisons, with judges, and gatherers of his tributes, such as pleased him best, without any interposing of Perdiccas.
Usher. Annals, an. 3681.

As, in a drought, the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain,
And first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And, with wet wings, joys all the feather'd train.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

As to the difficulty of gathering up all the particles of human bodies, however dispersed through air, earth, or sea, and other difficulties with regard to the fluctuation of parts, and sameness of each body; they can only be difficulties with those, who have not properly considered the omnipotence of that God, who originally created man out of dust, and can no doubt as easily restore him.
Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 22.

How much more properly do those men act, who foreseeing the mischief, which the indulgence of their passions and appetites brings on them, live by the rules of reason and religion, grow old by degrees, and are gathered, like ripe sheaves, into the garner.—Id. vol. ii Ser. 50.

Secondly, persons by, 1. going about as patent gatherers, or gatherers of alms under pretence of loss by fire, or other casualty.—Fielding. On the Increase of Robbers, &c.

The word which here, and in other parts of this same book, is very properly rendered in our English Bibles by "the Preacher," differs not in a single letter from that plural word which in the promises to Jacob the Seventy have rendered by—the gatherings.—Horsley, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

GAT-TOOTHED. Whether we read gat-tothed with the generality of the MSS., or cat-tothed with one MS., or gap-tothed with Urry, Mr. Tyrwhitt confesses himself equally unable to explain what is meant by this circumstance of description. Gat-toothed, says Mr. Todd, (in his Glossary to the Illustrations of Gower and Chaucer) is goat-toothed. Goat (as in the instance from Spenser) is written by our old writers gat or gate. Skinner had suggested this etymology, but of what Chaucer meant by the word, he professes his ignorance. Mr. Todd thinks the meaning clear and pointed, when we consider the (goatish) disposition of the person to whom the word is applied. Dryden follows Urry.

Gat-toothed was she, sothely for to say.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 470.

But yet I had alway a coltes toth.
Gat-toothed I was, and that became me wele.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6185.

And when my gates shall han their bellies laide,
Cuddy shall haue a kidde to store his farme.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. October.

Even the ribaldry of the low characters is different, the Reeve, the Miller, and the Cook, are several men, and distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing Lady Prioress, and the broad spenking gap-toothed Wife of Bathe.
Dryden. Fables, Pref

GAUD. GA'UDED. GA'UDERY. GA'UDY. GA'UDISH. GA'UDILY. GA'UDINESS. } The old etymologists have nothing worth notice. Dr. Jamieson, following the Glossarist, explains the word in the passage quoted below from G. Douglas; a trick. Tooke produces the same passage in support of his etymology and explanation. Gew-gaw, he says, is in A. S. Ge-gaf; the past part. of the verb gegifan; and means, any such trifling thing as is given away, or presented to any one. Gaud (he adds) has the same meaning, and is the same word, with the omission of the prefix ge, gi, or gew, and is the past part. of gif-an; gaved, gav'd, gavd, gaude. May not the Dut. Gad-en, gaeyen, to please, to gratify, formed perhaps from an A. S. verb, ge-eadean, comp. of ge, and ead-ian, ead-igan, which latter Lye interprets, beatificare, be the true etymology? See the 8vo. ed. of Tooke, and see also GAY. Gaude is, consequentially—

A pleasing trifle, a toy, a bawble, a piece of finery; any trumpery: and G. Douglas might intend, "By sic ane gaude," "by such trumpery, i. e. such trumpery pretences as the command of a Deity." There is nothing corresponding in Virgil.

Quhat God amovit him with sic ane gaude
In his dedis to use sic slicht and fraude.
G. Douglas, b. x. p. 815.

Steevens has remarked on the passage cited below from Antony & Cleopatra, that gaudy "is still an epithet bestowed on feast-days in the colleges of either University."

Gaudy (the adjective) is,—fine, showy; ostentatiously, gorgeously fine, showy or gay.

By this gaude have I wonnen yere by yere
An hundred mark, sin I was Pardoner.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,323.

And also thinke wel that this is no gaud.—Id. Troil. b. ii.

Of small corall aboute hire arm she bare
A pair of bedes, gauded all with grene.—Id. Prol. v. 159.

In gaudy grene hire statue clothed was
With bow in hond, and arwes in a cas.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2081

And euery gaude, that glads the minde of man.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

A wonton gyglot maye cal mē to sorowful repentaunce, whilst she is yet in her gaudes, and the maystree of the stewes maye persuade mē to chastyte.—Bale. Apol. fol. 129.

Superstieion, hipocrisy, and vaine glorye, were afore that time such vices as men wer glad to hide, but now in their gaudishe ceremonies they were taken for God's deuine seruice.—Bale. Votaries, pt. i.

And in twenty places mo than there
Where they make reueli and gaudy chere,
With fyll the pot fyll, and go fyll me the can,
Here is my penny, and I am a gentylman.
The Heyway to the Spital House.

—— Our veyl'd dames
Commit the warre of white and damaske
In there nicely gauded cheekes to th' wanton spoyle
Of Phœbus burning kisses.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act ii. sc 1.

We do employ the money, which they were forced to gather for the maintenance of the wars against the barbarous people, in guilding, building, and setting forth our city, like a glorious woman, all to be gauded with gold and precious stones.—North. Plutarch, p. 137.

Got with a toy, gon with a toy;
Gifts, flattrie, gawdes, or wine,
Will make her checke and lie to game
Lesse fayre, perhaps, than thine.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c 36

The women are much affected with gaudry, there being nothing more frequent than to see an ancient ladie wear colours.—Evelyn. A Character of England.

—— What a mere child's fancie
That having two fair gawds of equal sweetness,
Cannot distinguish, but must cry for both.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Two Noble Kinsmen, Act i. sc. 2.

They naked went; or clad in ruder hide,
Or home-spun russet, void of forraine pride.
But thou canst maske in garish gaudersie
To suite a foole's far-fetched liverie.—Bp. Hall, b. iii. Sat 1.

Is not this the merrie month of May,
When loue lads masken in fresh aray?
How falls it then, we no merrier beene,
Ylike as others, girt in gawdie greene,
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

And tho' thou seemst like to the bragging bryer,
And spreadst thee like the morn-lov'd marygold,
Yet shall thy sap be shortly dry and seer,
Thy gawdy blossoms blemished with cold.
Drayton. Pastorals, Ecl 2.

—— Come,
Let's have one other gaudy night: call to me
All my sad captains, fill our bowles once more
Let's mock the midnight bell.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act iii. sc. 11.

Indeed, what Tully said of the Roman lady, "That she dauneed better than became a modest woman," was true of God's service as by him adorned, the gaudiness prejudicing the gravity thereof.—Fuller. Worthies. Yorkshire.

Some bound for Guinny, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gawds the simple natives wear:
Some for the pride of Turkish Courts design'd,
For folded turbans finest holland bear.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

Yet cheap druggets to a mode are grown,
And a plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaudery known
Id. Prologue at Opening of the New House, 1674

Gaudery is a pitiful and a mean thing, not extending farther than the surface of the body.—South, vol. v. Ser. 11.

Tulips, whilst they are fresh, do indeed by the lustre and vividness of their colours more delight the eye than roses: but then they do not alone quickly fade, but as soon as they have lost that freshness and gaudiness, that solely endeared them, they degenerate into things not only undesirable, but distasteful.—Boyle. Occasional Reflections, s. 4. Ref. 6.

It is not the richness of the price, but the gaudiness of the colour, which exposes to censure.—South, vol. iv. Ser. 1.

To mask his ignorance, (as Indians use
With gaudy-colour'd plumes
Their homely nether parts t' adorn,) &c.
Butler. Upon Modern Critics.

Every fit of sickness dispels this gaudy vapour [that we are placed above the common disasters of our species,] and lays bare the helpless condition of humanity, when we are least able to endure the sight.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. Ser. 30.

Nor, in one hand, fit emblem of thy trade,
A rod; in t'other gaudily array'd
A hornbook, gilt and letter'd.—Churchill. Gotham, b. iii.

The modern invention of multiplying the works of the artists by devices which require no ingenuity, has prostituted the ornaments of a temple to the gaudiness of a suburban villa, and the decoration of a palace to the embellishment of a tradesman's door-post.—V. Knox. Ess. No. 67.

GA'VELKIND. An ancient custom (says Spelman) of the Anglo-Saxons, brought from Germany, by which all the sons, or, if no sons, all the daughters, take the inheritance of their father; and, if no children, all the brothers, if no brothers, all the sisters. It is so called, (he adds) quasi, debitum, seu tributum (A. S. Gafel, or gafol;) toboli, pueris, generi; (A. S. Cyn, or kind:) or, as (Lambard says) gif eal cyn, i. e. omnibus cognatione proximis datum: given to all the next of kin. Somner, from the same gaf-ol, and kind, genus, q.d. a tributary kind of land or farm, praedium vectigale. And of this Skinner approves.

Gavelkind is a custom anciently observed in Kent, whereby the land of the father is equally divided among his brethren, if he have no issue of his own. This was so common a custom, as appears by the Statute in the 18th year of Henry VI. ch. i., that there were not above thirty or forty persons in Kent that held by any other tenure; but, Anno 31, Henry VIII. ch. iii. many gentlemen upon petition got an alteration thereof.—Spelman On Tythes, p. 164.

The custom of gavelkind in Kent, and some other parts of the kingdom (though perhaps it was also general till the Norman conquest) ordains, among other things, that not the eldest son only of the father shall succeed to his inheritance, but all the sons alike; and that, though the ancestor be attainted and hanged, yet the heir shall succeed to his estate, without any escheat to the lord.
Blackstone Commentaries, Introd. s 3.

GAUGE, v. } Of uncertain origin. See in GAUGE, n. } Menage, the opinions of Rigault,
GA'UGER. } Le Duchat, and Caseneuve.

Fr. Jauge, gauge; the instrument (says Cotgrave) wherewith a cask is measured. Jauger, to measure a piece of cask. Jaugeur, or gauger, or, as Rastall writes, gaugeor. Low Lat. Gagga.

To measure a cask or other vessel; to ascertain the quantity it may contain; (met.) to measure.

And he was before the castell of Pendes, where as the lady of Dowaire was, and as the duke aduysed the castel, he gauged y^e depnesse of the dyche with a speare.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 269.

Canvs, wyth some of iudgement more discrete,
Wold it to drown, or vnderset with flame
The suspect present of the Grekes deceit,
Or bore and gage the hollow caues vncouth.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Bas. Well, we shall see your bearing
Gra. Nay but I barre to night, you shall not gage me
By what we doe to night.
Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice, Act ii. sc. 2.

They then sate upon the bill in a committee of the whole house, where was added a good clause, that the gager shall always leave with the brewer a note of his gage, so that he may not be further imposed on.
Marvel. Works, vol. i. p. 315

One judges as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night:
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage.
Young. Love of Fame, Sat. 3.

He [Howard] has visited all Europe, to take the gauge and dimensions of misery, depression, and contempt.
Burke. Speech at Bristol previous to the Election, 1780.

GAUNT. Skinner;—I believe, q.d. Gewant, from A.S. Gewanian, wanian; and Tooke, gaunt is gewaned, gewand, gewant, g'want, gaunt; the past part. of ge-wanian, to wane, to decrease, to fall away.—(Div. of Purley, ii. 68.)

Waned, fallen away, meagre.

From henceforth they (the salmon) are gaunt and slender, and in appearance so leane that they appeare nought else but skin and bone, and therefore worthill said to be growne out of vse and season.
Holinshed. Description of Scotland, c. 8.

—— This man,
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should hee but frowne; and let
His owne gaunt eagle flie at him, to tire.
B. Jonson. Catiline, Act iii. sc. 1.

More haughty than the rest, the wolfish race
Appear with belly gaunt, and famish'd face;
Never was so deform'd a beast of grace.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther.

Among the gaunt, haggard forms of famine and nakedness, amidst the yells of murder, the tears of affliction, and the cries of despair, the song, the dance, the mimick scene, the buffoon laughter, went on as regularly as in the gay hours of festive peace.—Burke. On a Regicide Peace, Let. 1.

GA'UNTLET. Fr. Gantelet, which Cotgrave calls "an arming glove." The Fr. Gant; It. Guanto; Sp. Guante; Dut. Ger. and Sw. Wante, Skinner thinks from the A. S. Wind-an, to wind, to enfold, to wrap up; (which, with the usual Anglo-Saxon prefix ge-, would be ge-windan;) because in the cold northern regions they were accustomed to enfold or wrap up the hands in the skins of animals.

A glove or covering for the protection of the hand; and (from the custom of throwing one of these by way of challenge) any thing thrown or proffered in challenge.

At the seconde course came into the hall Sir Robert De mocke the kynge his champion, makynge a proclamacion, that whosoever would saie that Kynge Richard was not lawfully kynge, he woulde fighte with hym at the vttermaunce, and threwe doune his gauntlet, and then al the hal cried Kynge Richard.—Hall. Richard III. an. 2

Some beat them coats of brasse, or sturdy breastplate hard they driue,
And some their gauntlets glide, or boots with siluer nesh contriue. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vii

But threw his gauntlet, as a sacred pledge,
His cause in combat the next day to try:
So ben they parted both, with harts on edge
To be aveng'd each on his enimy.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

This prince when the day was lost at Tewkesburie, sought to escape thence by flight, but being taken, was brought into the presence of King Edward, whose resolute answers enraged the conquerour so much, as he dashed him (an vnprincely part) on the mouth with his gauntlet, and Richard the Crookbacke ranne him into the hart with his dagger.
Speed. Henrie VI. b. xi. c. 16. an. 1471.

Contest, ye brave, the honours of the day;
That pleas'd th' admiring stranger may proclaim
In distant regions the Phæacian fame;
None wield the gauntlet with so dire a sway.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. viii

Scarce from his fence his head appear'd in view,
When, wing'd with speed, the vengeful arrow flew
Swift through his better hand it held its course,
Nor could the steely gauntlet stop the force
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. ii

GAUZE. Fr. Gaze. Du Cange, in v. Gazzatum, says, Linum vel sericum subtilissimum, commonly gazze; perhaps because first introduced from Gaza, a city of Palestine.

Brocades, and damasks, and tabbies, and gauzes,
Are by Robert Ballentine lately brought over,
With forty things more.—Swift. An Excellent New Song

In another case, we see a white, smooth, soft worm, turned into a black, hard, crustaceous beetle with gauze wings.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

GA'WKY. Gauk, Skinner says, from the A. S. Gaec, geac, gec, a cuckoo, all from the sound. "*Auk*ward; generally used to signify a tall, *auk*ward person," (Grose.) See Jamieson, in vv. Gowk, a fool, and Gowk, the cuckoo.

While the great gawky admiration,
Parent of stupid imitation,
Intrinsic, proper worth neglects,
And copies errours and defects.—Lloyd. Familiar Epistle.

GAY. } Fr. Gay; It. Gaio. Minshew
GA'YETY. } says, perhaps from Gaudeo; Skin-
GA'YLY. } ner, from Dut. Gaden, gayen, placere, convenire, and this, perhaps,
GA'YNESS. } from Gaudere, to rejoice. Menage
GA'YSOME. } writes largely, but to little purpose. L'Estrange uses Gays, noun, exactly as our elder writers use gauds, or gew-gaws (qv.); and it is not at all improbable that it may have the same origin; gauc, gay. (See GAUD.) And gay is—

Gaudy, fine, showy; ostentatiously fine or showy; (met.) lively, cheerful, merry, jovial.

At none the tother day thei sauh fer in the se
A grete buase and gay, fulle high of saile was he.
Brunne, p. 169.

In manye gay garnemens that weren goid beten.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Bote in gayenesse and in glotenye, for glotten here goodes.
And breaketh nat here bred to the poure, as the book hoteth. Id. Vision, p. 186.

And all above ther lay a gay sautrie,
On which he made on nightes mesodie,
So swetely, that all the chambre rong.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3213.

He walketh all the night and all the day,
He kembeth his lockes brode, and made him gay.
Id. Ib. v. 3374.

Yet coude I neuer be so gaie.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

And when I rise, my corpse for to arraye,
I take the glasse, sometimes (but not for pride)
For God he knows my minde is not so gaye,
But for I would in comelynesse abyde.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

This may seeme to some, a gay saying, where as in deed it is both foolish and wicked.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 15.

In dede this would haue been well brought in there, and many of my bretheren haue, as he saieth, brought in, & myselfe also some where elles in places mo thē one, whych I nowe boast of because ye shall see that Tindall hath not yet so gayly aunswered it as to make me ashamed to lay yt forth againe.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 498.

Yet is that glasse so gay, that it can blind
The wisest sight, to thinke gold that is brass.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 1.

For when some of my people asked the name of that country, [Virginia] one of the savages answered, "Wingandacon," which is as much to say, as, You wear good cloaths or gay cloaths.—Raleigh. Hist. of the World, b. i. c. 8. s 5.

The soule which doth with God unite,
Those gayities how doth she slight
Which o'er opinion sway?—Habington. Castara, pt. iii.

Let not this fear weaken our hands; and if they allay our gaieties and our confidences it is no harm.
Bp. Taylor. Holy Dying, c. 3. s. 15.

Brother of Fear! more gayly clad,
The merrier fool o' th' two, yet quite as mad,
Sire of Repentance! shield of fond Desire.
Crashaw. Steps to the Temple. On Hope.

Let me speake proudly: Tell the constable,
We are but warriors for the working day.
Our gayness and our gilt are all besmyrcht
With raynie marching in the painefull field.
Shakespeare. Henry V. Act iv. sc. 3.

Oh! ye English ladies, learn rather to wear Roman hearts, than Spanish knacks; rather to help your countrey, than hinder your husbands: to make your Queen rich for your defence, than your husbands poor for your gearish gayness.
Aylmer, in Strype's Life of Aylmer, c. 13.

And fier'd with heat of gaysome youth did venter,
With warlike troopes the Norman coast to enter.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 633.

Small was his house, and like a little cage,
For his owne turne, yet inly neat and cleane,
Deckt with greene boughes, and flowers gay-beseene.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

Profane men stick not, in the gaiety of their hearts, to say, that a strict piety is good for nothing, but to make the owners of it troublesome to themselves, and useless to the rest of the world.—Atterbury, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

The world is new to us—our spirits are high, our passions are strong: the gaieties of life get hold of us—and it is happy, if we can enjoy them with moderation and innocence.
Gilpin, vol. i. Ser. 8.

When you are at work, you are intent on your business, and there is less danger; but in the gaiety of diversion, the mind is open, and too ready to receive impressions from the profane oath, or indecent jest.—Id. vol. iii. Ser. 10.

GAZE, v.
GAZE, n.
GA'ZER, n.
GA'ZEFUL.
GA'ZING, n.
GA'ZEMENT.
GAZE-HOUND.

Skinner;—Contentis oculis aspicere, to look with stretched eyes; from the A. S. Ge-sean, to see, to look.

To see, to look, to view; (subaud.) with attention, eagerness, admiration, or other strong feeling.

Gaze-hound,—see the quotations from Holinshed and Pennant.

Thus saiden sade folk in that cities,
When that the peple gased up and doun:
For they were glad, right for the noveltee,
To have a newe lady of hir toun.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8879.

Nere him, to gaze, the Troyan youth gan flock
And straue who most might at the captiue scorne.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

For weryed with my bookishe gaze,
I noynte with supple oyle
My loytrous limmes, and when Sir Phebe
With brande beginnes to broyle,
I washe my corps in cooly shade.
Drant. Horace, b. i. Sat 7

But whan ye people came to ye sycamore tree, Zacheus peraduēture was a matter of laughter, & good sport to a great maignie, forasmuche as being a welthie riche man, & in the office of customer, he stood aloft in a tree to be a gazer vpon one man & no mo.—Udal. Luke, c. 19.

These two dyd with amiable words asswage the disciples sorow, that thei had conceiued by the departure of their lord, and called thē backe again from their gasing vp, which profited thē nothyng, vnto their vocacion, saying: Ye men of Galile, why stand ye here loking vp towardes heauen.
Id. The Acies of the Apostles, c. 1.

For ye which cause thei be more fierce, more bold & hardy then the other Irishmē, and thei be very desyrous of newe thinges, & straunge sightes, and gasynges.
Hall. Henry VII. an. 11.

What commen place is there, wherein we haue not been openly mocked, so that we were not onely a gazyng-stocke to the worlde, whiche defieth Christe, nor onely to men that are worldly wise, but also to the Deuels themselfes, whiche are with our troubles delighted.—Udal. Corinthians, c. 4.

For in those lofty lookes is close implide
Scorn of base things, and sdeigne of foul dishonor:
Threat'ning rash eyes which gaze on her so wide,
That loosely they ne dare to looke vpon her.
Spenser, son. 5.

Rodop. O, had I eyes like Dorida's,
I would enchant the day,
And make the sun to stand at gaze,
Till he forgot his way.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 1.

Alber. But in the breath
Of a wrong'd father I forbid the banes.
Cesar. What, do you stand at gaze!
Beaum. & Fletch. Fair Maid of the Inn, Act v. sc. 1.

Then look, who list thy gazefull eyes to feed
With sight of that is faire, looke on the frame
Of this wide Vniuerse, and thereon reed
The endlesse kinds of creatures, which by name
Thou canst not count, much lesse their nature's aime.
Spenser. Hymne of Heauenlie Beautie.

Then forth he brought his snowy Florimele,
Whom Trompart had in keeping there beside,
Couered from people's gazement with a veile.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 3.

And in her cheekes the vermeil red did shew
Like roses in a bed of lillies shed.
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed,
Able to heale the sicke, and to revive the ded.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3.

So that these immovable beings would be put like adamantine statues, and things unconnected with the rest of the world, having no commerce with any thing at all but the Deity; a kind of insignificant metaphysical gazers, or contemplators.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 807.

The fourth hight a gasehound, who hunteth by the eie.
Holinshed. Description of England, c. 7.

So checking his desire, with trembling heart
Gazing he stood, nor would nor could depart;
Fix'd as a pilgrim wilder'd in his way,
Who dares not stir by night, for fear to stray,
But stands with awful eyes to watch the dawn of day.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

In vain, you envious streams, so fast you flow,
To hide her from a lover's ardent gaze;
From every touch you more transparent grow,
And all reveal'd the beauteous wanton playa.
Spectator, No. 406. The Laplander to his Rein-deer.

Plac'd on this float by some diviner hand,
As on a stage, for public view we stand.
Illyria's neighbouring shores, her isles around,
And every cliff with gazers shall be crown'd.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

'Twas then I wak'd; and to the deep below
Through thickets creep'd with careful steps and slow;
And gaz'd around if any hut were there,
Or solitary wretch my grief to share:
But none appear'd. Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. iv.

All gemm'd in ornaments of curious mode,
Gay in the van, the false Sultana rode.
Oft to her breast she clasp'd the heav'nly maid,
And wond'ring oft with cruel gaze survey'd.
Brook. Constantia.

The Agasæus, or Gase-hound, chased indifferently the fox, hare, or buck. It would select from the herd the fattest and fairest deer, pursue it by the eye, and if lost for a time, recover it again by its singular distinguishing faculty; should the beast rejoin the herd, this dog would fix unerringly on the same.—Pennant. British Zoology. The Dog.

GAZE'TTE.
GAZETTE'ER.

It. Gazetta, Fr. Gazette; a certain Venetian coin, scarce worth a farthing; also, a bill of news; or a short relation of the general occurrences of the time forged most commonly at Venice, and thence dispersed, every month, into most parts of Christendom," (Cotgrave.) So called because sold for a gazetta. See Menage.

Per. What monstrous and most painefull circumstance
Is here, to get some three, or four gazets!
Some three pence, i' th' whole, for that 'twill come to.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act ii. sc. 2.

Jac. It is too little: yet
Since you have said the word, I am content;
But will not go a gazet less.
Massinger. The Maid of Honour, Act iii. sc. 1.

How many times doth God speak to us by his servants the Prophetes, by his Son, by his Apostles, by sermons, by spiritual books, by thousands of homilies, and arts of counsel and insinuation; and we sit as unconcerned as the pillars of a church, and hear the sermons as the Athenians did a story, or as we read a gazett!—Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 1.

The next gazette mentioned that the King had pardoned him [the Duke of Monmouth] upon his confessing the late plot.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1684.

Fast by, like Niobe (her children gone,)
Sits mother Osborne, stupify'd to stone!
And monumental brass this record bears,
"These are—ah no! these were—the Gazetteers."
Pope. The Dunciad, b. ii.

The court gazette accomplished what the abettors of independence had attempted in vain. When that disingenuous compilation, and strange medley of railing and flattery, was adduced as a proof of the united sentiments of the people of Great Britain, there was a great change throughout all America.—Burke. Letter to the Sheriffs of Bristol

The host looked stedfastly at Adams, and after a minute's silence asked him, "if he was one of the writers of the Gazetteers, for I have heard," says he, "they are writ by parsons." "Gazetteers!" answered Adams, "What is that?"
Fielding. Joseph Andrews, b. ii. c. 17.

GE. The Goth. Ga; A. S. Ge, (much used as a prefix to other words,) may be from the Goth. and A. S. Gangan, gan, to go; and as a general term expressing motion (without which we can have no ideas of time or action) have been intended to give force to the words to which it was so prefixed. "I must go and do, go and see," are common phrases; and in the north of England, "I must go see, go dig, go weed," &c. is the vulgar form of speech. Ge (g hard) before the liquids l and r not unfrequently drops the e, and unites in hasty pronunciation with the liquid ge-l, gl, ge-r, gr. (See GLOOM, GRAT.) G is changed into c (hard) and the same union takes place,—ce-l, cl, ce-r, cr. (See CLINCH, CRINGE.) Thus A. S. Ge, was softened into the Old Eng. Y. See the quotation from Verstegan. See BE.

This preposition was of our ancestors very much used, and it is yet exceedingly used in the Low Dutch, where according to their usual manner of pronouncing with aspiration, they use to put an h to it and so make it ghe. We have since altered it from ge to y, which yet we seldome use in prose, but sometimes in poetry for the increasing of syllables, as when we say *y*written, *y*doluen, *y*cleped, *y*learned, *y*broken, and the like.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 7.

GE'ALOUS. See JEALOUS.

GEAR, or GEER.

From the A. S. Gearwe, paratus, gearwian, præparare, to prepare. Gearish, (see Aylmer in v. Gay,) is garish. And thus may mean—

Any thing prepared or provided, (for any purpose;) preparation, apparatus, furniture; means of subsistence or support;—harness or portions of harness. And, as Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "All sorts of instruments, of cookery, of war, of apparel, of chemistry. In her quainte geres,—all sorts of strange fashions;" he refers to instances of all these usages in Chaucer.

Wo was his coke, but if his sauce were
Poinant and sharpe, and redy all his gere.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 384.

Whan that Arcite had romed all his fill,
And songen all the roundel lustily,
Into a studie he fell sodenly,
As don these lovers in hir queinte geres.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1533.

Whan he was proudest in his gere
And thought nothing might him dere.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

If thys geere shoulde come to Arioistus hearing, he was well assured he would take most grieuous punishment of all the hostages that were in his handes.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 25.

Than he gert ordain in hy
Armure, and al other gere,
Stalworth stedes, both sheld and sper,
And also squyer, knave, and swayne.
Ywaine & Gawin. Ritson, vol. i.

——When once her eye
Hath met the virtue of this magic dust,
I shall appear some harmless villager,
Whom thrift keeps up about his country gear.
Milton. Comus.

The Apostles were not fixed in one place of residence, but were continually moving about the world, or in procinctu, ready in their geare to move whither Divine suggestions did call them, or fair occasion did invite them, for the propagation or furtherance of the Gospel.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

GE'AZON. Ray says,—Scarce, hard to come by, (Essex.) And in the quotations from Gascoigne, Turbervile, and Spenser, this interpretation applies well enough, but not in that from Warner.

But shall I say, to giue thee graue aduise,
(Which in my head is (God he knowes full) geazon !)
Then marke me well, and though I be not wise,
Yet in my rime, thou maist perhaps find reason.
Gascoigne. Councell geuen to Master Bartholomew Withipall.

The maners of the men I purpose to declare,
And other priuate points besides which strange and geazon are.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol 1. p. 387.

The lady, hearkning of his sensefull speech,
Found nothing that he said, vnmeet nor geason,
Hauing oft seene it tride, as he did teach.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

Erickmon when that followed her
Vnpitied, not vnpearst,
Reform'd his wits, his suite and hope
Of her, not now as earst,
And scorn'd her mind, that scorned his loue
To her so firmly geason.
For why? shee off'red double wrong,
To wrong and scorne a reason.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c. 36.

GECK. Ger. Geck, gauch; Dut. Gheck; Sw. Geck; Dut. Ghecken; Sw. Geckas, ludificare, deridere; to make sport of, to deride.

Any one derided or mocked; and thus, a fool; a jest, mockery or derision.

Why haue you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious gecke and gull,
That ere inuention plaid on! Tell me why!
Shakespeare. Twelfth Night, Act v. sc. 1.

To taint his nobler heart and braine with needlesse jelousy,
And to become the geeke and scorne o' th' other's villany.
Id. Cymbeline, Act v. sc. 4.

GEHE'NNA. See the quotation from Hakewill.

Thus Ahas made molten images for Baalim, and burnt his children for sacrifice before the idoll Moloch, or Saturne, which was represented by a man like a brasen body bearing the head of a calfe, set vp not far from Hierusalem, in a valley shadowed with wood, called Gehinnon, or Tophet, from whence is the word Gehenna vsed for hell.
Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. c. 1. s. 6.

——The wisest heart
Of Solomon, he [Moloch] led by fraud to build
His temple right against the temple of God,
On that opprobrious hill, and made his grove
The pleasant vally of Hinnon, Tophet thence
And black Gehenna call'd, the type of Hell.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

GELA'TINOUS. See GELLY.

GELD, v. } Dut. Ghelt-en; Ger. Gelden;
GE'LDER. } Sw. Gælla; A. S. Gylte, cas-
GE'LDING, n. } tratus, not improbably from the verb Gild-an, to yield or give up.

To yield or cause to yield or give up; and thus, to deprive, (sc. of an essential part or portion,) to mutilate.

For the met. usage, see the quotation from Wilson.

Holland (Ammianus, p. 429.) renders incisis by quelding or cutting.

For ther ben geldyngis whiche ben thus born of the modirs wombe, and ther ben geldyngis that ben maad of men, and ther ben geldyngis that han geldid himself for the rewme of hevenes.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 19.

And the gelding seide, lo watir, who forbedith me to be baptised.—Id. Dedis, c. 8.

A voice he hadde, as smale as hath a gote,
No berd hadde he, ne never none shoulde have,
As smoothe it was as it were newe shave;
I trowe he were a gelding or a mare.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 693.

This yere [the 11th of Wyllyam the Red] also the ii. Erles of Shrewesbury and of Chester, eyther named Hugh, by the King's cómaũdement, entred with theyr knyghtes y^e Ile of Man or Anglesaye, & alewe therein many Welshmen, and gelded many moo.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 225.

Now geld with the gelder the ram and the bull.
Tusser. September's Husbandry.

A duke well accompanied, sent from the emperor, presented him from the emperor a coach and ten geldings for the more easy conueying of him to Mosco, from whence this citie [Yeraslave] was distant five hundred miles.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 459.

Vnto whõ Orfines sayde: I haue hearde that women in times past haue reigned, and born great rule in Asia, but it is now a more straunge thyng that a geldyng should haue the empire in his handes.—Brende. Quint. Curtius, fol. 269.

Gelding, signifieth a subduing of our affections, and taming the foul lust of pleasure, vnto the will of reason.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 97.

Which we much rather had depart withall,
And haue the money by our father lent,
Then Aquitane, so guelded as it is.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act ii. sc. 1.

Mort. Yea, but mark how he bears his course, and runnes me vp
With like aduantage on the other side,
Gelding the opposed continent as much,
As on the other side it takes from you.
Id. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 1.

Panionius, of the Isle of Chios, was by his trade, a dealer in buying and selling of slaves, and by whom himself had formerly been gelt, and made an eunuch.
Usher. Annals, an. 3524.

A guelding never casts his teeth, no not his sucking teeth, in case he were guelded before.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 37.

Shortly after Cyrus being come to himself again, some of his eunuchs (which were men gelt, and grooms of his chamber) that were about him, did lift him up, thinking to set him upon another horse, and to get him out of the presse. but he was not able to sit on his horse.
North. Plutarch, p. 791.

He [Sir Roger De Coverley] has bequeathed the fine white gelding, that he used to ride a hunting upon, to his chaplain, because he thought he would be kind to him, and has left you all his books.—Spectator, No. 517.

Riding a showy horse, whipping a pair of geldings, or four in hand, through the fashionable streets, and sauntering in a stable, are, indeed, in the present Age, some of the most glorious methods of spending the sprightly days of youth, when privileged by the early possession of a fortune.
V. Knox, Ess. 35.

GE'LID. Lat. Gelidus, from Gel-are, to keel or cool. See To CONGEAL.

Cool or cold; cold to excess.

To what cool cave shall I descend,
Or to what geled fountain bend?
Marvel. Works, vol. iii. p. 273.

A various spirit, fresh, delicious, keen,
Dwells in their gelid pores; and, active, points
The piercing cyder for the thirsty tongue.
Thomson. Autumn.

Here too infix some moss grown trunks of oak
Romantic, turn'd by gelid lakes to stone,
Yet so disposed as if they owed their change
To what they now control
Mason. The English Garden, b. iii.

GE'LLY. } See JELLY. Fr. Gelée, Cot-
GE'LATINE. } grave says, is frozen, congealed,
GELA'TINOUS. } thickened or stiffened with extreme cold. Gelée, a frost, also gelly. And Skinner, Gelly, a gelando; succus frigore concretus;—

That which thickens or stiffens, concretes or coagulates in cooling; and gelatinous—consequentially is,—

Sticky, adhesive; viscous.

——And, spreading on the grownd
Their watchet mantles fringed with siluer rownd,
They softly wipt away the gelly blood
From th' orifice, which hauing well vpbownd,
They poured in soueraine balme and nectar good,
Good both for medicine and for heuenly food.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 4.

You shall always see their [insects] eggs laid carefully and commodiously up, if in the waters, in neat and beautiful rows oftentimes in that spermatick gelatine matter in which they are reposited.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vi. c. 6.

I offered to rise at my usual time, but was desired to sit still, with this kind expression, Come, Doctor, a gelly or a conserve will do you no harm; don't be afraid of the dessert.—Tatler, No. 258.

One of them [crabs] of a thick, tough, gelatinous consistence, and the other a sort of membranaceous tube or pipe, both which are probably taken from the rocks.
Cook. Third Voyage, b. iv. c. 1.

The gelatinous substance, known by the name of star shot, or star gelly, owes its origin to this bird [the common gull] or some of the kind: being nothing but the half-digested remains of earth-worms, on which these birds feed, and often discharge from their stomachs.
Pennant. British Zoology. Common Gull.

GELT, i. e. the gilt or gold.

Lineage and virtue at this push,
Without the gelt's not worth a rush.
King. Ulysses & Tiresias.

GEM, v. } A. S. Gym, gym-stan; which GEM, n. } Junius thinks is from Gym-an,
GE'MMARY. } to watch or guard carefully; as
GE'MMEOUS. } gems usually are so preserved.
GE'MMY. } Fr. Gemme; It. Gemma; Lat. Gemma. Martinius,—Id quod in arboribus tumescit, cum parere incipiunt, a gemo, id est, gigno; hence, he adds, pearls and stones of that form or shape, on account of their roundness (instar oculi) are called gems. To gem,—

To bud forth; to put forth, to cover with buds; to stud, to decorate or adorn, as with gems.

But nathles this Markis hath do make
Of gemmes, sette in golde and in asure,
Broches and ringes, for Grisilda's sake.
Chaucer. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8131.

This gemme of chastitee, this emeraude,
And eke of martirdome the rubie bright.
Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,539.

Thy brothyr Troylus eke, that gemme of gentle deedes,
To thinke howe he abused was, alas my heart it bleedes.
Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

Wherefore I hold not with it, that the Virgin Mary should be painted so in silkes and golden garments, and decked with gemmes and pearles, as though she had any delight in such a thinge, when she was on earth here.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 10.

——Last
Rose, as in dance, the stately trees, and spred
Thir branches hung with copious fruit; or gemm'd
Thir blossoms. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

And on her head she wore a tyre of gold,
Adorn'd with gemmes and owches wondrous fayre,
Whose passing price vneath was to be told.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

I will not conceale from you that which poets doe fable of this matter, who would beare us in hand, that all began at the rocke Caucasus, whereunto Prometheus was bound fast, who was the first that set a little fragment of this rocke within a peece of yron; which being done about his finger, was the ring, and the foresaid stone the gem.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvii. c. 1. The Proeme.

The principle and most gemmary affection is its traluecency.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

The shining circlets of his golden hair,
Which ev'n the Graces might be proud to wear,
Instarr'd with gems and gold, bestrow the shore,
With dust dishonour'd, and deform'd with gore.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xvii.

Not venal, you request no eastern stores,
Where ruddy waters lave the gemmy shores.
Grainger. Tibullus, Elegy 2. b. ii.

In the vase mysterious fling
Pinks and roses gemm'd with dew,
Flowers of ev'ry varied hue,
Daughters fair of early Spring.—Jones. The Muse Recalled.

I, like an idle truant, fond of play,
Doting on toys, and throwing gems away,
Grasping at shadows, let the substance slip.
Churchill. Dedication to his Sermons.

If every polish'd gem we find
Illuminating heart or mind,
Provoke to imitation;
No wonder Friendship does the same,
That jewel of the purest flame,
Or rather constellation.—Cowper. Friendship.

The blue is of an inexpressible splendor, the richest cœrulian glowing with a gemmeous brilliancy.
Pennant. British Zoology. Gemmeous Dragonet.

But hast thou seen their king in rich array,
Fam'd Oberon, with damask'd robe so gay,
And gemmy crown, by moonshine sparkling fair,
And azure sceptre, pointed with a star,—Philips, Past. 6

——By magic sleight
A Sura's lovely form he wore,
Rob'd in light, with lotos crown'd,
What time th' immortals peerless treasures found
On the churn'd ocean's gem-bespangled shore.
Jones. Hymn to Surya.

GE'MEL. } Skinner says, Gemelles, a word
GI'MAL. } of heraldry, manifestly from Lat.
GI'MBAL. } Gemellis, barrs gemelles, i. e. Biga seu par barrarum seu vectium, two or a pair of bars. In Brewer's Lingua, Act ii. sc. 4, a character is described, in a grave satin suit, purple buskins, a garland of bays and rosemary, a gimmal ring with one link hanging: of which kind of ring, Skinner says, Annulus Gemellus, because it consists of two or more circles. It is also written Gemmow.

The quadrin doth never double; or, to use a word of heraldry, never bringeth forth gemels: the quinzain too soon.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. i. Pref.

For under it a cave, whose entrance streight
Clos'd with a stone-wrought doore of no meane weight:
Yet from itselfe the gemels beaten so
That little strength could thrust it to and fro.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 3.

Whence 'tis manifest, that his answers do not proceed upon set gimals or strings, whereof one being struck moves the rest in a set order, (which we have shew'd is the course in all actions done by beasts:) but, out of a principle within him, which of itself is indifferent to all things.
Digby. Of Man's Soul, c. 8.

Truly this argument hangeth togither by verie strange gimbols.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, vol. vi. c. 2.

Two gemells unde, silver, between two griffins passant.
Strype. Life of Smith, c. 1. Note a.

GE'MINATE, v. GEMINA'TION. GE'MINOUS. } Fr. Géminer; It. Geminare; Sp. Geminar; Lat. Geminare, to double; from Geminus, quasi genimus, from the ancient Geno, (as the Gr. Γονιμος, from Γεν-ειν,) to bring forth or produce. Applied emphatically, when two are brought forth at the same parturition; and thus, to geminate is, consequentially—

To double; to repeat a second time, to reduplicate.

(d.) Is but the v geminated in the full sound, and though it have the seate of a consonant with us, the power is always vowellish, even where it leads the vowell in any syllable.
B. Jonson. The English Grammar.

Whereunto while men assent, and can believe a bicipitous conformation in any continued species, they admit a gemination of principal parts, not naturally discovered in any animal.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 15.

For if he will be in the sense, and in the conscience both, there is a gemination of it.
Bacon. A Table of Colours of Good and Evill, n. 8.

And this the practice of Christians hath acknowledged, who have baptized these geminous births, and double connascencies with several names; as conceiving in them a distinction of souls, upon the divided execution of their functions.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 15.

I here also consider, that in all languages there are some customary geminations and expressions, which though to strangers they appear superfluous, if not absurd, to the natives, and in the propriety of that speech, are not only current, but oftentimes emphatical.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 280.

GE'MONIES. Lat. Gemoniæ, (sub. scalæ,) certain stairs at Rome so called, à gemitu, upon which the bodies of criminals were exposed, and from which they were afterwards thrown.

Lam. Yet his brother,
Domitian, that now sways the power of things,
Is so inclined to blood, that no day passes
In which some are not fasten'd to the hook
Or thrown down from the Gemonies.
Massinger. The Roman Actor, Act i. sc. 1.

——— As, to-day,
The fate of some of your servants! who declining
Their way, not able, for the throng, to follow,
Slipt downe the Gemonies, and brake their necks!
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 1.

GENDA'RMES. GENDA'RMERY. } Skinner says,—Gendarme, a word which I have met with only in the English Dictionary, à Gens d'Armes, men of arms or armed men. And Cotgrave,—

"A man of arms; an horseman armed at all points, one that serves in compleat armour, and on a great horse."

When the Peers withdrew, it seems the proofs about his design of raising the North, or the city, or of the killing the gendarmes, did not satisfy them: for all these had been without question treasonable.
Burnet. Hist. of the Reform. an. 1551.

Palmer, being a second time examined, said, that Sir Ralph Vane was to have brought two thousand men, who, with the Duke of Somerset's one hundred horse, were on a muster day to have set on the gendarmourie.—Id. Ib.

So there were ten letters written in October, and directed to certain of the chief officers of the army, to have the gendarmory and bands of horsemen which were appointed there, in a readiness to be seen by his majesty the Sunday following Hallon-tide next, being the 8th of November.
Strype. Memorials, an. 1551.

GE'NDER, v. GE'NDER. } Fr. Gendre, from the ablative genere, from the verb gignere; Gr. Γενειν, to beget. See ENGENDER.

To beget, to procreate, to breed.

In Shakespeare, the noun is applied to—kind of people, sort of people.

——— Sulk on wild he take
His euenhed in mariage, gentille gendrure to make.
R. Brunne, p. 253.

Reson ich sauh sotthliche suwen alle beastes
In etynge and drynkyng. in gendrynge of kynde.
Piers Plouhman, p. 222.

For in Crist Jesus I haue gendrid ghou bi the ghospel.
Wiclif. 1 Cor. c. 4.

And Isaac gendride Iacob and Iacob gendride the twelue patriarkis.—Id. Dedis, c. 7.

And thus ful oft gendred is enuie
In folkes hearts.—Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. i.

——— Ne neuer thinke
To busie my witte for to swinke
To knowe of her significations
The gendres, ne distinccions
Of the tymes of hem.—Chaucer. House of Fame, b. i.

What earthly chances would betide; what yere
Of plenty storde, what signe forewarned derth,
How winter gendreth snow.
Uncertaine Auctors. The Death of Zoroas.

Their bullocke gendreth, and that not oute of tyme: their cowe calueth, and is not unfruitfull.—Bible, 1551.

Matter can gender nothing of itself.
H. More. Def. of Philosophic Cabbala, App. c. 3.

——— The other motiue
Why to a publike count I might not go,
Is the great loue the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his faults in their affection,
Would, like the spring that turneth blood to stone,
Conuert his gyues to graces.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act iv. sc. 7.

All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all inamoratoes, or persons of the epicene gender, who gaze at one another in the presence of ladies.—Tatler, No. 27.

Pards gender pards; from tigers tigers spring;
No doves are hatch'd beneath a vulture's wing.
Wilkie. The Epigoniad, b. i.

Gender being founded on the distinction of the two sexes, it is plain, that in a proper sense, it can only find place in the names of living creatures, which admit the distinction of male and female; and, therefore, can be ranged under the masculine or feminine genders.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 8.

GENEA'LOGY. GENEALO'GICAL. GENEA'LOGICK. GENEA'LOGIST. } Fr. Généalogie; It. and Sp. Genealogia; Lat. Genealogia; Gr. Γενεαλογια, from γενεα, genus, kind, and λεγειν, to speak, to say.

A discourse on kinds or families, of their descent or succession; a pedigree.

This is the genelogie frō S. Margarete the quene
Of kynges bi & bi in kynde that has bene.
R. Brunne, p. 111.

Firste he is seid kyng of righteousnesse, and afterward kyng of Salem, that is to sei king of pees, withoute fadir, withoute modir, withoute genealogie.—Wiclif. Hebrewis, c. 7.

But the trouth if ye list verifie
Rede of goddes the genealogie.
Lidgate. The Story of Thebes, pt. iii.

This therefore is the only and very Messias whose genealogie & petigre shall forthwith be showed, touchyng the body which he toke for our cause.—Udal. Matthew, c. 1.

For, if the Spirit of God did not our faith assure
The scriptures be from heaven, like heaven divinity pure,
Of Moses' mighty works, I reverently may say,
(I speak with goodly fear) tradition put away,
In power of human wit it easily doth not lie
To prove before the flood the genealogy.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

Which genealogicall recapitulation in their nationall families and tribes, other people also haue observed; as the Spaniards, who reckon their descent from Hesperus, before the Gothes and Moors ouerran their land.
Holinshed. England, b. vi. c. 10.

They [heathen philosophers] do indeed describe the geneologies of their Heroes and subordinate Gods, but for the supreme Deity he is constantly acknowledged to be without beginning of time, or end of days.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 8.

There are many incidental verities, historical, geographical, genealogical, chronological, &c. which common Christians are obliged rather implicitly to admit, or not to deny, than explicitly to know, or treasure up in their minds.
Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 106.

The Apostle in the preceding verse [1 Tim. i. 5.] had warned Timothy against giving heed to fables and endless genealogies; by genealogies, meaning the derivation of angelic and spiritual natures, according to a fantastic system, invented by the Oriental philosophers, and thence adopted by some of the Grecian Sects.—Hurd. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 8.

An old Roman grafted on a modern Englishman, produced [Lord Chatham] the golden fruit of true patriotism, real, personal greatness, and nobility unindebted to a genealogical table.—V. Knox. Letters to a Young Nobleman, Let. 55.

He [Hondius] also engraved a genealogic chart of the Houses of York and Lancaster, with the arms of the Knights of the Garter to the year 1589, drawn by Thomas Talbot.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iii. c. 1.

With whatever delight, however, the Cambrian genealogist might pursue the line of his ancestry, a barren catalogue of uncouth names would furnish no entertainment for the reader.—Lord Teignmouth. Life of Sir W. Jones.

I leave the rest to the genealogist; and go no farther back in his pedigree than to his grandfather, of the same name, who distinguished himself in the civil wars of the last century.—Hurd. Life of Warburton.

GE'NERAL, s. GE'NERAL, adj. GENERALI'SSIMO. GENERA'LITY. GE'NERALIZE. GENERALIZA'TION. GE'NERALLY. GE'NERALNESS. GE'NERALSHIP. GE'NERALTY. } Fr. Général; It. Generale; Sp. General; Lat. Generalis, (see GENERATE,) of or pertaining to the kind.

Of or belonging, or pertaining to all of the kind, race or family: comprising or relating to all or the greater number, part or portion: opposed to special, as genus to species; common to particular;—and thus, not restricted, or confined, or limited, to special or particular; common, customary, usual.

A general, (sc.) of an army, of an order of friars. Fr. Général d'une armée, des frères. It. Generale; Sp. General, one who has the general authority, conduct, or command.

I bidde thee teache hem, wost thou how?
By some generall signe now
In what place thou shalt founden be.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

She sobre was eke, simple, and wise withall,
The best ynorished eke that might be,
And goodly for her speech in generall.—Id. Troilus, b. v.

My sone, ful often for to mochel speche
Hath many a man ben split, as cierkes teche;
But for a litel speche avisedly
Is no man shent, to speken generally.
Id. The Manciples Tale, v 17.217.

I curse and blame generally
All hem that loven villanie. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And for to loke on euery side
Or that thou falle in homicide:
Whiche sinne is nowe so generall,
That it will nie stant ouerall
In holy church. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Ye shall note the order) of the four monarchies) which order is here expressed) that the veray time wherin God wold haue Cryste borne shuld be knowne) and the time of the general resurreccion of the dead) and the iugement shulde be signifyed and foresene.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, Argument.

Pericles was a famous man of warre,
And victor eke, in nine great foughten fields,
Whereof he was general in charge;
Yet at his death he rather did rejoice
In clemencie, than bloudy victory.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glas.

And it hath no appearaunce of lernyng in Scriptures, to conclude vnder one consideratiō a specialte, & a generalitie.
Bp. Gardner. Of the Presence in the Sacrament, fol. 58.

Her grace likewise on her side, in al her graces passage, shewed herselfe generallye an image of a worthy lady and gouernour.—Fabyan, vol. ii. Queen Elizabeth, an. 1559

They had, with a general consent, rather springing by the generalness of the cause than of any artificial practice, set themselves in arms.—Sidney.

——— But breath his faults so quaintly
That they may seeme the taints of liberty;
The flash and out-breake of a fiery minde,
A sauageness in vnreclaimed blood,
Of generall assault.—Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 1.

Amongst which ships (being all of small burthen) there was one so well liked, which also had no man in her, as being brought unto the generall, [Sir F. Drake] he thought good to make stay of her for the service, meaning to pay for her, as also accordingly performed at our return; which bark was called the Drake.
Sir F. Drake. West India Voyage, p. 5.

Whence is it else that the generality of the world live in the commission of those that they call little sins, but because their hearts are hardned and their consciences seared, that those sins that are great enough to damn them, yet are not great enough to trouble them!—Hopkins, Ser. 7.

The legat persefuing such disorder, accursed generallie all such as thus troubled the king's peace, shewing themselues enimues to the realm.—Holinshed. Hen. III. an. 1267.

The municipal laws of this kingdom are of a vast extent, and enclude in their generality all those several lawes which are allowed as the rule of justice and judicial proceedings.
Hale. History of the Common Law.

No general characters of parties (call them either sects or churches) can be so fully and exactly drawn, as to comprehend all the several members of them, at least all such as are received under that denomination
Dryden. The Hind & Panther, Pref.

But see the haughty household troops advance!
The dread of Europe, and the pride of France.
The war's old art each private soldier knows,
And with a general's love of conquest glows.
Addison. The Campaign.

In case of any foreign invasion, the King was by law to be generalissimo, to command the people for their own safety.
Ludlow. Memoirs. K. Charles's Case, by Cook.

We see that even the generality of men are prone to approve the laws and rules directing to justice, sincerity, and beneficence; to commend actions suitable unto them, to honour persons practising according to them.
Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

Those who are driven into the fold are, generally speaking, rather made hypocrites than converts.
Dryden. The Hind & Panther, Pref.

Thus those fifteen hundred horse which march'd northward, within very few days were brought to nothing, and the generalship of the Lord Digby to an end.
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. ii. p. 718.

——— Monarchical their state,
But prudently contain'd, and mingled wise
Of each harmonious power: only, too much
Imperious war into their rule infus'd,
Prevail'd their general king, and chieftain thanes
Thomson. Liberty, pt. iv.

A writer of Tragedy must certainly adapt himself more to the general taste, because the Dramatic of all kinds of Poetry, ought to be most universally relished and understood.—Mason. Elfrida. Introductory Letters.

The cloth, in general, will resist water for some time, but that which has the strongest glaze will resist longest
Cook. Third Voyage, b. ii. c. 11.

Considering how strange a set of beings the generality of seamen are, when on shore, instead of being surprised that these two men should lose their way, it is rather to be wondered at that no more of the party were missing.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 10.

The mind, therefore, makes its utmost endeavours to generalize its ideas, begins early with such as are most familiar, comes in time to those that are less so, and is never at rest till it has found means of conceiving, as well as it can, its ideas collectively, and of signifying them in that manner to others.
Bolingbroke. Essay on Human Knowledge, s. 5.

This has led some philosophers to suppose, that another faculty besides abstraction, to which they have given the name of generalisation, is necessary to account for the formation of genera and species; and they have endeavoured to shew that although generalisation without abstraction is impossible; yet that we might have been so formed, as to be able to abstract, without being capable of generalising.—Stewart. On the Human Mind, c. 4. s. 1.

Look, when you will, into sessions-papers, and other accounts of bad people, who have suffered for their crimes, and you will generally find they began by neglecting the sabbath.—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 30.

Your generalship puts me in mind of Prince Eugene when he fought the Turks at the battle of Belgrade.
Goldsmith. She Stoops to Conquer, Act ii.

GE'NERATE, v.
GE'NERABLE.
GE'NERANT.
GENERA'TION.
GE'NERATIVE.
GE'NERATOR.
GE'NITAL.
GE'NITALS.
GE'NITIVE.
GE'NITOR.
GE'NITURE.

Fr. Générer; It. Generare; Sp. Generar; Lat. Generare; Gr. Γενεω, to beget. See GENDER.

"To beget or ingender, as the male; to breed or bring forth, as the female," (Cotgrave.)

To beget, to procreate, to breed, to produce, bear or bring forth, to propagate.

A generation is (also) applied to a race or family; those living in one age or period of time.

And he sorowynge wythynne in spirit seyde, what seeketh this generacioun, a tokene? truli I seye to you, a tokene schal not be govun to this generacioun.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 8.

And he syghthed in his sprete & said: why doth this generacio seke a sygne? Verely I saye unto you, there shal no signe be geuen vnto this generacyon.—Bible, 1551. Ib

Which hath power of all things generable
To rule and stere by their great influence
Weder and wind. Chaucer. Testament of Creseide.

The will of a wight disturbeth and constraineth that, that nature alway desireth and requireth, that is to save, the workes of generation, by the whiche generation onely dwelleth, and is sustained the long durabilitie of mortal thinges.
Id. Boecius, b. iii.

But Jupiter, whiche was his sonne,
And of full age, his father bonde,
And kyt of with his owne honde
His genitales, which also faste
In the depe sea he caste. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

S. Cubba whiche was in those dales the mother of al Nonnes, was generate of an whore, as wer all her father's children besides her, ii. of the only excepted.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

Forsouthe this generacioun is lyke vnto chyldren syttyng in the market place, which with a common song cry thus to theyr felowes afarre off. we have played you pleasaunt thynges vpon our pypes, and ye haue not daunced and we haue played you sorowfull thynges and ye haue not wayled.
Udal. Matthew, c. 11.

Whan this priest should dye, he slytte off his genitalis, and threwe them to the Deuyll.
Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

They, I say, that were the wise fathers and genitors of this purgatory, were, in my minde, the wisest of all their generation, and so farre passe the children of light, and also the rest of their company, that they both are fooles, if ye compare them with these.
Latimer. A Sermon before the Convocation of the Clergy.

Wherein sponges or linen clothes belonge dept, shulde be layd on ye hed, & the genitores or legges ofte tymes washed.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. 2.

But we speak here of the original life of the soul itself, that this is substantial, neither generable nor corruptible, but only createable and annihilable by the Deity.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 862.

Pythagoras must also have held, if Democritus had all his philosophy from his writings or traditions, that there are infinite worlds, and that they are generable and corruptible, but that the matter is imperishable.
H. More. Defence of Philosophic Cabbala, App.

Some believe the soul made by God, some by Angels, and some by the generant: whether it be immediately created or traduced hath been the great ball of contention
Glanvill. Scepsis, c. 3.

And now we think it seasonable here to observe, how vast a difference there was betwixt those old materialists in Aristotle, and those other philosophers mentioned before in the first chapter, who determined, ουδεν ουδε γιγνεσθαι ουδε φθειρεσθαι των οντων. That no real entity at all was generated or corrupted, for this reason, because nothing could be made out of nothing.—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 114.

The children of this world, that are in the estate which Adam left them in, shall marry, and be given in marriage; that is, corrupt and generate successively: which is an immortality of the kind, but not of the persons of men.
Hobbs. Of the Kingdom of Darkness.

For much more eath to tell the starres on hy,
Albe they endlesse seeme in estimation,
Then to recount the sea's posterity
So fertile be the flouds in generation,
So huge their numbers, and so numberless their nation.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 12.

As many therefore as are apparently to our judgment borne of God, they haue the seed of regeneration by the ministerie of the church, which vseth to that end and purpose not onely the word, but the sacraments, both hauing generatiue force and vertue.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 50.

Thus from the fact of Lot, we derive the generation of Ruth, and blessed Nativity of our Saviour; which notwithstanding did not extenuate the incestuous ebriety of the generator.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. v. c. 21.

These tenuous vapours, at length descending in a chrystalline liquor, and mingling with the finest parts of the newly modified earth, will doubtless compose as genital a matter as any can be prepared in the bodys of animals.
Glanvill. Pre-existence of Souls, c. 14.

And Minutius Felix further relates, That it was reported, and believed among the heathen, That the Christians, in their private meetings, were given to incest, and all manner of uncleanness. That they worshipped the head of an ass, and even the genitals of their high priest.
Grew. Cosmo-Sacra, b. v. c. 6.

The Hebrews express this union, or comprising of two different apprehensions under one notion, by putting in the genitive case the word which expresses one of them.
Digby. Of Man's Soul, c. 2.

To which may be added this other sufficient natural reason, That if a son marries his mother, she who is in authority greater by right of geniture, becomes minor in matrimonio, less upon the same material account upon which she became greater.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2. Rule 3.

Others say, that the forms of particular worlds are generable and corruptible; so that our present system cannot have sustain'd an infinite duration already gone and expired.—Bentley. Confutation of Atheism, Ser. 6.

For in such pretended generations the Generant, or active principle, is supposed to be the sun, which being an inanimate body cannot act otherwise than by his heat; which heat can only put the particles of passive principle into motion.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

To these might be added some other uses and conveniences; as that the hills serve to the generation of minerals and metals, and that in them principally are the most useful fossils found; or if not found and generated only in them, yet at least all these subterraneous treasures are most easily come at in them.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iii. c. 4

One thing relating to generation I cannot omit; that is, the construction of a set of temporary parts, (like scaffolds in a building) to serve a present end, which are afterwards laid aside, afford a strong argument of counsel and design.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii

I am apt to allow it, in reference to some bodies, certain other faculties and powers, among which some may be called generative and maturative, and others corruptive
Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 713.

This work, by merit first of fame secure,
Is likewise happy in its genniture:
For since 'tis born when Charles ascends the throne
It shares at once his fortune and its own
Dryden. Epistle to Sir Robert Howard.

Notwithstanding these and many other circumstances, sufficient, one might at first view have imagined, to have generated courage, and secured attachment in all his followers, yet they all abandoned him in his distress—"forsook him and fled"—"the shepherd was smitten, and the sheep were scattered."—Bp. Watson. Ser. 2 Peter, i. 16.

A point, concerning property, which ought, for the reasons I just mentioned, to be most speedily decided, frequently exercises the wit of successions of lawyers, for many generations.—Burke. Vindication of Natural Society.

Its varied power to various uses tends,
And qualities occult achieve contrarious ends.
With generative warmth fomenting breed,
Or alimental with nutrition feed.
Brooke. Universal Beauty, b. i

There is no genitive case in Persian, but when two substantives of different meanings come together, a kesra or short e is added in reading to the former of them, and the latter remains unaltered
Sir W. Jones. Grammar of the Persian Language

GENE'RICK.
GENE'RICAL.
GENE'RICALLY.
GENE'RICALNESS.

From the Lat. Genus, generis. (See GENERAL.) Applied logically to the word or term,—
Which denotes all of the same kind.

To say, therefore, that a body is there after the manner of a substance, is to say, that by being specificated, limited, and determined, it becomes not a species but a genus, that is more unlimited by limitations, more generical by his specification, more universal by being made more particular.
Bp. Taylor. Of the Real Presence, p. 338.

Again, the word Homoousios, as was before intimated by Petavius, was never used by Greek writers otherwise, than to signifie the agreement of things numerically differing from one another, in some common nature or universal essence; or their having a generical unity or identity, of which sundry instances might be given.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 605.

You say, If powers of the same kind be understood generically, then you do agree that the known powers of matter are nothing else but the sums of powers of the same kind.
Clarke. Third Defence.

The question in dispute has no relation to the genericalness of the objects on which we think, but to the genericalness of thinking itself.—Answer to Clarke's Third Defence.

The dispute was not whether faith in Moses, or faith in Jesus made men acceptable to God; but whether works or the act of believing; consequently, where the Apostle shews it was faith, or the act of believing, he must mean faith in the generic sense, not in the specific, i. e. he did not mean faith in Jesus: for the Jews, even that part of them which embraced Jesus as the Messiah, deemed it to be any kind of faith whatsoever.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. vi. s. 4.

Well-being, in its more permanent state, is distinguished by the appellation of happiness. This is a generic term, applicable to every sort of mental enjoyment indiscriminately.—Cogan. On the Passions, vol. ii. Dis. 3. c. 1.

We continue it in the same class, under the generical name of corvorants, as more familiar to the English ear than that of pelecan.
Pennant. British Zoology. Gannet Corvorant.

GE'NEROUS. GE'NEROUSLY. GE'NEROUSNESS. GENERO'SITY. } Fr. Généreux; It. and Sp. Generoso; Lat. Generosus; from genus, kind. Generous, says Vossius, is opposed to degenerate, (a genere recedere,) to depart from the kind or nature; emphatically, the noble or illustrious kind or race. And thus, generous, is,—

Noble or illustrious, (by birth or descent;) nobly minded; liberal or munificent; magnanimous, courageous.

The generous, and grauest citizens
Haue hent the gates, and very neare vpon
The duke is ent ring
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act iv. sc. 6.

But if your charges see you bear your sickness patiently, and your cross nobly, and despise money generously, and forgive your enemy bravely, and relieve the poor charitably; then he sees your doctrine is tangible and material, it is more than word, and he loves you, and considers what you say.—Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. Ser. 10.

They little think their heirs in time to come
Will scorn this sneaking coxy, and find reason
With lusty generousness to make their sum
Suit with the brave magnificence of treason;
When for a king (how much less precious?) they
Two hundred thousand pounds will freely pay.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 11.

——— With these shreds
They vented their complainings, which being answer'd
And a petition granted them, a strange one
To breake the heart of generosity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the hornes o'th moone,
Shouting their emulation.—Shakes. Coriolanus, Act I. sc. 1.

All men affect to seem generous, and will say, they scorn to be base: but generosity is in nothing more seen, than in a candid estimation of other men's virtues and good qualities: to this generosity of nature, generosity of education, generosity of principles and judgment do all conspiringly dispose.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 19.

If there be one whose riches cost him care,
Forth let him bring them for the troops to share;
'Tis better generously bestow'd on those,
Than left the plunder of our country's foes.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xviii.

I should not have presumed to this dedication, had I not been encouraged by that generousness and sweetness of disposition, which does so eminently adorn your lordship's place and abilities.—Wilkins. Mercury, Ded.

Indeed, the hopes of the Republic are greatly turned towards Octavius; as there is nothing which his generous thirst of glory, 'tis believed, will not animate him to perform.
Melmoth. Cicero, b. xii. Let. 27.

In chastising his enemies, he [Henry IV. of France] could not but remember they were his people, and knowing they were reduced to the extremity of famine, he generously connived at the methods practised to supply them with provision.—Goldsmith, Ess. 13.

We have not (as I conceive) lost the generosity and dignity of thinking of the fourteenth century; nor as yet have we subtilized ourselves into savages.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

GE'NET. Junius says,—Fr. Genêt d'Espagne; It. Ginetta di Spagna. A horseman, equipped with armour of a peculiar description, was first called in Sp. Ginete, and afterwards the word was transferred to the horses themselves. Minshew derives the word (genet, a kind of horse) from the Latin; optimæ generationis caballus; a horse of the best breed or blood. See JENNET.

And also we haue xx. thousande of other moûted on genettes cap a pee.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. i. c. 336.

At our comming to the governor's house, we found the great doore (where the moyles do usually unlade) even then opened; a candle lighted upon the top of the stayers; and a faire gennet ready sadled, either for the governour himself or some other of his household to carry it after him.
Sir Francis Drake Revived, p. 13.

It seems to me no more likely that frogs should be engendred in the clouds, than Spanish gennets begotten by the wind; for that hath great authors too.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

The delicacy of a gennet, a barb, or an Arabian horse, is much more amiable than the strength and stability of some horses of war or carriage.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 16.

GE'NET, or JE'NNET. } "Fr. Genêt,—a kind of weesel, black spotted, and bred in Spaine," (Cotgrave.) Skinner thinks it may be so called from Guinea, because first noticed there by Europeans.

A warrant to Sir Andrew Dudley, to deliver to Robert Robotham, yeoman of the robes, to keep for the king one fur of black jennets, taken out of a gown of purple cloth of silver tissue.—Strype. Memorials. Edw. VI. an. 1552.

GENETHLI'ACAL. GENETHLIA'TIC. } Fr. Généthliaque, Lat. Genethliacus, Gr. Γενεθλιακος, from γενεθλη, and this from γενεω, gignere, to bear or bring forth.

One who forms predictions from the natal day, or day of birth.

The night immediately before he was slighting the art of those foolish astrologers, and genethliacal ephemerists, that use to pry into the horoscope of nativities.
Howell. Vocal Forest.

The truth of astrological predictions is not to be referred to the constellations: the genethliaticks conjecture by the disposition, temper, and complexion of the person.
Drummond.

GENICULA'TION. Minshew says,—To geniculate or joint. Lat. Geniculare, from genu, the knee.

Hall applies the noun geniculation to the bending of the joint; to kneeling: genuflexion.

There are five points in question: the solemne festivities; the private use of either sacrament; geniculation at the eucharist, &c.—Bp. Hall. Remains, p. 307.

GE'NIUS. GE'NIAL. GE'NIALLY. } Fr. Génie, génial; It. Genio, geniale; Sp. Genio, genial; Lat. Genius, genialis; from the ancient geno, that is gign-ere, to bear or bring forth. Wood writes genie or geny.

Genius is applied to—

A supposed tutelary god, whose province it was to take care of every one from the time of his birth; whence the more modern genii; to—

The nature, the natural powers or faculties of a man; the powers or faculties with which he is born.

The natural bent, disposition or inclination of the mind; and, peculiarly, to—

The power or faculty which bears or brings forth, or produces; which finds out, discovers, invents. Also, to a man endowed or distinguished by this power or faculty.

Genial,—belonging or pertaining to the nature; natural; agreeable to nature; kind, lively.

They in that place him Genius did call:
Not that celestiall powre, to whom the care
Of life, and generation of all
That liues, pertains, in charge particular,
Who wondrous things concerning our welfare,
And strange phantomes doth let vs oft foresee,
And oft of secret ill bids us beware.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Whether the soul receives intelligence
By her near Genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense
Foregoing ruin, whereto it doth tend.
Daniel. Civil War, b. iii.

And thou glad Genius! in whose gentle hand
The bridall bowre and geniall bed remain
Without blemish or stain. Spenser. Epithalamion.

His Geny [D'Avenant's] being chiefly enclined to poetry, he retired to, and mostly lived in, the city of Westminster.
Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

And though some constitutions are genially disposed to this mentall seriousness; yet they can scarce say, Nos numeri sumus.—Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 12.

Thus some men are genially disposited to some opinions, and naturally as averse to others.—Id. Ib. c. 13.

Astonish'd at the sight, the hero paid
New rites, new honours, to his father's shade,
Doubts if the demon of his sire rever'd,
Or the kind Genius of the place appear'd.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. v.

Homer was the greater genius, Virgil the better artist.
Pope. Preface to the Iliad.

Ask for what end the heavenly bodies shine,
Earth for whose use? Pride answers, "'Tis for mine:
For me kind Nature wakes her genial power;
Suckles each herb and spreads out every flower."
Id. Essay on Man, Ep. i.

But whence these various inclinations rose,
The God of Human Nature only knows!
That mystic genius, which our actions guides,
Attends our stars, and o'er our lives presides;
Whose power appears propitious, or malign,
Stamp'd on each face, and varied through each line.
Francis. Horace, b. ii. Epis. 2.

By genius I would understand that power, or rather those powers of the mind, which are capable of penetrating into all things within our reach and knowledge, and of distinguishing their essential differences.
Fielding. History of a Foundling, b. ix. c. 1.

Genius always imports something inventive or creative; which does not rest in mere sensibility to beauty where it is perceived, but which can, moreover, produce new beauties, and exhibit them in such a manner as strongly to impress the minds of others.—Blair, vol. i. Lect. 3.

So that, of course, the grand genial power of the system, that visible God the Sun, would be soon regarded by them as a most beneficent Deity; and thunder and lightnings, storms and tempests, which his qualities produced, would be considered as the effects of his anger.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 6.

Or whether clearer skies and softer air,
That make Italian flowers so sweet and fair,
Fresh'ning his lazy spirits as he ran;
Unfolded genially and spread the man.
Cowper. Progress of Error.

Beyond the vast Atlantic deep
A dome by viewless genii shall be raised,
The walls of adamant compact and steep,
The portals with sky-tinctur'd gems emblazed.
Jones. The Muse Recalled. An Ode.

GENT. GE'NTEL. GENTE'ELLY. GENTE'ELNESS. GENTI'LITY. GE'NTLE, v. GE'NTLE, adj. GE'NTILESS. GE'NTLENESS. GE'NTLESHIP. GE'NTLY. GE'NTRY. GE'NTLE-MAN. GE'NTLE-WOMAN. } Fr. Gent, gentil; It. Gentile; Sp. Gentel, from the Lat. Gens, and this from genus. Cicero, in his Topica, (c. 6,) enumerates as partitions or divisions necessary for the complete definition of gentilis; 1. Qui inter se eodem nomine sunt. 2. Qui ab ingenuis oriundi sunt. 3. Quorum majorum nemo servitutem servivit. 4. Qui capite non sunt deminuti. And it is from a just pride in the rank, the honour, the nobility of family, that our modern applications of gentle, genteel, &c. derive their origin.

Genteel is applied to the manners, address or dress, of persons of rank; and, therefore, of fashion; and thus, is equivalent to—

Polished or polite, elegant, graceful.

Gentle is,—born of or descended from a good family; and thus, inheriting or possessing the virtues or generous qualities of such family; and, therefore, applied to such qualities, namely, to—

Courteousness or urbanity of manners or disposition; affability, mildness; freedom from roughness or rudeness, coarseness, grossness or vulgarity; thus, is equivalent to—

Courteous, affable, mild, meek.

Gent is a common word in our old writers, generally expressing the softer qualities of the female sex,—

Meek, kind, tender; and, as opposed to gross, vulgar, in Chaucer, (Tyrwhitt,) neat and pretty.

See the quotations from Sir Thomas Smith and Gibbon. The words in our old writers are very variously written.

So that the kynge's neuew, and the erle's neuew of Kent,
That twei zonge bacheleres noble were and gent.
In this noble companye strif bigonne arere,
So that the erle's neuew that other slowzt there.
R. Gloucester, p. 53.

So large he was & so hende, & al so de bonere;
So hardy and so gentil, and of so vayr manere.
Id. p. 167.

Thy fayre body so gentyl vor suolwe he wole to nygt.
Id. p. 205.

Gengyl mew that he vond in prison ek ydo
Other in warde myd vnrygt, he brogte hem out also
Id. p. 323.

That he hadde rewthe of hym, and for ye gentrise
Made ys pes with the emperour with oute feyntyse.
Id. p. 57.

The kyng hem vayre vndervong, and honoured in ech wyse,
An gret deuyte tolde of hem, vor her gentryse.
Id. p. 316.

The erle this lady gent gaf Henry his sonne,
Alle his tenement, that his eldres was wonne.
R. Brunne, p. 213.

In England is sche corouned that lady gent,
Tuo sonnes, tuo douhteres fre Jhesus has tham lent.
Id. Ib.

Gentille of nvrture, & noble of lynage,
Was non that bare armure, that did sulk vassalage.
R. Brunne, p. 188.

The kyng therof was blithe, forgaf him gentilly.
Id. p. 134.

Tuo old gentille-men Edrik did forfare,
The ton hight Sigiferd, the tother Sir Morgare.—Id. p. 46.

After ther solornyng, whan that thei suld wende,
He praid tham of alle thing, as gentille men & hende
To haf saf condite, vnto the new kastelle.—Id. p. 80.

Popes and patrones, poure gentel blod refuseth.
Piers Ploughman p 79.

——— Wurshupde hure meny
Gentelich wt joye. Id. p. 38.

——— For love hath undertake
That thes J. H. C. of hus genterise, shal jouste in Peers armes.
In hus helme and hus haberion. Id. p. 340.

Fayre was this young wif and therewithal
As any weasel hire body gent and smal.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3234.

But wel I wot, expresse withouten lie
God bad us for to wex and multiplie;
That gentil text can I wel understand.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5611.

But who is so vertuous
And in his part not outrageous,
Whan such one thou seest thee beforn,
Though he be not gentill borne,
Thou maiest well seine (this is in soth)
That he is gentill, because he doth
As longeth to a gentilman. Id. Rom. of the Rose.

And though to me ye be right lefe and dere
I nto my gentile, ye be nothing so.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8336.

And Emelie him loveth so tenderly,
And he hire serveth al so gentilly,
That never was ther no werd hem betwene
Of jealousie, ne of non other tene.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 3106.

For som folk wol be wonnen for richesse,
And som for strokes, and som with gentillesse.
Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3[illegible].

And therefore who so list it not to here,
Turne over the leaf, and chese another tale,
For he shal find ynow bothe gret and smale,
Of storial thing that toucheth gentilesse,
And eke moralite and holinesse.
Id. The Milleres Prologue.

And certes, he shulde not be called a gentilman, that after God and good conscience, alle thinges left, ne doth his diligence and besinesse, to kepen his good name.
Id. Tale of Melibeus.

Foraine gentilnesse ne maketh thee nat gentill. But certes if there be any good in gentilnesse, I trow it be all onely this, that it seemeth as that a maner necessite be inposed to gentilman, for that they ne shuld not outragen or fore leauen fro the vertues of her noble kind.—Id. Boecius, b. iii.

For hart fulfilled of gentilness
Can euill demeane his distresse.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

What maner woman art thou? quod he,
I am a gentilwoman borne, quad she.
Id. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,833.

Also to have pride of genirie is right gret folie: for oft time the genirie of the bodie benimeth the genirie of the soule: and also we ben al of o fader and of o moder: and all we ben of o nature rotten and corrupt, both riche and poure.—Id. The Persones Tale.

What say we eke of hem that deliten hem in swearing, and hold it a genierie or manly dede to swere gret othes
Id. Ib.

I thanke you my father dere
This schole is of a gentyll lore.—Gower. Con. A. b. i

And for to loke on other side,
Howe that a gentilman is bore:
Adam, whiche was all to fore,
With Eue his wife, as of hem two
All was aliche gentill tho. Id. Ib. b. iv.

For commonliche in worthie place
The women louen worthinesse
Of manhode, and of gentilnesse,
For the gentiles be most desired. Id. Ib.

His wife, forth with his doughter alle,
So as the happes shulde falle,
With many a gentilwoman there,
Dreint in the salte sea they were. Id. Ib. b. v.

Now Remeneth this nobyll kyng,
The emperour after his doughter hadd longyng:
To speke with that May,
Messengeres forth he sent
Aftyr the mayde fayre and gent,
That was bryght as someres day.
Emare. Ritson, vol. ii.

Eyther the communers onlye must be welthy, and the gentyl and noble men needy and miserable: or elles excludyng gentylitie, al men must be of one degre and sort, and a new name prouided.—Sir T. Elyot. Governour, b. i. p. 2.

I might perceaue a wolf as white as whales bon,
A fairer beaste, of fresher hue, beheld I neuer none,
Saue that her lokes were coy and forward eke her grace,
Unto the which this gentle beast gan him advance apace.
Surrey. Song of a Lady who refus'd to Daunce with him.

Thus they that were desolate were recoforted by the lordes that they resorted vnto, who had pyte on them, as it was reason, for noblenesse of gentylnesse ought to be aided by nobles and gentyls.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 401.

But Cæsar sommoning before him the noble men of euery citie, partlie by putting them in feare in declaryng that he knewe of their doings, & partlie by entreating them gentlye, kept the greater part of Gallia in dew obedience & quietness.
Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 140.

I stirred him still toward gentlenesse;
And causde him to regard fidelitie.
Wyat. Complaint vpon Loue, &c.

But, madam, moneye can do much,
she brings a wealthie wyfe,
Bringes trustie frinds, gentrie, & stocke
and pleasures of thys lyfe.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to Numitius.

No, nor those same handy craft men of yours in cities, nor yet the rude and uplandish ploughman of the country, are not supposed to be greatly afraid of your gentleman's idle serving men, unless it be such as be of body or stature correspondent to their strength and courage; or else whose bold stomachs be discouraged through poverty.
Sir T. More. Utopia, by Robinson, b. i.

Some in France, which will needs be gentlemen, whether men will or no, and have more gentleshippe in their hat than in their head, be at deadlie feude, with both learning and honestie.—Ascham. Schole Master, b. i.

The quene herself shall be led away captive, and her gentlewomen shal mourne as the doues, and grone within theyr heartes.—Bible, 1551. Of Nahum, c. 2.

He lov'd, as was his lot, a lady gent,
That him again lov'd in the least degree;
For she was proud, and of too high intent,
And ioyd to see her louer languish and lament.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

She that was noble, wise, as faire and gent,
Cast how she might their harmlesse lives preserue,
Zeale was the spring whence flow'd her hardiment,
From maiden's shame yet was she loth to swerue.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Boulogne, b. ii. s 17.

What should tempt the cheap swearer to open his black throat as wide as hell, and to belch out his blasphemies against Heaven, and the God of Heaven, but only that he fancies that a well-mouthed oath will make his speech the more stately and genteel.
Hopkins. Ser. On First Commandment.

I will not be drunk in the streets, but I may sleep till I be recovered, and then come forth sober; or if I be overtaken it shall be in civile and gentile company.
Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. Ser. 7.

The surname is the name of the gentilitie and stocke, which the sonne doth take of the father alwaies, as the old Romans did.—Sir T. Smith. Commonwealth, b. iii. c. 8.

Gens in Latine betokeneth the race and sirname, so the Romanes had Cornelios, Sergios, Appios, Fabios, Æmilios, Pisones, Julios, Brutos, Valerios, of which who were agnate, and therefore kept the name, were also gentiles, and remaining the memorie of the glory of their progenitor's fame, were gentlemen of that or that race.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 20.

We few, we happy few, we band of brothers:
For he to day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother: be he ne'er so vile
This day shall gentle his condition.
Shakespeare. Henry V. Act iv. sc. 3.

For, all so soone as life did me admit
Into this world, and shewed heauen's light,
From mother's pap I taken was vnfit,
And straight deliuer'd to a fairy knight
To be vp brought in gentle thewes and martiall might.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

But the fair virgin was so meak and milde,
That she to them vouchsafed to embase
Her goodly port, and to their senses vild
Her gentle speech applide, that in short space
She grew familiar in that desert place.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 7.

Ford. I thinke I shall drinke in pipe-wine first with him, I'll make him dance. Will you go, Gentles?
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iii. sc. 3.

When to the place they came where Artegall
By that same careful squire did them abide,
He gently gan him to demaund of all
That did betwixt him and the squire betide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 1.

But fare you well: perforce I must confesse,
I thought you Lord of more true gentleness.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act ii. sc. 3.

He (Artaxerxes) was a prince of much humanity, and noted for many examples of gentleness.
Ralegh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 7. s. 7.

Gentlemen be those whom their race and bloud, or at the least their vertues do make noble and knowne. The Latines call them nobiles and generosos, as the French do nobles or gentlehommes.—Holinshed. Description of England, c. 5.

Nay, looke you, Carlo: this is my humour now! I have land and money, my friends left me well, and I will be a gentleman whatsoeuer it cost me.
Car. A most gentleman-like resolution.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act i. sc. 2.

If he can derive himselfe from the head of any sept, (as most of them can, they are so expert by their bardes,) then hee holdeth himselfe a gentleman, and thereupon scorneth to worke, or use any hard labour, which, he saith, is the life of a peasant or churle, but thenceforth becometh either an horse boy, or a stocah to some kerne, inuring himselfe to his weapon, and to the gentlemanly trade of stealing, (as they count it.)—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

After that the king put away Edith the Queen onely of displeasure conceyued agaynst her father, and appointed that she should be kept in safe custody in the abby of Rodwell by the Abbess there, without any honourable entertaynement, havyng one gentle-woman only to wait vpon her.—Grafton. Edward the Confessor, an. 1045.

——— If it will please you
To shew vs so much gentrie, and good will,
As to expend your time with vs awhile,
For the supply and profit of our hope,
Your visitation shall receiue such thankes
As fits a king's remembrance.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act ii. sc. 2.

As for our gentry, them to hire they'll let,
And as good cheap as they can them afford.
Branded for slaves, that if they hapt to stray,
Known by the mark, them any one might slay.
Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

But the idle and slouthfull, and such chieflie as shun and auoide labour, liue in great pouertie, and yet will not stick to boast of their nobilitie and gentrie, as though it were more seemely for the honest to lacke, then comely (by exercise of some honest arte) to get their liuing.
Stow. A Description of England, p. 4.

[Such] is the unhappy consequence of too easie yielding at first, till at last the greatest slavery to sin be accounted but good humour, and a gentile compliance with the fashions of the world.—Stillingfleet, vol. i. Ser. 2.

A set of genteel good-natured youths fallen into such a manner of life, would form almost a little academy, and doubtless prove no such contemptible companions, as might not often tempt a wiser man to mingle himself in their diversions, and draw them into such serious sports as might prove nothing less instructing than the gravest lessons.
Spectator, No. 230.

I have long neglected him as being a profligate or (as Mr. Browne more genteely calls him) a privileged writer, who takes the liberty to say any thing, and whose reproach is no scandal.—Waterland. Works, vol. x. p. 414.

He [Parmeggiano] excell'd also both in invention and design, with a genius full of gentileness and spirit, having nothing that was ungracefull in his choice of attitudes, and in the dresses of his figures.—Dryden. Du Fresnoy.

——— The bride
That with her wedding-clothes undresses
Her complaisance and gentilesses.—Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

For what, I pray, is a gentleman, what properties hath he, what qualities are characteristical or peculiar to him, whereby he is distinguished from others and raised above the vulgar? are they not especially two, courage and courtesie? which he that wanteth is not otherwise than equivocally a gentleman, as an image or a carkase is a man; without which gentility in a conspicuous degree is no more than a vain shew, or an empty name.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 21.

If it comes to a justle and competition, gentility must go before Christianity, and fashion take the wall of religion.
South, vol. viii. Ser 6.

Upon the Duke of Monmouth's landing, many of the country-people came in to join him, but very few of the gentry.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1685.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight,
In brakes and brambles hid, and shunning mortal sight.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. ii.

He [the upright man] hath little of the serpent (none of its lurking insidiousness, of its surprising violence, of its rancorous venom, of its keen mordacity) but much of the dove (all its simplicity, its gentleness, its fidelity, its innocence) in his conversation and commerce.
Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 5.

Thus to the Eastern wealth through storms we go;
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more:
A constant trade-wind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore.
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis, s. 305.

It is from this honest heart that I find myself honoured as a gentleman-usher to the arts and sciences.—Spect. No. 532.

Tell a country gentlewoman that the wind is South-West, and the weather louring, and like to rain, and she will easily understand, 'tis not safe for her to go abroad thin-clad, in such a day, after a fever.—Locke. Hum. Und. b. iv. c. 17. s. 4.

But [Mercier] soon returned and took a house in Covent-garden, painting portraits and pictures of familiar life in a genteel style of his own, and with a little of Watteau.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 3.

The debts of honour and the expenses of fashion must first be paid; but the butcher, the baker, and the brewer, may come in perhaps for sixpence in the pound, when their customers are gone abroad to live genteelly at Lisle or Brussels.—V. Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 9.

When he [Sir Godfrey Kneller] had finished the picture of Louis XIV., that Prince asked him what mark of his esteem would be most agreeable to him? he answered modestly and genteely, that if his Majesty would bestow a quarter of an hour on him, that he might make a drawing of his head for himself, he should think it the highest honour he could possibly receive.—Walpole. Anecd. of Paint. vol. iii. c. 4. N.

Next to him [Correggio] Parmeggiano has dignified the genteelness of modern effeminacy, by uniting it with the simplicity of the antients and the grandeur and severity of Michael Angelo.—Sir J. Reynolds, Disc 4.

The World is written in a style different from all the preceding. There is a certain gaiety and gentility diffused over it, which gives it a peculiar grace when considered only as a book of amusement.—V. Knox. Ess. No. 38.

Mrs. Slipslop laughed aloud, and told her, "Her lady was one of the great gentry; and such little paltry gentlewomen, as some folks, who travelled in stage-coaches, would not easily come at her."—Fielding. Joseph Andrews, b. ii. c. 5.

Who knows what cares await the fatal day,
When ruder gusts shall banish gentle May?
Ev'n Death, perhaps, our vallies will invade.
Be gay; too soon the flowers of Spring will fade.
Jones. A Turkish Ode.

Oh, gently on thy suppliant's head,
Dread Goddess, lay thy chastening hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrours clad,
Nor circled with the vengeful band.
Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

This appearance placed me on a level with the best families in the neighbourhood, and accordingly I was visited by all who claimed the rank of gentlefolks.
V. Knox. Ess. No. 166.

Of the words gentilis, gentilhomme, gentleman, two etymologies are produced: 1. from the Barbarians of the fifth century, the soldiers, and at length the conquerors of the Roman Empire, who were vain of their foreign nobility; and, 2. from the sense of the Civilians, who considered gentilis as synonymous with ingenuous. Selden inclines to the first, but the latter is more pure, as well as probable.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 38.

They do not consider the pursuit of game in the liberal light of a gentlemanlike diversion, but view the hare and partridge as provender for the table at once genteel and cheap.—V. Knox. Ess. No. 119.

GE'NTILE, n. GE'NTILE, adj. GE'NTILIZE. GE'NTILISM. GENTI'LITY. GE'NTILISH. GENTILI'TIOUS. GENTILI'TIAL. } See GENT. Fr. Gentil, gentilizer, gentilism, from the Lat. Gentilis, of or pertaining to a nation; applied, as the Gr. Ἐθνεα, heathens, to the nations, not Jews; and thus, to—

An unbeliever, an infidel.

Gentilitious, —of or pertaining to a race, family or nation; national.

I wyll not trouble the readers with the innumerable ceremonyes of the Gentyles, which were comprehended in daunsynges, sens they ought to be noumbred amonge superstytions.—Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. i. c. 20.

Who soeuer from hereticall malice, or gentilical superstition, or Judaicall trechery, or els with brotherly discord, as from the spotted coullour of leprosie, shal bee clensed by the grace of Christ, it is necessary for hym to come to the church, and there shew the true coullour of hys fayth which he hath receaued.—Barnes. Epitome of his Workes, p. 370.

But this thy glory shall be soon retrench'd;
No more shall thou by oracling abuse
The Gentiles. Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

And it maie be that there was in him [Edwin] as in other kings his predecessors, a settled perswasion in Gentilish error, so that neither by admonition nor preaching (though the same had proceeded from the mouth of one allotted to that ministere) he was to be reuoked from the Infidelitie and misbeleefe wherein he was nuzzled and trained up
Holinshed. England, b. v. c. 25.

Now it is true that the Jewish astrologians, savouring of Gentilisme, make these seven angels the prefects of seven planetes; which they seem to have learned in part from the Greek philosophy.—Mede. Works, Dis. 13.

But that an unsavory odour is gentilitious or national unto the Jews, if rightly understood, we cannot well concede; nor will the information of reason or sense induce it.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iv. c. 10.

Nor is it proved, or probable that Sergius changed the name of Boccadi Porco, for this was his surname or gentilitious appellation.—Id. Ib. b. vii. c. 16.

When the people began to espie the falshood of oracles, whereupon all gentilitie was built, their heart were vtterly auerted from it.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 2.

This is not my conjecture, but drawn from God's known denouncement against the gentilizing Israelites.
Milton. Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

We see by these two verses, (Rom. ch. ii. v. 9, 10.) and ch. i. 16. that St. Paul carefully lays it down, that there was now, under the Gospel, no other national distinction between the Jews and the Gentiles, but only a priority in the offers of the Gospel, and in the design of rewards, and punishments, according as the Jews obeyed or not.
Locke. Paraphrase on Romans, c. 2. s. 2.

The helpless condition of the Gentile world in the state of gentilism, signified here by ἀσθενεια, without strength, he terms Col. ii. 13. dead in sin, a state, if any, of weakness.
Id. Ib. c. 5. s. 5.

It is easily seen why the representation of Jesus's being made unto us wisdom and righteousness is particularly addressed to the Gentiles; they most wanted those blessings.
Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 5.

So that what is called natural magic, arose out of the fundamental principles of the Gentile theology; and implied a communion with the natural Gods, and with demons also as their ministers and agents.
Farmer. Examination of Le Moine on Miracles, s. 6.

St Paul, who (as will be shown immediately) adopted this maxim, used it in the sense here assigned it; for he elsewhere censures all the demons of gentilism as mere vanities.
Id. Of the Demoniacs of the New Testament, c. 1. s. 10.

It will, I apprehend, be found upon examination, that, according to the historians, the public devotion was principally directed towards gentilitial, tutelary, and local, deities, the guardians of particular nations and people, such as had been the objects of their former care; and to those greater Gods whom we have before proved to be men.
Id. On the Worship of Human Spirits, c. 3. s. 1.

GENUFLE'XION. Fr. Génuflexion; Lat. Genu, the knee, and flectere, to bend.

Bending the knee, acts of worship expressed by bending the knee.

Boots and shoes are so long snouted, that one can hardly kneel in God's house, where all genuflection and postures of devotion and decency are quite out of use.
Howell, b. iii. Let. 2.

They contented not themselves with the ordinary postures of devotion, such as genuflexion, the bowing of the head or the body, but did, (as one of the ancients speaks) prostrate themselves on the pavement, cover it with their bodies, and wash it with tears of devout joy.—Atterbury, vol. iv. Ser. 7.

These were psalms repeated, genuflexions, scourging, almsgiving, pilgrimages, all of them actions which may be performed without a conversion of mind
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

GE'NUINE. GE'NUINELY. GE'NUINENESS. } Lat. Genuinus, q.d. in'nobis genitum, (Minshew,) born in us, natural. See AUTHENTIC.

Natural, native; and thus, neither spurious nor adulterated.

And when all Wales beside by fortune or by might
Unto her ancient foe resign'd her ancient right,
A constant maiden still she only did remain,
The last her genuine laws which stoutly did retain.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 9.

——— We use
No foreign gums, nor essence fetch'd from far,
No volatile spirits, nor compounds that are
Adulterate; but, at Nature's cheap expence,
With far more genuine sweets refresh the sense.
Carew. To my Friend G. N.

For it can hardly be imagined that he [Apuleius] who was so devout a Pagan, so learned a philosopher, and so witty a man, should be so far imposed upon, by a counterfeit Trismegistick book, and mere Christian cheat, as to bestow translating upon it, and recommend it to the world, as that which was genuinely pagan.—Cudworth. Intel. Sys. p. 328.

To shew how day and night, winter and summer, arise from Copernicus his hypothesis, will not only explain these verses, but exceedingly set out the fitness and genuineness of the hypothesis itself.
More. Song of the Soul, (1647.) Notes, p. 441.

Indeed, if slight and verbal differences, in copies, be a good argument against the genuineness of a writing, we have no genuine writing of any ancient author at this day, for the same thing has happened to all old books whatsoever, that have been often transcribed.—Sharp, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

They must not deny, that there is to be found in nature another agent able to analyse compound bodies less violently, and both more genuinely and more universally than the fire.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 486.

The modern Free-thinker, is a perfect Proteus. He is now a Dissenter, or a Papist; now again a Jew or a Mahometan; and, when closely pressed and hunted through all these shapes, he at length starts up in his genuine form, an Infidel confessed.—Warburton. Dir. Leg. Ded. to the Free thinkers.

But this coxcombically mingling
Of rhymes, unrhyming, interjingling,
For numbers genuinely British
Is quite too finical and skittish.
Byron. Remarks on a Pamphlet, &c.

All writers have agreed in thinking that St. Austin reasoned well, when, in vindicating the genuineness of the Bible, he asked, "What proofs have we that the works of Plato, Aristotle, Cicero, Varro, and other profane authors, were written by those whose names they bear; unless it be that this has been an opinion generally received at all times, and by all those who have lived since these authors."
Watson. Apology for the Bible, Let. 2.

GE'NUS. Lat. Genus, (quod plures partes amplectitur. Cic.) from the ancient Geno, i. e. gign-ere, to beget. Applied to—

A whole race or kind. For the logical use or abuse of the word, see the quotation from Crousaz; and GENERIC.

Rarity and density (which are the proper differences of quantity) cannot change the common nature of quantity, their genus, which, by being so to them, must be univocally in them both.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 14.

In the defining of words, which is nothing but declaring their signification, we make use of the genus, or next general word that comprehends it. Which is not out of necessity, but only to save the labour of enumerating several simple ideas, which the next general word or genus stands for, or, perhaps, sometimes the shame of not being able to do it.
Locke. On Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 3.

When a general idea is indifferently applied to others which are also general it is called genus, and those to which it is applied, are called species of that genus. The idea of figure is the genus; the ideas of triangle and circle are the species.—Crousaz. Art of Thinking, pt. i. c. 3. s. 3.

The Jews would have a king for majesty and splendor, like the Heathens. God permits this, he approves it not. It seems to me, that the Lord renounces the very genus of such kings as are there mentioned.
Ludlow. Memoirs. App. K. Charles's Case, by J. Cooke.

GE'ODE. Gr. Γεωδης, earthly, from γη, the earth.

Nothing, except an outer wall and foss remains; in part of which is a vast stratum of ferruginous geodes.
Pennant. Journey from Chester to London, p. 402.

GEO'GRAPHY. GEOGRA'PHICAL. GEOGRA'PHICALLY. GEO'GRAPHER. } Fr. Géographie; It. and Sp. Geografia; Lat. Geographia; Gr. Γεωγραφια, from γη, the earth, and γραφειν, scribere, describere, to describe.

A description of the earth: of parts of the earth.

[I have] by the helpe of geographie, and chronologie, (which I may call the sunne and the moone, the right eye, and the left of all history,) referred eech particular relation to the due time and place.—Hackluyt. Voyages, Pref.

Wherefore I am of opinion that America by the North-West will be found favourable to this our enterprise, and am the rather imboldened to beleeue the same, for that I finde it not only confirmed by Plato, Aristotle, and other ancient Phylosophers, but also by all the best moderne geographers.—Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 12.

The study of geography is both profitable and delightful; but the writers thereof, though some of them exact enough in setting down longitudes and latitudes, yet in those other relations of manners, religion, government, and such like, accounted geographical, have for the most part missed their proportions.—Milton. A Brief History of Muscovia, Pref.

Wherefore regardlesse here of all geographical scrupulosities, we will say that Gihon is Nilus or Siris, the river of the Æthiopians, that is, of the Just.
H. More. Defence of the Philosophick Cabbala, c. 2.

Curtius, in this place, contrary to the stream of all geographers, would needs place these Amazons upon the borders of Hircania, (lib. vi. c. 10.) whereas Justin sayes, they bordered upon the Albanis, (lib. xlii. c. 3.)
Usher. Annals, an. 3674.

I now live in the house with a child, whom his mother has so well instructed this way in geography, that he knew the limits of the four parts of the world, could readily point, being asked, to any country upon the globe, or any county in the map of England; knew all the great rivers, promontories, straits, and bays in the world, and could find the longitude and latitude of any place, before he was six years old.—Locke. On Education, § 178.

In that vast region of China, which is enriched with so fertile a soil, and compriseth such variety of geographical parallels, they make not (as Semedo informs us) their wine of grapes, but of barley.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 104.

Here [Homer] introduces Minerva to let Ulysses into the knowledge of his country. How does she do this? She geographically describes it to him.

Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. iv. Note by Broome.

I do not say to be a good geographer a man should visit every mountain, river, promontory and creek upon the face of the earth, view the buildings and survey the land every where, as if he were going to make a purchase.

Locke. Of the Conduct of the Understanding, § 2.

It is worthy of observation, that the islands in the Pacific Ocean, which our late voyagers have added to the geography of the globe, have been generally found lying in groupes and clusters, the single intermediate islands as yet undiscovered.—Cook Third Voyage, b. iii. c. 12.

Mowee lies at the distance of eight leagues North North-West from the former [Owhyee,] and is one hundred and forty geographical miles in circumference.—Id. Ib. b. v. c. 6.

Manichæus, or Manes, who was a Chaldean or Babylonian, was born about A. D. 240, and was a learned and ingenious man, and a good astronomer and geographer.

Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

GE'OMANCY. } Fr. Géomantie; Sp. Geomancia; It. and Lat. Geomantia, from γη, the earth, and μαντεια, from μαντις, and this from μαιν-εσθαι, furere, to rave. Cotgrave calls it—
GE'OMANCER.
GEOMA'NTICK.

Divination by points and circles made on the earth.

What say we of hem that beleven on divinales, as by flight or by noise of briddes or bestes, or by sorte of geomancie, &c.

Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

The crafte, whiche that Saturnus fonde
To make pikes in the sonde,
That geomancie cleped is,
Full ofte he vseth it amis.—Gower. Con. A. b. vi.

He taught them there openlye bothe in Latine and Greke, beside the art Magyck, Sortilege, Phisnomy, Palmestry, Alcumy, Necromancy, Chyromancy, Geomancy, and Witchery, that was taughte there also.—Bale. Votaries, pt. i.

Fortune-tellers, juglers, geomancers, and the like incantatory imposters, though commonly men of inferior rank, and from whom without illumination they can expect no more than from themselves, do daily and professedly delude them.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. i. c. 3.

Why do Geomancers imitate the quintuple figure in their mother characters of aquisition and amission, &c. somewhat answering the figures in the lady or speckled beetle?

Id. Cyrus' Garden, c. 5.

Two geomantic figures were display'd
Above his head, a warrior and a maid,
One when direct, and one when retrograde.

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite, b. iii.

GEO'METRY. } Fr. Géométrie; It. Sp. and Lat. Geometria; Gr. Γεωμετρια; from γη, the earth, and μετρ-ειν, to measure.
GEO'METER.
GEOME'TRICK.
GEOME'TRICAL.
GEOME'TRICALLY.
GEOMETRI'CIAN.
GEO'METRIZE.

A measuring of the earth; technically restricted to that science which is applied to the measurement of extension.

For in the lond ther nas no craftes man,
That geometrie, or arsemetrike can,
Ne portreiour, ne kerver of images,
That Theseus ne yaf him mete and wages,
The theatre for to maken and devise.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1900.

——— Geometrie,
Through which a man hath the sleight
Of length, of brede, of depth, of height.

Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

The cargazon being taken out, and the goods freighted in tenne of our ships for London, to the end that the bigness, heighth, length, breadth, and other dimensions of so huge a vessell might, by the exact rules of geometricall observations be truly taken, both for present knowledge, and derivation also of the same vnto posterity, one M. Robert Adams, a man in his faculty of excellent skill, omitted nothing in the description, which either his arte could demonstrate, or any man's iudgment thinke worthy the memory.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 198.

But geometry especially, which Philo calleth the mother city, and mistresse commanding the rest: doth divert and gently withdraw by little and little, the mind purified and cleansed from the cogitation of sensual things.

Holland. Plutarch, p. 629.

In the use of things is seen that relation, which answers in some sort, into geometrick proportion.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

For Lycurgus, as you know very well, chased out of Lacedæmon arithmetical proportion as a popular thing, turbulent and apt to make commotions; but he brought in the geometrical, as befitting the civil and modest government of some few wise sages, and a lawful royalty and regal dominion: for the former giveth equally unto all according to number; but the other unto every one by reason, and with regard of desert and worthinesse, this (geometrical) proportion (I say) maketh no confusion of all together, but in it there is an apparent discretion and distinction between the good and the bad, dealing always unto every one their own, not by the balance or lot, but according to the difference of vice and virtue.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 629.

The equality which the common sort seeketh after, and is indeed the greatest injustice that may be, God taketh out of the world, as much as possibly may be, observeth that which is fit and meet for every one according to desert and worthinesse, going herein geometrically to work, by reason and law defining and distributing accordingly.—Id. Ib.

Besides which I will further by line geometricallie measure foorth all the land of Scotland, to be divided into those that deserue the same, according to the merits of the men.

Holinshed. Historie of Scotland, an. 1313.

It is certain, that our humane souls themselves are not always conscious of whatever they have in them; for even the sleeping geometrician hath at that time all the geometrical theorems and knowledges some way in him; as also the sleeping musician all his musical skill and songs: and therefore why may it not be possible for the soul to have likewise some actual energie in it, which it is not expressly conscious of?—Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 160.

To see that nothing therein came by chance, but that all things were disposed, according to their nature and use, in number and measure, by the magnificent architect, who in the one did every where geometrize as well as in the other.

Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. iv. c. 8.

And some resemblance there is of this order in the eggs of some butterflies and moths, as they stick upon leaves and other substances; which being dropped from behinde, not directed by the eye, doth neatly declare how nature geometrizeth, and observeth order in all things.

Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 3.

When he has once got such an acquaintance with the globes, as is above mentioned, he may be fit to be tried a little in geometry; wherein I think the first six books of Euclid enough for him to be taught. For I am in some doubt, whether more to a man of business be necessary or useful.—Locke. On Education, s. 181.

The commonwealth of learning would loose too many useful observations and experiments, and the history of nature would make too slow a progress, if it were presumed, that none but geometers and mechanicians should employ themselves about writing any part of that history.

Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 473.

By the time he was six, he could manage a compass, ruler, and pencil, very prettily, and perform many little geometrical tricks, and advanced to writing and arithmetick.

Locke. From Mr. Molineux, Aug. 1695.

In the year 1657, those very ingenious and great men, Mr. William Neile, and my Lord Brounker, and Sir Christopher Wren, afterwards, in the same year, geometrically demonstrated the equality of some curves to a strait line.

Derham. Physico-Theology, b. v. c. 1. Note 13.

But as I do not pretend to have taken that pains, which else I might have done, to become a speculative geometrician; so I consider, that without understanding as much of the abstruser part of geometry as Archimedes, or Appollonius, one may understand enough to be assisted by it in the contemplation of nature; and that one needs not know the profoundest mysteries of it, to be able to discern its usefulness.

Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 425.

Wherefore, as to the exquisite uniformity of shape, which is so admired in gems, and is thought to demonstrate their being formed by a seminal and geometrizing principle, &c.

Id. Ib. vol. iii. p. 533.

If this kind of demonstration is not permitted, the process of reasoning called deductio ad absurdum, which even the severity of geometry does not reject, could not be employed at all in legislative discussions.

Burke. Letter to a Member of the National Assembly.

Surveying a place, according to my idea, is taking a geometrical plan of it, in which every place is to have its true situation, which cannot be done in a work of this nature.

Cook. Second Voyage, b. iii. c. 7.

And yet the best philosophy, proceeding on geometrical principles, hath informed us, that possibly all the solid matter in the universe, may be comprised within a narrowness of limit still more astonishing than even that immensity through which we find it dilated and expanded.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 2.

To show how compatible are mathematics with the absence of sentiment and imagination, we may recollect, that a famous geometrician after reading one of the finest tragedies ever written, asked, "But what does it prove? What does it demonstrate?"—V. Knox. Remarks on Grammar Schools.

GEOPONIC. } Gr. Γεωπονικος, from Γεωπο-
GEOPO'NICAL. } νειν, terram colere, to till the earth; from γη, the earth, and πονειν, to labour, to work.

Pertaining to the tillage or cultivation of the earth by labour; agriculture.

To add yet further, those geoponical rules and precepts of agriculture which are delivered by divers authors, are not to be generally received: but respectively understood unto climes whereto they are determined.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 3.

[It] freely receives the wholesome blasts of the North wind (much accounted of among builders and geoponics for immission of pure air,) coming in from that part which lies open to the sea.—Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 10.

GEORGE. The insignia of St. George.

Rich. Harp not on that string, madam, that is past.
Now by my George, my Garter, and my Crowne—
Qu. Prophan'd, dishonour'd, and the third usurpt.
Rich. I swear.—Shakespeare. Rich. III. Act iv. sc. 4.

GEORGE. The local or temporary reason for the application of this word to bread of a particular kind is mere matter of conjecture.

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free?
Stark, staring mad, that thou wou'dst tempt the sea?
Cubb'd in a cabin, on a mattrass laid,
On a brown george, with lowsie swobbers fed,
Dead wine that stinks of the borachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasie maple cup?

Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5. v. 215.

GE'ORGICK, n. } Fr. Géorgiques; It. Geor-
GE'ORGICK, adj. } giche; Sp. Georgicas; Lat. Georgica; Gr. Γεωργικος, from γεωργης, (γη, the earth, and εργον, work,) a labourer, a tiller of the earth. Applied to—

Books concerning the tillage or cultivation of the earth or ground.

Here, if we mix with company, 'tis such
As can say nothing, though they talk too much,
Here we learn georgics, here the bucolics,
Which building's cheapest, timber, stone, or brick.

Brome. To his Friend W. C.

A georgic, therefore, is some part of the science of husbandry put into a pleasing dress, and set off with all the beauties and embellishments of poetry.

Addison. On Virgil's Georgics.

Here I peruse the Mantuan's Georgic strains,
And learn the labours of Italian swains:
In every page I see new landscapes rise,
And all Hesperia opens to my eyes.

Gay. Rural Sports, c. 1.

The very ingenious translator [Dr. Martin] of Virgil's eclogues and georgics, gives the name of this bird to the acalanthis or acanthis:

Littoraque alcyonen resonant, acanthida dumi.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Goldfinch.

GE'RFAULCON. Fr. Gerfaut, grefaut; It. Gerfalcone; Sp. Girafalte; Dut. Gier-walk; Ger. Ger-falch; Mid. Lat. Gyro-falcus. "Perhaps," says Skinner, "a gyrando quia gyros in aere ducit," because it forms circles in the air. He, however, prefers the etymology of Minshew, from ghier, a vulture, and valck, a falcon; because it is a species of falcon, and resembles the vulture in voracity. (See FALCONRY.) Holland renders the Lat. Vultur, Geire.

But the principal hawke yt breedeth in the country is counted ye gerfaulcon.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 479

Yef thou be nouht so bryght,
Wyth Gyffroun I mot fyght,
To wynne the gerfaucoun.

Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

A gerfaukon whyt as swan
He shall have to mede.

Id. Ib.

The manner of the Geirer is to fore-see a carnage, and to flie two or three days before unto the place where there will be any carions or dead carkasses.—Holland. Plin. b. x. c. 6.

——— From Plintimmon's steepy top
The staunch gerfaulcon through the buxom air
Stoops on the steerage of his wings, to truss
The quarry.

Phillips. Cerealia.

This is the gyrfalco of all the ornithologists except Linnæus, whose bird we are totally unacquainted with.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Gyrfalcon.

GE'RFUL. } Mr. Tyrwhitt says, — changeable. Probably from Girer, to GE'RY. } turn round. Skinner, from the A. S. Cerran, gecerran, vertere, to turn. In Skelton it seems to be giddy, (sc.) with turning round. See GERFALCON.

Right as the Friday sothly for to tell,
Now shineth it, and now it raineth fast,
Right so can gery Venus overcast
The hertes of hire folk, right as hire day
Is gerfull right so changeth she aray.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1540.

To preue in that thy gierful violence.—Id. Troilus, b. iii.

His second hawke waxed gerye,
And was with flying wery.—Skelton. Ware the Hawke.

GERM. }
GE'RMEN. }
GE'RMINATE, v. } Fr. Germe, germer; It. Germinare; Sp. Germinar; Lat. Germinare, from germen, quod
GERMINA'TION. } e semine genitur, hoc est, pul-
GE'RMINANT. } lulat atque assurgit. And also, illud in semine, cui vis inest genitalis; unde quid pullulare incipit; wherefore Vossius thinks, that germen is not a gerendo, quasi gerimen, but a genendo, quasi genimen; by a common change of n into r. To germinate is, as the Fr. Germer,—

"To sprout, bud, burgeon, spring, put forth, shute out young sprigs, buds, tenderels," &c. (Cotgrave.)

The skin [of a bean] broken, can it chuse (by reason of the heat that is in it) but push out more matter, and do that action which we may call germinating? can these germs chuse but pierce the earth in small strings, as they are able to make their way.—Digby Of Bodies, c. 24.

——— And thou all shaking Thunder,
Strike flat the thicke rotundity o' th' world,
Cracke Nature's moulds, all germaines spill at once
That makes ingratefull man
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

This terrestrial efformation of Adam was after the planting of Paradise, according to the wiser sort of them that understand the text only literally, who acknowledge that Paradise was made on the third day, when God caused the trees to germinate out of the earth.
H. More. Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala, App.

There 's but little similitude betwixt a terreous humidity and plantal germinations; nor do vegetable derivations ordinarily resemble their simple seminalities.
Digby. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 21.

Divine prophecies being of the nature of their author, with whom a thousand years are but as one day, are not fulfilled punctually at once, but have springing and germinant accomplishment throughout many ages; though the height or fulness of them may refer to some one age.
Bacon. Advancement of Learning, b ii.

Till gentle heat, and soft repeated rains,
Make the green blood to dance within their veins:
Then, at their call emboldened, out they come,
And swell the germs, and burst the narrow room.
Dryden. The Flower and the Leaf.

The cicatricula of an egg, or the germen in the seed of a plant, being, in reality, a model of the animal, or plant, to be produced from it; the wonderful minuteness of a machine, at once so very little, and so curious, does abundantly recommend the matchless skill of the divine mechanist.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 794.

And for the security of such species as are produc'd only by seed, it hath endued all seed with a lasting vitality, that so if by reason of excessive cold, or drought, or any other accident, it happen not to germinate the first year, it will continue its fœcundity, I do not say two or three, nor six or seven, but even twenty or thirty years.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. i.

Plants are sometimes lost for a while in places where they formerly abounded; and again, after some years, appear anew; lost either because the springs were not proper for their germination, or because the land was fallowed, or because plenty of weeds or other herbs prevented their coming up, and the like: and appearing again when these impediments are removed.—Id. Ib.

I had sometimes the curiosity to consider beans and peas pulled up out of the ground by the stalks, in order to an inquiry into their germination; and after having taken notice of their tumidness upon their having imbibed the moisture of the soil, and of their way through the ambient earth, not only upwards with their stems, but downwards with their tender roots; I thought fit to try with what strength and force the causes of their intumescence endeavoured to dilate them.—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 310.

He marks the bounds, which Winter may not pass,
And blunts his pointed fury, in it's case,
Russet and rude, folds up the tender germ,
Uninjur'd, with inimitable art;
And ere one flowery season fades and dies,
Designs the blooming wonders of the next.
Cowper. The Task, b. vi.

A second admirable provision is made to raise them [seeds] above the surface when they are perfected, and to sow them at a proper distance, viz. the germ grows up in the spring, upon a fruit stalk, accompanied with leaves.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 20.

Yes, manhood's warm meridian sun
Shall ripen what in Spring begun:
Thus infant roses, ere they blow,
In germinating clusters grow;
And only wait the summer's ray,
To burst and blossom to the day.—Cotton, Vis. 8 Life.

They are conscious that they cannot give a full account of any one phenomenon in nature, from the rotation of the great orbs of the universe to the germination of a blade of grass, without having recourse to him as the primary incomprehensible cause of it.
Watson. Apology for Christianity, Let. 1.

Can it be doubted but that the seed contains a particular organization? Whether a latent plantule with the means of temporary nutrition, or whatever else it be, it encloses an organization suited to the germination of a new plant.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 4.

GE'RMAN. Fr. Germaine; Lat. Germanus, de eodem germine, vel eâdem genitrice manantes. Festus and (after him) Vossius decide for the former; Varro and Isidorus, for the latter. Vossius contends that those descended from the same father, not those from the same mother (genitrix) were called germani. German, as the Fr. Germaine, is applied to—

"Those who are come of the same stock, (or germ,) bred of the same kind; near of kin; of all one race," (Cotgrave.)

For certis ye ne han no child but a doughter, ne ye ne han no bretheren, ne cosines germains, ne non other high kinrede.—Chaucer. The Tale of Melibeus.

But as he walked nere the water whiche was in the border of bothe Galilees, he espied two brothers germayn, the name of the one was Symon, & he was called also Peter, the other was named Andrew, whose father's name was John.
Udal. Matthew, c. 4.

Captayne therin was Syr Olyuer of Clyson, cosyn germayne to ye Lorde Clysson.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 67.

Ger. The carriages, sir, are the hangers.
Ham. The phrase would be more germaine to the matter, if we could carry cannon by our sides.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act v. sc. 2.

GE'RUND. } A generali notione (gerendi)
GE'RUNDIVE. } Grammatici gerundia dixerunt, quod rei gestæ gerendæve habeant significationem. See Vossius and Sanctius, lib. iii. c. 8, and Scaliger, de Causis, c. 143.

You and your Latine ends shall go shift solus cum solâ together else, and then if ever they get ends of gold and silver enough to serve that gerundive maw of yours, that without do will end in di and dum instantly.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit at Several Weapons, Act i. sc. 1.

The most common of these is joined in all its inflexions to a multitude of Arabick gerunds or verbal nouns, as well as Persian adjectives and participles.
Sir W. Jones. Grammar of the Persian Language.

The world is governed by names; and with the word pedagogue has been ludicrously associated the idea of a pedant a mere plodder, a petty tyrant, a gerund-grinder, and a bum-brusher.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 59.

GEST. }
GE'STOUR. } Lat. Gesta, from gerere, things done, deeds, exploits: the proper
GE'STICK. } business of a gestour was to recite tales or gestes, (Tyrwhitt.)

Henry of Huntyngton he wrote the gestes olde, & sais in his sermon that newe ere now told.
R. Brunne, p. 111.

Trow ye that gleym of that gest, that Golias is yeal'd.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

The Romain gestes maken remembrance
Of many a verray trewe wif also.
Chaucer. The Merchantes Tale, v. 10,158.

Do come, he sayd, my mynestrales
And gestours for to tellen tales
Anon in min arming,
Of romances that ben reales
Of Popes and of Cardinales
And eke of love longing.
Id. The Rime of Sire Thopas, v. 13,775.

Fyfty elodede [clothed] gestours,
To many men he dede honoure,
In countreys fer and nere. Launfal. Ritson, vol. i.

This manner of gest made many doubt whether Marius showed this woman [Martha] openly, believing indeed that she had the gift of prophecy or else that knowing the contrary, he made as though he did believe it, to help her fainting.—North. Plutarch, p. 330.

They were two knights of peerlesse puissaunce,
And famous farre abroad for warlike gest,
Which to these ladies loue did countenaunce,
And to his mistres each himself to aduaunce.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

Thou high director of the same,
Assist mine artlesse pen,
To write the gests of Britons stout,
And actes of English men.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 1.

And surely no ceremonies of dedication, no not of Solomon's temple itself, are comparable to those sacred gests whereby this place was sanctified.
Mede. Works, b. ii. On Churches.

——— Dames of ancient days
Have led their children thro' the mirthful maze;
And the gay grandsire skill'd in gestic lore,
Has frisk'd beneath the burden of threescore.
Goldsmith. The Traveller.

GEST. "Fr. Giste; a bed, couch, lodging, place to lye on, or rest in," (Cotgrave;) from the verb gésir, to lie, and this from the Lat. Jacere, (Menage.) Written by Hammond, gesse, and by Webster, geese.

Mr. Nares quotes from Kersey; "A lodging or stage for rest in a progress or journey."

——— When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'le giue him my commission,
To let him there a moneth, behind the gest
Prefix'd for's parting.—Shakes. Winter's Tale, Act I. sc. 2.

——— Those words I'll make thee answer
With thy heart's blood
Flam. Do, like the geese in the progress.
You know where you shall find me.
Webster. Vittoria Corombona, Act v.

When God hath design'd the cross, the constant post and stage in our gestes to heaven, we must needs set up another œconomy, fansie it a kingdom.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 485.

GESTA'TION. } Fr. Gestation; Lat. Gestatio, from gestare, to carry, from gerere, gestum.
GESTA'TORY. }
A bearing or carrying.

Of gestation, that is to say, where one is caryed, and is of another thynge meued, and not of hymselfe. There is also another kynde of exercise which is called gestation, and is mixt with mouyng and rest.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 34.

But nothing is there more holesome than walking and gestation; which is an exercise performed many wayes.
Holland. Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 4.

The crowns and garlands of the ancients were either gestatory, such as they wore about their heads and necks, &c
Sir T. Brown. Miscell p. 90.

The wisdom and design of this texture doth in no instance more clearly appear, than in the necessity of it for the womb in the time of gestation.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

All birds are oviparous. This likewise carries on the work of gestation with as little increase as possible to the weight of the body. A gravid uterus would have been a troublesome burthen to a bird in its flight.—Paley. Nat. Theol. c. 12.

GESTICULATE. } Lat. Gesticulari; gestare, gestum, past part.
GESTICULA'TION. } of gerere, to bear or GESTICULA'TORY. } carry. Gesture,—
GE'STURE, v. } Gest is used by Spen-
GE'STURE, n. } ser as the Fr. Geste, i. e.
GEST. } Bearing, carriage; bearing or carriage of the body; position or posture of the limbs; general action or motion of the body.

Gesticulate,—to employ, show or exhibit gestures, postures, actions or motions of the limbs.

Portly his person was, and much increast
Through his heroicke grace, and honorable gest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 3.

Good troth, if I knew any man so vile
To act the crimes, these whippers reprehend,
Or what their servile apes gesticulate,
I should not then much muse, their shreds were liked.
Since ill men have a lust t'heare others sinne,
And good men have a zeale to heare sinne sham'd.
B. Jonson. Poetaster. To the Reader.

At which, [a strange and suddain musique] they fell into a magical dance, full of præposterous change and gesticulations.—Id. The Masque of Queenes.

When suddenly they leape forth below; a mistress leading them, and with antick gesticulation and action, after the manner of the old pantomimi.

B. Jonson. Love's Triumph through Callipolis.

Tullie saieth well: The gesture of man is the speech of his bodie, and therefore reason it is, that like as the speeche must agree to the mater, so must also the gesture agree to the minde.—Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 225.

It [our Common Prayer] hath in their eye too great affinite with the form of the Church of Rome; it differeth too much from that which churches elsewhere reformed allow and observe; our attyre disgraceth it: it is not orderly read nor gestured as beseemeth.—Hooker Eccles. Politie, b. v. § 27.

[His young nephew, Lord Viscount Fielding] undertaking so to gesture and mutile up himself in his hood, as the duke's manner was to ride in cold weather, that none should discern him from him; and so he should be at the more liberty for his own defence.—Reliquiæ Wottonianæ, p. 229.

For the plaiers, who were sent for out of Hetruria, as they daunced the measures to the minstrel and sound of flute, gestured not undecently withall, after the Tuscane fashion.

Holland. Livius, p. 250.

And now my wand'ring thoughts are not confin'd
Unto one woman, but to woman-kind:
This for her shape I love; that for her face;
This for her gesture or some other grace.

Carew. The Spark.

Morpheus of all his numerous train express'd
The shape of man, and imitated best;
The walk, the words, the gesture could supply,
The habit mimic, and the mien holy.

Dryden. Ovid. Metam. b. xi.

Story-telling is therefore not an art, but what we call a knack; it doth not so much subsist upon wit as upon humour, and I will add, that it is not perfect without proper gesticulations of the body, which naturally attend such merry emotions of the mind.—Guardian, No. 42.

Indeed, that standing is not so simple a business as we imagine it to be, is evident from the gesticulations of a drunken man, who has lost the government of the centre of gravity.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 11.

Where the mind is strongly agitated, and under no restraint from a sense of decorum, or solicitude for character, loud laughter, jumping, dancing, and the most wild and extravagant gestures, indicate the frolicksomeness of the heart.—Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

GET, v.
GE'TTER.
GE'TTING, n.

A. S. Gettan, begettan. See BEGET.

To gain, to acquire, to reach, to attain, to obtain, to procure, to procreate, to produce, to generate.

To get has various consequential usages.

To produce, to educe, to draw out.

To, or to cause to, obtain or attain; and thus—to possess, to be or put in possession.

To get over, gain, (sc.) the mastery or victory, to overcome.

To get his part, (in Churchill,) to gain or acquire a knowledge of it; and thus—to learn.

It is applied to any motion, by which the gaining or reaching another specific place or position is effected; as to get to land, i. e. to gain it, reach it. Get thee away; get thee gone; get up.

To reach, attain, arrive at, (sc.) some other place or position.

Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "Fr. Gette, fashion, behaviour, With that false get; with that cheating contrivance."

Him thought he rode all of the newe get.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 684.

And with his stikke, above the crosselet,
That was ordained with that false get,
He stirreth the coles.

Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,745.

Also ther is another newe gette,
All foule waste of cloth and excessif.

Ocleve. Quoted by Tyrwhitt.

Armour thei had plente, and god besquite [good biscuit] to mete,
It sanke son in the se, half myght thei not gete.

R. Brunne, p. 171.

Which bi feith ouercamen rewmes, wroughten rightwisenesse, gaten repromysiouns.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 11.

A wise woman wol besie hire ever in on
To geten hir love, ther as she hath none.

Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 57,312.

Ne children shuld I non upon hire geten.

Id. The Merchantes Tale, v. 9311.

It is no wonder though they be fat
With false othes her loues they gat.—Id. Rom. of the R.

The loy is so short lasting
And but in hap is the getting.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R

They set her science for winning
And haunt her craft for great getting. Id. Ib.

For no man of his counsaile knoweth,
What he may gette of his michynge.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

They said to the Kyng of Englande, syr, we see no cause why we shulde make defyance to the Frenche Kyng, all thynges consydred, without ye can gette thagrement of themperor, and that he wolde commaunde vs to do so in his name.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. i. c. 32.

The chefe poynte of wysdome is, that thou be wyllynge to opteyne wisdome, and before all thy goodes to get vnderstanding.—Bible, 1551. Proverbs, c. 4.

In whose tyme and by whose occasion, what aboute the gettynge of the garlande, kepyng it, leasyng and wynnynge againe, it hath coste more English blud than hath the twise wynnynge of Fraunce.—Hall. Edw. V.

"Me list not," said the Elfin knight, "receave
Thing offred, till I know it well be gott."

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Of all the ornaments of knightly name,
With which whylome he gotten had great fame.

Id. Ib. b. v. c. 5.

Peace is a very apoplexy, lethargie, mull'd, deafe, sleepey insensible, a getter of more bastard children, then warres a destroyer of men.—Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iv. sc. 5.

The soothsayer whom he employ'd, had received a great reward of Cyrus, for conjecturing aright, that Artaxerxes would not give battle in ten days: hee therefore having preserved his money carefully was desirous to be soon at home, that he might freely enjoy his gettings.

Raleigh. History of the World, b. iii. c. 10. s. 13.

But the gunpowder plot, there was a get-penny.

B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act v. sc. 1.

Here wisdom calls: "Seek Virtue first, be bold!
As gold to silver, virtue is to gold."
There, London's voice, "Get money, money still!
And then let Virtue follow if she will."

Pope. Imitations of Horace, b. i. Ep. 1.

Being ill used by the above-mentioned widow, he was very serious for a year and a half; and tho' his temper being naturally jovial, he at last got over it, he grew careless of himself and never dressed afterwards.—Spectator, No. 2.

Do but seriously set yourselves to be good, do but get your hearts deeply affected with religion as well as your heads, and then there is no fear but you will all be sons of peace.

Sharpe, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Revolve the getter's joy, and loser's pain,
And think if it be worth thy while to gain.

Rowe. Golden Verses of Pythagoras.

Behold Sir Balaam, now a man of spirit,
Ascribes his gettings to his parts and merit;
What late he call'd a blessing, now was wit,
And God's good providence, a lucky hit.

Pope. Moral Essays, Ep. 3.

For it is exceedingly little, were all things well considered, that we can almost ever get by wickedness: but what we may suffer by it, is infinite.—Secker, vol. i. Ser. 2.

How then comes it to pass that with a mind thus constituted, thus thirsting after light, men can sometimes bring themselves to do such violence to their nature, as to choose darkness, in that very point where it is of the utmost importance to have all the light they can possibly get.

Portens, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Lo Yates!—Without the least finesse of art
He gets applause,—I wish he'd get his part.

Churchill. The Rosciad.

GE'WGAW, n.
GE'WGAW, adj.

Gewgawes, nugæ speciosæ, infantum deliciæ, (Skinner.) A. S. Ge-gaf, nugæ, toyes, trifles, gugawes or gugauds, (Somner.) "Gegaf," says Tooke, "is the participle of the verb ge-gif-an; and means any such trifling thing as is given away, or presented to any one. Gew-gawes is sometimes written Gi-gawes, and Gewgaudes." See GAUDE.

And of Holy Scriptures fawes
He counteth them for gigawes.—Skelton, p. 171. (ed. 1736.)

And where as men do honour you as auncient personnes, ye shew yourselfe wanton: and whanne folk renne to sē gewgawes ye are not the last.

Golden Boke. Let. from the Emperor to Claudius & his Wife.

Sir, as we like of your preaching, so we dislike not of our libertie. You tell vs of many gugawes and estrange dreames.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 4.

May not Morose, with his gold,
His gewgaudes, and the hope she has to send him
Quickly to dust, excite this?

Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman's Prize, Act i. sc. 4.

Your wants are never-ending: and those supplies
That came to stop those breaches, are ever lavisht
Before they reach the main, in toys and trifles,
Gew-gaws and gilded puppets.

Beaum. & Fletch. Four Playes in One.

Such painted puppets, such a varnish'd race
Of hollow gewgaws, only dress and face!

Pope. Satires of Donne, Sat. 4.

But, if you're fond of baubles, be, and starve,
Your gewgaw reputation still preserve:
Live upon modesty and empty fame,
Foregoing sense for a fantastic name.

Rochester. The Advice

No—the man's morals were exact, what then?
'Twas his ambition to be seen of men;
His virtues were his pride: and that one vice
Made all his virtues gewgaws of no price.—Cowper. Truth

Suppose we now—we may suppose
In verse what would be sin in prose—
The sky with darkness overspread,
And ev'ry star retir'd to bed;
The gewgaw robes of pomp and pride
In some dark corner thrown aside.

Churchill. The Ghost, b. iv.

GHESS, v.
GHESS, n.

i. e. GUESS, qv.

It was not long before he overtooke
Sir Sanglier, (so cleped was the knight)
Whom at the first he ghessed by his looke,
And by the other marks which of his shield he tooke.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v.

Ptoleme nameth it Manapia, but whie he appropriateth that name to this citie, neither dooth he declare, nor I ghesse.

Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 5.

——— Do you know the villain, lady?
Mer. No.
The. Not by ghess?
Mer. Oh no.

Beaum. & Fletch. The Queen of Corinth, Act ii. sc. 1.

GHOST, v.
GHOST, n.
GHO'STLIKE.
GHO'STLY.
GHOST-COMPELLING.

A. S. Gast; Ger. Geist; Dut. Gheest. Skinner thinks that this word, as the Gr. Πνευμα, and Lat. Spiritus, meant breath, air; and that by the Germans and A. S., upon their conversion to Christianity, it was applied ad animas et angelos. An angel or spiritual messenger is in A. S. emphatically described as Godes errende-gast; God's errand-ghost. Somner says, Gast, spiritus, pneuma, a spirit, a ghost, item, anima, the soule, the spirit or ghost of a man; and he suggests the A. S. Gest, hospes, a guest; the soul being the body's guest. It may be remarked that gasted in Lear, (see GAST,)

Gasted by the noise I made
Full suddenly he fled;

and ghosted in Antony & Cleopatra, (notwithstanding the particular allusion,) and also ghosts in Burton, appear to have a very similar signification; that ghastly and ghostly are not in writers very clearly distinguishable; that gazed, (see AGHAST,) is nearly equivalent to the Lat. Spectrum, visum, visio; and that, therefore, ghost, may have originally meant—

Any thing seen, a vision, or spectre, a spirit or spiritual spectre: generally, spirit, a soul.

He was in poynt to geide the gaste, & sone to die.

R. Brunne, p. 185.

He lyued bot thre daies, & gald to God the gaste.

Id. p. 52.

For Godes blessede body, hit bar for oure bote
And hit a fereth the feonde for euch is the myzte
May no gryaliche gost, glyde ther hit shadeweth.

Piers Ploughman, p. 365.

Forsothe Jhesus eftsoone criede with a greet voys and gaf up the goost, [In A. S. asende (sent forth) hys gast.]

Wiclif. Matthew, c. 27.

And the bodies of hem schulen ligge in the streetis of the gret citee that is clepid goostli Sodom.—Id. Apocalips.

But I bequethe the service of my ghost
To you aboven every creature,
Sin that my lif ne may no lenger dure.

Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2770.

O mother maide, O maide and mother free,
O blushe unbrent, brenning in Moyses sight,
That ravishedest doun fro the deitee,
Thurgh thin humblesse, the goost that in thee alight.

Id. The Prioresses Tale, v. 13,440.

The morow came, and ghostly for to speke,
This Diomede is come vnto Creseide.

Id. Troilus, b. i. p. 190.

Is for to warne you as I can endite
That time lost in youth folily
Greueth a wight bodily and ghostly.
Chaucer. Scogan to the Lords & Gentilmen.

But euery prelate holde his see,
With all suche as he mate geato
Of lusty drinke of lusty meate,
Wherof the body fatte and full,
Is vnto gostely labour dulle
And slough to handle thilke plough.—Gower. Con. A. b.v.

Sir Ywayn and hys and his damysele
Went ful sone til a chapele,
And thar thai hard a mes in haste,
That was said of the haly gaste.
Ywaine & Gawin. Ritson, vol. I.

Answer was made to them, that the mischief should cease, If they had once appeased Minerva, for working so wickedly against her godhed, and the ghostes of them that they had slain.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 93.

Now maketh he a triall how much his disciples haue profited ghostly, proning whether suche things be done in them spiritually, as in other haue been wrought corporally, & by dark figures.—Udal. Mark, c. 8.

Ye shall not teache carnall thinges as the Pharisees haue dooen hitherto, but ghostly things: and great trouble shall ye haue for preaching of my ghospel.
Id. The Actes of the Apostles, c. 1.

——— I do not know,
Wherefore my father should reuengers want,
Hauing a sonne and friends, since Julius Cæsar,
Who at Philippi the good Brutus ghosted,
There saw you labouring for him.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act II. sc. 6.

Aske not with him in the poet, Larvæ hunc intemperiæ insaniæque agitant senem? What madness ghosts this old man, but what madness ghosts us all.
Burton. Anat. of Melan. Democritus to the Reader.

——— On every side them stood
The trembling ghosts with sad, amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stonie eies: and all the helhish brood
Of feends infernall flockt on every side,
To gaze on earthly wight, that with the night durst ride.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I.

The aged and impotent creatures, women in childbed and yoong children that could not shift for themselues, were vnmercifully slaine and thrust vpon speares, and shaken vp in the aire, where they yeelded vp their innocent ghosts in most pitiful wise.—Holinshed. Edward I. an. 1296.

Thy thinne checke, hollow eye,
And ghostlike colour speake the mystery
Thou wouldst, but canst not live by.
Nabbes. Hannibal & Scipio. Their Ghost to the Authour.

What I shall leave thee none can tell,
But all shall say I wish thee well;
I wish thee, Vin, before all wealth,
Both bodily and ghostly health.
Corbet. To his Son Vincent Corbet.

The ghosts rejected, are th' unhappy crew
Depriv'd of sepulchres, and funeral due,
The boatman Charon, those the bury'd host,
He ferries over to the farther coast.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. vi.

For sundry years before he [Henry's] did complain,
And told his ghostly confessor his pain
Id. The Hind and the Panther.

For when the ghost-compelling God
Forms his black troops with horrid rod,
He will not, lenient to the breath
Of prayer, unbar the gates of death.
Francis. Horace, b. I. Ode 25.

We are told, that Pythagoras's popular account of earthquakes was, that they were occasioned by a synod of ghosts assembled underground.
Warburton. The Divine Legation, b. III. s. 2.

Nothing, 'tis said, each lov'd so well,
Leave but her ghostly father out,
Nay in some hearts not void of grace,
One plain historian makes no doubt
The parrot of the priest took place.—Cooper. Var-Vert.

GIA'MBEUX. Boots or armour for the legs, (Fr. Jambeux.) Jambeux is used by Chaucer in Sir Topas.

The mortall steel dispiteously entayld
Deepe in their flesh, quite through the iron walles,
That a large purple streame adown their giambeux falles.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. II. c. 6.

GI'ANT, n. GI'ANT, adj. GI'ANTESS. GI'ANTLY. GI'ANTLESS. GI'ANTSH P. GI'ANTISM. } Fr. Géant; It. and Sp. Gigante; Lat. Gigas; Gr. Γιγας, (perhaps) from γινεσθαι, to be or cause to be, and γα, Dor. for γη, the earth, q.d. γηγενης, earth-born, terrigena; an epithet applied to them by Lucan; and adopted in English by Milton. See GIGANTICK.

An earth-born monster; applied to one, exceeding man in size, or in evil qualities.

An yle god & riche y nowe. the se goth al aboute,
Wũe that lond was yfulled with geondes strong & proude.
R. Gloucester, p. 15.

Under that ther com word to the Kyng Arture,
That the meste geant, that mon asolde of yhure,
Out of the lond of Spayne com. Id. p. 203.

For Jheesus as a gyaunt wyth a gyn cometh geonde
To breke and to bete adoun.—Piers Ploukmun, p. 353.

He slow the geaunt Anteus the strong.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,114.

This Achilous was a geaunt,
A subtill man, a deceituant,
Which through magike and sorcerie
Couthe all the worlde of treacherie.—Gower. Con. A. b.iv.

An hideous geaunt, horrible and hye,
That with his tallnesse seemed to thret the skye;
The ground eke groned under him for dreed,
His living like saw never living eye,
Ne durst behold, his stature did exceed
The height of three the tallest sonnes of mortall seed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 7.

Or Trent, who like some earth born giant spreads
His thirty arms along the indented meads.
Milton. Miscellanies. To the Rivers.

The history of the Netherlands reports, that the woman gyantesse before mentioned was so strong, that shee would lift vp in either hand a barrell full of Hamborough beere, and would easily carry more than eight men could Hakewill. Apologie, p. 215.

Also the prophet Amos found among the Ammonites men of giant-like stature, whom he compareth to the cedar, and whose strength to the oaks.
Raleigh. History of the World, b. I. c. 6. s. 8.

Ten of the twelve so sent to spie out the land, by speaking ill of the country, and the barrennesse thereof, and withall, magnifying the cities for their strength, and the giantly stature of the men therein; disheartened the people from marching any further towards it.—Usher. Annals, an. 2515.

Chor. His giantship is gone somewhat crest-fall'n,
Stalking with less unconsci'nable strides,
And lower looks, but in a sultrie chafe.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

The fertile earth receives:
Hence at the end of the revolving year
Spring mighty giants, powerful with the spear,
Shining in arms. Cooke. Hesiod. The Theogony.

So near approach we their celestial kind,
By justice, truth, and probity of mind:
As our dire neighbours of Cyclopean birth
Match in fierce wrong the giant sons of earth.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. VII.

Youth is publickly swallowed up by the giantess of old age admitted into its inner mansion.
Sir W. Jones. An Indian Grant of Land.

Queen. Oh happy state of giantism, where husbands
Like mushrooms grow, whilst hapless We are fore'd
To be content, nay, happy thought, with one.
Fielding. The Life and Death of Tom Thumb.

GIB, v. GIB, n. GI'BBING. GIB-CAT. GIB-SHIP. } The commentators on Shakespeare (1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act I. sc. 2.) have written very largely upon this word as applied to a cat, and have produced numerous instances of its usage, but have thrown no light upon the origin of the term. Mr. Nares says, "A Gib-cat is an expression exactly analogous to that of a Jack-ass, the one being formerly called Gibb or Gilbert, as commonly as the other Jack. Tom-cat is now the usual term. Tibert is said to be old French for Gilbert, and appears as the name of the Cat in the old story-book of Reynard the Fox. Chaucer, in the Romant of the Rose, gives 'Gibbe our cat,' as the translation of 'Thibert le cas.'"

To gib is—to play the cat; act like one.

"The cut of his gib," is a vulgar expression which may have taken its rise from the proverbially melancholy visage of a cat; and applied to any singularity of countenance.

A horse is said to gib, when he refuses to press against his collar; but this may be properly to gibe, (qv.) from the A. S. Gabban, to delude or elude, and thus, evade; to shrink from.

——— Gibbe our cat
That awaiteth mice and rattes to killen.
Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

She is a tonnishe gyb
The deull and she be sib.—Skelton. Elinour Rummyng.

Nothing it availed
To call Philip agayne
Whom gib our cat hath slayne.
Skelton. The Boke of Philip Sparow.

Nature she [woman] foloweth, and playeth the gib,
And at her husband dooth barke and bal
As doth the cur for naught at al.—School-house for Women.

Nor. We'll call him Cacodemon, with his black gib there.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act V. sc. 1.

Mir. Out kitlings
What catterwauling's here? what gibbing?
Id. The Wild-Goose Chase, Act I. sc. 2.

I am as melancholy as a gyb-cat, or a lugg'd beare.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act I. sc. 2.

But afore I will endure such another halfe-day with him, I'll be drawne with a good gib-cat, through the great pond at home, as his vncle Hodge was.
B. Jonson. Bartholomew Fayre, Act I. sc 4.

Bring out the cat-hounds, I'le bring down your gib-ship.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Scornful Lady, Act V. sc. 1.

As melancholy as a gib'd cat.—Ray. Proverbial Similes.

GI'BBER, v. GI'BBERISH, v. GI'BBERISH, n. GI'BBERISH, adj. } Under the A. S. verb Gabban, (see GAB,) Somner says, "Hence the Fr. Gabber; Dut. Gabberen, and our own Gab, gabber; and hence also, I take it, our Gibberish; a kind of canting language used by a sort of rogues we vulgarly call Gypsies; a gibble-gabble understood only among themselves." And Lye.—Gabban; unde forsan, gabble, gibberish. See GAB, and JABBER.

——— The sheeted dead
Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets.
Shakespeare. Hamlet, Act I. sc. 1.

And yet forsooth we must gag our lawes in gibberishing Irish?—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 1.

He like a gypsey oftentimes would go,
All kinds of gibb'rish he had learnt to know,
And with a stick, a short string, and a noose
Would show the people tricks at fast and loose.
Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

I conclude all as I began: you understand not the state of limbus patrum, nor the depth of the question, but scumme upon the surface, and gibberish you cannot tell for what.
Mountagu. An Appeale to Cæsar, c. 18.

If we could set it downe in the ancient Saxon, it would seeme most strange and harsh Dutch or gebrish, as women call it.—Camden. Remaines. The Languages.

For 20,000 were driuen into a moore close by, and there put all to the sword, they [the soldiers of Mithridates] all the while crying quarter in their barbarous gibbridge, not understood by them that slew them.
Usher. Annals, an. 3919.

Some contesting for privileges, customs, forms, and that old entanglement of iniquity, their gibberish laws, though the badge of their ancient slavery.
Milton. The Tenure of Kings & Magistrates.

This gibberish, which, in the weakness of human understanding, serves so well to palliate men's ignorance, and cover their errors, comes by familiar use among those of the same tribe, to seem the most important part of language, and of all other the terms the most significant.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. III. c. 10.

As it is introduced in the constitutions, it is neither better nor worse than gibberish; and he who put it in did not understand it.—Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical Hist.

GI'BBET, v. GI'BBET, n. } Fr. Gibet; which Skinner and Menage think may be from the Lat. Gabalus, denoting a cross; and which Vossius has no doubt is borrowed from the Hebrew. Matthew Paris calls it (gibbet) horribile patibulum. Applied to—

A cross, on which persons are hanged or their bodies affixed.

To gibbet,—to fix to, to raise or elevate upon, a gibbet or cross.

In Gibet hil were an honge.—R. Gloucester, p. 519.

Cresus, that was King of Lide
That high vpon a gibet dide.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. I.

And so after by the lawe
He was into the gibet drawe,
Where he aboue all other hongeth,
As to a traitour it belongeth.—Gower. Con. A. b. II.

Ye knightes answered and sayd; Sir, it is good tidynges for the countre of Auuergne and of Lymosyn, for they haue had of hym a longe season an euill neyghbour, he hath done so moche yuell, that if it please you he were worthy to peyse the gybet.—Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 170.

Hereupon the souldiers besought me not to hang them, but rather let them be shot thorow, & then afterward, if I thought good their bodies might be hanged vpon gibbets along the hauen's mouth.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 336.

Hee shall charge you, and discharge you with the motion of a pewterer's hammer: come off, and on, swifter then he that gibbets on the brewer's bucket.

Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act iv. sc. 2.

The graceless traitour round about did look
(He look'd not long, the Devil quickly met him)
To find a halter, which he found, and took.
Only a gibbet now he needs must get him;
So on a wither'd tree he fairly set him.

G. Fletcher. Christ's Triumph over Death.

Then where's the wrong, to gibbet high the name
Of fools and knaves already dead to shame!

Essay on Satire, pt. i. v. 160.

Montrose being carried to the place of execution in an ignominious manner, with the declarations issued out by him for the King tied about his neck, was there executed on a gibbet of thirty foot high.

Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. i. p. 296.

Save a rogue from the gallows, and—he will endeavour to save his fellow. I had gibbetted up Julian, and he comes by night to cut him down.

Warburton. The Life of the Author. Let. to Dr. Balguy.

It walks abroad; it continues its ravages; whilst you are gibbeting the carcase, or demolishing the tomb.

Burke. On the French Revolution.

His grants were from the aggregate and consolidated funds of judgments iniquitously legal, and from possessions voluntarily surrendered by the lawful proprietors with the gibbet at the door.—Id. A Letter to a Noble Lord.

GI'BBOUS, or GI'BBOSE. GIBBO'SITY. GI'BBOUSNESS. } Fr. Gibbeux; It. Gibboso; Sp. Giboso; Lat. Gibbus; of uncertain etymology. Standing or rising out, protecting, prominent.

Hark, how the blusterers of the Bear,
Their gibbous cheeks in triumph tear,
And with continued shouts do ring
The entry of their palsy'd king.—Cotton. Winter.

Marriners (who are not the best nomenclators,) called it [a species of whale,] a Jubartus, or rather gibbartas. Of the same appellation we meet with one in Rondeletius called by the French gibbar, from its round and gibbous back.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 26.

Venus, Mercury, and our Moon have phases, and appear sometimes falcated, sometimes gibbous, and sometimes more or less round; and even Mars, too, in its quadratures becomes gibbous.—Ray. Astro-Theology, b. v. c. 1.

That the water, which by reason of its fluidity should, one would think, compose itself to a level, yet doth not so, but hath a gibbous superficies, may to the eye be demonstrated upon the sea. For when two ships sailing contrary ways lose the sight one of another, first the keel and hull disappear, afterwards the sails, and if, when upon deck you have perfectly lost sight of all, you get up to the top of the main mast, you may descry it again. Now what should take away the sight of these ships from each other, but the gibbosity of the interjacent water?—Id. On the Creation, pt. ii.

To this I answer, that the argument will not hold of such bodies whose superficies is full of unequal parts and gibbosities, as the moon is.

Wilkins. Discovery of a New World, b. i.

Must we therefore, to make this convexity of the earth discernible to the eye, suppose a man be lifted up a great height in the air, that he may have a very spacious horizon under one view? but then, again, because of the distance, the convexity, and gibbousness, would vanish away; he would only see below him a great circular flat, as level to his thinking as the face of the moon.—Bentley, Ser. 8.

Some with an acute point, dark green above, paler beneath with a gibbosity at the insertion of the petiole.

Sir W. Jones. On Select Indian Plants.

Varro and Pliny take notice of their spotted plumage, and the gibbous substance on their head: so that from these citations we find every character of the guinea hen, but none that agrees with the turky.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Turky.

GIBE, v. GIBE, n. GI'BER. GI'BINGLY. } A. S. Gabban, deridere, illudere, to scoff, to mock, to deride, to flout, to jibe or jeast. Hence, Somner adds, perhaps the Fr. Gaber; Dut. Gabberen. See To GAB; and also JAPE.

To jest at, to mock, to flout, to sneer at, to deride; to throw out sneers, scoffs or taunts.

Deale thou as courtiers dayly doe,
In words be frank and free,
Speake fayre, and make the weather cleere
To him that gybes with thee.

Turbervile. To Browne. Of Light Beliefe.

——— The vulgar yeeld an open eare,
And common courtiers love to gybe and fleare,
At everie thing, which they heare spoken ill,
And the best speaches with ill meaning spell.

Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale

A quiet mind, a patient mood,
And not disdaining any;
Not gibing, gauding, gawdie, and
Her faculties were many.

Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

Touching the first point, who knoweth not, that these lapes and gibes are onelie fit for ruffians, vices, swashbucklers, and tospots.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 2.

Take heed therefore (my brethren) take heed, be yee not scorners of God's most holy word, provoke him not to powre out his wrath now upon you, as he did then upon those gybers, and mockers.—Homilies. Of the Information of Certain Places of Scripture, pt. ii.

The host, who, as we noted before, was a great giber, and had before gathered some arguments of the defect of wit in his guest, did wholly now persuade himself that his suspicions were true.—Shelton. Don Quixote, b. i. c. 3.

——— But your Loues,
Thinking vpon his seruices, tooke from you
Th' apprehension of his present portance,
Which most gibingly, vngracely, he did fashion
After the inueterate hate he beares you.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act iii. sc. 3.

Then by your favour, any thing that's writ,
Against this gibing, jingling knack, call'd wit,
Likes me abundantly.

Rochester. A Satire against Mankind.

Shrewd fellows and arch wags, a tribe
That met for nothing but a gibe.

Swift. To Mr. Delany. Nov. 10, 1718.

Male prudes, we know, those driv'ling things
Will have their gibes, and taunts and flings.

Lloyd. An Epistle to C. Churchill.

GI'BLET. Minshew says, forte q. gobbets. Junius, perhaps, by the change of r into b, from the Fr. Gibier; game (according to Cotgrave) of any kind that's hunted or hawked at. Roquefort writes, "Gibelez, giblet, gimbelet, gioblet, guimbelet, guinblet; gibier, cibarium." See Gibier, in Menage. Giblets is applied to—

Certain small parts (or gobbets, according to Minshew) of a goose, duck, &c.; as the feet, pinions, head, liver, gizzard.

Yet will I do to thee no further wrong,
But pardon thee, and thou shalt me forgive,
And quite each other, all old debts and driblets,
And set the hares head against the goose gyblets.

Harrington. Orlando Furioso, b. xliii. s. 136.

I hope, Mr. Bayes, that we shall not see when you have a mind to junket with your comfortable importance, that the entremets shall be of a fanatick's giblits.

Marvel. Works, vol. ii. p. 93.

GI'DDY, v. GI'DDY, adj. GI'DDILY. GI'DDINESS. GI'DDISH. } Somner has, A. S. Gidig, stultus, vertiginosus, foolish, giddy; but Lye acknowledges no such word. Skinner says, it is perhaps from giddian, to sing, or from gled-an, to glide, to slip.—In A. S. Gehead is elevated,—from ge-heaf-an, heafan, to heave, to lift up: past part. heafed, heaf'd, head, (whence heady;) gehead, contracted into geed, with the termination ig or y, might become geedy, giddy; i. e. high, (qv.) elevated, raised or lifted up; and, consequentially, having heafod-swima, a swimming of the head, a dizziness or giddiness: and wine or other fermented liquor is still said to be heady, when it quickly produces a swimming or dizziness in the head. To giddy,—

To dizzy; to make giddy, dizzy or unsteady; to move dizzily or unsteadily; to turn or whirl unsteadily round. And giddy, adjective,—

High, elated, lifted up; and therefore, dizzy, unsteady, heedless.

The gydue wretche lette sette the toun of Rome on fuyre,
To hable game of the lyght, the while yt mygte dure.

R. Gloucester, p. 70.

So divers ran the giddy peoples minde.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

He takes good heede, not to commit through giddines of brayne
The facte, which he for very shame must needs vndo againe.

Drant. Horace. Arte of Poetry

The people cawle thee giddiske mad,
Why all the world is so. Id. Ib. Sat. 3.

Bar. Seest thou not (I say) what a deformed thefe this fashion is, how giddily a turne's about all the hot bloods, betweene fourteene and fiue and thirtie.

Shakespeare. Much Ado about Nothing, Act iii. sc. 3.

My greatness threaten'd by ill-boding eyes,
My actions strangely censured of all,
Yet in my way, my giddiness not sees
The pit wherein I likely was to fall.

Drayton. The Legend of Thomas Cromwell

Had not by chance, a sodaine North wind fetcht,
With an extreme sea, quite about againe,
Our whole endeuours; and our course constraine
To giddie round.—Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. ix.

And yet, though now set quite behind the train
Of vulgar sway, (and light of pow'r weigh'd light)
Yet would this giddy innovation fain
Down with it lower, to abuse it quite.

Daniel. Musophilus

For, govern'd by the moon, the giddy Jews
Tread the same track when she the prime renews
And once in twenty years their Series record,
By natural instinct they change their lord.

Dryden. Absalom & Achitophel, pt. i.

The giddy ship betwixt the winds and tides,
Forc'd back, and forwards, in a circle rides,
Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots amain,
Till, counterbuff'd, she stops, and sleeps again.

Id. Cymon & Iphigenia

It [betel nut] is also accounted very wholsom for the stomach; but sometimes it will cause great giddiness in the head of those that are not used to chew it.

Dampier. Voyages, an. 1686.

Young heads are giddy, and young hearts are warm,
And make mistakes for manhood to reform.

Cowper. Tirocinium.

Our boasted liberty sometimes trodden down, sometimes giddily set up, and ever precariously fluctuating and unsettled, has only been kept alive by the blasts of continual feuds, wars, and conspiracies.

Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

Some of their [Athens] bravest commanders were obliged to fly their country, some to enter into the service of its enemies, rather than abide a popular determination on their conduct, lest, as one of them said, their giddiness might make the people condemn where they meant to acquit, to throw in a black bean even when they intended a white one.

Id. Ib.

GIE. Mr. Tyrwhitt says, Sax. to Guide, (qv.)

And while that the organs maden melodie
To God alone thus in her hert song she:
O Lord, my soule and eke my body gie
Unwemmed, lest that I confounded be.

Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,604.

And if that ye in clene love me gie
He wol you love as me, for your clenenesse,
And shew to you his joye and his brightnesse.

Id. Ib. v. 15,627.

GIFT. See GIVE.

GIG. GI'GGISH. GI'GGLE. GI'GGLER. GI'GLOT. GI'GLOTLIKE. } Gig is applied to a plaything: as a whirly or whirling gig; to an instrument to play upon; to a dance; to a playful or wanton person; to playfulness itself; to a light two-wheeled carriage; to a boat (going with or) attending upon a ship; to a dart or spear; to a certain description of mill, called a gig-mill.

Gig or jig, Ger. Geige; Dut. Ghiighe; Fr. Gigue; It. Giga,—a musical instrument (fides) is derived by Wachter from geig-en or juck-en, fricare, to rub or scrape. A gig or top, by Junius, from geige, the musical instrument.

Giggle, cachinnari, effusè ridere; Dut. Gecken, ghicheln, Junius derives from Gr. Κιχλιζ-ειν, lascivè atque effusè ridere.

Giglot, by Junius, from A. S. Geagle; Dut. Gheyligh, lascivus.

It may admit of plausible conjecture that the root of all these words is the A. S. Gang-gan, to go. Applied to—

Any thing in quick motion, as a top or whirly-gig; the hand or stick in playing the musical instrument; the dance; the light boat or carriage; the mill.

Gig, or giglot, to an active, playful, lively, or wanton person.

Gig-gle, a dim. of gig; to laugh playfully, wantonly, and thus, continually, with little or no reason.

Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets gigges, in Chaucer, "irregular sounds produced by the wind, &c."

This house was also full of gigges.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

Harde to make ought of that is naked nought
This fustian maistres and this giggishe gase.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell

And go among the Greekes erly and late
So giglotlike, taking thy foule pleasaunce.
Chaucer. The Testament of Cresside.

Quid est, inepte? quid tibi vis? quid rides? What is the matter foolysh gigiotte? what meanest thou? wherat laughest thou.—Udal. Flowers of Latine Speaking, fol. 101.

Aske him what made hir leaue hir wofull, aged sire,
And steale to Athans gyglot like: what? what but foul desire.—Gascoigne. Dan Bartholomew of Bathe.

You must haue painted weed, gay ioly jerkins, saffron skirts,
Your slipcoats must haue sleeues, your coxcom coines, bongraces, girts,
Your study chief is daunse in pamprying feasts with giglet flirts. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. ix.

O me, with what strict pacience haue I sat
To see a king transformed to a gnat!
To see great Hercules whipping a gygge,
And profound Salomon tuning a jygge.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act iv. sc. 3.

Leo. I must go see him presently,
For this is such a gig for certain gentlemen,
The fiend rides on a fiddle stick.
Beaum. & Fletch. Humourous Lieutenant, Act iv. sc. 5.

Provost. Away with him to prison: lay bolts enough vpon him; let him speak no more; away with those giglots too, and with the other confederate companion.
Shakespeare. Meas. for Meas. Act v. sc. 1.

——— I, the slave,
And mock of fooles, (scorne on my worthy head)
That haue been titled, and ador'd a God,
Yea, sacrific'd unto my selfe, in Rome,
No lesse than Jove; and I be brought to doe
A peevish giggiot rites.—B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act v. sc. 4.

Or deem'st thou it a praise of little prise,
The glorious title of a virgin's name?
That thou wilt gad by night in gigiot wise
Amid thine armed foes, to seek thy shame.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. vi. s. 72.

——— Young Talbot was not born
To be the pillage of a gigiot wench.
Shakespeare. 1 Part Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 7.

——— For loy whereof,
The fam'd Cassibulan, who was once at point,
(Oh giglet fortune) to master Cæsar's sword,
Made Lude-Towne with rejoycing-fires bright,
And Britaines strut with courage.
Id. Cymbeline, Act iii. sc. 1.

While passive fools by turns deride;
And giggling thus at one another,
Each jeering lout reform'd his brother.
Somervile. The Devil Outwitted.

This particularity (in his accent) a set of gigglers thought the most necessary thing to be taken notice of in his whole discourse, and made it an occasion of mirth during the whole time of the sermon.—Spectator, No. 158.

I did not see that they had any other weapon but darts and gigs, intended only for striking of fish.
Cook. Voyages, vol. iv. b. iii. c. 7.

One of these stories is, that this stone is originally a fish, which they strike with a gig in the water, tie a rope to it, and drag it to the shore, to which they fasten it, and it afterward becomes stone.—Id. Ib. vol. v. b. i. c. 7.

Let the former riders in gigs and whiskeys, and one-horsed carriages, continue to ride in them, and not aspire to be rolling about in post-chaises or barouches.
Windham. Speech, May 25, 1809.

First, giggling, plotting chamber-maids arrive,
Hoydens and romps, led on by Gen'ral Clive.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

GIGA'NTICAL. GIGA'NTICALLY. GIGA'NTICK. } Lat. Giganteus, from gigas. (See GIANT.) Fr. Gigantin; It. Gigantino; Sp. Giganteo.

Of great size or stature, large dimensions: giant-like.

Of these giants, which Moses calleth mighty men, Goropius Becanus, an Antwerpian (who thought his own wit more gigantical than the bodies of Nimrod and Hercules) hath written a large discourse, intituled Gigantomachia, and strained his braine to prove, that there were never any such men.—Ralegh. History of the World, b. i. c. 6. s. 8.

Not doubting but it will be made to appear, that though this monster, big swoln with a puffy shew of wisdom, strut and stalk so gigantically, and march with such a kind of stately philosophic grandeur, yet it is indeed but like the giant Orgoglio, in our English poet, a mere empty bladder, blown up with vain conceit.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 62.

Thou genius of the place (this most renowned isle)
Which liv'd'st long before the all-earth-drowning flood,
Whilst yet the world did swarm with her gigantic brood,
Go thou before me still thy circling shores about,
And in this wand'ring maze help to conduct me out.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 1.

Now I the strength of Hercules behold,
A towering spectre of gigantic mould,
A shadowy form! for high in heaven's abodes
Himself resides, a God among the Gods.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xi.

He [Jeffery] had borne with little temper the teasing of the courtiers and domestics, and had many squabbles with the king's gigantic porter.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 1.

GI'GOT. "I believe," says Skinner, "from the Lat. Jugum, q. d. jugum seu conjugatio ossium tibiæ et femoris." Gigot de mouton; gigot, Menage says,—is a diminutive of gigue, qui signifie cuisse: and gigue, he derives from the Lat. Coxa. Cotgrave calls a Gigot de mouton, a leg of mutton cut large with the whole bone at it, and so roasted; some, likewise, so call a loin from which the chine is taken. "Chapman translates μυττλλον, (i. e. cut into small pieces,) by the words,—In giggots cut.

Guard. Treason, treason, treason.
Boats. Cut the slaeve [slaves] to giggots.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Double Marriage, Act iii. sc. 1.

——— the yong men stood,
And turn'd (in five ranks) spits; on which (the logs enough) they eat
The inwards; then in giggots cut the other fit for meat.
Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. i.

They burne the thighes; which done, the inwards slit,
They broild on coales, and eate. The rest, in giggots cut, they spit,
Roast cunningly. Id. Ib. b. ii.

GILD, v. GI'LDER. GI'LDING, n. GI'LDY. GILT, n. GILT, v. } A. S. Gild-an; Dut. Gulden; Ger. Geulden, perhaps from the A. S. Ge-ælan, accendere, to kindle, to inflame, past part. ge-ælid, gæled, gæld, geld or gild; and the verb formed (as is common) upon the past part.; and thus, gild-an will mean, to have or cause to have the colour of flame, a flame colour, yellow colour, (see YELLOW.) As now commonly used, it is—

To cover or overlay with gold; with anything bright or glaring; brilliant or splendid; and thus, to brighten, to adorn, to have or give a golden colour; (met.) a brilliant or specious colouring or appearance.

Of gold ther is a borde, & tretels ther bi,
Of siluer othr vesselle gilte fulle richeli.
R. Brunne, p. 152.

Ich have seyen hym my self. som tyme in russet,
Bothe in greye and in greys and in gilt harneys.
Piers Ploukman, p. 282.

Hide Absolon thy gilt tresses clere.
Chaucer. Legend of Good Women, Prol.

And through the glasse the sunne shone
Upon my bed with bright bemes,
With many glad gildy stremes. Id. Dreame.

Now popishe pelting tradicions are florished and gilte with the name of the churche, and folkes must beleue them as much or more than the Bytle.
Bp. Gardner. Of True Obedience. To the Reader.

Next behynde the kyng came x. m. horsemen, which had all their speares plated with silver, and their speare heads gilted.—Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 24.

No conning artificer, caruer, painter, nor gylder, embroiderer, goldesmythe, nor sylkeworker, with such other lyke of what occupacyon soeuer thei be or haue bene to thy comoditie, shal neuermore be found againe.
Bale. Image, pt. iii

My verse again shall gild and make them gay,
And trick them up in knotted curls anew
And to thy autumn give a summer's hue.
Drayton. The Earl of Surrey to Lady Geraldine.

In this chapel [of King Henry VII.] the founder thereof, with his queen, heth inter'd under a monument of solid brass most richly gilded, and artificially carved.
Fuller. Worthies. Westminster.

——— Thou didst drinke
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at.
Shakespeare. Antony & Cleopatra, Act i. sc. 4.

Gilders will not work, but inclosed. They must not discover, how little serves, with the helpe of art, to adorne a great deal.—B. Jonson. The Silent Woman, Act i. sc. 1.

One, Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the second
Henry Lord Scroope of Masham, and the third
Sir Thomas Gray, knight of Northumberland,
Haue for the gilt of France (O gilt indeed)
Confirm'd conspiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands this grace of kings must dye.
Shakespeare. Hen. V. ch 2.

Redeeme from broaking pawne the blemish'd crowne,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt,
And make high maiestie looke like itselfe
Id. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 1.

The double gilt of this opportunitie you let time wash off.
Id. Twelfth Night, Act iii. sc. 2.

Ere to his Western mines the sun retir'd,
They his great mint for all those mines behold,
Verona, which in towres to heav'n aspir'd
Gilt doubly, for the sun now gilt their gold.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. iii. c. 6.

The Cardinall (good man) was logging on afore with his crosses, pillars, gilt-axe and mace, vnto Paul's church.
Speed. Hen. VIII. b. ix. c. 31. s. 32. an. 1520.

It is true, the pill was gilded, but so thin, that the colour and the taste were too easily discovered.
Sir William Temple. Of Poetry.

Upon these grounds they stood out; and they looked on all that was offered about the limiting this king in his power, as the gilding pill.—Burnet. Own Time, b. i.

There are such inimitable guldings and embroideries in the smallest seeds of plants, but especially in the parts of animals, in the head or eye of a small fly, such accurate order and symmetry in the frame of the most minute creatures, a lowse or a mite; as no man were able to conceive without seeing of them.—Wilkins. Of Nat. Religion, b. i. c. 6.

In the manufactures of Birmingham alone, the quantity of gold and silver annually employed in gilding and plating, and thereby disqualified from ever afterwards appearing in the shape of those metals, is said to amount to more than fifty thousand pounds sterling.
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 11.

The gilt-rails to the hermitage at Richmond were in truth but a trifling impropriety, but his [Kent's] celebrated monument of Shakespeare in the Abbey is preposterous.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 6.

GILL. Of fish, Skinner derives from the Lat. Gula, the throat. In Sp. Agalla.

These wings grow out betweene the gils and the carkasse of the same fish.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 107.

And they suppose likewise that no fishes having gulls [branchiæ] do draw in and deliver their wind again to and fro; nor many other kinds besides, although they want the foresaid gulls.—Holland. Plinie, b. ix. c. 7.

——— The Leviathan,
Hugest of living creatures, on the deep
Stretcht like a promontorie sleepe or swimmes,
And seems a moving land, and at his gilles
Draws in, and at his trunck spouts out a sea.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Had I, like fish, with fins and gilles been made,
Then might I in your element have play'd;
With ease have div'd beneath your azure tide,
And kiss'd your hand, though you your lips deny'd.
Fawkes. Theocritus, Idyll. 11.

The manner of its breathing is thus: the fish first takes a quantity of water by its mouth, which is driven to the gills, these close and keep the water so swallowed from returning by the mouth: while the bony covering of the gills prevents it from going through them, until the animal has drawn the proper quantity of air from the body of water thus imprisoned: then the bony covers open and give it a free passage; by which means also the gills again are opened, and admit a fresh quantity of water.
Goldsmith. Natural History, pt. iv. b. i. c. 1.

GILL. A very small measure. Etymology uncertain. In the English Wine Measure, 4 gills = 1 pint.

Til gloton adde yglobbed. a galon and a gille.
Piers Ploughman, p. 107.

Forgets his pomp, dead to ambitious fires,
And to some peaceful brandy shop retires;
Where in full gills his anxious thoughts he drowns,
And quaffs away the care that waits on Crowns.
Addison. The Playhouse.

GILL. Every Jack must have his Gill. It ought (says Ray) to be written Jyll, for it seems to be a nick-name for Julia, or Juliana.—It is perhaps a corruption of Gyggle or giglot, (qv.)

Thy chelfe acquaintaunce all,
Thy iacke, thy gille, thy kith, thy kinne doth prosecute thy fall.—Drant. Horace, Sat. I.

Can nothing priuate haue
Vncensur'd of our seruants, though
The simplest gill or knaue.
Warner. Albion's England, b. vii. c. 37.

GILL. Ray, in his south and east country words, calls Gill, a rivulet, a beck. In a catalogue of north country words received from a Mr. Tomlinson, it is said to be a place hemm'd in with two steep brows or banks, flourishing with brush wood, a rivulet running between them. It is perhaps the same word as Gull, gully, (qv.)

Pursuing the course of this brook upwards, you come to a narrow sequestered valley sheltered from all winds, thro' which it runs murmuring among great stones; on one hand the ground gently rises into a hill, on the other are the rocky banks of the rivulet almost perpendicular, yet covered with sycamore, ash, and fir, that (though it seems to have no place or soil to grow in) yet has risen to a good height, and forms a thick shade; you may continue along this gil.
Gray. Letter to Dr. Warton, Sept. 14, 1765.

GILLYFLOWER. Either so called (says Skinner) because it flowers in July, or rather, by metathesis, from the Fr. Giroflée; Sp. and Port. Gerofle; It. Garofolo, garofilo, garofano, all (I believe) corrupted from the Gr. and Lat. Καρυου φυλλον, (nucis folium,) because this flower resembles in its scent the Indian aromatic Caryophyllon, (or nux Indica,—Minshew.)

Gimp Jeroflouris thareon leuis unschet.
G. Douglas. Virgill. Æneados, b. xii. Prol.

The tree hath a slender stalke like vnto a briar, or to a carnation gilliflower.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 394.

The flower of the white violet, to wit, the bulbous stocke gillofre, is good to breake all impostumate swellings.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxi. c. 19.

Bring hither the pinke and purple cullambine
With gilliflowers.—Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

Why is gold more precious than glass or crystal? why prefer we a ruby before a rose, or a gillyflower?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 15.

GILT. See GELD.

GILT-HEAD. See the quotation from Pennant.

Of these wee sawe comming out of Guinea a hundred in a company, which being chased by the gilt-heads, otherwise called the boultoes, doe to auoid them the better, take their flight out of the water, but yet are they not able to flie farre, bicause of the drying of their wings.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 520.

Heretofore have I written of venomous honey, and the countries wherein such is gathered and made: now if any be poisoned therewith, good it is to eat the fish called Aurata, i. a guilt-head.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxii. c. 5.

In this [platter] he [Vitellius] huddled and blended together the livers of gilt-heads, [scarorum;] the delicate brains of phesants and peacocks, &c.—Id. Suetonius, p. 235.

This fish [the gilt-head] takes its name from its predominant colour; that of the fore-head and sides being as if gilt, but the last is marked lengthways with numbers of bright lines.—Pennant. British Zoology. The Gilt-head.

GIMCRACK. Skinner says, contracted from Engin. Gym or gimp is probably from the A. S. Gym-an, curare, to care or be careful, or attentive, (sc.) to person or dress; and thus, neat, spruce, dapper; and crack, (qv.) a noisy boaster, a pert, forward pretender. And thus, gimcrack is applied to—

A mere spruce and pert pretender; any slight, unsubstantial or trifling thing.

Grac. He's come.
What grimcrack have I next.
Massinger. The Duke of Milan, Act iv. sc. 3.

The. These are fine gimcracks; hey, here comes another.
A flagon ful of wine in's hand I take it.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Loyal Subject, Act iv. sc. 3.

——— I pity your poor sister,
And heartily I hate these travellers,
These gimcracks, made of mops and motions.
Id. The Wild Goose Chase, Act iii. sc. 1.

He, who had so lately sack'd
The enemy, had done the fact,
Had rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs.
Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1.

GIMLET, or GIMBLET. From the Fr. Giblet, gibelet, gimbelet. As wimble is from the Dut. Wemelen; so gimblet, q. d. guimblet, gewimblet, is probably from ghe-wemelen, to bore, to perforate.

The salt rilles also that crosse the same doo so separat the one of them from the other, they resemble the slope course of the cutting part of a screw or gimlet, in verie perfect maner, if a man doo imagine himself to looke downe from the top of the mast vpon them.
Holinshed. Description of Britaine, vol. i. c. 10.

From thence shoot the bridge, childe, to the Cranes i' the Vintry,
And see, there the gimblets how they make their entry!
B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act i. sc. 1.

It amounts to such another stretch of assertion, as it would be to say, that all the implements of the cabinet-maker's work-shop, as well as his fish-skin, were substances accidentally configurated, which he had picked up, and converted to his use; that his adzes, saws, planes, and gimlets, were not made, as we suppose, to hew, cut smooth, shape out, or bore wood with; but that, these things being made, no matter with what design, or whether with any, the cabinet-maker perceived that they were applicable to his purpose, and turned them to account.—Paley. Nat. Theol. c. 5.

GIMMEL. GIMMER. See GEMEL. "A gimmer-lamb, an ew lamb, fort, q. a gammer-lamb," (Ray.) May it not rather be a twin-lamb?

Gimmer,—one of two (sc.) pieces of machinery, mechanical contrivances, strings or rings, &c. See GEMEL.

When I saw my precious watch (now through an unhappy fall grown irregular) taken asunder, and laying scattered upon the workman's shop board, so as here lay a wheel, there the balance, here one gimmer, there another, straight my ignorance was ready to think, when and how will all these ever peece together again in their former order?
Bp. Hall. Works, vol. iii. p. 702.

GIMP. GIM. Also Vemp. See Lye in Junius.

Flowing loosely down her back
Draw with art the graceful sacque,
Ornament it well with gemping,
Flounces, furbelows, and crimping.
Fawkes. The Odes of Anacreon, Ode 28.

'Twas thus, if man with woman we compare,
The wise Athenian crost a glittering fair,
Unmov'd by tongue and sights, he walk'd the place,
Through tape, toys, tinsel, gimp, perfume, and lace.
Parnell. Elegy, to an Old Beauty.

GIN, v. GINNING, n. Gin, and the pret. gan, are in common use with our old writers without the prefix be. (See BEGIN.) Ihre observes, the Lat. Initium, beginning, is formed from inire, initum;—applied to the first motion towards any act, purpose or design.

To make the first motion, to take the first step, to enter upon, to commence.

William the Conquerour changis his wickked wille
Out of his first errour, repentis of his ille,
& of his cruelties he gynnes for to assuage.
R. Brunne, p. 78.

Als alle this sorow & wo was in the gynnyng
Died S. Dunstan, men herd the angels syng.—Id. p. 38.

Alfrid it herd, thidere gan he dryue. Id. p. 25.

Kynde is creature [creator] quath Wit. of alle kyne thynges
Fader and formour of al that forth groweth
The wiche is God grettest. that gynnynge had nevere.
Piers Ploughman, p. 174.

Lo the oke, that hath so long a norishing
Fro the time that it ginneth first to spring,
And hath so long a lif, as ye may see,
Yet at the laste wasted is the tree.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 3020.

Certain I am full like indeede
To him that cast in earth his seede,
And hath joye of the newe springing
Whan it greneth in the ginning.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

This sely Absolon herd every del,
And on his lippe he gan for anger bite,
And to himself he said, I shall thee quite.
Chaucer. The Millieres Tale, v. 3743

——— And thus the day they spende
In revel, till the sonne gan descende.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8208.

Therefore I ginne to wryte now of the sea
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 187.

The grase now ginne to be refresht,
The swallowe peepes out of her nest,
And clowdie welken cleareth.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. March.

But most faire Amoret, whose gentle spright
Now gan to feede on hope which she before
Conceived had, to see her own dear knight
Being thereof beguyld, was fil'd with new affright.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 10.

Then thought they all hope past, and down they kneel,
And unto God to take their soules they pray,
Worse danger grew than this, when this was past,
By means the ship gan after leak so fast.
Harrington. Orlando, b. xii.

GIN, v. GIN, n. To take or catch in a gin or engine, i. e. a machine, tool or instrument ingeniously wrought or contrived; a snare, a trap.

He sette hys gynnes, as he wold, & is quoyntise dude stille.
R. Gloucester, p. 148.

The gates he made vaste, and wuste hym wythinne.
His fon assayede then toun wythoute myd al her gynne.
Id. p. 301.

And whan ye come ther as you list abide,
Bid him descend, and trill another pin,
(For therin lieth the effect of all the gin,)
And he wol doun descend, and don your will.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,636.

And understandeth that this false gin
Was not made ther, but it was made before.
Id. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,633

1 Bro. So, so, the woodcock's ginn'd;
Keep this door fast, brother.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Passionate Madman, Act iii. sc. 1

Typhœus ioynts were streached on a gin.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 6.

[They] granten to lend to the acid John Wastell sum parte of old scaffoldyng, tymbre, and the use of certayne stuff, and necessaryes there, as gynnes, wels, cables, &c
Walpole. Anecd. vol. i. App. Indenture, 4 Hen. VIII.

The damzell there arriuing entred in,
Where sitting on the floore the hag she found,
Busie (as seem'd) about some wicked gin;
Who, soone as she beheld that sudden stound,
Lightly vpstarted from the dusty ground.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 7.

But once the circle got within,
The charms to work do straight begin,
And he was caught as in a gin.
Drayton. The Court of Fairy

But if there be, yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delfs would be so flown with waters (it being impossible to make any addits or sloughs to drain them) that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Forbear, forbear, thy vain amusements cease,
Thy woodcocks from their gins awhile release.
Garth. The Dispensary, c. 2

Innocence, having no such purpose, walks fearlessly and carelessly through life; and is consequently liable to tread on the gins which Cunning hath laid to entrap it
Fielding. Amelia, c. 9.

GIN. Fr. Genièvre, juniper. A spirit so named, because flavoured by the berries of the juniper, and formerly called Geneva.

Thee shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourne,
And answering gin-shops sourer sighs return.
Pope. The Dunciad, b. iii.

Of this it is easy to give many instances, particularly in the case of the gin-act some years ago.
Fielding. The Covent-Garden Journal, No. 49.

GING. I. e. Gang, (qv.) a manner of writing the word not uncommon in our old writers. See the commentators on the quotation from Shakespeare.

Oh you panderly rascals, there's a knot: a ging, a packe, a conspiracie against me
Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor, Act iv. sc. 2.

——— If he have eate him,
A plague o' the moath, say I. Sure he has got
Some bawdy pictures, to call all this ging.
B. Jonson. The Alchymist, Act v. sc. 1

I am met with a whole ging of words and phrases not mine, for he hath maim'd them, and like a sly depraver mangled them in this his wicked limbo, worse than the ghost of Deiphobus appear'd to his friend Æneas.
Milton. An Apology for Smectymnuus.

GI'NGER. } It. Gengero; Sp. Gingibre;
GI'NGER-BREAD. } Fr. Gingembre; Lat. Zinziber;
Gr. Ζιγγι-βερις.

There was eke wexing many a spice
As clowe gilofre, and licorice,
Ginger, and grein de Paris.—Chaucer. Rom. of the Rose.

Of ginger-bred that was ful fin.—Id. Rime of Sire Thopas.

Gynger heateth the stomake, and helpeth digestion, but it heateth not so soone as pepper, but afterward the heate remayneth longer, & causeth the mouth to be moister.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 17.

Many have taken ginger (which some call zimbiperi, and others zingiberi) for the root of that tree: but it is not so, although in tast it somewhat resembleth pepper. For ginger groweth in Arabia and Troglodytica in medows about the villages; and it is a white root of a certain little heard.
Holland. Plinie, b. xii. c. 7.

Or an old Popish lady half vow'd dead
To fast away the day in gingerbread.—Corbet. In Poetam.

Insomuch that I have sometimes seen a country boy run out to buy apples of a bellows-mender, and gingerbread from a grinder of knives and scissars.—Spectator, No. 251.

The next that came was Mr. Burchell, who had been at the Fair; he brought my little ones a pennyworth of gingerbread each, which my wife undertook to keep for them, and give them by letters at a time.
Goldsmith. The Vicar of Wakefield, c. 12.

GI'NGERLY. A.S. Ging, geonge, young, gingre, geongre, younger. Gingerly, (ghongerly. See Wielif, in v. Gird) youngerly, and, therefore,— Tenderly, delicately, (as if afraid of doing harm.)

We stayghe and prolonge our goyng, with a nyce or tendre and softe, delicate, or gyngerly pace, [tereno ac molli passu.] and doe not goe as others dooe, but lette or gooe lyke great estates.—Udal. Flowres for Latine Speaking, fol. 96.

For Margery wynsed and brake her hynder gyrth,
Lorde howe she made moche of her gentill byrth;
With gingerly go gingerly her talle was made of hay,
Go she neuer so gingerly her honestie is gone away.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell

Ju. ——— What is't that you
Tooke vp so gingerly.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act i. sc. 2.

Has it a corn? or do's it walk on conscience,
It treads so gingerly!
Beaum. & Fletch. Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2.

GI'NGLE, v. } Also written Jingle. Tinnire,
GI'NGLE, n. } a word without doubt formed
GI'NGLER. } from the sound, (Skinner.)
Perhaps from the Ger. Klingen; Dut. Klinghen. (See CLANG.) The noun is applied to—
The noise of small pieces of metal shaken together, of thin metal struck; (met.) to an affectation of musical sound. To gingle,—
To make or cause such or similar sound, or affectation of sound.

And whan he rode men mighte his bridel here
Gingeling, in a whistling wind as clear
And eke as loude, as doth the chappell bell.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 170

Bhe bare a skourge, with many a knottie string;
And in her left, a snaffle bit or brake
Bebost with gold, and many a jingling ring.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of Phylomene.

From thens wer howlings heard and wretches wawling tost in paine
And clinching loud of iron, and gingling noise of dragging chaines. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

The husband should be well grounded and principled with knowledge, that he may keep his wife from being led away by the crafty subtilty of those who lie in wait to deceive, and who, by good words and fair speeches, affected phrases, and gingling expressions that have nothing in them but sound and errour, pervert the hearts of the simple.
Hopkins. An Exposition upon the Fifth Commandment.

——— Ask no other ornaments
Then other Countries glittering show, poor pride,
A gingling spur, a feather, a white hand
Beaum. and Fletch. The Knight of Malta, Act i. sc. 2.

Clo. They should be morris dancers by their gingle, but they have no napkins.—B. Jonson. The Gypsies Metamorphosed.

Fung. I had spurrs of mine own before, but they were not ginglers.
Id. Every Man out of his Humour, Act ii. sc. 5.

——— Euen now, with strange, and seuerall noyses
Of roring, shreeking, bowling, gingling chaines
And mo diuersitie of sounds, all horrible.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act v. sc. 1.

He will borrow another man's horse to praise, and backe him as his owne. Or for a need, on foot can post himselfe unto credit with his merchant, only with the gingle of his spurre, and the jerke of his wand.
B. Jonson. Characters in Every Man out of his Humour.

On this methinks I see the walking crew,
At thy request, support the miry shoe,
Thy foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence sound.
Gay. Trivia, b. ii.

This remark may serve, at least, to show how apt even the best writers are to amuse themselves and to impose on others by a mere gingle of words.
Bolingbroke. Fragments of Essays, No. 58.

GIPE. } Cotgrave calls the Fr. Gippon,
GI'PCIERE. } a short cassock. Skinner says,
GIPO'N. } "Gippo is with us a short outer
GY'PEL. } tunic or garment." Fr. Juppe, juppon, gippon; It. Giubbone, giubba; Sp. Jubon, juba. Of uncertain etymology.
Mr. Tyrwhitt says, "Gipe is an upper frock or cassock; gipon, a short cassock; and gipciere, a paunch or purse."

Of fustian he wered a gipon
Alle beamotered with his habergeon.—Chaucer. Prol. v. 75.

Some wol ben armed in an harbergeon,
And in a brest plate, and in a gipon
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2122.

And high shoes knopped with dagges
That frouncen like a quale pipe
Or bootes rueling as a gipe.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

An anelace and a gipeiere all of silk,
Heng at his girdel, white as morwe milk.
Id. The Prologue, v. 359.

They caste on hym a schirte of selk,
A gypell as white as melk
In that semely sale.—Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

Hys fomen were well boun,
To porce hys acketoun,
Gypell, mayl and plate. Id. Ib. p. 50.

GIRD, v. } A.S. Gyrd-an; Dut. Gorden;
GIRD, n. } Ger. Gurten, cingere, to surround, to enclose. A.S. Gyrdel,
GI'RDER. } girdle, the diminutive of gird.
GI'RDING, n. } Girth, that which girdeth, girdth,
GI'RDLE, v. } —girth. Girt, the verb, formed
GI'RDLE. n. } upon girt, the past part. of gird.
GI'RDLER. } To surround, to enclose, to
GIRT, v. } encircle, to environ, to embrace,
GIRT, n. } to compass, fold, fasten, bind
GIRTH. } around.

Tho caste thys gode Mold yre mantel of anon,
And gurde aboute yre myddel a mayre lynne asete [linen sheet] R. Gloucester, p. 455.

He sauh out of the firmament an armed knight com doun That was S. Edmunde, cruelle as a leon.
Suerd girded & lance in hand. R. Brunne, p. 44.

He was first that stirte to lond out of the boote,
Armed & suerd girte, bot an axe he smote —Id p. 159.

And seith not to him make redy that I soupe, and girde thee me while I ete & drinke.—Wiclif. Luk, c. 17.

And would not rather saye to him dresse wherewith I may sup, and gyrde up thyself and serve me.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Treuli, treuli, I seie to thee, whanne thou were ghongere thou girdidist thee and wandridist where thou woldist.
Wiclif. Jon. c. 21.

Verely, verely, I saye unto the, whē thou wast younge thou girdedst thy selfe, and walkedst whyther thou wouldst.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And this Jon hadde clothing of camel's heris, and a girdle of skyn aboute his leendis —Wiclif. Matthew, c. 3.

Thys John had his garmēt of camel's heere, and a gyrdle of a skinne about his loins.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And by hire girdel heng a purse of lether
Tasseled with silk and perled with latoun.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3251.

Crispe was his heere, and eke full bright
His shulders of large brede
And smalish in the gyrdle-stede.—Id Rom. of the Rose.

His bootelesse swerd he girded him about:
And ran amid his foes redy to dye.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

No nor very fast wylle he runne neyther, whiche how lytle so euer he hath on his backe, is yet so harde and strayght gyrte therein, that vneth canne he drawe his breath.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1403.

When lofty trees I see barren of leaves
Which erst from heat did canopy the herd,
And summer's green all girded up in sheaves,
Borne on the bier with white and bristly beard.
Shakespeare, s. 12

How many lasses have I knowne to make him
Garlands to gird his necke, with which he goes,
Vaunting along the lands so wondrous trim,
That not a dog of yours durst barke at him.
Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl 6

The king created him at Westminster by the girding of a sword, wherof he also made his charter with the gift of one thousand pounds of yeerely rent.—Stow. Edw. III. an. 1350.

2 Mes. Thou princely leader of our English strength,
Neuer so needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the rescue of the noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waste of iron
And hemm'd about with grim destruction.
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Henry VI. Act iv. sc 3.

That girdle gave the vertue of chast love
And wifehood true, to all that did it beare
But whosoeuer contrarie doth proue,
Might not the same aboue her middle weare,
But it would loose, or else asunder teare.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

And all things which they had were called holy: holy cowles, holy girdles, holy pardons, beads, holy shooes, holy rules, and all full of holinesse.
Homilies. Of good Works, pt. iii.

——— Do you hear?
Talk with the girdler, or the mill'ner,
He can inform you.
Beaum. & Fletch. Honest Man's Fortune, Act i. sc. 1.

Thus, thus, (quoth Forrest) girdling one another
Within their alabaster innocent armes.
Shakespeare. Richard III. Act iv. sc. 3.

By girting it about with a string, and so reducing it to the square, &c. you may give a neer guess.
Evelyn. A Discourse of Forest Trees, c. 29.

I'le give 'em leave to cut my girts, and flay me.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act iii. sc. 1.

My soueraigne, with the louing citizens,
Like to his iland, girt in with the ocean,
Or modest Dyan, circled with her Nymphs,
Shall rest in London, till we come to him.
Shakespeare. 3 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iv. sc. 8.

Then clense the boal of the branches which were left, and saw it into lengths for squaring, to which belongs the measure and girth (as our workmen call it) which I refer to the buyer.—Evelyn. Discourse of Forest Trees, c. 19.

But take hede to your girths, you'll get a bruise else.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Tamer Tamed, Act i. sc. 3.

What girder binds, what prop the frame sustains?
Blackmore. Creation, b. iv.

Patience is (as it were) the girding up of the soul, which like the girding up of the body gives it both strength and decency too.—South, vol. x. Ser. 4.

Instead of snuff boxes and canes, which are usual helps to discourse with other young fellows, these have each some piece of riband, a broken fan or an old girdle, which they play with while they talk of the fair person remember'd by each respective token.—Spectator, No. 30.

Nor did his [Euryalus] eyes less longingly behold
The girdle-belt, with nails of burnish'd gold.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. ix.

The gentry in Hereford, and Herefordshire, do generally prefer the wormwood beer of Trehern the girdler, before other best ale or beer, although their palates are much accustomed to a very pleasant winy cider.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 371.

Being a very foul day, and they forced to pass a river on horseback within a mile of the town; wherein they rid so deep, as the water came to their girdlesteds, and were very wet.—Strype. Memorials, an. 1527.

Was I for this entitled, Sir,
And girt with trusty sword and spur,
For fame and honour to wage battle,
Thus to be brav'd by foe to cattle.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

And Neptune in the pious hymn they sound,
Who girds the earth, and shakes the solid ground.
Cook. Hesiod. The Theogony.

No thunders shook with deep intestine sound
The blooming groves, that girdled her around.
Cowper. Heroism.

A Brahman, who, by his power and through avarice, shall cause twice born men, girt with the sacrificial thread, to perform servile acts, such as washing his feet, without their consent, shall be fined by the king six hundred panas.
Sir W. Jones. Institutes of Hindu Law, c. 8

A fish, which we presume to be of this species, was found on the recess of the tide of the new cut of the river Dee, below Chester, in October, 1785; its length was twenty-four feet; but the girth did not exceed twelve.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Bottle-head Hyperoodon.

GIRD, v. } To gird,—to smite, to strike, as GIRD, n. } Mr. Tyrwhitt interprets it, has not GI'RDING. } been traced satisfactorily to any more ancient language. It is probably no more than a consequential usage of gird-an, to surround, to bind round, tie round, bind tight round; and thus,—

To nip, to pinch, to twinge or twitch: as, to have or make a gird, to have or make a twitch or twinge, to make a hit; and, consequentially,—

To aim a blow or stroke; to hit, to strike, to smite.

In Scotch writers, Dr. Jamieson observes, it is much used with the preposition through. And so in Chaucer thurgh-girt; and hence, to pierce.

Metaphorically, to have or make a hit or stroke, (sc.) of wit or raillery, or sarcasm, is,—

To jeer, joke or jibe, to scoff at, to mock, to flout, to sneer at; to throw out sneers, scoffs or taunts. See GRIDE.

And gurd of Gyles heſd, and lete hym go no wyddere.

Piers Ploughman, p. 35.

And to thise cherles two he gan to preye
To slen him, and to girden of his hed,
That to his body, whan that he were ded,
Were no despit ydon for his defame.

Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,464.

And so befell, that in the tas they found,
Thurgh girt with many a grevous blody wound,
Two yonge knightes ligging by and by,
Bothe in on armes, wrought ful richely.

Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1012.

With throte yeut he roores; he lyeth along,
His entrailes with a launce through girded quite.

Uncertaine Auctore. The Death of Zoroas.

——— For those that will them write,
With taunting gyrds, & glikes, & gibes must vexe the lewde,
Strayne curtesy, no recke of mortall spyte.

Drant. Horace. Priscus Grammaticus, de Satyra.

Now to use these fine taunts and girds to his enemies, it was a part of a good orator; but so commonly to gird every man to make the people laugh, that wan him great ill-will of many, as shall appear by some examples I will tell you.

North. Plutarch, p. 721.

At which our critics gird whose judgments are so strict,
And he the bravest man who most can contradict.

Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 6.

Ben. Being mou'd, he will not spare to gird the Gods.

Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act i. sc. 1.

Luc. I thank thee for that gird, good Tranio.

Id. Taming of the Shrew, Act v. sc. 2.

War. Sweet king, the bishop hath a kindly gyrd.

Id. 1 Pt. Hen. VI. Act iii. sc. 1.

These seven years there hath been plays at his house, I have observed it, you have still girds at citizens; and now you call your play, The London Merchant.

Beaum. & Fletch. Knight of the Burning Pestle, Prol.

——— What's a quip?

Manes. We great girders call it a short saying of a sharp wit, with a bitter sense in a sweet word.

Lyly. Alexander & Campaspe, Act iii. sc. 2.

Several answers full of girds and severe reflections on the author [Sam. Parker] were soon after published.

Wood. Athenæ Oxon.

But he has another gird upon Christianity; "for Amelius, a heathen Platonist, upon reading the first verses of Saint John the evangelist, cried out, by Jove, this barbarian is of our master Plato's opinion:" where he imposes again on the English reader with his barbarian, as he did before with his idiot evangelist.—Bentley. Of Free Thinking, § 46.

GIRL. } This word is not found in any of GI'RLED. } the northern dialects. Skinner
GI'RLISH. } suspects that as Ceorl in A. S. signified male, so Ceorla signified female, though no such word is now found in existence. Lye observes that Girl in our old writers is applied to a male, (as well as female,) (see the quotation from P. Plouhman and Chaucer,) and he therefore decides for Ceorl. Hickes, (Gram. Ang. Sax. p. 107,) perhaps from carlina, femina, apud Cimbros: though he notices the application of the word to male, and quotes from P. Plouhman. Mr. Tyrwhitt repeats the observation of Lye. The A. S. Ceorl; Ger. Kerl; Dut. Kaerl; Sw. Karl, do not appear to have been ever applied to the female. (See Boy.) Girl is now used only to denote,—

A female, a young female, (of the human species.)

Grammere for gurles. ich gart furst wryte.

Piers Ploughman, p. 189.

In danger hadde he at his owen gise
The yonge girls of the diocise,
And knew hir conseil, and was of hir rede.

Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 666.

Yet this sufficed not, for there came in a companie of young girls, which did neuer leaue weeping for a long while in the place where the Indian was fallen downe.

Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 328.

Fie peevish girl, ungrateful unto Nature!
Did she to this end frame thee such a creature,
That thou her glory shouldst increase thereby,
And thou alone do'st scorn society.

Drayton. King John to Matilda.

Nor hast thou in his nuptial armes enjoy'd
Barren embraces, but wert girl'd and boy'd:
Twice-pretty-ones, thrice worthier were their youth
Might she but bring them up, that brought them forth.

Corbet. Upon the Death of Lady Haddington.

And straight forgetting what she had to tell,
To other speech and girlish laughter fell.

Drayton. The Legend of Matilda the Fair.

How many view I fairer than
Europa or the rest,
And girl-boys, fauouring Ganimede
Heere with his lord a guest.

Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 26.

This winter the business was brought to a trial; a boy and a girl did report, that they heard great crying in his [Lord Essex] lodgings, and that they saw a bloody razor flung out at a window, which was taken up by a woman that came out of the house where he was lodged.

Burnet. Own Time, an. 1684.

And his hair of flowing grace,
And his boyish, girlish face.

Francis. Horace, b. ii. Ode 5.

The distemper of this age is a poverty of spirit and of genius; it is trifling, it is futile, worse than ignorant, superficially taught; with the politicks and morals of girls at a boarding school, rather then of men and statesmen.

Burke. Speech on the Duration of Parliaments.

GIRN, or } By metathesis for Grin, (qv.)
GERN. } says Skinner.

But eue as they were aboute to buske them foreward to it, the bitch had founde the foote agayn: & on she came gerning toward ye place; whom as soone as the hartes herd, they to go both twayn apace.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1254.

Som trembled, som girned, som gasped, som gased
As people halfe peuishe or men that were mased.

Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

His face was vgly, and his countenance sterne,
That could haue fraid one with the very sight,
And gaped like a gulfe, when he did gerne.
That whether man or monster one could scarce discerne.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 12.

When that he had said these words, the horned bishops and their complices cryed and gurned with their teeth, saying, see ye not what colours he hath in his speech, that he may beguile us, and seduce us to his opinion.

Knox. History of the Reformation, p. 61.

It has been always found an excellent way of girning at the government in Scripture phrase.—South, vol. ii. Ser. 3.

GISA'RM. Fr. Guisarme; Low Lat. Gisarma. See Colgrave, Ducange, and Spelman.

A battle-axe, a hand-axe.

But I woll neuer be forsworne
Sith richesse hath me failed here,
She shall able that trespas full dere,
At least wale but her arme
With swearde, or sparth, or gisarme.

Chaucer. The Rom. of the Rose.

Tho dyghte they hem all to armes,
With swerdes and wyth gysarmes,
As werre schold awake.

Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

GITE, a gown, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, is French; and Skinner, perhaps, from the Fr. Giste, (from jacere,) a place where any one may lie; and signifying merely the gown (togam) in which any one may lie.

And she came after in a gite of red,
And Simkin hadde hosen of the same.

Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 3952

And wered upon my gay skarlet gites.

Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6141.

The garments gay, the glitt'ring golden gite,
The tysing talk which flowes from Pallas pooles:
The painted pale, the (too much) red made white
Are smiling baytes to fishe for louing fooles.

Gascoigne. In Prayse of the Browne Beautie.

Methought I sawe a derling of delight,
A stately nimph, a dame of heauenly kinde,
Whose glitt'ring gite, so ghimsed in mine eyes
As (yet) I not, what proper hew it bare,
No therewithall, my wits can wel deuise,
To whom I might hir louely lookes compare.

Gascoigne. The Complaint of Phylomene.

GI'TTERN, v. } i. e. Cithern, (qv.) a guitar,
GI'TTERN, n. } from the Lat. Cithara; Gr. Κιθαρα.

Gitterning,—playing on a gittern or guitar.

Noth' sailen ne sautrien. ne singe with the gitne
Ich have none goude gyftes. Piers Ploughman, p. 253.

He singeth in his vois gentil and smal,
"Now, dere lady,—if thy wille be,
I prey you that ye—wol rewe on me;"
Ful wel accordant to his giterning.

Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3363.

Wheras with harpes, lutes, and giternes,
They dance and plaie at dis bothe day and night
And ete also, and drinke over hir might.

Id. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,400.

The first chorus beginning, may relate the course of the citty, each evening with mistresse or Ganymed, gitterning along the streets, or solacing on the banks of Jordan or down the stream.

Milton. Subjects for Trayedies, in Life by Birch.

Claris. Violins, strike up aloud,
Ply the gittern, scour the crowd,
Let the nimble hand belabour
The whistling pipe, and drumbling tabor.

Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 8.

GIVE. } A. S. Gif-an, agyf-an; Dut. Gheven; Ger. Geb-en; Sw. Gif-wa. Gift is the past part. gived, giv'd, GI'VER. } gift, and upon this the verb gift is GI'VING, n. } formed. To give, in its most ordi-
GIFT, v. } nary usages, is equivalent to—
GIFT, n. }
GI'FTLESS. }

To confer or transfer, to commit or transmit, to bestow, to grant, to concede, to yield, to consign or resign.

It admits of the substitution of various words according to the context.

To give, with a subaudition of power or ability; and thus, to empower, to enable, to authorize.

With a subaudition of utterance or speech; and thus, to speak or utter, pronounce or declare, publish or proclaim.

As a result, inference or conclusion; and thus, to show, to exhibit, to infer, to conclude.

To give the mind, thoughts or inclinations; and thus, to incline, to addict, to devote.

When used with prepositions, the phrase may be interpreted in similar manner.

Tho heo were alle henne y went, here was joye y nou,
The kyng gef ys men grete giftes, & gret loue to hem drow.

R. Gloucester, p. 122.

The bysop yt nolde grante, ac outlych yt wyth seyde
To gyue hym thulke holy thing. Id. p. 239.

William tok his leue at our Kyng Henry,
Giftes wele to leue he had richely.—R. Brunne, p. 141.

Kyng Suane gaf assaut, the walles to assaile,
Mykelle folk he les, & tynt his trauaile. Id. p. 43.

My boke sais certayn, that he gaf neuer that ride. Id. p. 62.

All that was gyuen, & befor hand lent,
That was not in coffre, when he mad testament.—Id. p. 135.

Tho this gold was gyuen, gret was the thonkynge
That fals and favel hadde, for here fayre giftes.

Piers Ploughman, p. 32

Therefore if thou offrest thi gifte at the auter, and there thou bethinkest that thi brothir hath somewhat agens the, leave there thi gifte bifore the auter, and go first to be reconsciled to thy brothir, and then thou schalt come and schalt offre thi gifte.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 5.

Therefore when thou offrest thy gift at the aultare, and there remẽbrest that thy brother hathe ought agaynst thee; leave there thine offering before the aultare, and goe thy waye fyrste and be reconcyled to thy brother, and then come and offre thy gyfte.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But other seedis felden into good land: and geuen fruyt sum an hundred fold, another sixty fold, an other thritty fold.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 13.

Is it liffull to us to gyue tribute to the emperour or nay?

Id. Luk, c. 20.

Is it lawfull for us to geue Cæsar tribute or no?

Bible, 1551. Ib.

God loueth a glad ghyuere.—Wiclif. 2 Cor. c. 9.

For God loueth a chearfull geuer.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

——— Theseus hath taken him of her
That of his chambre he made him a squier
And gave him gold to maintaine his degre.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1443.

And as I stode in this bashment, I remembred your incomparable clemencie, the whiche, as I haue my selfe some tyme sene, most graciously accepteth the sklender giftes of small value, whiche your highness perceiued were offred with great and louinge affection.—Gower. Con. A. Ded.

——— Whereto Anne thus replied:
O sister, dearer beloued then the lyght,
Thy youth alone in plaint still wilt thou spill?
Ne children swete, ne Uenus giftes wilt know.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneas, b. iv.

Artaxerxes, the noble king of Persia, relected nat the pore husbandman, which offred to hym his homely handes full of cleane water, but mooste graciously receiued it with thankes, estemynge the presente nat after the value, but rather to the wyll of the gyuer.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour. The Proheme.

Sir, quod he, at this houre I thynke he hath well to the nōbre of xxx. tymes a hundred thousande: there is no lorde leyuenge as now, that is so large and lyberall in gyueng of giftes as he is.—Berners. Froussart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 24.

Powers, and dominions, Deities of Heav'n,
For since no deep within her gulph can hold
Immortal vigour, though oppreat and fall'n,
I give not Heav'n for lost.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

Not only these faire bounds, but all the earth
To thee and to thy race I giue; as lorde
Possess it, and all things that therein live,
Or live in sea, or aire, beast, fish, and fowle.
Id. Ib. b. viii.

O Eve, in evil hour thou didst giue eare
To that false worm, of whomsoever taught
To counterfeit man's voice, true in our fall,
False in our promis'd rising. Id. Ib. b. ix.

In prosperity he gratefully admires the bounty of the Almighty giver, and useth, not abuseth plenty: but in adversity he remains unshaken, and like some eminent mountain hath his head above the clouds.
Habington. Castara, pt. iii.

——— But goe with speed
And what thy stores contain, bring forth and poure
Abundance, fit to honour and receive
Our heav'nly stranger: well we may afford
Our givers their own gifts, and large bestow
From large bestow'd. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Scepter, and power, thy giving, I assume
And gladlier shall resign. Id. Ib. b. vi.

John. Is this assension day! did not the profet
Say, that before assension-day at noone
My crowne I should giue off? euen so I haue.
Shakespeare. King John, Act v. sc. 1.

We pray you for your own sake to embrace your own safetie and giue ouer this attempt.
Id. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 2.

Macd. I haue no words,
My voice is in my sword, thou bloudier villain
Then tearmes can giue thee out.
Id. Macbeth, Act v. sc. 7.

The clergyman next,
I withdrew from their text
And set up the gifted brother;
Thus religion I made
But a matter of trade,
And I car'd not for the one or t'other.
Brome. The Holy Pediar.

That houses form within was rude and strong,
Like an huge cave hewne out of rocky clifte,
From whose rough vaut the ragged breaches hong
Embost with massy gold of glorious guifte.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

In reproofe of which their deuout fraud, the prophet Malachi allegeth, that gifts are offered unto God not as supplies of his want indeed, but yet as testimonies of that affection wherewith we acknowledge and honour his greatness.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 34.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits; if I must die
Betray'd, captiv'd, and both my eyes put out,
Made of mine enemies the scorn and gaze;
To grind in brazen fetters under task
With this heav'n-gifted strength?
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

Then rush'd amid the train; nor check nor bound
His fury knew, but stretch'd the slaughter round.
The faithless foe he thinks it vain to spare,
And, fir'd with vengeance, gives a loose to war.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. xii.

Thus having mourn'd, he gave the word around,
To raise the breathless body from the ground.
Dryden. Virgil. Æneid, b. xi.

And thus I have given the history of Satire, and derived it from Ennius, to your lordship: that is, from its first rudiments of barbarity to its last polishing and perfection.
Id. Dedication to Juvenal.

The tender page with horny fists was gall'd,
And he was gifted most that loudest bawl'd.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

And then, for the gift of healing, let a bleeding church and state show, how notably they were gifted that way.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 11.

Both fleck'd with white, the true Arcadian strain,
Which Thestylis hath often begg'd in vain;
And she shall have them, if again she sues,
Since you the giver and the gift refuse.
Dryden. Virgil, Ecl. 2.

And first the gifts in public view they place,
Green laurel wreaths, and palm (the victor's grace.)
Within the circle, arms and tripods lie,
Ingots of gold and silver heap'd on high,
And vests embroider'd of the Tyrian dye.
Id. Ib. Æneid, b. v.

She [Nature] gave him [man] alone the power of laughing; a mark of joy of which he is susceptible. She gave him alone tears, the symbol of clemency and compassion.
Knox. Antipolemus.

But his title, his house in town, his mansions and parks in the country, his parliamentary interest, the favour in which he stands at court, the brilliant appearance he makes in the realms of fashion: these, added to a father's influence, determine Iphigenia at once to forget the object of her love, and give her hand to deformity, disease, and folly.
Knox. The Spirit of Despotism, s. 26.

And that this spirit [breath of life] is the immaterial intelligent principle, is evident; because it is mentioned as a distinct thing from the body, not partaking of the body's fate, but surviving the putrefaction of the body, and returning to the giver of it.—Bp. Horsley, vol. iii. Ser. 39.

Such utter strangers were they, in general, both to the nature of God and man, that Cicero, delivering the sentiments of ancient wisdom on this matter, expresses himself to this effect: "All the commodities of life, says he, are the gift of heaven, but virtue no man ever yet thought came from God."—Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 7.

But not unhonour'd shall he halt away,
Or giftless mourn this unauspicious day.
Cambridge. The Scribleriad, b. iv.

GIVES. See Gyves.

GIZZARD. Fr. Gésier; Lat. Gigerio. Of unknown etymology. Martinius thinks it a word à Pœnis translatum.

The foule that hight vultour, that eateth the stomacke or giserne [jecur] of Titus is so fulfylled of hys song [Orpheus] that it nill eaten ne tyren no more.—Chaucer. Boecius, b. iii.

The gyser or stomake of a goose or henne beinge fatte with branne and mylke, beinge well sodden or made in poulder, is good for the stomake, in makynge it strong to digest, and nourysheth competently.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9.

The gorge, or craw, and the stomach, or gizier in birds, is thick and fleshie.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 37.

To these, an overgrowne justice of peace,
With a clarke like a gizzard thrust under each arm;
And warrants for sippets, layd in his own grease,
Set o're a chafing dish to be kept warme.
B. Jonson, s. 28.

So the gizzard, being fasten'd by a strong membrane to the peritonæum, stands fixed in the middle of the belly.
Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

Nor doth the liver lie on the one side of the belly, as in beasts; but with one lobe on each side the gizzard, as its saddle, and so the pancreas on each side the guts.—Id. Ib.

The gizzard is not only made very strong, especially in the granivorous, but hath also a faculty of grinding what is therein. For which purpose, the bird swalloweth rough stones down, which when grown smooth, are rejected and cast out of the stomach, as useless.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. vii. c. 2. Note 6.

For the preparatory grinding, the gizzard lends its mill. And, as all mill-work should be strong, its structure is so, beyond that of any other muscle belonging to the animal.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 10.

GLA'CIATE, v. GLACIA'TION. GLA'CIABLE. GLA'CIAL. GLA'CIOUS. Lat. Glaciare, -atum; Fr. Glacer; Lat. Glacies, derived by Vossius, a gelando, quasi gelacies. And gelare, perhaps from Gr. Γελ-αν, to shine; or A. S. Cel-an, to keel or cool.

To freeze, harden, con*geal*, turn into ice, (Cotgrave.)

And for his glacial air, where is the shepherd so simple, but could have told him, that snowy or what ever else he means by glacial air, or clouds may serve to darken the day, but not at all prolong it.—Grew. Cosmo Sacra, b. iv. c. 4.

[So] sensible philosophers conceive of the generation of diamonds, iris, beryls: not making them of frozen icecle, or from meer aqueous and glaciable substances, condensing them by frosts into solidities vainly to be expected even from potary congelations.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

It [ice] is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hayl which is also a glaciation.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. ii. c. 1.

Which [any mineral solution] although to some degree exhaled, and placed in cold conservatories, will crystallize and shoot into white and glacious bodies.—Id. Ib.

I thought it not amiss to call our consistent self-shining substance, the icy or glacial noctiluca (and for variety—phosphorus.)—Boyle. Works, vol. iv. p. 457.

The other thing was, to measure by the differing weight and density of the same portion of water what change was produced in it betwixt the hottest time of summer, and first a glaciating degree of cold, and then the highest we could produce by art.—Id. Ib. vol. ii. p. 622.

GLAD, v. GLAD, adj. GLA'DDEN. GLA'DDER. GLA'DFUL. GLA'DFULLY. GLA'DFULNESS. GLA'DLY. GLA'DNESS. GLA'DSOME. GLA'DSOMENESS. GLA'DSHIP. A. S. Glad-ian, exhilarare, to make cheerful or glad, (Somner.) Ger. Glatt; Dut. Glat; Sw. Glad, lætus, hilaris. Wachter, Ihre, and Skinner, derive from this Lat. Lætus. Perhaps from the A. S. Ge-ladian, (which, by sliding over the e, forms gladian,) to clear or cleanse, to purify, to absolve, to deliver; and consequentially, (as Somner says) to excuse, acquit or clear one of a crime or accusation. And thus glad-ian becomes—to make cheerful or glad. See the second quotation from Cogan. And see Mirth.

To make cheerful or joyous, to cheer, to rejoice, to please, to exhilarate.

Tho Kyng Alfred hurde thys ys herte gladede tho.
R. Gloucester, p. 265

Tho Kyng Arture hurde thys, no gladdere man nas.
Id. p. 184.

And heo schulle be such, that no prince dorre hem forsake,
Ac for heore prowesse gladliche into her seruise take.
Id. p. 112.

& the erl's doxter of Prouince, & ir moder the contesse,
Brouste hire hider into this lond, & was her in gladnesse.
Id. p. 530.

The Normans were alle glad. R. Brunne, p. 117.

& hir sonnes bothe, Henry and William,
Thei were him nere bothe, gladly with him thei nam [took.]
Id. p. 108.

And prayde Pees to tellen huere, to what place he wolde
In heore gay garnemens, wham he gladie thoughte.
Piers Plouheman, p. 348.

That Jewes shal wene in hire wit, and wexe so glade
That here kyng be y come, fro the court of heuene.
Id. p. 61.

The wiche fooles, weren gladdere to deye
Than lyue lengour suthe leaute was so rebuked.
Id. p. 395.

——— For prophetes hem told
That that blessed body, of buriclesse sholde aryse
And gon into Galilee, and gladen hus apostoles
And hus moder Marie. Id. p. 373.

And also gladliche he giveth, to gomes that hit nedeth.
Id. p. 282.

And my spiryt hath gladed in God myn helthe.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 1.

And he cometh hoom, & clepith togidere his frendis and neighboris and seith to hem be ye glade with me: for I haue founden my scheep that hadde perischid.—Id. Ib. c. 15.

Thanne Davith himsilf clepeth him lord how thanne is he is sonne? and myche puple gladly herde him.
Id. Mark, c. 12.

And he ghaf reynes fro heuene and tymes beryngc fruyt, and ful fullide ghoure hertis with mete and gladnesse.
Id. Dedis, c. 14.

When it came him to purpos for to rest,
I trow that he had thinke text in mind,
That alle thing repairing to his kind
Gladeth himself.—Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,923.

I wol with lusty herte freshe and grene
Say you a song to gladen you I wene:
And let us stint of ernestful matere.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9050.

Fayrest of fayre, O lady min Venus,
Daughter of Jove, and spouse of Vulcanus,
Thou glader of the mount of Citheron.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 2225.

And for to maken you the more mery,
I wol myselven gladly with you ride,
Right at myn own cost and be your gide.
Id. The Prologue, v. 805.

O sodeu wo, that ever art successour
To worldly blis, spreint is with bitternesse
Th' ende of the joye of our worldly labour.
Wo occupieth the fyn of our gladnesse.
Id. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 4844.

As whan a man hath been in poure estat,
And clymbeth up, and waxeth fortunat,
And ther abideth in prosperitie:
Swiche thing is gladsom as it thinketh me.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Prologue, v. 14,784.

The turtil doue said welcom, welcom May,
Gladsome and light to louers that ben trew.
Id. The Court of Loue.

She doth with him what euer her liketh,
Whan that she loureth, then he siketh,
And when she gladeth, he is glad.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

——— And therefore I
Will write and shewe all openly,
Howe loue and I togeitre mette,
Whereof the worlde ensample fette
May after this, when I am go
Of thilke vnsely lolife wo,
Whose reule stant out of the wey,
Nowe glaide, and nowe gladnes awaie.—Id. Ib. b. i.

Of Aristotle I haue well redde
Howe he to Alisander badde,
That for to gladden his courage
He shulde beholden the visage
Of women, whan thei ben faire. Id. Ib. b. vii.

Suche is the gladshippe of enuie
In worldes thing. Id. Ib. b. ii.

So that my hap and all my heale
Me thinketh is ay the lenger the ferre,
That bringeth my gladship out of herre.—Id. Ib. b. iii.

But among all other kindes of delite, there is none that so much comforteth and gladdeth the hearer, as a thing spoken contrary to the expectation of other.
Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 155.

Lyke Lucifer that gracious dawning star, whom pure of hew
Dame Venus chiefly loues aboue al fiers in heauen that shyne
Al darknes he resolues, and gladneth skies with face deuine. Phaer. Virgili. Æneidos, b. viii.

To the publique coumforte and gladfull reioycing whiche at her byrth she brought to all Englande; she doeth nowe also conferre vnto the same the vnestimable benefite of fertheryng both us and oure posteritee in the knowledge of Goddes worde.—Udal. John. Dedicatory Epist. to Q. Katherine.

But if the Scripture allow them, that you cannot deny but it so is, then resist not ye doctrine of God, but knowledge your ignorannce and seduction, and returne gladly into the right way.—Frith. Workes, p. 3.

The lambe thinkes not the butcher's knife
Should then bereue him of his life;
For when the sunne doth once runne in,
Then all their gladnes doth begin;
And then their skips, and then their play,
So falls their sadnes then away.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer describeth, &c.

——— The Troyane of her train
Before her go with gladsome Iulus.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

My pastime past, my youthlike yeres are gone;
My monthes of mirth, my glistring days of gladsomeness,
My times of triumphe turned into mone,
Unhappy I am unless I find release.
Vncertaine Auctors. The Louer Complaineth, &c.

Where day and night she nought did but lament
Her wretched life shut vp in deadly shade,
And waste her goodly beauty, which did fade,
Like to a flowre that feeles no heat of sunne,
Which may her feeble leaues with comfort glade.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

And it much glads me, that to doo him service
Who is the honour of our trade, and lustre,
We meet thus happily.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Beggar's Bush, Act iv. sc. 5.

Advance immortall bard, come up and view
The gladding face of that great king in whom
So many prophesies to thine are knit.
B. Jonson. The Irish Masque at Court.

To sing a song of old was sung,
From ashes ancient Gower is come:
Assuming man's infirmities,
To glad your ear, and please your eyes.
Shakespeare. Pericles, Act i. sc. 1.

Whom when he saw on ground, he was full glad
And straight went forth his gladness to partake
With Belge, who watcht all this while full sad,
Wayting what end would be of that same daunger drad.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 11.

Old men were glad, their fates till now did last,
And infants, that the houres had made such haste
To bring them forth: whil'st riper aged, and apt
To understand the more, the more were rapt.
B. Jonson. The Happy Entrance of James, &c.

And there they make an ebullition among the vital spirits; which according to the intervening atoms either cause a dilatation of the heart and so gladden it; or contract it, and so sadden it.—Digby. Of the Sympathetick Powder.

And, when as he him nam'd, for joy he brake
His bands, and follow'd him with glaadfull glee,
And friskt, and flong aloft, and lowted low on knee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. v. c. 3.

The same, with all the other ornaments,
Kyng Ryence caused to be hanged by
In his chiefe church, for endlesse moniments
Of his successe and gladfull victory.—Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

And there him rests in riotous suffisance
Of all his gladfulness, & kingly jovisance.—Id. Ib.

But Blandamour full of vainglorious spright,
And rather stird by his discordfull dame,
Vpon them gladly would haue prov'd his might,
But that he yet was sore of his late luckless fight.
Id. Ib. b. iv. c. 4.

In this plight, there came to visit mee
Some friends who sorry my sad case to see,
Began to comfort me in cheerefull wise
And means of gladsome solace to deuise.
Id. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

So chaunts the mounting lark her gladsome lay,
When night gives place to the delightfull day.
Beaumont. To Viscount Purbeck.

Our aymes must now reflect on those, that may
Give timely succour to these present ills,
And are our only glad-surviving hopes,
The noble issue of Germanicus,
Nero and Drusus. B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act iii. sc. 1.

But that which gladded all the warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded none were slain.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

To suppliant Holland he vouchsaf'd a peace,
Our once bold rival of the British main,
Now tamely glad her unjust claim to cease
And buy our friendship with her idol, gain.
Id. On the Death of Oliver Cromwell.

These hours were usually passed in rooms adorned for that purpose, and set out in such a manner, as the objects all around the company gladdened their hearts.
Spectator, No. 358.

——— Gladly to thee,
Heroic, laurel'd Eugene yields the prime,
Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd
In military honour next. J. Philips. Blenheim.

Phœbus, whose kindly beams impart
Health and gladness to the heart,
While in its quiver lies the pestilential dart,
Thy youthful suppliants hear.
Francis. Horace. The Secular Poem.

On chairs and beds in order seated round,
They share the gladsome board: the roofs resound.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xxiv.

It [charity] beholdeth him to prosper and flourish, to grow in wealth and repute, not onely without envious repining, but with gladsome content.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 22.

Go, tuneful bird, that gladd'st the skies,
To Daphne's window speed thy way;
And there on quivering pinions rise,
And there thy vocal art display.
Shenstone. The Sky Lark, s. 2.

We rejoice at the fortunate event which has made another happy, we are glad to hear of their success; or happy to be informed of their welfare, &c.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

Leonidas, ascending to the fane,
Rose like the God of morning from the cell
Of night, when shedding cheerfulness and day
On hill and vale emblaz'd with dewy gems,
He gladdens nature. Glover. Leonidas, b. vii.

Gladness is an inferior degree of joy: it may be excited by incidents agreeable or desirable in themselves, which are not of sufficient moment to raise the extasies of joy; or it may consist in that lively flow of spirits, which immediately succeeds to the transports of joy.
Cogan. On the Passions, pt. i. c. 2.

As sounding tempests with impetuous force
Burst from their native caves, with furious course,
To blot the lustre of the gladsome day,
And pour their vengeance on the land and sea.
Hoole. Jerusalem Delivered, b. iv.

GLADE. Ge-hlyd, ge-hlid, ge-hlod, ge-hlad, is the regular past tense and past part. of ge-hlidan, tegere, operire, to cover; and ge-hlad, is become the English glade. Applied to—

"A spot covered or hid, hidden with trees," (Tooke.) And See Milton's Poetical Description.

Farre in the forrest, by a hollow glade
Covered with mossie shrubs, which spredding brode
Did underneath them make a gloomy shade,
Where foot of living creature never trode,
Ne scarse wyld beasts durst come, there was this wight's abode. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 5.

Till then humbly leave I take
Lest the great Pan do awake,
That sleeping lies in a deep glade
Under a broad beech's shade.
Beaum. & Fletch. Faithful Shepherdess, Act i. sc. 1.

——— O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods impenetrable
To star or sun-light spread their umbrage broad
And brown as ev'ning —Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ix.

Grazing might be improved for the feeding of deer and cattel under them [oaks], benignly visited with the gleams of the sun, and adorned with the distant landskips appearing through the glades, and frequent vallies
Evelyn. On Forest Trees, c. 3 s. 1

Still to the glade, where she has bent her way,
With knowing skill he drives the future prey.
Prior. Henry & Emma.

Meanwhile from every spray the ring-doves coo,
The linnets warble, captive none, but lur'd
By food to haunt the umbrage: all the glade
Is life, is music, liberty and love.
Mason. The English Garden.

GLA'DIATOR. GLADIA'TORY. GLADIATO'RIAL. GLADIATO'RIAN. GLA'DIATURE. } Lat. Gladiator, from gladius, a sword. Gladius, c in g commutatâ, a clade, quod fit ad hostium cladem, gladius, (Varro, lib. iv.); or, says Vossius, a κλαδος, i. e. ramus; for country people first used these as swords. Literally—

A sword-fighter; extended in its application, to fighters or combatants with weapons of various sorts.

And though those whom they exhibited in these games at first were slaues onely or captiues, over whom they had ius vitæ et necis, power of life and death; yet afterwards they drew into the sand freemen, knights, senatours, yea, histories affirm, that Commodus the Emperour did himself play the gladiator in person.—Hakewill. Apologie, b. iv. s. 8.

In their amphitheatrical gladiatures, the lives of captives lay at the mercy of the vulgar.
Gayton. On Don Quixote, p. 271.

For peace at home, and for the public wealth
I mean to crown a bowl to Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 6.

At Rome there were usually those gladiatory sports, bloody, sword-killing sports: they killed men in sport.
Dr. Westfield. Ser. (1646.) p. 77.

The gladiatorian and other sanguinary sports which we allow our people, discover sufficiently our national taste.
Shaftesbury. Advice to an Author, pt. ii. s. 3.

In these games of Honorius, the inhuman combats of gladiators polluted for the last time the amphitheatre of Rome.
Gibbon. Roman Empire, c. 30.

He [Constantine] made a law against gladiatorial shows, which however continued till Honorius put an end to that wicked diversion, A.D. 403.
Jortin. Remarks on Ecclesiastical History.

GLA'MOUS. From A. S. Glæm-ian, to smear, (Skinner.) See CLAMMY.

It woll aryse in the heed, and make the heed to swell, and the eyen, all glaymous and dark.—J. Barnes. On Hawkinge.

GLANCE, v. GLANCE, s. GLA'NCING. GLA'NCINGLY. } In our old writers, Glent; Ger. Glantzen; Dut. Glantzen, splendere, to shine, to glitter; which Skinner derives from the Fr. Eslancer, from the Lat. Lancea, a lance, a javelin or dart.

To dart a bright or glittering light; to dart, shoot or throw a quick or sudden ray of light; to strike, throw, dart, or fall obliquely, (as a ray or beam of light;) to throw or cast the eyes; and thus, to look quickly, obliquely: (met.) to throw or cast hints; sideways, obliquely.

Of Triple erle Bumoun fulle suithe thider glent.
R. Brunne, p. 197.

But at the last, as that her eye glent
Aside, anon she gan his sword espy
As it lay bare, and gan for feare cry.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iv.

The one strake hym on the shulder, the other on the breste, and the stroke glented downe to his bely.
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 143.

For they saile away, being not once touched with the glaunes of a shot, and are quickly out of the Turkish cannons reach.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 134.

Thys King William beyng at his disport on huntyng within the Newe Forest, now called the Forest of Windsore, or rather as Reynulph sayeth in the New Forest in Hamshire besydes Sarisbury, by glannsyng of an arrowe, which a knight named Sir Walter Tyrell, a Frenche man did shote at a deere, &c.
Grafton. William Rufus, an. 1099.

——— Therewith vpon his crest
With rigor so outrageous he smit,
That a large share it hew'd out of the rest,
And glauncing down his shield fro blame him fairly blest.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 2.

But she thereat was wroth, that for despight
The glauncing sparcles through her beuer glared,
And from her eyes did flash out fiery light
Like coales, that through a siluer censer sparkle bright.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 7.

To fly was shamefull, yet to live was sweet,
And they themselues more lou'd, then foes did hate;
Them, death (still sterne) where euer turn'd, did meet:
Each sword's bright glance, seem'd summons from their fate.
Stirling. Jonathan.

At that time the queen-mother of France used the embassadour, and other English-men with flattering and kind courtesie, and covertly, and as it were glancingly, began to let fall speeches of marriage betwixt Queen Elizabeth and her son Henry, Duke of Anjou, who was scarce seuenteen years of age.—Camden. Elizabeth, an. 1568.

Phrynicus self telleth us also glauncingly that he was timerous and easy to be frayed.—North. Plutarch, p. 452.

Those graves with bending osier bound,
That nameless heave the crumbled ground,
Quick to the glancing thought disclose
Where toil and poverty repose.
Parnell. A Night-Piece. On Death.

And he, surpris'd with humble joy, survey'd
One sweet regard, shot by the royal maid:
Not well assur'd, while doubtful hopes he nurs'd,
A second glance came gliding like the first.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honied Spring,
And float amid the liquid noon:
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some show their gayly-gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the sun.—Gray. Ode on the Spring.

How fleet is a glance of the mind!
Compar'd with the speed of its flight,
The tempest itself lags behind,
And the swift-winged arrows of light
Cowper. Verses supposed to be written by A. Selkirk.

GLAND. } Lat. Glans, glandis, an
GLA'NDULE. } acorn, a kernel; glans is GLA'NDULAR. } derived by Vossius from the GLA'NDULOUS. } Dor. Γαλανος for Βαλανος;
GLANDULO'SITY. } and βαλανος, from βαλλ-ειν, to throw; βαλανος may, Scheidius thinks, be so called, tanquam dejiculi, quippe a quercu excuti dejicique soliti; because they are shaken off and cast down by the oak, to a remarkable degree.

Which leads us to observe the convolution of the said fibers, in all other glands, in the same or some other manner.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 5.

The spongeous kernels, which in men be called tonsillæ, or the almands, are in swine named the glandules.
Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 37.

All glands and glandulous parts do likewise consist of fibers, but of the softer kind: which fibers are their proper vessels.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 5. s. 18.

The udder is, part, glandulous, and very tender; and consequently very subject to inflammations.
Digby. Of the Sympathetick Powder.

In the upper parts of worms, there are likewise found certain white and oval glandulosities, which authors terme egges; and in magnifying glasses they also represent them.
Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. iii. c. 27.

That indeed all the glands of the body should be congeries of various sorts of vessels curled, circumgyrated, and complicated together, whereby they [glands] give the blood time to stop and separate through the pores of the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus.
Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

It hath eye-lids commodiously placed, to cleanse the ball from dust, to shed necessary moisture upon it through numerous glandules, and to be drawn over it like a curtain for the convenience of sleep.—Bentley, Ser. 6.

He [Blasius] hath observed that the vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb are strangely contorted and reflected with turnings and meanders, that they might not be too much strained, but their folds being extended and abolished, they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance at that time.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Germ awled; pointed, furrowed, with prominent seedlets, sitting on a glandular pedical.
Sir W. Jones. On Select Indian Plants.

GLA'NDERS. } A disease in horses accom-
GLA'NDERED. } panied by a swelling in certain of their glands, (qv.)

If the powder thereof (althæa or marsh mallow) be strewed and mingled among the barley which is given in provander unto cart horses and such like, it helpeth them when they run at nose with the glanders, and stale drop by drop.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 8.

Very much prejudice often happens to the poor husbandman (and sometimes even to his utter ruin) by those, either stubborn, or contagious diseases (such as the rot in sheep, and the glanders in horses.)—Boyle. Works, vol. iii. p. 409.

And I have been credibly informed, that being drank in plenty, it hath recovered even a glandered horse, that was thought incurable.—Berkeley. On Tar Water.

No glander-post his airy stables thinn'd.
Granger. The Sugar Cane, b. i.

GLARE, v. } In Dut. (see Kilian) Glacrende
GLARE, n. } ooghen is, oculi cæsii, glauci;
GLA'RY. } glaer oogigh, cæsius sive glaucus
GLA'RINESS. } oculis. And this Skinner de-
GLA'RINGLY. } rives from the Fr. Esclairer, to glitter, to shine, and the Fr. from the Lat. Clarare, i. e. claritatem evibrare, to dart forth brightness; for grey (or blue) eyes are (lucidiores) more lucid, and on that account reflect a fuller light.

To emit or throw forth a full or strong degree of light; and thus, a degree dazzling and painful to the sight; to look or stare with such degree of light; with excess of brightness or brilliancy; to shine with or display excess of brightness; to be too conspicuous.

Swiche glaring eyen hadde he, as an hare.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 686.

——— Lo thus it fareth
It is not all gold that glareth.—Id. House of Fame, b. i.

Thus he passed along turning his head to and fro, yawning and gaping wide, with ougly demonstration of long teeth and glaring eyes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 158.

Seuen mouthes the winter dures, the glare it is so great
As it is May before he turne his ground to sowe his wheate.—Id. Ib. M. G. Turbervile, vol. i. p. 386.

For in the winter time, so glaris is the ground,
That neither grasse, nor other graine, in pastures may be found.—Id. Ib.

But the colours for the ground were so well chosen, neither sullenly dark, nor glaringly lightsome.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. iii.

Strong perfumes and glaring light
Oft destroy both smell and sight.
Carew. To My Cousin, C. R.

But, as a hunted panther casts about
Her glaring eyes and pricks her listning ears to scout;
So she to shun his toils, her cares employ'd,
And fiercely in her savage freedom joy'd.
Dryden. Theocritus, Idyll. 23.

A golden axle did the work uphold,
Gold was the beam, the wheels were orb'd with gold;
The spokes in rows of silver pleas'd the sight,
The seat with party-colour'd gems was bright;
Apollo shin'd amid the glare of light.
Addison. Ovid. Met. b. ii.

Mr. Hobbes has been reputed the first or principal man that introduced them here, or, however, that openly and glaringly espoused them.—Waterland. Works, vol. viii. p. 41.

Mr. Beale answers to my begging thus. I know, that bright crystal glass is glary; and to avoid that glariness, our artificers run into the other extreme.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 135.

There you may see the idol stand
With mirror in his wanton hand;
Above, below, now here, now there,
He throws about the sunny glare.—Green. The Spleen.

For tho' she lov'd by varied mode to join
Tumultuous crowds in one immense design,
Yet there we ne'er condemn such hostile hues
As cut the parts or glaringly confuse.
Mason. Fresnoy. Art of Painting.

GLASS, n. } A.S. Glæs; Ger. and Sw.
GLASS, v. } Glas; Dut. Glas, ge-las; from GLASS, adj. } the A. S. Glis-nian; Ger. Gleis-
GLA'SSEN. } sen, splendere, to shine. In Sw.
GLA'SSY. } Lysa, is splendere; and in A. S.
GLA'SSINESS. } Lixan. The A. S. Glisnian;
GLAZE, v. } Ger. Gleissen, are probably con-
GLA'ZING, n. } tracted from A. S. Ge-lixan,
GLA'ZIER. } to shine, to be bright. Glass, then, is so called from its brightness, its translucency or transparency. Glass is much used—prefixed—among philosophical writers, with great variety in the manner of signification. See GLOSS, and HYPHEN.

Dame Edith bright as glas.—R. Brunne, p. 93.

With gay glitering glas glowyng as the sunne.
Piers Ploughman. Crede

——— Glase the gable and grave thy goure name.
Id. Vision, p. 40.

And I saigh as a glasen see meynd with fier.
Wiclif. Apocalypse, c. 15.

And soth to saine, my chamber was
Ful wel depainted, and with glas
Were al the windowes, wel yglased
Ful clere, and not an hole yerased,
That to behold it was great joy
For wholly all the storie of Troy
Was in the glasing ywrought thus.—Chaucer. Dreame.

He had a crois of laton ful of stones,
And in a glas he hadde pigges bones.—Id. Prologue, v. 702.

For whan his semblant is most clere,
Than is he most derke in his thought:
Though mé him se thei know him nought,
But as it sheweth in the glas
Thynge, whiche therin neuer was:
So sheweth it in his visage,
That neuer was in his courage.—Gower. Con. A. b. ii.

They keep the wind out of their windowes with glass, for it is there much used.—More. Utopia, vol. ii. b. ii. c. 2.

Vpon thys glassye sea were they sente of Sayncte John, that had obtayned victory of the beaste, of hys image, of hys marke, and of the numbre of hys name.—Bale. Image, pt. ii.

She came to Westminster Halle, whiche was richely hāged with clothe of Arras and new glased.
Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 25.

This Bonet was the firste that broughte the crafte of glasynge into this lande.—Fabyan, vol. i. c. 34.

And that the same may seem no feined dreame,
But words of worth and worthy to be wayed,
I have presumde, my lord, for to present
With this poor glasse which is of trustie steele,
And came to me by wil and testament
Of one that was a glass-maker indeed.
Gascoigne. The Steele Glass.

As touching which deuise the common voice and fame runneth, that there arrived sometimes certaine marchants in a ship laden with nitre, in the mouth of the river, [Belus, in Phœnicia], and beeing landed, minded to seeth their victuals upon the shore, and the very sands; but for that they wanted other stones, to serve as trevets to beare up their pans and cauldrons over the fire, they made shift with certaine peeces of sal nitre out of the ship to support the said pans, and so made fire underneath, which being once afire among the sand and gravell of the shore, they might perceive a certaine cleare liquor run from under the fire in very streames, and hereupon they say came the first invention of making glasse.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxvi. c. 26.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,
As jewels in christall for some prince to buy,
Who tend'ring their own worth from whence they were glast
Did point out to buy them along as you past.
Shakespeare. Love's Labour Lost, Act ii. sc. 1.

The formal youth, that knew no other grace
Or value, but his title, and his lace,
Glasses himself: and in this faithful mirrour,
Views, disapproves, reforms, repents his errour.
Roger L'Estrange. On the Ed. of Beaum. & Fletch. Plays.

He that no more for age, cramps, palsies, can
Now use the bones, we see doth hire a man
To take the box up for him; and pursues
The dice with glasses eyes, to the glad viewes
Of what he throwes.—B. Jonson. An Epistle to a Friend

He built by art upon the glassy sea
A bridge of brass, whose sound Heavens thunder seem'd to bee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 11.

But she that never cop'd with stranger eyes,
Could pick no meaning from their parting looks,
Nor read the subtle-shining secrecies
Writ in the glassy margents of such books.
Shakespeare. The Rape of Lucrece

Witness this new-made world, another heav'n
From heaven gate not farr, founded in view
On the cleer Hyaline, the glassie sea.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vii.

Bush. Each substance of a griefe hath twenty shadows
Which shewes like griefe it selfe, but is not so:
For sorrowes eye, glazed with blinding teares,
Diuides one thing intire, to many obiects,
Like perspectiues, which rightly gaz'd vpon
Show nothing but confusion, ey'd awry,
Distinguish form.—Shakespeare. Rich. II. Act ii. sc. 2.

There lands the fiend, a spot like which, perhaps,
Astronomer in the sun's lucent orbe
Through his glazed optic tube yet never saw.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

Whoever in those glasses looks, may find
The spots return'd, or graces, of his mind,
And by the help of so divine an art,
At leisure view and dress his nobler part.
Waller. Upon B. Jonson.

I do not say this, as if your son, when grown up, should never be in company past eight, nor ever chat over a glass of wine till midnight.—Locke. Of Education, s. 21.

For by example most we sinn'd before,
And glass-like clearness mix'd with frailty bore.
Dryden. Astræa Redux.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,
That finds philosophers such trouble,
Whose least part crackt the whole does fly,
And wits are crackt to find out why.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 2.

I likewise took notice of an ore, which for its aptness to vitrify, and serve the potters to glaze their earthern vessels, the miners call pottern ore.—Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 323.

And a good number besides of ordinary tradesmen, as smiths, tailors, sadlers, hosiers, haberdashers, glaziers, cutlers, and such like, most of them setting their marks.
Strype. Life of Bp. Aylmer.

Our artist borrowed hence his hint, and produced a correction of the defect by imitating, in glasses made from different materials, the effects of the different humours through which the rays of light pass before they reach the bottom of the eye.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 3.

The tow'ring ships, old ocean's lordly kings
Aloft in air display their canvass wings;
Not swell'd by Boreas now, the glassy seas
Flow'd calmly on, with Zephyr's gentle breeze.
Lloyd. The Henriade, b. i.

As they have a method of glazing it, it is more durable, and will resist rain for some time, which Otaheite cloth will not.—Cook. Voyages, vol. iii. b. ii. c. 3.

Francis Willeamson of Southwark, glazier, and Simon Symonds of St. Margaret's, Westminster, glazier, agreeing curiously and sufficiently to glaze four windows of the upper story of the church of King's College, Cambridge, of orient colours and imagery of the story of the old law and of the new law, after the manner and goodness in every point of the king's new chapel at Westminster.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 4.

He [Marc Willems] made designs for most of the painters, glass-painters and arras-makers in his time, and died lamented in 1561.—Id. Ib. vol. i. c. 6.

GLAVE, } Fr. Glaive; Lat. Gladius.
GLAIVE, or } A gleave or sword. Also, a
GLEAVE. } launce or horseman's staff, (Cotgrave.)

Myd gleyue other myd roches, and newe [few] alyue he let.
R. Gloucester, p. 203.

And what their tong, as sharpe as swerd or gleue.
Chaucer. The Court of Loue.

As he was arysing, there light a stroke on him, gyuen by a squyer called Jakes of Saynt Martyn, wyth his glayue, the whiche stroke entred into ye fleshe vnder his eye, betwene ye nose and the forheed.—Berners. Froiss. Cron. vol. i. c. 270.

The lightening Macedon by swordes, by gleaues,
By bands and troupes of fotemen, with his garde,
Spoedes to Darie.—Vncertaine Auctors. Death of Zoroas.

Achilles preassing through the Phrygian glaues,
And Orpheus, daring to prouoke the ire
Of damned fiends, to get his loue retire.
Spenser. An Hymn of Loue.

Eft soones, advauncing that enchaunted shield,
With all my might I gan to lay about:
Which when he saw, the glaive which he did wield,
He gan forthwith t'avale, and way unto me yield.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 10.

And there be in that towne more than three hundred glaives, and three hundred yeomen, and a hundred and fifty archers.—Holinshed. Edw. III. an. 1356.

GLA'VER, v. } A glavering fellow, a parasite, a flatterer. A. S. Glaverie is a parasite—from Glavan, scurram agere, to act the buffoon, (Lye.)—To act the buffoon can only be a consequential application, not the meaning. See GLEE.
GLA'VERER. }
GLA'VERING, n. }
To fawn, to flatter.

And begileth the grete, with glauering wordes.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

And that wicked folk wymmen betraieth,
And begileth hem of her good with glauerynge wordes.
Id. Ib.

For albeit he was now with his countrimen in captiuite) yet wolde he be faithfull to the King and honour him iustly) yea although he knew how tender and delicate be princes eares corrupt with the glorious glauersnge of flatterers) and therefore the sooner exasperated with sharpe and heauy tydings.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 4.

To glosse or to glavere,
I will for no medyng,
But yff you walt haue her
All tymes at thy nedyng, &c.
Ritson. Ancient Songs. Tye the Mare Tom Boy.

——— But when fate
Doth pour upon his head his long expected good;
Then shall you see these slaves, aloof before that stood,
And would have let him starve, like spaniels to him crouch,
And with their glavering lips his very feet to touch.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 23.

When grand Mæcenas casts a glavering eye
On the cold present of a poesy:
And lest he might more frankly take than give
Gropes for a French crowne in his empty sleeve.
Bp. Hall. b. v. Sat 1.

These glauerers gone myself to rest I laid,
And doubting nothing soundly fell asleepe.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 407.

When great ones vouchsafe this endearing elegy to those below them, a good-natured man generally denotes some slavish glavering, flattering parasite, or hanger on, one who is a mere tool or instrument, a fellow fit to be sent upon any malicious errand.—South, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

GLEAM, v. } Skinner says from leoma,
GLEAM, n. } light, from leoman, to shine;
GLE'AMING, n. } and this from the Lat. Lumen.
GLE'AMY. } Tooke, that the noun gleam is "the past part. of A. S. Leoman, luman, ge-leoman, ge-lioman, radiare, coruscare, lucere;" to irradiate, to glitter, to enlighten. He derives gloom from the same past part.;—but the two words are opposed in their application. Gleam is applied to the light, which penetrates the darkness; gloom to the darkness gleamed upon, through which the light penetrates, or by which it is overshadowed. (See quotation from Spectator; and see GLOOM.) To gleam, is—

To irradiate, or dart or throw a ray of light; to glitter, to shine, to enlighten; to emit or issue a slightly perceptible degree of light.

The Bisshop of Durham Kandolph he hight,
Of false hede to mak a gleam, the wrong vnto the right.
R. Brunne, p. 96.

They tyght ther pavylons in a stede,
The brode felde waxe all redd,
So gleamed golde on grownde.
Le Bon Florence of Rome. Ritson. vol. iii.

Thorow the forest the lady rode,
All gleamed there ache glode [glided]
Tyl ache came in a felde. Id. Ib.

The palme play, where, despoyled for the game,
With dazed yies oft we by gleames of loue
Haue mist the ball, and gote sighte of our dame,
To bayte her eyes, which kept the leads aboue.
Surrey. Prisoner in Windsor.

Wherewith he fixt his eyes
Vpon her fearefull face,
And still behelde her gestures all,
And all her gleames of grace.
Gascoigne. The Complaint of Philomene.

The field all iron cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn,
Cuirassiers all in steel for standing fight.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. iii.

Then was the Dodonian tree farre seene,
Upon seauen hills to spread his gladsome gleame,
And conquerours bedocked with his greene,
Along the banks of the Ausonian streame.
Spenser. The Visions of Bellay.

The other [comet] shewing his fiery beames presently upon the sun's set, both of them striking their gleames into the north, and by west, foreshewing, (it may be) the scourge and desolation that the Pagans intended, who were at that instant entred into France and Spain.
Speed, b. vii. c. 5. an. 729.

They watch, they rest, by turns, and stretch'd supine
On the green carpet, quaff the gen'rous wine,
The fires gleam round and shoot a ruddy light;
In plays and pleasures, pass the jovial night.
Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b. ix.

If we consider the frequent reliefs that we receive from it [laughter] and how often it breaks the gloom which is apt to depress the mind and damp our spirits with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life.—Spectator, No. 249.

——— Ye fairy prospects, then,
Ye beds of roses, and ye bowers of joy,
Farewell! Ye gleamings of departed peace,
Shine out your last. Thomson. Spring.

The stars awhile withheld their gleamy light,
And sick'ned to behold the fatal night.
Lewis. Statius. Thebais, b. v.

Though fainter raptures my cold breast inspire,
Yet, let me oft frequent this solemn scene,
Oft to the abbey's shatter'd walls retire,
What time the moonshine dimly gleams between.
Mickle. Pollio.

Oft at the blush of dawn
I trod your level lawn,
Oft woo'd the gleam of Cynthia, silver-bright,
In cloysters dim, far from the haunts of folly,
With Freedom by my side and soft ey'd Melancholy.
Gray. Ode for Music.

Soon as the gleamy streaks of purple morn
The lofty forest's topmost boughs adorn,
Down the steep mountain's side, yet hoar with dew,
A naked crowd, and black as night their hue,
Came tripping to the shore.—Mickle. The Lusiad, b. v.

GLEAN, v. } "Fr. Glaner, to pick up ears
GLEAN, n. } of corn after the reapers," (Cot-GLE'ANER. } grave.) Nicol (see in Menage.)
GLE'ANING, n. } thinks it is so called, quasi glander, or glandeer; because acorns (glandes) were the first fruits gleaned or picked up. Caseneuve derives it from a barbarous Latin word gelina, which, says Martinius, is formed from the beginnings of the three words, genu lugare manu: (because sheaves of corn are bound by the hand upon the knee.) See Martinius, and Du Cange. Menage considers this etymology of M. Caseneuve equally learned, ingenious, and true. Spelman derives this gelina, or gelina, from the Fr. Glain.

The true etymology seems to be the A. S. Ge-leanian, easily corrupted by careless pronunciation into gleanian, glean; ge-leanian is compounded of the usual prefix ge and leanian, lanian, (to lend,) to grant or bestow a benefit or advantage. The Sw. Lean (Ger. Lean,) is properly (says Ihre) a concession, any thing given or granted to another; in a more special sense it appears to have denoted a grant from a lord to a vassal; and hence the application also seems manifest to—The leave or permission granted—

To pick or gather the ears of corn after the reapers; and then, generally, to glean is—to pick up, gather or collect.

Shal have leve by oure Lord. to go and glene after.
Piers Ploughman, p. 131.

And glene my handfuls of the sheding after their hondes.
Chaucer. The Testament of Loue.

And I come after, gleaning here and there.
Id. Legend of Good Women, Prol.

Thou knowest well and likewise so do I, that other beside the ganged the vessell, and thou drankest the lies. other gathered the grapes and thou gleanedest the vyne: other dyd eate the grapes, & thou hadst the huskes.
Golden Boke, Let. 16.

Wo is me: I am become as one that goeth a gleanyng in the haruest.—Bible, 1551. Micheas, c. 7.

As they which gleane, the reliques use to gather,
Which th' husbandman behind him chanst to scatter.
Spenser. The Ruines of Rome, by Bellay.

Aristobulus gleaned up an army out of Mount Libanus Trachonites, and the neighbouring Provinces.
Usher. Annals, an 3931.

And twice twelve years stor'd up humanitie,
With humble gleanings in divinite,
After the Fathers, and those wiser guides
Whom faction had not drawne to studie sides
B. Jonson. An Execration upon Vulcan.

—— Till, at length compell'd
By strong Necessity's supreme command,
With smiling patience in her looks, she went
To glean Palemon's fields. Thomson. Autumn.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies,
The gleans of yellow thime distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron flow'rs, he sips the blues
Of vi lets, wilding blooms, and willow dews.
Dryden. Virgil, Georg. 4.

The gleaners spread around, and here and there,
Spike after spike, their scanty harvest pick.
Thomson. Autumn.

O wretched gleaner of weeds! has he read that noble work, The Intellectual System, to no better purpose? one oversight, one error he culls out for his use, and passes over a thousand noble truths that might have made him a better man, and no writer.—Bentley. Of Free Thinking, § 46.

Their setting sun still shoots a glimmering ray,
Like ancient Rome, majestic in decay:
And better gleanings their worn soil can boast
Than the crab vintage of the neighbouring coast.
Dryden. To Mr. Granvill.

—— Our humbler Muse,
(Who only reads the public news,
And idly utters what she gleans
From chronicles and magazines)
Recalling feels her feeble fires,
And blushing to her shades retires.—Whitehead. Variety.

Soon after the ship came to an anchor the second time, Mr. Banks and Dr Solander went on shore to see if any gleanings of natural knowledge remained.
Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. ii. c. 6.

GLEBE. } Fr. Glèbe; Lat. Gleba, by meta-
Gle'by. } thesis from the Gr. Βωλος, g inserto, (Vossius.) Βωλος, contracted from Βαολος, has its application, ad glebam, a condensando, from condensing, (i. e.) pressing or treading close, (Lennep.) Glebe, as the Lat. Gleba,—

The unbroken mass, the closely pressed surface, of the soil or ground;—generally, the soil, the ground. And as the Fr. Glèbe,—

Land belonging to a parsonage.

And, as though you lost no small quantity of ground by forestes, chases, lands, and parks, those good holy men turn all dwelling places, and all glebe land, into desolation and wilderness.—More. Utopia. Introductory Description.

The glebie fields, and clottrie glebe
with mattocke thou must tame.
Drant. Horace. Epistle to his Bake in the Countrie.

Fusidius, a landed man,
a man whose fertyll feyldes,
Whose medowes fayre and glebye grounder
reuenues ample yeeldes.—Id. Horace, Sat. 2.

Great Eusham's fertile glebe what tongue hath not extoll'd?
As though to her alone belong'd the garb of gold.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 13.

Merchants may talk of trade, and your great signiors
Of land, that yeelds well: but if Italy
Have any glebe, more fruitfull, than these fallowes,
I am deceiv'd. B. Jonson. The Fox, Act v. sc. 2.

Let him enjoy her utmost wealth, keepe her, or take her home;
The rest strike leagues of endless date, and hearty friends become;
You dwelling safe in gleby Troy, the Greeks retire their force,
To Achaia, that breeds fairest dames; and Argos, fairest horse.—Chapman. Homer. Iliad, b. iii.

For their light slumbers gently fum'd away;
And up they rose as vigorous as the sun,
Or to the culture of the willing glebe
Or to the cheerful tendance of the flock.
Thomson. Spring.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal end
Sadly defus'd o'er Virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choak the hopes and harvest of the year
Prior. Solomon, b. i. Knowledge.

By a very exact account it appears, that, in 1755, the whole revenue of the clergy of Scotland, including their glebe or church lands and the rent of their manses or dwelling houses estimated according to a reasonable valuation, amounted only to £68,514. 1*s.* 5½*d.*
Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

GLEE. } A. S. Gleow-ian, (ge-hlow-an)
Gle'ful. } gliow-ian, gliw-ian, canere, to
Gle'some. } sound, to sing. Gleo, glie, glig,
Gle'man. } musica; and consequentially, gaudium; glig-cræft, musica; glig-man, musicus; and further, (as Warton says,) joculator. (See the quotations from Percy.) Glee appears to mean,—

Sound; then applied, to musical sound, to music, to song; to cheerful, mirthful song or music; and then, consequentially, to the mirth itself, to joy, gaiety, jollity.

Some with the Danes gammed tham no gleowe,
[No glee or mirth gammed, s. e. gamed or gladdened]
R. Brunne, p. 18.

And gladnesse in gleos, and grete ioie ymarked.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

Thanne gan he go. lyke a glemannes byche.
Id. Vision, p. 108.

His mery men commandeth he,
To maken him bothe game and gle
For nedes must he fighte.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13,769.

And small harpers with her glees.
Id. House of Fame, b. iii.

And tho wente they with honour
To the noble Kyng Artour,
Wyth moche gle and game.
Lybeaus Desconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

And next the laste of theyse fore sayd xx. kynges, succedyd Bledgaret, a cunynge musician; the whiche, for his excellence in that facultie, was called of the Brytons, God of Glemen.—Fabyan, vol. i. pt. i. c. 46.

I that hight Trevisan, quoth he, wyll ryde,
Against my liking, backe to doe you grace:
But not for gold nor glee will I abyde
By you, when ye arrive in that same place.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 9.

Nor lackes he gleefull tales to tell,
Whil'st round the bole doth trot,
And sitteth singing care away
Till he to bed hath got.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iv. c. 20.

These times been crimefull, (ah!) and being so,
Bold swaines, (deft songsters) sing them criminall;
So, make themselves oft gleefull in their wo;
For they tho' songsters are misween'd of all.
Browne. Eclogue. Willie & Wennock.

That gleesome hunters, pleased with their sport,
With sacrifices due have thank'd me for't!
Id. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 4.

Cladon, the lad
Who whilome had
The garland given for throwing best the barre,
I know not by what chance or luckie starre,
Was chosen late
To be the mate
Unto our lady of our gleesome May.
Id. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 7.

Will not the imagination of such a sight [our Lord hanging naked upon a gibbet] dim the lustre of all earthly grandeurs and beauties, damp the sense of all carnal delights and satisfactions, quash all the glee which we can find in any wild frolicks, or riotous merriments.—Barrow, vol. ii. Ser. 26.

But fortune, who her ev'ry art employs
To crush ambition, and with glee destroys
The structure of immod'rate hope, deprives
His arm of strength.—Lewis. Statius. Thebais, b. vi.

The word glee, which peculiarly denoted their [the Anglo-Saxon minstrels] art, continues still in our own language to be of all others the most expressive of that popular mirth and jollity, that strong sensation of delight, which is felt by unpolished and simple minds.
Percy. Essay on the Ancient Minstrels.

As for the word glees, it is to this day used in a musical sense, and applied to a peculiar piece of composition.
Id. Ib. Note.

Gleeman continued to be the name of a minstrel both in England and Scotland almost as long as this order of men continued.—Id. Ib.

Deign to receive the nation's public voice,
Of heartiness unfeign'd, who gleeful stand
In meet array, and thus express their joys:
In peals of loud acclaim, and mirth's confused noise.
Thompson. Epithalamium on the Royal Nuptials, 1736.

GLEED. } A. S. Gled, from Glow-an, gleow-
Glode. } an, (ge-hlow-an) to glow; gleow-an, past part. gleow-ed, gleo-ed, gleed. Also glowed, glowde, glode.

Any thing heated or hot; as, hot coal or wood.

And as wex with oute more, upon a warm glede
Wol brennen and blazen. Piers Ploughman, p. 331.

The cruel ire, red as any glede.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1990.

He sent hire pinnes, methe, and spiced ale,
And wafres piping hot out of the glede.
Id. The Milleres Tale, v. 3379.

For when ye see the sunne go to glade, ye say: to morow shall be fayre weather, for the ayer is cleare and bryght.
Udal. Matthew, c. 16.

Skant from his mouth the word was past, when skies aloft to rure
Begin, and thonder light was thrown, and down from heauen by shade
A streaming star descends, and long with greni light makes a glyde.—Phaer. Virgill. Eneidos, b. ii.

So foloweth me remembrance of that face,
That with my tearen eyen, swolne, and vnstable,
My deateny to behold her doth me leade,
And yet I know I runne into the gleade.
Wyatt. How the Lover perisheth in his delight, &c

Lybeaus was redy boun,
And lepte out of the arsoun,
As sperk thogh out of glede.
Lybeaus Desconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

I can no more but tell how there is seene
Faire Ilium fall in burning red gledes downe,
And from the soile great Troy Neptunus towne.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 208. Sackuil's Induction.

GLEEK, v. } Skinner says, either from the Gleek, n. } Ger. Gluck, fortune, or the A. S. Ge-lac; Ger. Gleich, similis;—he only speaks of the word as applied to a game of cards. Dr. Jamieson says, that the Sc. Glaik is a deception, a trick. To play the glaiks with one, to gull, to cheat; to get the glaik, to be gulled or cheated; and he seems inclined to suspect that it is radically the same (and indeed it appears to be really the same with a little difference in pronunciation) with the Northern Eng. Gleek, to deceive, to beguile; and that it may be from the A. S. Glig, (see Glee,) ludibrium, or the Moes. G. Laik-an, to play or spirt, or merely the Ger. Glick-en, to shine.—The Ger. Gluck, (i. e. Ge-luck) suggested by Skinner, is in modern English Luck, any thing caught, a good or bad catch, from the A. S. Læccan, ge-læccan, to catch. And Eng. Gleek; Sc. Glaik, is from the same Ge-læccan (glæccan,) and means,—a catch. Met.—

A catch, a trap, a trick, deception or deceit; and the verb to gleek, to catch, entrap or trick, to deceive, to delude or illude, to play upon, to scoff at.

The more the pittie, that some honest neighbours will not make them friends, nay, I can gleeke vpon occasion.
Tyte. Thou art as wise, as thou art beautifull.
Shakespeare. Midsummer Night's Dream, Act iii. sc. 1.

I haue seene you gleeking and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.—Id. Hen. V. Act v. sc. 1.

Now where's the Bastard's braues, and Charles his glikes?
What all amort?—Id. 1 Part Hen. I. Act iii. sc. 2.

You feare such wanton gleeks, and ill report
May stop great States that thither would resort.
Harrington, b. iii. Epig. 33.

Bust. Here, Juno, here: but stay, I do espy
A pretty gleek coming from Pallas' eye.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Maid in the Mill, Act i. sc. 2.

Pog. Why, when you please sir, I am
For three penny gleeke, your man.
Amb. Pox o'your gleeke, and three pence.
B. Jonson. The Divelle is an Asse, Act v. sc. 2.

Honest Gleek, ruff, and honours diverted the ladies at Christmas.—Evelyn. Mundus. Muliebris, Pref.

GLEEN, v. Sc. Gleun, formed from Glowen, past part. of the v. to Glow, (qv.)

—— Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid.—Prior. Callimachus, Hymn 1.

GLEET, n. } Fr. Glette, gletteux, alimie,
Gleet, v. } frothy, flegmy, filthy, (Cotgrave.)
Gle'ety. } Ger. Glett, lax, spuma; gleiten, labi. Skinner writes glitt, and calls it Ichor, seu sanies tenuis e nervosis partibus læsis extillans, perhaps from the Dut. Glyden, labi, to glide. These words are, for the most part, confined to medical writings: but Dr. Cheyne uses the verb generally.

Condensed vapours gleet down the caverns of those mountains, whose inner parts being hollow, afford them a bason.
Cheyne. Philosophical Principles.

GLEIRE. } Skinner says, from the Fr. Clair,
GLARE, or } clear; because white is—omnium
GLAYRE. } colorum clarissimus. See GLARE.
A name now applied to a liquid employed by bookbinders previous to polishing.

Unslekked lime, chalk and gleire of any ey [egg]
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,274.

Let me likewise declare my facts and fall,
And eke recite what means this slimy glere.
Mirrour for Magistrates, p. 106.

I knew my life no longer could abide
For rammish stench, bloud, poison, slimy glere
That in his body so aboundant were. Id. p. 109.

GLEN. A. S. Glen, vallis, is given in Lye, but without any authority. The word is not in Junius, Minshew, or Barrett; neither is it used by Shakespeare or Milton. The Glossarist to G. Douglas remarks, that many countries to the south of Scotland terminate in dale, whereas to the north they have prefixed to them the word Glen; Hib. Gleann, vallis; as Glen Esk, Glen Prossin, Glen Isla, &c. And this Irish etymology is repeated by Pinkerton and Chalmers. And Skinner forms Glentworth from the A. S. Glen, glene; Welsh, Glynn, a valley, and worth: Glinn, Irish and Welsh, he adds, is—Vallis arboribus consita. Holland, however, renders Montes, Glinnes; and Glen may mean—
A bright, illumined spot, whether high or low.

But now from me his madding minde is start
And wooes the widdowe's daughter of the glenne;
So now fair Rosalind hath bredde his smart.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. April.

There was a widow's daughter of the glen,
Dear Rosalynd that scarcely brook'd compare,
The moorland maiden, so admir'd of men,
Bright goldy locks, and Phillida the Fair.
Drayton, Ecl. 9.

——— But why these unavailing pains?
The gifts, alike and giver she disdains;
And now left heiress of the glen she'll deem
Me, landless lad, unworthy her esteem.—Philips, Past. i.

The time shall come, when I, perhaps, may tread
Your lowly glens o'erhung with spreading broom:
Or o'er your stretching heaths by fancy led,
Or o'er your mountains creep, in awfull gloom.
Collins. On the Superstitions of the Highlands.

The Gaules from the Albane Glennes [Albanis montibus] (for that they were not able there to endure the cold of winter) raunged all over the champion, and the sea coaste, and wasted the countrie.—Holland. Livius, p. 265.

GLEW. See GLUR.

GLIB, n. See the first quotation from Spenser.

Iren. They have another custome from the Scythians, that is, the wearing of mantles, and long glibbes, which is a thick curled bush of haire, hanging down over their eyes and monstrously disguising them, which are both very bad and hurtful.—Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

The Irish Princesse, and with her
A fifteene others moe
With hanging glybbes that hid their necks
As tynsel shadowing snoe.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 26.

Whom when she saw in wretched weeds disguis'd,
With heary glib deform'd, and meiger face,
Like ghost late risen from his graue agryz'd,
She knew him not, but pittied much his case.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 8.

GLIB, v. Dut. Lubben, castrare. (See LIB.) Kilian has also ghe-lubt, castratus, the past part. of ghe-lubben, which contracted into glubb-en would furnish the Eng. Glib,—
To geld.

——— They are co-heyres,
And I had rather glib myself, then they
Should not produce faire issue.
Shakespeare. Winter's Tale, Act ii. sc. 1.

GLIB, v. } The Lat. Glaber, smooth, seems
GLIB, adj. } to present a word of signification
GLI'BLY. } nearly equivalent; but the French
GLI'BNESS. } and Italian have nothing from it
GLI'BBERY. } which will enable us to trace any connexion. Skinner derives from the Lat. Levis; Gr. Λειος; by prefixing g, changing e into i, and v into b. It is not improbably from the A. S. Ge-hleap-an, (contracted into gleap-an, gleep, or gleb, glib,) to gallop; to move fast, speedily, swiftly. And thus the adjective glib, is—
Nimble, voluble; and, consequentially, slippery, smooth: and the verb,—
To smoothen.

And when to all his angels he propos'd
To draw the proud King Ahab into fraud,
That he might fall in Ramoth, they demurring,
I undertook that office, and the tongues
Of all his flattering prophets glib'd with lies
To his destruction, as I had in charge.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

The result of such a mixture is, that the parts of a body compounded by it are close, catching, flowing slowly, glibb: and generally it will burn and be easily converted into flame.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 14.

What, shall thy lubricall and glibberie Muse
Live, as shee were defunct
B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act v. sc. 3.

——— You shall ha' some will swallow
A melting heire, as glibly, as your Dutch
Will pills of butter, and ne're purge for't.
Id. The Fox, Act i. sc. 1.

Likewise the glibness of mercury, and of melted metals, without catching or sticking to other substances, gives us to understand, that this great temper of a moist element with earth is water and not air.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 14.

A polisht ice-like glibnesse doth unfold
The rocke so round, whose midst, a gloomie cell
Shrowds, so furre westward, that it sees to Hell.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

How smooth, persuasive, plausible, and glib,
From holy lips is dropp'd the specious fib!
Criticisms on the Rolliad, pt. ii. The Lyars.

Such jokes as these the old man not only took in good part, but glibly gulped down the whole narrative of his nephew.—Fielding. A Voyage to Lisbon.

Now by tough oars impell'd and prosp'rous tides
The vessel glibly down the river glides.
Fawkes. Apollonius Rhodius. The Argonautics, b. iv.

GLICKES. See GLEEK. Ogling or leering looks, (Gifford.)

Pha. From waving fannes, coy glances, glickes, and all such simpering humours.
Chorus. Good Mercury, defend us.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act v. sc. 11.

GLI'DDER. See the quotation from Ben Jonson in v. Gallipot. To glidder, is "to glaze over with some tenacious lacker," (Gifford.)

GLIDE, v. } A. S. Glid-an; (Ge-lith-an, ge- GLIDE, n. } lid-an,—see LITHE;) Dut. Glij-
GLI'DER. } den; Ger. Gleiten, glitschen, labi,
GLI'DING, n. } to slip, slide or glide. (Somner.)
To glide, implies, in its application to living bodies, continuity of motion without repeated action of the limbs: to move or pass evenly, smoothly, and steadily.

For Godes bleesside body, hit bar for oure bote
And hit a fareth the feonde, for such is the mygte
May no grysliche gost glyde ther hit shadeweth.
Piers Ploughman, p. 365.

This Maximus, that saw this thing betide
With pitous teres told it anon right,
That he his soules saw to heaven glide
With Angels ful of clereneese and of light.
Chaucer. The Second Nonnes Tale, v. 15,870.

The vapour which that fro the erthe glode
Maketh the sonne to seme rody and brode.
Id. The Squieres Tale, v. 1807.

Somtyme it semeth as it were
A starre, which that glideth there.—Gower. Con. A. b. vii.

She [Medea] glode forth, as an adder doth.—Id. Th. b. v.

The serpentes twine, with hasted traile they glide
To Pallas temple, and her towres of heighte.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

There was the speedy Tamar, which diuides
The Cornish and the Deuonish confines;
Through both whose borders swiftly down it glides,
And meeting Plim, to Plimmouth thence declines.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

Forth from my palace, by a secret stair,
I stole to Thames, as though to take the air;
And ask'd the gentle flood as it doth glide
If thou didst pass or perish by the tide?
Drayton. Queen Isabel to Mortimer.

——— But sodainly
Seeing Orlando it vnlink'd it selfe,
And with indented glides, did slip away
Into a bush.—Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iv. sc. 3.

Per. The glaunce into my heart did glide.
Wil. Hey, ho, the Glyder!
Per. Therewith my soule was sharpely gryde.
Wil. Such woundes soon waxen wider.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. August.

Again, that, in its reflections, it will follow the nature of grosser bodies, and have glidings like them; which is that we call refractions.—Digby. Of Bodies, c. 8.

O should her raging passion reach his eares,
His tender loue, by anger fir'd, would turn
To burning rage; as soft Cydonian oil,
Whose balmy juice glides o'er th' untasting tongue,
Yet touch'd with fire, with hottest flames will blaze.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus

[Let him reflect] on their agonizing departure from this corporeal frame, their formation again in the womb, and the glidings of this vital spirit through ten thousand mansions of uterine passages.
Sir W. Jones. Institutes of Hindu Law, c. 6.

GLI'MMER, v. } A dim. of Gleam, (qv.)
GLI'MMER, n. } From the A. S. Ge-hlioman,
GLI'MMERING, n. } to lighten.
To enlighten or illuminate, to irradiate, to shine upon, faintly, in a slight degree, unsteadily; to cause a faint or slight perception of light, (met.)

I have not a glimmering of it, yet generally I remember the scope of it.
Latimer. Fifth Sermon preached before King Edward.

Think then, my soul, that death is but a gloom,
Which brings a taper to the outward room
Whence thou spy'st first a little glimmering light,
And after brings it nearer to thy sight.
Donne. Progress of the Soul. Second Anniversary.

And for love if ever I
Approach to it again so nigh,
As to allow a toleration
To the least glimmering inclination;
May'st thou no passion have for me.—Cowley. The Soul.

Yet hath my night of life some memorie;
My wasting lampes some fading glimmer left,
My dull deafe eares a little vse to heare.
Shakespeare. Comedy of Errors, Act v. sc. 1.

He that would gain upon the more weak and sunk minds of sensual mortals, is to accommodate himself to their capacity, who, like the bat and owle, can see no where so well as in the shady glimmerings of their own twilight.
H. More. Antidote against Atheism, Pref. p. 7.

Long mute he stood, and leaning on his staff,
His wonder witness'd with an idiot laugh,
Then would have spoke, but by his glimmering sense
First found his want of words, and fear'd offence.
Dryden. Cymon & Iphigenia.

[They] had not had their conjectures alarmed by some glimmerings of light into that dark project before
South, vol. iii. Ser. 12.

Those uncertain glimmerings of the light of nature would have prepared the minds of the learned for the reception of the full illustration of this subject by the Gospel, had not the resurrection been a part of the doctrine therein advanced.
Watson. Apology for Christianity, Let. 2.

GLIMPSE, v. } Either (says Skinner) from
GLIMPSE, n. } Glimmering, or Ger. Gleissen,
GLI'MPSING, n. } to shine. It appears to be, as glimmer is, from gleam. Glimpse, the noun, is—
A short, quick, light or sight, or look into the gloom; a short, slight view or perception.
To glimpse,—to have or take a glimpse, or short, slight view or perception.

For certainly, if that ye mighten see,
Ye wold not say thise wordes unto me,
Ye have som glimsing, and no parfit sight.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,257.

By glimpsing with such grace
As fortune it ne would,
That lasten any space
Between us lenger should.
Surrey. Forsaken Lover describeth and forsaketh Love.

I know how loue doth rage upon a yeldinge minde:
How smal a net may take and meash a hart of gentle kinde:
Or els with seldome swete to season heapes of gall:
Reuiued with a glimpse of grace old sorowes to let fall.
Id. Description of the Fickle Affections, &c.

Deformed shadowes glimpsing in his [Edward II.] sight,
As darkness, that it might more ugly be,
Through the least cranny would not let him see.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. v.

The streams well ebb'd, new hopes some comforts borrow
From firmest truth; then glimps'd the hopefull morrow:
So spring some dawns of joy, so sets the height of sorrow.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 12.

Sunk in his skull, his staring eyes did glow,
That made him deadly look, their glimpse did show
Like Cockatrice's eyes, that sparks of poison throw.
Id. Christ's Triumph on Earth.

Who this is we must learn, for man he seems
In all his lineaments, though in his face
The glimpses of his father's glory shine.
Milton. Paradise Regained, b. i.

All these and more came flocking; but with looks
Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appear'd
Obscure some glimps of joy, to have found their chief
Not in despare, to have found themselves not lost
In loss itself. Id. Paradise Lost, b. i.

And yet perceiving how the longing sight
Of mortals waited for his glittering light,
He sent Aurora from him to the skye
To give a glimpsing to each mortal eye.
F. Beaumont. The Hermaphrodite.

We must not, to please or gratifie men, commit any thing prohibited, or omit any thing enjoined by God, the least glimpse of whose favourable aspect is infinitely more to be prized, than the most intimate friendships of the mightiest monarchs upon earth.—Barrow, vol. i. ser. 30.

Cali, methinks yon waving trees afford
A doubtful glimpse of our approaching friends.
Johnson. Irene, Act ii. sc. 2.

GLI'STEN, v. } A. S. Gliten-an, glis-nian;
GLI'STENING, n. } Ger. Gleissen, to shine, to be bright. (See GLASS.) Hammond writes glissen.
To shine, to glitter or glister, (qv.)

And with that word his glistering sword unsheathes
With which drawen, he the cabels cut in twaine.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. iv.

And sodainly beholde a certain man, whose countenaunce was full of maiestie, stood visible before me, in a glistening garmente.—Udal. Actes, c. 10.

The gum and glist'ning, which with art
And study'd method, in each part
Hangs down the heart,
Looks (just) as if, that day
Snails there had crawl'd the hay.
Suckling. Farewell to Love.

How unpolish't soever this diamond be, yet if it do but glissen, 'tis too precious to be cast away.
Hammond. Works, vol. iv. p. 660.

——— The bleating kind
Eye the black heaven, and next the glistening earth
With looks of dumb despair, then sad dispers'd
Dig for the wither'd herb through heaps of snow.
Thomson. Winter.

If I had the power of seeing by reflected light, yet by means only of light reflected from solid masses, these masses would shine, indeed, and glisten, but it would be in the dark.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 21.

GLI'STER, v. } Dut. Glisteren; Ger. Glitzern, fulgere, scintillare; from A. S. Glimian; Ger. Gleissen, to shine, to be bright;—To glisten,—
GLI'STER, n. }
GLI'STERING, n. }
To shine, (sc.) with sparks of light; to emit or throw forth, sparks of light; to glisten or glitter.

The flees of gold shone forth withall
The water glister'd ouerall. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

The hap which Paris had, as due for his desert,
Who fauored Venus for hir face, and skornde Minerva's art,
May serue to warne the wise that they no more esteeme
The glistering glosse of bewties blaze, than reason should it deme. Gascoigne. Praise of his Mistress.

And yet they fayne their idole the pope so mercifull, that if that thou make a litle money glister in hys Balaam's eyes, there is neither penaunce, nor purgatory, nor any fastyng at all, but to flye to heauen as swift as a thought, and at the twinkling of an eye.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 24.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glistereth bright
With burning starres and euerlasting fire,
Whereof the keies are to thy hand behight
By wise Fidelia? Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 10.

So far'd Rinaldo when the glorious light
Of their bright harnesse glistred in his eies,
His noble sprite awaked at that sight,
His bloud began to warm, his heart to rise.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xvi. s. 29.

For the glistering of their [Thracians and Macedonians] harness, so richly trimmed and set forth with gold and silver, the colours of their arming coats upon their curaces, after the fashion of the Medes and Scythians, mingled with the bright glistering steel and shining copper, gave such a show as they went and removed too and fro, that made a light as clear as if all had been on a very fire, a fearfull thing to look upon.—North. Plutarch, p. 395.

I see ye visibly, and now believe
That he, the Supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glistering guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd.—Milton. Comus.

The gluster of the profit that was judged hereof to have ensued to Scottishmen, at the first sight blinded many men's eyes.—Knox. The Reformation in Scotland, b. i.

As fair Aurora in her morning gray,
Deck'd with the ruddy gluster of her love,
Is fair Samela.
Greene. Arcadia. Doron's Description of Samela.

For how do they know, that what they make the object of their envy, is not a fitter object of their pity? and that this glistring person so much admired by them is now a preparing for his ruin and fatting for the slaughters of eternity.
South, vol. iv. Ser. 2.

Hence, false Astarte, who the world suborns
Life's lambent meteor glist'ring round her horns.
Hart. The Courtier & Prince.

GLI'STER, i. e. Clyster, (qv.)

Applying, like a gluster, hic, hæc, hoc,
Till the poor lad's beat to a whipping block.
Brome. Funeral Elegy on Mr. Aubrey.

Pha. With what, Moria?
Mor. With a glyster.
B. Jonson. Cynthia's Revells, Act iv. sc. 3.

From tobacco, with the tipe
Of the Devill's gluster pipe;
Or a stincke all stincks excelling,
A fishmonger's dwelling,
Blesse the sov'raigne, and his smelling.
Id. The Gypsies Metamorphosed.

Bleeding, purging, vomiting, issues, glysters, scarifications, and those other painful ways of evacuation, be not, however chemists are too bitterly and undeservedly wont to reject them, to be altogether condemned and laid aside.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 155.

GLI'TTER, v. } Glitter, glister, and glisten,
GLI'TTER, n. } (see the two latter,) are the GLI'TTERING, n. } same word variously written and pronounced: and with very little difference in their application. Spenser and H. More retain in this word the old A. S. participial termination and.
To shine; to emit or throw forth, light; to exhibit or display a bright, shining or showy appearance.

With gay glittering glas glowyng as the sunne.
Piers Ploughman. Crede.

The red statue of Mars with spere and targe
So shineth in his white banner large,
That all the feldes glistren up and doun.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 979.

Duk Theseus let forth three stedes bring,
That trapped were in steel all glittering.—Id. Ib. v. 2892.

Before the gate stood Pyrrhus, in the porche
Reioysing in his dartes, with glittering armes.
Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

But he their sonne ful fresh and lolly was,
All decked in a robe of watchet hew,
On which the waue, glittering like christal glass,
So cunningly enwouen were, that few
Could weenen whether they were false or true.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 11.

Ygirt with belts of gliterand gold,
(Mought they good shepherds been,)
Their Pan their sheepe to them has sold,
I say, as some haue seene.
Id. Shepheard's Calender. July.

At last as from a cloud his fulgent head
And shape, starr bright appeer'd or brighter clad,
With what permissive glorie since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. x.

And as troupes and horsemen set in array, encountering and coursing one against another with shaking of shields, and multitude of dartes, and drawing of swordes, and shooting of arrowes, and the glittering of the golden armoure seene, and harnesse of all sortes.
Bible, 1583. 2 Maccabees, v. 2.

But oft when the weak body's worn and wasted
And farr shrunk in, the nimble phantasie
(So far shee's from being withered and blasted)
More largely worketh, and more glitterandly
Displayes her spreaden forms, and chearfully
Pursues her sports.
More. On the Soul. Psychathanasia, b. ii. c. 2. s. 16.

They think they err, if in their verse they fall
On any thought that's plain or natural:
Fly this excess; and let Italians be
Vain authors of false glittering Poetry.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry.

Every man carries about with him a touchstone, if he will make use of it, to distinguish substantial gold from glitterings, truth from appearances
Locke. Conduct of the Understanding, Introd.

Yet oft before his infant eyes would run
Such forms as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the sun.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

I saw her [the Queen of France] just above the horizon, decorating and cheering the elevated sphere she just began to move in,—glittering like the morning star, full of life, and splendour, and joy.—Burke. On the French Revolution.

In the next and the principal place a reliance on genius, as it is called, without application, gives a boldness of utterance and assertion, which often sets off base metal with the glitter of gold.—Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 2.

GLOAT. } To Glow or glout; Dut. Gloeyen,
GLOTE, or } Ger. Gluen; Sw. Gloa; A. S. Glowan, ignescere, candescere, q. d. incensis et præ irâ flamantibus oculis contueri; to heat, to kindle: to look with eyes heated and inflamed with anger. Skinner should not have limited this application by the words præ irâ. The word is formed upon the past part. glow, glow-ed, glow'd, glowt, glout. See GLED.
GLOUT. }
To look steadfastly, to gaze,—with any warm or burning passion or sensation, with anger or ill-will, with eagerness or desire.

They [the Translators of the Bible] observe, that the best things have been calumniated, and that his Majestie [James I.] knew full well, that whosoever attempteth any thing for the publick, especially if it pertaineth to religion, and to the opening and clearing of the word of God, the same setteth himself upon the stage to be gloated upon by every evil eye: yea he casteth himself headlong upon pikes, to be gored by every sharp tongue.
Bible, 1613. Preface to the Reader.

——— Didst thou ever see a dog
Run mad o'th' tooth-ache, such another toy
Is he now, as he glotes, and grins, and bites.
Beaum. & Fletch. The Mad Lover, Act ii. sc. 1.

By reflection a thing may be seen greater, than it is, in a different place from the true one where it is; colours may be made by reflection, as also gloating light, and fire.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 13.

She lurks in midst of all her denne; and streakes
From out a ghastly whirle-poole, all her necke;
Where, (gloting round her rocke) to fish she failes.
Chapman. Homer. Odyssey, b. xii.

Even that feast of love and heavenly-admitted fellowship, the seal of filial grace, became the subject of horrour, and gloating adoration, pageanted about like a dreadful idol.
Milton. Reformation in England, b. i.

Hogarth, a guilty pleasure in his eyes,
The place of executioner supplies.
See how he glotes, enjoys the sacred feast,
And proves himself by cruelty a priest.
Churchill. Epistle to William Hogarth.

She had been greatly, therefore, disappointed in the morning, when Mrs. Western had changed her mind on the very point of departure; and had been in what is vulgarly called a gloating humour ever since.
Fielding. The History of a Foundling, b. viii. c. 8.

GLOBE, v. } Fr. Globe; It. and Sp. Globo, Lat. Globus, which Vossius thinks is from glomus, and that from the Hebrew. Scaliger, on the other hand, forms glomus from globus; by the change of b into m. (De Causis, c. 31.) Scheidius derives both globus and glomus from γλοω, the obsolete theme of γλοιος, viscosus, lubricus, and thinks the former (globus) so called a lubricitate. It is applied to—
GLORE, n.
GLOBO'SE.
GLO'BOUS.
GLOBO'SITY.
GLO'BY.
GLO'BULE.
GLO'BULAR.
GLO'BULOUS.
GLO'BULOUSNESS.
Any round body or sphere; a ball: to the earth; to a spherical representation of the earth or heavens.

The other [Mercator] in some of his great globes [hath] continued the West Indies land euen to the North Pole, and consequently cut off all passage by sea that way.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. p. 25.

Although I have given it the name of a liquid thing, yet it is not incontinent to bound itself, as humid things are, but hath in it a most restraining and powerfull abstinence to start back, and glob itself upward from the mixture of any ungenerous and unbeseeming motion, or any soil wherewith it may peril to stain itself.
Milton. The Reason of Church Government, b. ii. c. 3.

Look downward on that globe whose hither side
With light from hence, though but reflected, shines;
That place is Earth the seat of Man, that light
His day. Id. Paradise Lost, b. iii

Regions they pass'd, the mightie regencies
Of Seraphim and Potentates and Thrones
In their triple degrees, regions to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Then what this garden is to all the earth
And all the sea, from one entire globose
Stretcht into longitude. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

—— Then form'd the moon
Globose, and every magnitude of starrs. Id. Ib. b. vi.

—— Roseat dews dispos'd
All but the unsleeping eyes of God to rest,
Wide over all the plain, and wider farr
Then all this globous earth in plain outspred.—Id. Ib. b. v.

And sometimes a company of little icy globules, that is, misty drops, which have been suddenly frozen by the snow: will be piled one upon another, as to compose a little pyramid, terminating in one single globule at the top; not much unlike to a lavender spike.—Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. i. c. 3.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids, quâ fluids, seemeth to be globular; there being no other figure so well fitted, either to the making of fluidity, or of that visible rotundity to which the drops of water and other liquors do constantly conform.—Id. Ib. b. i. c. 2.

When to these living things, quoth righteous Noah,
"Now take you all free liberty to go,
And every way do you yourselves disperse,
Till you have fill'd this globy universe
With your increase." Drayton. Noah's Flood.

By that tall grove, your haire, whose globy rings
He [Love] flying curles, and crispeth with his wings
B. Jonson. An Elegy.

Then globe-engirdling Drake, the naval palm that won,
Who strove in his long course to emulate the Sun.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 19.

Let those who make it their business to visit the globe, to divert their sight with the various prospects of the earth; let these, I say, judge whether the far distant parts of the earth would be so well worth visiting, if the earth was every where of an even, level, globous surface, or one large plain of many thousand miles; and not rather as now it is.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b iii. c. 4.

For why the same eclipse, suppose of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, when the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably to them that live more and more westerly, till at last it appear not at all, no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth.—Ray. On the Creation, pt. ii.

Those who tell us, that light is a great number of little globules, striking briskly on the bottom of the eye, speak more intelligibly than the Schools; but yet these words ever so well understood would make the idea the word Light stands for, no more known to a man that understands it not before, than if one should tell him, that Light was nothing but a company of little tennis-balls, which Fairies all day long struck with rackets against some men's foreheads, whilst they pass'd by others.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. iii. c. 4. s. 10.

The globulous part of a glass-egg of about three inches (for it wanted 1-10th) in diameter on the outside was filled with water to the bottom of the stem.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 722.

The same drops will retain the same figure on stone, or iron, yet they will readily adhere to gold, and loose their globulousness upon it, though gold be a far drier body than wood.—Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 664.

Mark well the finish'd plan without a fault,
The seas globose and huge, th' o'er-arching vault,
Earth's millions daily fed. Cowper. Retirement.

The form of the body is usually oblong, but when alarmed it has a power of inflating the belly to a globular shape of great size.—Pennant. British Zoology. The Globe Tetrodon.

These minute globules (the eyes of a mole) are sunk so deeply in the skull and lie so sheltered within the velvet of its covering, as that any contraction of what may be called the eye-brows, not only closes up the apertures which lead to the eyes, but presents a cushion, as it were, to any sharp or protruding substance which might push against them.
Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

GLODE. See Glide.

GLOMERATE, v. } Lat. Glomera-re, from Glomera'tion. } Glomus. See Globe, and Conglomerate.

To collect or gather up into balls or round masses.

A river which, from Caucasus, after many glomerating dances, increases Indus.—Sir T. Herbert. Travels, p. 68.

For the raine-bow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot possibly fall, but from the aire, that is very low.—Bacon. Naturall Historie, § 832.

S. with a round spiral shell, glomerated, and having three raised ridges on the upper side; minute.
Pennant. British Zoology. Worm Shell

GLOOM, v. } See Gleam. Gloom, the Gloom, n. } noun, (Tooke) is "the past part.
Gloo'my. } of A. S. Leoman, loman, ge-
Gloo'mily. } leoman, ge-loman, radiare, co-
Gloo'miness. } ruscare, lucere," to irradiate, to enlighten.

Gloom is that which is gleamed or enlightened, (sc.) the darkness gleamed or enlightened, through which the light penetrates, or by which it is overshadowed.

To gloom is formed upon this past part. and, thus, is so different in its meaning from the verb to gleam.

To darken, to overshadow, to overcloud, to have or give a dark or dismal appearance; (met.) to harbour dark or dismal thoughts.

It is of loue as of fortune
That chaungeth oft, and nill contune,
Which whiom woll of folke smile
And glombe on hem an other while —Chaucer. R. of the R.

Who'so gladly halseth the golden meane,
Voide of daungers advisdly hath his home
Not with lothsome muck, as a den uncleane,
Nor palace like, wherat disdain may glome.
Surrey. Mean Estate.

For that day is a day of wrathe, a day of trouble and heauinesse, a daye of vtter destruccion and misery, a darcke & a glominge day, &c.—Bible, 1551. Sophony, c. 1.

Now smyling smoothly like to sommer's day,
Now glooming anlly so to cloke her matter;
Yet were her words but wynd, and all her tears but water.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 6.

Ah when will this long weary day have end.
Long though it be, at last I see it gloome
And the bright evening star with golden creast
Appeare out of the East. Id. Epithalamion.

Prin. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,
The sunne for sorrow will not show his head,
Go hence, to haue more talke of these sad things,
Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act v. sc. 3.

All in a moment through the loom were seen
Ten thousand banners rise into the air,
With orient colours waving.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. i.

Like as a gloomie cloud, the which doth beare
An hideous storme, is by the northern blast
Quite ouerblowne yet doth not passe so cleare
But that it all the skie doth overcast
With darkness dread, and threatens all the worlde to waste.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b iv. c. i.

And to those curious wits if we ourselves apply,
Which search the gloomy shades of deep philosophy,
Thy Reason so will clothe, as well the mind can show,
That contrary effects, from contraries may grow
Drayton. Poly Olbion, s. 5.

Deep was the dungeon, and as dark as night
When neither moon nor stars befriend the skies.
But Charis looking in, a morning light
Upon that gloominess rose from her eyes.
Beaumont. Psyche, c. 6. s. 81.

I have methinks a kind of fever upon me, a certain gloominess within me, doubting, as it were, betwixt two passions.—Beaum. & Fletch. The Woman Hater, Act ii. sc. 1.

Or seek her, [the Muse] where she trusts her tunefull tale
To the mid, silent wood, or vocal vale;
Where trees half check the light with trembling shades,
Close in deep glooms, or open clear in glades.
Savage. The Wanderer, c. 4.

His Holy Spirit doth in our religious entercourse with him insinuate a lightsome serenity of mind, doth kindle sweet and kindly affections, and doth scatter the gloomy clouds of sadness.—Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 9.

But chief to heedless flies the window proves
A constant death: where, gloomily retir'd,
The villain spider lives, cunning and fierce.
Thomson. Summer.

For the English are naturally fancifull, and very often disposed by that gloominess and melancholy of temper, which is so frequent in our nation, to many wild notions and visions, to which others are not so liable.—Spectator, No. 419.

A sullen gloom and furious disorder prevail by fits; the nation looses its relish for peace and prosperity, as it did in that season of fullness which opened our troubles in the time of Charles the First.—Burke. Present Discontents.

All shall look outwardly gay and happy, and all within shall be joyless and gloomy.—Porteus, vol. i. Lect. 13.

Nor is this passage of Virgil without sublimity, where the stench of the vapour in Albunea conspires so happily with the sacred horrour and gloominess of that prophetick forest.
Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. ii. s. 21.

GLORY, v. } Fr. s. Gloire; It. and Sp.
Glo'ry, n. } Gloria; Lat. Gloria, which Glo'rious. } Vossius thinks may be from
Glo'riously. } the Gr. Γλωσσα, the tongue:
Glo'riousness. } nam gloria est fama ingens
Glo'rify, v. } de alicujus virtute ac meritis,
Glorifica'tion. } or (with Martinius) from
Gloria'tion. } Κελαρ, i. e. φωνη, as Hesy-
Glo'rying, n. } chius explains it. Κελαρ, from κελ-ευ, to call. Glory and fame (qv.) seem to be words of the same meaning. And see the quotation from Hobbs.

That which is spoken or said, talked, rumoured, reputed, celebrated, renowned, famed; and thus, fame, renown, celebrity, honour, praise; splendour, lustre or magnificence.

To glory,—(by usage) to assume or arrogate glory, fame, renown; to take a pride in.

To glorify,—to have or receive, to give or pay glory, honour or praise.

Oure kyng is peasable, and yut in bataille glorious.
R. Gloucester, p. 483.

The glose gloriousliche was wryte. wyth gylte penne.
Piers Plowhman, p. 322.

And the puple seynge dredde, and glorifiede God that gaf such power to men.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 9.

And when ye people saw it they marualled & glorified God, whiche had given such power to men.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

For Jhesus was not yet glorified.—Wiclif. Jon, c. 7.

Because that Jesus was not yet glorified.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And al the puple joyede in alle thingis that weren gloriously don of him.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 13.

Biholde ye the lilies of the field hou thei waxen: thei trauelen not, neyther spynnen, and I sey to you that neither Salamon in al his glorye was clothid as oon of these.
Id. Ib. c. 12.

Ghoure glorying is not good.—Id. Corynth. c. 5.

Ysalne glorie is for to have pompe, and delit in his temporal highnesse, and glorye him in his worldly estate
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

O glory, glory, thou art none other thing to thousandes of folke, but a great swellar of ears.
Id. The Testament of Love, b. ii.

And Jesu for his grace wit me sende
To shewen you the way in this viage
Of thilke parfit glorious pilgrimage,
That highte Jerusalem celestial.
Id. The Persones Prologue, v. 17,287.

Right so shal your light lighten before men, that they mowe see your good werkes an glorifie your fadet that is in heaven —Id. The Persones Tale.

It fell hem by the waye so,
That they vpon a daie a caue
Within a roche founden haue,
Which was roiall and glorious,
And of entaile curious.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Thou gloriest in the name, and title of a Christyan man: why yeldest thou not unto Christ that thou owest him by reason of thy profession.—Udal. Marke, c. 12.

The most parte of the people doe cal such men happie and fortunate, vnto whom the people sheweth tokens of high fauoure, and likewise thē that are auaunced to honours: and such through glorious titles are much renouned.
Id. Luke, c. 6.

But the more ye kynge thought to satysfye hym with hys fayre speche, the more the patriarke was discontented, in so moche, that at the last he sayde vnto hym, hytherto thou haste reygned gloryously, but hereafter thou shalt be forsakyn of hym that thou at this tyme forsakest.
Fabyan, vol. i. c. 139.

Among them also that are good, euerie one, as he hath in this vsed himselfe, so shal he excell other in the glorious-nes of his new bodye.—Udal. 1 Corinth. c. 15.

The sylken aray, is the innocency of lyfe in this world, thorowe the grace of Christ, and in heauen it is the immortal glorificacion of body and soule.—Id. Reuelacion, c. 19.

—— If old respect,
As I suppose, towards your once gloried friend,
My son now captive, hither had inform'd
Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age
Came lagging after, say if he be here.
Milton. Samson Agonistes.

—— Him followed his next mate,
Both glorying to have scap't the Stygian flood
As Gods, and by their own recover'd strength,
Not by the sufferance of supernal power
Id. Paradise Lost, b. i.

In this fair wise they traveil'd long yfere,
Through many hard assayes which did betide;
Of which he honour still away did bear,
And spred his glory through all countreys wide.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 1.

During whiche time her powre she did display
Through all this realme, the glory of her sex.
And first taught man a woman to obay.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 10.

Glory, or internal gloriation or triumph of the mind, is the passion which proceedeth from the imagination or conception of our own power above the power of him that contendeth with us; the signs whereof, besides those in the countenance and other gestures of the body which cannot be described, are, ostentation in words, and insolency in actions and this passion, of them whom it displeaseth, is called pride; by them whom it pleaseth it is termed a just valuation of himself.—Hobbs. Human Nature, c 9. s. 1.

Not that those few lines can in them comprise
Those glorious ornaments of heauenly grace,
Wherewith ye triumph over feeble eyes
And in subdued harts do tyranyse.
Spenser. To the Lady Carew.

Still with the Muses sporting, while those beames
Of virtue kindled in his noble brest,
Which after did so gloriously forth shine.
Id. On the Death of Sir Philip Sidney.

Chaste mother of our Princes, whence do grow
Those righteous issues, which shall glorify
And comfort many nations with their worth,
To her perpetual grace that brought them forth.
Daniel. A Panegyric to the King's Majesty.

Though in their synagogues the exposition and meditation of the law was their principal employment; yet in their tabernacle and in the temple, which were their places of worship, they offered sacrifice and sang hymns and praises and glorifications of God.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 2.

When it is said that all temporal things are subordinate to our spiritual ends, the meaning is, that all the actions of our life, all that we are, all that we have, must be directed actually or habitually to the great end of man, the glorification of God, and the salvation of our souls.
Id. Ib. b. iii. c. 3.

But since, alas! ignoble age must come,
Disease and death's inexorable doom,
The life which others pay, let us bestow,
And give to Fame what we to Nature owe;
Brave though we fall, and honour'd if we live,
Or let us glory gain, or glory give!
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xii.

Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign;
But 'tis too late, my glorious race is run,
And a dark cloud o'ertakes my setting sun.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

Not so the fair their passion's secret kept,
Silent they heard, but, as they heard, they wept;
When gloriously the blooming Marcus dy'd,
And Cato told the Gods, "I'm satisfy'd."
Eusden. To the Author of the Tragedy of Cato.

Can they who say the Host should be desery'd
By sense, define a body glorify'd.
Dryden. The Hind & the Panther.

This office the good Angels do perform to the souls of the faithfull, not merely to congratulate their safe arrival into the world of blessedness, though there is no doubt but that they, who do so heartily rejoice in the conversion of sinners, are ready enough to congratulate their glorification.
Scott. Christian Life, pt. ii. c. 7. s. 10.

The glorification in the close was in common, to Father, Son, and Holy Ghost.—Waterland. Works, vol. v. p. 381.

The armies and fleets of Xerxes, their numbers, the glorious stand made against them, and the unfortunate event of all his mighty preparations, are known to every body.
Burke. A Vindication of Natural Society.

At school, he scorns to pore over musty Greek and Latin, but gloriously aims at being preeminent in every mischievous frolic, scorning the control of his master, and taking the lead in every attempt to revolt against authority.
Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 28.

The meaning of which seems not to be that the Gentiles were all Atheists, and absolutely and wholly ignorant of God, but that they glorified him not as God.
Jortin. On the Christian Religion, Dis. 7.

He sets before us our new birth, and inheritance—our hopes, our motives,—and glorification—altogether in one point of view—let us follow him through the particulars of this wonderfull display of grace.
Gilpin. Hints for Sermons, vol. i.

Hence proceeds what Longinus has observed of that glorying and sense of inward greatness, that always fills the reader of such passages in poets and orators as are sublime. It is what every man must have felt in himself upon such occasions.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, s. 17.

GLOSE, or
GLOZE, v.
GLOSE, n.
GLO'SER.
GLO'SING, n.
GLO'SINGLY.
GLOSS, v.
GLOSS, n.
GLO'SSARY.
GLOSSA'RIAL.
GLO'SSARIST.
GLOSSA'TOR.
GLO'SSIST.
GLOSSO'GRAPHER.
GLO'SSY.
GLO'SSINESS.

From the A. S. Gles-an, adulari, (says Skinner,) and this from the Ger. Gleissen: A. S. Glitenan, micare, nitere, q. d. nitidè, et speciosè loqui. Gloss, the gloss of colours, he also believes to be from the same Ger. Gleissen, fulgere. The A.S. Gles-an, glisnian, glitenan, and Ger. Gleissen, mean, to be or cause to be clear or bright, plain or manifest; and thus, to clear, explain, interpret; and further, as Skinner expresses it, nitidè et speciosè loqui, to speak fairly and speciously; and hence, further, adulari, to flatter. Fr. Glose; It. and Sp. Glosa; Eng. Glose, or gloss, is derived by Menage from the Lat. Glosa; Gr. Γλωσσα, as applied by the Greeks to the interpretation linguæ secretioris. (Quinct. lib. i. c. 1.) And see the quotation from Holland's Plutarch. The Gr. Γλωσσα is deduced by Lennep from γλο-ειν, polire; the obsolete theme of γλοιος, lubricus; and thus the word may have travelled through the Gr. and Lat. from our northern languages, and returned upon us in some of the applications now in most common use.

To explain, to expound, to interpret, to comment, remark, or observe. To speak or write fairly and speciously, to use fair or specious terms or language; and thus, to soothe, to caress, to flatter, to delude; to have or give a specious, polished or bright appearance.

Herof he bed hem segge soth, as yt were glosyng.
R. Gloucester, p. 314.

Glosinde words & false. Id. p. 497.

Alle tho Norreis, that had bien so fikelle,
Pes forto haue thei glosed him falle mykelle.
R. Brunne, p. 34.

Ne gate my grace thorw eny gyft ne glosing speche.
Piers Ploughman, p. 71.

——— Loke in the sauter glosed.—Id. p. 102.

The glose gloryousliche was wryte, wyth a gylte penne.
Id. p. 322.

——— False prophetes, flaterers and glosers
Shullen come and be curatours over kynges and erles.
Id. p. 377.

With glosynges and with gabbynge, he gyleth the peuple.
Id. p. 398.

Ladies, I pray you that ye be not wroth
I can nat glose, I am a rude man.
Chaucer. The Marchantes Tale, v. 10,250.

Me seemeth by langage ye be some potestate
Or else some curious glozer discetuable
What is your name.—Id. Balade. The Craft of Louers.

For it is hard to you, as I suppose,
And therefore wol I teche you ay the glose.
Glosing is a ful glorious thing certain,
For letter sleth, so as we clerkes sain.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7374.

Where as hym list his prele take,
He can so well his cause make,
And so well feigne, and so well glose,
That there ne shall no man suppose,
But that he were an innocent.—Gower. Con. A. b.v.

Some glosed those wordes, and some thought in their corage that the aunswere was not reasonable, but they durst not saye agaynst it, the Duke of Glocestre was so sore dred.
Berners. Froussart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 201.

The other Master de Prato a solempne prothonotary, his [John Bouchet] prating glozer, wrote of this treaty and composicion.—Hall. Henry V. an. 8.

Wherefore beware ye that al your life bee voide of al clokyng or countrefaict glosse, and that ye neyther speake ne doe, no nor yet thynke any thing alone by your selfes, which ye would not by your good willes haue to be knowē to all creatures.—Udal. Luke, c. 12.

For some said, he was a Samaritan, that he had a devil within him, a glosser, a drinker, a pot companion.
Latimer. Sermon preached before King Edward.

But when he sawe himselfe free from pursute,
He gan make gentle purpose to his dame,
With tearmes of loue and lewdnesse dissolute;
For he could well his glozing speeches frame
To such vaine vses, that him best became.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 8.

Whom glozing Juno, gainst her minde,
With cost did intertaine,
And with a tongue, repugnant quite
To her malicious vaine,
Commends his deeds, when rather she
Did wish he had been slaine.
Warner. Albion's England, b. i. c. 5.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Wind me into the easy-hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton. Comus.

They neuer heare sentence which mentioneth the word or Scripture, but forth-with their glozes vpon it are, the word preached, the Scripture explained or deliuered vnto vs in sermons.—Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 22.

——— Nor must I
With less observance shunne grosse flattery,
For he, reposed safe in his owne merit,
Spurns back the glozes of a fawning spirit.
B. Jonson. Portaster, Act iii. sc. 5.

As also closer, closely, closeness, glozingly, hourly, maiesticall, maiestically.
Camden. Remaines. Excellence of the Eng. Tongue.

But no man can glosse upon this text after that manner for the prophet says, No shepherd shall pitch his fold there, nor shall any man pass through it for ever.
H. More. Defence of the Philosophic Cabbala, c. 3.

Another way there is besides, to turn the doubtfull and suspected sentences in poeticall writings to the better sense, which otherwise might be construed in the worst part: namely, by interpreting words to the signification wherein they are usually taken: wherein it were better to exercise a young man, than in the interpretations of obscure termes, which we call glosses.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 24.

He much more goodly glosse thereon doth shed,
To hide his falsehood, then if it were true.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 5.

Diptycæ in some old glossaries are said to be tabellæ, quibus corruptores puellis suis inscribunt amorem.
Holyday. Juvenal. Illustrations of the Ninth Satyre.

This is the full state of this affair, in the age when Seneca, who was the glossator, liv'd.
Bp. Taylor. Dissuasive from Popery, pt. ii. b. i. § 11.

Eighthly, To establish by law a thing wholly unlawfull and dishonest, is an affirmation was never heard of before in any Law, Reason, Philosophy, or Religion, till it was rais'd by inconsiderate glossists from the mistake of this text.
Milton. Tetrachordon

There stood a hill not far, whose grisly top
Belch'd fire and rowling smoak; the rest entire
Shon with a glossie scurff, undoubted sign
That in his womb was hid metallic ore,
The work of sulphur. Id. Paradise Lost, b. i.

It [Justice] was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribed by a glozing appetite, for an Utile, or Jucundum, to turn the balance to a false and dishonest sentence.—South, vol. i. Ser. 2.

Flattering colloguings and glozings, servile crouchings and fawnings, and the like.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 3.

No written laws can be so plain, so pure,
But wit, and gloss, and malice may obscure;
Not those indited by his first command,
A prophet grav'd the text, an Angel held his hand.
Dryden. The Hind & Panther.

But before I come to that I mainly design for my text, it is fit I should give you some explanation of it and vindicate it from such false glosses, as some amongst us are wont to put upon it.—Sharp, vol. iv. Ser. 16.

If it be only criticism upon ancient authors and languages, he must be a conjuror that can make those moderns, with their comments, and glossaries, and annotations, more learned than the authors themselves in their own languages, as well as in the subjects they treat.
Sir W. Temple. Of Ancient and Modern Learning.

And if you ask how many will do it? courteous John Seneca, the learned glossator, will tell you.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi p. 311.

Some words I believe may pose the ablest glossographer now living.—Blount. Ancient Tenures, Pref.

His gilded bosom, speck'd with purple pride,
And both his wings in glossy purple dy'd.
Parnell. On Queen Anne's Peace.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt.
Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 606.

Ye nations hear! nor fondly deem
Britannia's ancient spirit fled;
Or glozing weep her setting beam,
Whose fierce meridian rays her rivals sped—
Her Genius slept—her Genius wakes—
Nor strength deserts her, nor high heaven forsakes.
Whitehead. Ode for the New Year, (1783.)

It is recorded in the books of heaven; and though every tongue on earth were silent, nay, though every tongue should join in glossing over, and even justifying all or any of those crimes that sentence will assuredly be pronounced on all impenitent offenders.—Porteus, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

There is a sort of gloss upon ingenious falsehoods that dazzles the imagination, but which neither belongs to, nor becomes the sober aspect of truth.
Burke. A Vindication of National Society, Pref.

He spells them true by intuition's light,
And needs no glossary to set him right
Cowper. The Needless Alarm.

In the glossarial index of former editions, the reader has merely been presented with a long list of words, and references to the passages where they occur, often with very different meanings, and is thus called upon to roam over many volumes, in order to form a glossary for himself.
Boswell. Advertisement to Shakespeare.

Hence, as I said, the churchmen though Normans, were well instructed in the spirit and genius of the Saxon laws, and it was not easy for the King's glossers to interpret them to their own mind, whilst the bishops were at hand to refute and rectify their comments.
Hurd. Constitution of the English Government.

Observe yonder tall stem rising from the interstices of a craggy rock, covered with a rind white and glossy like silver, and dropping with ten thousand fine twigs so attenuated as to appear almost capillary.—Anox. Essays, No. 115.

GLOVE, v. GLOVE, n. GLO'VER. } A. S. Glof, which Hickes (Gram. A. S. p. 214.) says, is so called, a fissuris vel intercapedine digitorum, and which will then be derived from the A. S. Clof-an, to cleave, (Serenius, from the Sw. Klyf-wa, findere.) Lye observes, that in Danish Manicæ are called hand-klofwer, a word compounded of hand, and klofwe, findere, to cleave. The Sw. Klof-wa denotes generally every kind of cleft or fissure, (Ihre.)

Clothing for the hand,—separating and covering each finger.

For he vtterliche leueth the kepyng of hem [his hands] and neuer but whenne he bereth haukes, ne weareth he gloues.
R. Gloucester, p. 482. Note.

Ac yf the marchaunt make hus way overe menne cornne
And the hayward happe with hym for to mete
Othe hus hatt othe hus hed othere eilles hes gloves
The merchaunt mot for go. Piers Ploughman, p 217.

Upon his hondes were his gloves white.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2876.

But er thei gon, some aduantage
There will thei haue, and som pillage
Of goodly wordes, or of beheste,
Or elles thei take at leste
Out of hir honde a rynge or glove.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

What other thinges are their sandals, gloues, myters, and all the whole pompe of their disguising, then false signes in which Paule prophesied that they shoulde come.
Tyndall. Works, p. 143.

We saw among them leather dressed like glouers' leather, and thicke thongs like white leather of a good length
Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 100.

——— Hence therefore thou nice crutch,
A scalie gauntlet now, with joynts of steele
Must glouе this hand
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 1.

A hawk he [the upstart country gentleman] esteems the true burden of nobility, and is exceeding ambitious to seem delighted in the sport, and have his fist gloved with his jesses.—Bp. Earle Microcosmography, ed. 1811.

Tho' wouldest thou learne to caroll of loue,
And hery with hymnes thy Issae's gloue.
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. Februarie.

It is not to be thought that he that makes a doublet shall ever make three sleeves unless a man have three arms, or a glove with six fingers for him that hath but five.
Bp Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. ii. c. 1.

Physicians, lawyers, glovers on the stall,
The shopkeepers speak mathematics all.
Dr Corbet On the Occasion of a Blazing Star.

We daily see, that dogs will have an aversion from glovers, that make their ware of dog's skins—they will bark at and be churlish to them, and not endure to come near them, though they never saw them before.
Digby. Of Bodies, c. 28.

Him great Tydides urges to contend,
Warm'd with the hopes of conquest for his friend:
Officious with the cincture girds him round,
And on his wrist the gloves of death are bound.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xxiii.

Cicely, brisk maid, steps forth before the rout,
And kiss'd with smacking lip the snoaring lout
For custom says, "whoe'er this venture proves,
For such a kiss demands a pair of gloves."
Gay. Pastoral. Saturday.

It is certain that one Edward Horne suffered at Newent, where this Deighton had been, and spake with one or two of the same parish, that did see him there burnt and did testify that they knew the two persons that made the fire to burn him: they were two glovers or felmongers, whose names he had in his note book.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1558.

It is remarkable that the prelate [Kemp, Archbishop of York, and afterwards of Canterbury] wears thin yellow gloves, which are well represented.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. i. c. 2.

GLOW, v. GLOW, n. GLO'WING, n. GLO'WINGLY. GLOW-WORM. } A. S. Glow-an, (ge-hlowan;) Dut. Gloeyen; Ger. Gleuen; Sw. Glöa, candere, candescere, ignescere, inardescere, to heat or kindle, to burn, to shine with heat or flame. And thus, says Skinner, the glow-worm, i. e. vermis candens, called by the Greeks Λαμπυρις, (from λαμπ-ειν, to shine.)

To warm, to heat, to burn, to shine with heat or flame; to have the colour or hue of any thing burning, of a warm countenance or complexion.

Til the Holy Gost. gloweth hote as a glede.
Piers Ploughman, p. 331.

With gay glitering glas, glowyng as the sunne.—Id. Crede.

The circles of his eyen in his hed
They gloweden betwixen yelwe and red.
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 2134.

She was a little amoued, and glowed with cruell iyen.
Id. Boecius, b. i.

Ne yet the priuy coales, of glowing iellosie
Could euer kindle needlesse feare within my fantasie.
Gascoigne. An Absent Dame thus Complaineth.

And was to him beholding it most like
A little spark extinguish'd to the eye
That glows again ere suddenly it die.
Drayton. Legend of Matilda the Fair.

I feel my bosom glow with wontless fires,
Rais'd from the vulgar press my mind aspires,
Wing'd with high thoughts, unto his praise to clime,
From deep eternity, who call'd forth time.
Drummond. Hymn on the Fairest Fair.

If you will see a pageant truely plaied
Between the pale complexion of true loue,
And the red glow of scorne and proud disdaine,
Goe hence a little, and I shall conduct you.
Shakespeare. As You Like It, Act iii. sc. 4.

Out he must break, glowingly again and with a great lustre.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act iv. sc. 1.

Now the signe common to them both, testifying as well the ripenesse of the one as the swednes of the other, are the glo-birds or glo-worms, cicindelæ, shining in the evening over the corn fields for so the rustical paisants and countrey clownes call certain flies or wormes glowing and glittering star-like, and the Greekes name them lampyrides: wherein we may see the wonderfull bountie and incredible goodnesse of Nature in teaching us by that sillie creature.
Holland. Plinie, b. xviii. c. 26.

Then every bush is a wild beast, and every shadow is a ghost, and every glow-worm is a dead man's candle, and every lantern is a spirit
Bp. Taylor Rule of Conscience, b. i. c. 1.

And why not Marcia? Come, you strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from one who knows too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love
Addison. Cato, Act iv. sc. 1.

The light from heaven is strong, clear, and pure, carries its own demonstration with it, and we may as rationally take a glow-worm to assist us to discover the sun, as to examine the celestial ray by our dim candle, reason.
Locke. Hum. Underst. b. iv. c. 19. s. 8.

But what will recommend the name of Jervas to inquisitive posterity was his intimacy with Pope, whom he instructed to draw and paint, whom therefore these anecdotes are proud to boast of and enroll among our artists, and who has enshrined the feeble talents of the painter in the lucid amber of his glowing lines.
Walpole Anecdotes of Painting, vol. iv. c. 1.

For persons, who pretend to feel
The glowings of uncommon zeal,
Who others scorn, and seem to be
Righteous in very great degree,
Do, 'bove all others, take delight
To vent their spleen in tales of spite,
To think they raise their own renown
By pulling of a neighbour's down. Lloyd. A Tale.

When, looking eagerly around,
He spied far off upon the ground,
A something shining in the dark,
And knew the glow-worm by the spark.
Cowper. The Nightingale & Glow-worm.

I refer to the light in the tail of a glow-worm, two points seem to be agreed upon by naturalists concerning it: first, that it is phosphoric; secondly, that its use is to attract the male insect.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 13.

GLOZE. See GLOSE.

GLUE, or GLEW, v. GLUE, n. GLU'EY. GLU'ISH. } Fr. Gluer; Sp. Encolar; It. Incollare; Lat. Gluten, from glus, and glus from the Gr. Γλια, any thing viscous, any gelatinous adhesive substance. (See GLUTINOUS.) To glue,—

To bind, fasten or stick together by such viscous or gelatinous and adhesive substance; to stick or set close or fast together, (as if with such substance.)

Let men glewe on us the name
Sufficeth that we haue the fame.
Chaucer. House of Fame, b. iii.

She toke hym than a maner glue,
The whiche was of so great vertue,
That where a man it shulde cast,
It shulde bynde anon so fast,
That no man might it done awaye.—Gower. Con. A. b. v.

Their bowes are of wood of a yard long, sinewed at the back with strong sinewes, not glued too, but fast girded and tied on.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 37.

The spiteful Goddesse spied so great successe in al her artes,
The peoples fierce of both, with blood and battel full embrewd:
And saw their armies ioynt in slaughters vile together glewed.—Phaer. Virgill. Æneados, b. vii.

Therefore he that keepeth that one only commaundement of loue, keepeth all. With this glue shall we be fast ioyned to Christ, so that he be in us, and we againe in him.
Udal. John, c. 4.

And to the end the golde may couer them, they anoynt their bodies with stamped hearbs of a glewey substance.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 665.

In most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air; for which the use of plasters in wounds, chiefly consists: the flesh will glew together with its own native balm.
Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. iii. c. 2. p. 97.

Great cunning there is in making strong glew, and in the feat of ioyning with it.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvi. c. 43.

For what glue or cement holds the parts of hard matter in stones and metals together.
H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. i. c. 7

Also a lake in Assyria, neere unto the which there is a kind of glewie matter to be found, which holdeth such birds as by hap doo light thereon so fast as birdlime, by meane wherof verie manie doo perish and are taken that light vpon the same.—Holinshed. Description of England, b. ii. c. 21.

And consequently be fit for the souls of the deceased to have recourse to, and replenish their vehicle with such a Cambium or glutish moisture, as will make it far easier to be commanded into a visible consistence.
H. More. Immortality of the Soul, b. ii. c. 16.

Macl. Porke! Heart, what dost thou with such a greasy dish? I think thou dost varnish thy face with the fat on it, it looks so like a glue-pot.
B. Jonson. Every Man out of his Humour, Act v. sc. 5.

I bought three at Archangel with intent to send them to you, but I find by one skilful in that trade, that I was deceived, and they were counterfeits with the feet cunningly set on and glewed, and patched up in several places with varnish.—Boyle. Works, vol. vi. p. 641.

St. Cyprian to Pope Stephanus himself, "Therefore most dear brother, the body of priests is copious, being joined together by the glue of mutual concord, and the bond of unity, that if any of our college shall attempt to make heresie, and to tear or waste the flock of Christ, the rest may come to succour."—Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

A lady that long'd is by eating of glew sick
Swift. Dr. Helsham's Answer

With glewie wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin-combs which from the roof were hung
Dryden. Annus Mirabilis.

——— He with his hapless crew,
Each full exerted at his several task
Froze into statues; to the cordage glued
The sailor, and the pilot to the helm.—Thomson. Winter.

Many insects inclose their eggs in a silken web; others cover them with a coat of hair torn from their own bodies, some glue them together; and others, like the moth of the silk-worm, glue them to the leaves upon which they are deposited, that they may not be shaken off by the wind, or washed away by the rain.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 19.

The glue or gum being passed through these minute apertures, forms hairs of almost imperceptible fineness; and these hairs, when joined, compose the silk which we wind off from the cone, in which the silk-worm has wrapped itself up. In the spider, the web is formed from this thread.—Id. Ib.

GLUM, n. GLUM, adj. GLU'MMISH. GLU'MMY. } i. e. Gloom, (qv.) A glum,—a gloomy look; a dark, dismal, sullen look. To glombe, in Chaucer, to look gloomy.

It is of loue, as of fortune
That chaungeth oft, and nil contune;
Which whilom woll of folke smile
And glombe on hem an other while.—Chaucer. R. of the R.

And that thou shouldste not take me vp with visage sad and glum
Although no letter vnto thee
from me at all did cum.
Drant. Horace. Ep. to Julius Florus.

In her estate there sate the noble queene
Of Fame, perceyuyng howe that I was cum,
She woundred methought at my laurell grene,
She loked hautely, and gaue me a glum.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

These things while he did spake, she him beheld with looking glumme,
With rolling here and there her eies, and still in silence dumme. Phaer. Virgil. Æneidos, b. iv.

——— An ilex tree
With glummish darkish shade bespreddes the same, that none may see. Id. Ib. b. xi.

Such casual blasts may happen as are most to be feared, when the weather waxeth darke and glummy.
Knight. Trial of Truth, (1580) fol. 27.

Though swain look glum and miss look fiery,
'Tis nothing but amantium ira.—Lloyd. Ep. to J. B. Esq.

GLUT, v.
GLUT, n.
GLU'TTING, n.
GLU'TTON, v.
GLU'TTON, n.
GLU'TTON, adj.
GLU'TTONISH.
GLU'TTONISE.
GLU'TTONOUS.
GLU'TTONOUSLY.
GLU'TTONY.

Fr. n. Glouton; It. Ghiottone; Sp. Glotон; from the Lat. Glutire, to send or pass down the throat, to swallow. Lat. Gluttus, that part of the neck through or by which food is transmitted. Vossius thinks formed from the sound glutt, glutt, which liquor makes when running through a narrow neck or passage. Or rather from (an unknown Gr. word) γυλξειν, of the same meaning.

To swallow; to swallow in abundance, to fill by swallowing, to fill, to cram full; to satiate, to saturate, to cloy.

The Enygiyase al the nygt byuore vaste bygon to synge,
And spende al the nygt in glotonye & in dryngynge.
R. Gloucester, p. 360.

Bote in gayenesse and in glotenye for glotten here goodes.
And braketh nat here bred to the poure. as the book hoteth. Piers Plouhman, p. 186.

Alas! the shorte throte, the tendre mouth,
Maketh that East and West, and North and South,
In erthe, in air, in water, men to swinke,
To gete a glotes deintee mete and drinke.
Chaucer. The Pardoneres Tale, v. 12,429.

O Glotonie, full of cursednesse;
O cause first of our confusion,
O original of our damnation,
Till Christ had bought us with his blood again.
Id. Ib. v. 12,438.

But yet all were he wounder bad,
Amonge the Grekes a name he had,
Thei cleped hym the god of wine
And thus a glotton was diuine. Gower. Con. A. b. v.

After the disposicion
Of glotony, and dronkship,
That was a sorie felauship. Id. Ib. b. vi.

For whiles he ventures for a double pay
He quite forgets the pay that payes for all,
Till leade (for golde) do glut his greedie gal.
Gascoigne. The Fruits of Warre.

Some to embrowder put them in prease
Wel gyding their glotton to kepe streight their silk.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

Whose glutten cheekes sloth feeds so fat, as scant their eyes be sene.—Surrey, Ps. 73.

Let him drinke a littel julep made with clean water and sugar, or a litell small biere or ale, so that he drinke not a great glut but in a lytel quantite.
Sir T. Elyot. Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 27.

And glutting of meate which weakeneth the body.
Sir J. Cheeke. The Hurt of Sedition.

Having now framed their gluttonish stomachs to have for food the wild benefits of nature.—Sidney. Arcadia, b. iv.

Then sayde the monckes. This request of oures is chefely to refresh the pore therby. No, (said the king) it is rather to pamper your glottonous mawes, whiche neuer are satisfied.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. ii.

The Lordes souper semeth not to bee the great matter, that is in hand, suche as he made with his disciples, but rather some troublous clamorous feast, without equalitie, because eche mã riotously and gloutonously, not lokyng for other, begynneth afore to eate his owne souper.—Udal. 1 Cor. c. 11.

Let the maide also learne cookery, not that slubbring and excesse in meats to serue a great many, full of delicious pleasures and gluttony, which cookes meddle with: but sober and measurable.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 3.

Thorowe glotonye haue manye one perysshed, but he that dyeteth himselfe temperatelye prolongeth his life.
Bible, 1551. Jesus Syrach, c. 27.

Gonz. He'l be hang'd yet,
Though euery drop of water swear against it,
And gape at widst to glut him.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act i. sc. 1.

The joy of the world resembles a torrent: as upon a glut of rain, you shall have a torrent come rolling along with noise and violence, overflowing its banks, and bearing all before it, yet is but muddy and impure water, and 'tis soon gon and dried up.—Hopkins. Works, p. 16.

Then the fat flesh-pots they so much desire,
Whereon in Egypt gluttoning they fed,
When they came hungry home from carrying mire,
Which only dulness and gross humours bred.
Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles, b. iii.

On roots and pulse that feed, on beefe and mutton spare
So frugally they live, not gluttons as we are.
Id. Poly-Olbion, s. 20.

For what reason can you allege why you should gluttonize and devour as much as would honestly suffice so many of your brethren that take paine in the word, like the great eater of Kent, when you are either so unable, or so dull and lazy, that you do not one man's labour.
Marvell. Works, vol. ii. p. 335.

The sottish dott'rel, ignorant and dull;
And next to him the maw-cram'd gluttonous gull.
Drayton. The Owl.

And by his side rode lothsome Gluttony,
Deformed creature, on a filthy swine,
His belly was vp-blowne with luxury,
And eke with fatnesse swollen were his eyen.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 4.

——— For swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder.—Milton. Comus.

——— Thou too shalt see her bleed,
See her convulsive pangs, and hear her dying groans:
Go glut thy eyes with thy ador'd Ismena,
And laugh at dying Phædra.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act iii.

Thus must ye perish on a barbarous coast?
Is this your fate, to glut the dogs with gore
Far from your friends and from your native shore.
Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

They were not deprived from ignorance in God's word, neither for not doing their duty, nor for gluttoning, nor swearing, nor dicing, nor hunting.
Strype. Memorials. Queen Mary, an. 1556.

"Is this," returns the prince, "for mirth a time?
When lawless gluttons riot mirth's a crime;
The luscious wines, dishonour'd, lose their taste,
The song is noise, and impious is the feast."
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. ii.

In pleasure some their glutton souls would steep;
But found their line too short, the well too deep;
And leaky vessels which no bliss could keep.
Dryden. Religio Laici.

And what we say of lust and uncleanness, the same is to be said of gluttony and drunkenness: for these are as noisome and offensive to the Holy Spirit as the other, and render the man who is guilty of them every whit as incapable of his divine inspirations.—Sharp, vol. v. Dis. 3.

The pelican soon found the conveniency of reserving in its mouth, when its appetite was glutted, the remainder of its prey, which is fish.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 23.

The epicure, who places his supreme felicity in the pleasures of the table; and the glutton, whose chief enjoyment of life consists in the indulgence of his appetite, and who wastes by his excesses, the gifts of providence which were intended for the support of his animal frame in the discharge of its duties, and to invigorate the powers of the mind, after they have been exhausted in [illegible]ful services, these characters are considered by common consent as upon a level with the lowest of the brute creation.
Cogan. Ethical Treatise on the Passions, Dis. 1. c. 2.

Gluttonous excess obscures the lustre, and blunts the acuteness of our intellectual nature. It weighs down our soul to the earth. It pollutes its purity, and degrades it to a level with the body.—Knox. Works, vol. vi. Ser. 3.

——— Rank abundance breeds,
In gross and pamper'd cities, sloth, and lust
And wantonness, and gluttonous excess
Cowper. Task, b. i.

It is of small moment which of these brutalities, whether gluttony or the bottle, deprives us of our reason and our health, either of them is sure to do it; for the certain issue of both is a legion of follies, and an hospital of disease.
Warburton. Works, vol. x. ser. 22

GLU'TINOUS.
GLU'TINOUSNESS.
GLU'TINING.

Lat. Gluten. See GLUE. Fastening or holding together by some viscous or gelatinous substance: gluey.

As for the steeping in wine, water does altogether as well others wash the seeds from their mucilage, by breaking and bruising the glutinous berries.
Evelyn. A Discourse of Forest Trees, c. 25.

In good spirit of wine, whose tenacity and glutinousness is far less than that of water, bubbles rarely continue upon the surface of the liquor, but are presently broken and vanish.—Boyle. Works, vol. v. s. 6. p. 205.

We have no shift of faces, no cleft tongues,
No soft and glutinous bodies, that can stick
Like snails, on painted walls, or, on our breasts
Creep up, to fall from that proud height, to which
We did by slavery, not by service climb.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act i. sc. 1.

Nor is it any potion but a playster, he [the tench] affordeth; viz. his natural unctious glutinousness which quickly consolidateth any green gash in any fish.
Fuller. Worthies. Dorsetshire.

These [the beams from the moon] clean contrary, refresh and moisten in a notable manner, leaving an aquatic and viscous glutinous kind of sweat upon the glass.
Digby. Of the Sympathetic Powder.

By the former, [the broad skin on each side of the belly,] assisted with the glutinous slime emitted from the snail's body, they adhere firmly and securely to all kinds of superficies, partly by the tenacity of their slime and partly by the pressure of the atmosphere.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 1. Note 4.

All these threads, being newly spun, are glutinous, and therefore stick to each other wherever they happen to touch, and in those parts of the web most exposed to be torn, our naturalist (the spider) strengthens them by doubling the threads sometimes sixfold.—Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 4.

GNARR.
GNA'RLED.
GNA'RLY.

A. S. Gnyrran; Dut. Knerren, knorren; Ger. Knarren, knirren; Sw. Knorra, stridere, to creak. Omnia à sono ficta. It was sometimes written Knurr. Gnurr (Mr. Tyrwhitt says) is a hard knot in a tree, and knarry full of gnarres or knots. It is applied by Chaucer to the head; in modern vulgar English, the knob. Gnarly is cited by Steevens from Antonio's Revenge, 1602.

Gnurr is applied to the snarling noise of a dog; generally, to chiding or complaints, and may be applied to knots of the oak, from their greater crash or creak in breaking or riving.

In the passage quoted below from the Parson's Tale, gnerring is omitted in Mr. Tyrwhitt's edition.—Chaucer also writes Knarry, (qv.) full of gnarres or knots.

He was short shuldered brode, a thikke gnarre.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 551.

And therefore better and greatly more pleasaunt is a morsell, or litle gobet of bread with ioy, than an hous filled full of delices, with chiding and gnerring, saieth Salomon.
Id. The Persones Tale, ed. 1598.

For and this curre do gnar
They must stande all a far
To holde vp their head at the bar.
Skelton. Why come ye not to Court.

At them he gan to rear his bristles strong
And felly gnarre, vntill daies enemye
Did him appease.—Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5

——— Merciful heaven
Thou rather with thy sharpe and sulpherous bolt
Split'st the vnwedgable and gnarled oke
Then the soft mertle.
Shakespeare. Measure for Measure, Act ii. sc. 2.

Till by degrees the tough and gnarly oak
Be riv'd in sunder. Antonio's Revenge, 1602.

GNASH.
GNA'SHING, n.

Dut. Knaeschen; Ger. Knirschen, dentibus frendere, which latter Wachter calls a frequentative from Knirren, stridere, to crash. As commonly applied, to gnash, is—

To rub, strike or dash the teeth together.

Whi bethen men gnastiden with teeth togidre and the peples thoughten veyn thingis.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 4.

The Macedon perceiuing hurt, gan gnash,
But yet his mynde he bent in any wise
Him to forbear.—Vncertaine Auctors. Death of Zoroas.

And the children of the kyngedome shal be caste oute into utter darknes: there shall be wepynge and gnashynge of teeth.—Bible, 1551. Matthew, c. 8.

By that wales side, there sate infernal Paine,
And fast beside him sate tumultuous Strife:
The one, in hand an iron whyp did straine,
The other brandished a bloudy knife;
And both did gnash their teeth, & both did threaten life.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

Such are they, which say, that God hath decreed the greatest part of mankind to eternal damnation, and that only to declare his severity, and to manifest his glory by a triumph in our tormentes, and rejoicings in the gnashing of our teeth.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 7.

——— The well aim'd javelin
Pierc'd his tough hide, and quiver'd in his heart;
The monster fell, and gnashing with huge tusks
Plow'd up the crimson earth.
Smith. Phædra & Hippolitus, Act i.

——— A staff the herdsman shook
Of knotty oak, with which the earl he struck:
At this the Paladin was rous'd to ire,
He gnash'd his teeth, his eye-balls flash'd with fire.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxx.

GNAT. } A. S. Gnæt. The etymology
Gnat-ling, n. } of this word has been referred to the Gr. Κνὶψ, culex. But the A. S. Næt-an, premere,—and thus, perhaps, pungere, to prick,—with the usual prefix ge, would form ge-næt-an, gnæt-an; and the reason of the application from the prick or sting would be plain.

Blynde lederis clensynge a gnatte but swolowynge a camel.
Wiclif. Matthew, c. 23.

Ye blynde gydes whiche strayne out a gnat and swalowe a cammell —Bible, 1551. Ib.

After thy text, ne after thy rubricke
I wol not work as moche as a gnat.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5929.

We passed the riuer into the wilderneas, where we made wreathes of greene grasse, which we wound about our bodies, to keepe vs from the sunne, and gnats of that country.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 491.

But in these so little bodies (nay prickes and specks rather than bodies indeed) how can one comprehend the reason, the power, and the inexplicable perfection that nature hath therein shewed? How hath she bestowed all the five senses in a gnat.—Holland. Plinie, b. xi. c. 2.

To omit the ancient Conopeion, or gnat-net of the Ægyptians, the inventors of that artifice.
Brown. Cyrus' Garden, c. 2.

He that would behold a very anomalous motion, may observe it in the fertile and tiring stroaks of gnat-worms.
Id. Ib. c. 4.

For an instance of insects endued with a spear, I shall for its peculiarity pitch upon one of the smallest, if not the very smallest of all the gnat kind.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. iv. c. 11. Note.

Among the insects [at Terra del Fuego] which were not numerous, there was neither gnat nor musquito, nor any other species that was either hurtfull or troublesome, which perhaps is more than can be said of any other uncleared country.—Cook. Voyages, vol. i. b. i. c. 5.

But if some man, more hardy than the rest,
Should dare attack these gnatlings in their nest;
At once they rise with impotence of rage,
Whet their small stings, and buz about the stage.
Churchill. The Rosciad.

GNAW, v. } A. S. Gnæg-an; Dut. Knaghen, knauwen; Ger. Nagen; Sw.
Gnaw, s. } Gnaga, rodere. Junius derives
Gna'wing, n. } from the Gr. Νακειν, carpere; but there is no need to travel out of the northern tongues: it was sometimes written knaw.

To press and wear asunder, (sc.) by the teeth; to fret or eat into by continued biting or action of the teeth; to corrode, to eat into, to prey upon.

To the rode he sturte, & bygan to frete & gnawe
The armes vaste, & thyes myd hys teth to.
R. Gloucester, p. 417.

His children wenden, that for hunger it was
That he his armes gnowe, and not for wo,
And sayden: fader, do not so, alas.
Chaucer. The Monkes Tale, v. 14,758.

By dremes, by chirking of dores, or craking of houses, by gnawing of rattes, and swiche maner of wretchednesse?
Id. The Persones Tale.

And for ensample of all londes,
With horse she shulde be to drawe,
Till houndes had hire bones gnawe,
Without any sepulture. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Thus you see that the young man being the scholer gaue his master a boane to gnaw, and bet him with his owne rod, which the master had made for his scholar's taile.
Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 86.

Perceyuinge thus the tyrannye of sinne,
That with his weyght hath humbled and deprest
My pride: by gnawing of the worme within
That neuer dieth, I liue withouten rest.
Wyatt, Psalm 38.

When they fele the terryble gnawinge of inwarde fearfulnesse, they shall seke vp theyr stynkinge remedyes, and require their dyrtye merites, whiche is cleane to dye from Christe and to forsak his lyuyng waters for their filthye puddles of hypocrisye and deuyllyshness.—Bale. Image, pt. i.

Nowe therefore let vs here rehearse, the contencion of familiar thinges, the gnawing at the heartes, and the freating of mindes & vowes, promises and requestes made of diuerse persones.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an 19.

This composition is good for those that be troubled with the splene, or have weak and feble stomachs, or be troubled with gnawing and pain there.—Holland. Plinie, b. xx. c. 9.

So he, now subject to the victour's law,
Did not once move, not upward cast his eye,
For vile disdaine and rancour, which did gnaw
His heart in twaine with sad melancholy;
As one that loathed life, and yet despys'd to dye.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flowers;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer.
Prior. Alma, c. 1.

There is no rest unless you can rest in chains and flames of fire, and under the gnawings of an eternal worm and the everlasting wrath of God.
Bates. The Everlasting Rest of the Saints, c. 10.

O'er the wild waste the stupid ostrich strays
In devious search to pick her scanty meal,
Whose fierce digestion gnaws the tem'pred steel.
Mickle. The Lusiad, b. v.

Nine days I struggled—think the cruel strife
The gnaw of anguish, and the waste of life.
Boyse. Written in the Palace of Falkland.

GNOFF. Mr. Tyrwhitt quotes from Urry, "An old cuff, a miser;" and adds, "I know not upon what authority." Skinner says, "Avarus, I believe from the A. S. Gnafan, to gnaw; because (truly) he through excessive covetousness gnaws the very bones, as dogs do."

Whilom ther was dwelling in Oxenforde
A riche gnof, that gestes helde to borde,
And of his craft he was a carpenter.
Chaucer. The Millers Tale, v. 3188.

The chubbyshe gnof, that toyles, and moyles,
and deiueth in the downe,
If happlye he a suertie be,
so sente for into towne, &c. Drant. Horace, Sat. 1.

GNOME. } Gr. Γνωμη, sententia. "Sen-
Gnomo'logy. } tentiæ—quas Græci γνωμας, appellant: utrumque autem nomen ex eo acceperunt, quod similes sunt consiliis aut decretis," (Quinct. lib. viii. c. 5.) They (sententiæ and γνωμαι) have received their name from this—that they are like counsels and decrees. See Menage.

Gnomes, (Fr. Gnomes,) a name given by the Cabalists to certain invisible people whom they suppose to dwell within the earth. Vigenere calls them Gnomons, and this is derived from the Gr. Γνωμων, knowing, provident. See Gnomon.

Which art of powerfull reclaiming, wisest men have also taught in their ethical precepts and gnomologies, resembling it, as when we bend a crooked wand the contrary way; not that it should stand so bent, but that the overbending might reduce it to a straightness by its own reluctance.
Milton. Tetrachordon.

Gnome [is] a saying pertaining to the manners and common practices of men, which declareth by an apte brevity, what in this our lyfe ought to be done or not done.
Peacham. Garden of Eloquence, (1577.)

The Gnomes or Dæmons of earth, delight in mischief.
Pope. Epistle Dedicatory to Mrs. Arabella Fermor.

GNO'MON. } Fr. Gnomon; Gr. Γνωμων,
Gno'mical. } one who knows, who judges or Gnomo'nicks. } determines; one who, or that
Gnomo'nick. } which, points out.
Gnomo'nist. } For the peculiar application in Dialling, see the quotations.

The shadow of the style in the dyall which they call the gnomon, in Egypt, at noonetide, in the equinoctiall day, is little more in length than halfe the gnomon.
Holland. Plinie, b. ii. c. 72.

Under whose feet, you see the setting sun,
From the dark gnomon, o'er her volumes run
Drown'd in eternal night, never to rise.
Crashaw. On the Frontispiece of Isaacson's Chronology

They [mathematicians] can make that inexhausted fountain of light [the sun] at so immense a distance, by the shadow of a little gnomon, fitly placed, give us an exact account of all the journeys he performs in the zodiack.
Boyle. Works, vol. ii. p. 340.

He may have given him a dial furnished with a magnetic needle, rather than an ordinary gnomical dial.
Id. Ib. vol. v. p. 427.

Suppose that a countryman, in a clear day, brought into the garden of some famous mathematician, should see there one of those curious gnomonic instruments, that show at once the place of the sun in the zodiac, his declination from the equator, the day of the month, the length of the day, &c.
Id. Ib. p. 398.

Man may enjoy the world above him, by applying to his uses creatures, that are by vast removes out of his reach, as the sun, by making it afford him the elevations of the pole, and the azimuths, sun-dials of all sorts, enough to make up an art called gnomonicks.—Id. Ib. vol. vi. p. 776.

The sun enables the gnomonist to make accurate dials, to know exactly how the time passes.—Id. Ib. p. 418.

GNO'STICK. } Gr. Γνωστικος; Lat. Gnos-
Gno'sticism. } ticus; Fr. Gnostique, that can or may know. See the first quotation from Tillotson.

And I think that no man that reads it [the Epistle of John] with attention, can doubt but that it is particularly designed against the impious sect of the Gnosticks, who, as the Fathers tell us, sprang from Simon Magus, and pretended to extraordinary knowledge and illumination, from whence they had the name of Gnosticks.—Tillotson, vol. i. Ser. 15.

This difference between the stile of the Old and New Testament is so remarkable, that one of the greatest sects in the Primitive Church (I mean that of the Gnosticks) did upon this very ground found their heresy of two Gods, the one, evil, and fierce, and cruel, whom they called the God of the Old Testament, the other, good, and kind, and merciful, whom they called the God of the New.—Id. Ib. Ser. 5.

He [Dr. Zeucker] pretended that the most primitive Christians acknowledged not Jesus Christ in any other capacity, but according to his human generation only, till Platonism and Gnosticism crept into the church.
Nelson. Life of Bp. Bull, s. 69.

These objections were eagerly embraced, and as petulantly urged, by the vain science of the gnosticks.
Gibbon. The Roman Empire, c. 14.

GO, v. } A. S. Gan; Dut. Ga-en; Ger.
Go'er. } Ge-hen; Sw. Ga; Scotch and Old
Go'ing, n. } Eng. Ga. Go (see Come) is a term expressing a particular species of motion. We see a thing in motion, the distance from us lessens, the thing approaches, and (we say) it comes; but if the distance increases, the thing departs, and (we say) it goes. See Wend, and Ge.

To go is usually interpreted in union with prepositions, or even with other words connected with it; and thus, improperly, the meaning of the whole phrase is ascribed to the single word.

To go aside, (sub. from the right way,) to deviate, to err.

To go between (sub.) as mediator, intercessor; to mediate, to intercede, to interpose.

To go by, (sub.) as a rule; to act by, or in obedience to, to obey.

To go over, (sub.) from one party to another; to revolt.

To go, (with prepositions, or by inference) is equivalent to the words—

To advance, to return, to proceed, to recede; to succeed; to pass.

To go, is to move voluntarily or involuntarily; by the action of our own limbs, or by conveyance. Go is opposed by Chaucer to—ride; to ride or go, (sc.) on foot; to walk.

The see goth hym al aboute, he stont as an yle.
R. Gloucester, p. 1.

Now at his last goyng, when he to Gascoyn went,
Ge sette a certeyn thing, at gour bothe assent.
R. Brunne, p. 258.

For perille of swilk goynge the kyng perueied to go.
Id. p. 318.

For as a man that goith in pilgrimage, clepide hise seruauntis, and bitook to him hise goodis, and to on he gaf fyve talentis, to another tweyne; and to an othir oon, to ech aftir his owne vertu, and wente forth anoon.—Wiclif. Matt. c. 25.

Symount Petir seide to him, Lord, whider goeth thou? Jhesus answeride, whider I go thou mayist not sue me now: but thou schalt sue aftirward.—Id. Ib. c. 13.

Simon Peter sayde unto him: Lord, whyther goest thou? Jesus answered hym: whyther I goe thou canst not folow me now, but thou shalt folow me afterwardes.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Right by the hopper wol I stand
(Quod John) and seen how that the corn gas in.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4035.

That other wher him lust may ride or go,
But sen his lady shal he never mo.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1353.

Thy temple wil I worship evermo;
And on thin auter, wher I ride or go,
I wol don sacrifice, and fires bete. Id. Ib. v. 2254.

And yet this is a wonder most of al,
Why thou thus sorowest, seth thou wost nat yet
Touching her goyng, how that it shall fal.
Id. Troilus, b. iv.

How oft time may men rede and seen
The treason, that to women hath be doe,
To what fine is such loue, I can not seen
Or where becometh it, whan it is go [i. e. gone]
Id. Ib. b. ii.

To whom the Heduanes und their confederates had divers tymes gyuen battell; wherein going by the wars, they had receiued great domage.—Goldinge. Cæsar, fol. 23.

For vnto the place, where as at that season they founde the Lorde Jesus, there resorted an vnnumerable multitude of people, so as it seemed as it had been an ebbing and flowing of cummers and goers.—Udal. Mark, c. 6.

Compare the Pope's doctrine to the word of God, and thou shalt finde that there hath ben, and yet is a great going out of the way.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 132.

Stew. Let go slaue, or thou dy'st.
Edg. Good gentlemen, goe your gate and let Poor volke passe. Shakespeare. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

——— Such a man
Might be a copie to these younger times;
Which, followed well, would demonstrate them now
But goers backward.
Id. All's Well that Ends Well, Act i. sc. 2.

Is the rough French horse brought to the dore?
They say he is a high goer, I shall soon try his mettle.
Beaum. & Fletch. Cupid's Revenge, Act ii. sc. 1.

Then comes the time, who liues to see't,
That going shal be vs'd with feet.
Shakespeare. Lear, Act iii. sc. 2.

And they said, go to, let us builde us a cite and a tower, whose top (may reache) vnto the heauen that we may get vs a name, lest we be scattered vpon the whole earth.
Bible, 1583. Gen. xi. 4.

If force be not to be used in your case or mine, because unreasonable, or unjust; you will, I hope, think fit that it should be forborn in all others, where it will be equally unjust and unreasonable; as I doubt not but to make it appear it will unavoidably be, wherever you will go about to punish men for want of consideration.
Locke. A Second Letter Concerning Toleration.

Eternal goodness manifestly still
Preserves my soul from each approach of ill:
Ends all my days, as all my days begin,
And keeps my goings, and my comings in.
Parnell. The Gift of Poetry.

But when the year is at an end,
Comparing what I get and spend,
My goings out, and comings in,
I cannot find I lose or win. Swift, Riddle 4.

My grandmother appears as if she stood in a large drum, whereas the ladies now walk as if they were in a go-cart.
Spectator, No. 109.

These go-betweens influence the persons with whom they carry on the intercourse, by stating their own sense to each of them as the sense of the other; and thus they reciprocally master both sides.
Burke. Appeal from the New to the Old Whigs.

She [Mrs. Roundabout] puts me in mind of my Lord Bantam's Indian sheep, which are obliged to have their monstrous tails trundled in a go-cart.
Goldsmith. The Bee, No. 2.

GOAD, v. } A. S. Ga, gaad, goad, cuspis, stimulus, (Lye;) and Somner, the point of a weapon, a spear or arrow-head, a sting, prick or goad. Perhaps that which gad-eth, or causes to ga or go: and thus, consequentially, a prick or spur: and the verb,—
GOAD, n. }
To prick or spur, to stimulate, to urge on, to excite.

For I do iudge those same goads and prickes wherewith their consciences are prikt and wounded to be a greuous fealing of that same iudgment.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser 1.

And therefore goaded with most sharpe occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your owne virtues, for the which
I shall continue thankefull.
Shakespeare. All's Well that Ends Well, Act v. sc. 1.

They their holly whips have brac'd,
And tough hazell goads have got,
Soundly they your sides will baste,
If their courage fail them not.
Drayton. The Shepherd's Sirena.

At length by swords and goading darts compell'd,
Dronish he drags his load across the field;
Not once attempts to charge, but drooping goes,
To bear his dying lord amidst his foes.
Rowe. Lucan, b. iv.

——— A hind that stood beside
A rustic weapon for her rage supply'd,
A pointed goad he brought, with which he drew
From every limb the streams of sanguine hue.
Hoole. Orlando Furioso, b. xxxvii.

GOAL. Dr. T. H. (in Skinner) from the Fr. Gaule, a pole, a stake; because a pole, stuck or fixed in the ground, was used pro metâ. The Fr. Gaule, Lye thinks, is manifestly from the A. S. Ge-afle, which denotes the same thing. Menage, from the Lat. Vallus. By usage, goal is—
That to which our course is directed, and at which it ends; also, from which it commences, and to which it returns.

So that I saw the chaunce as perfectly as I saw my awne image in a glasse, that there was no person (if I had ben greedy to attempt the enterprise) coud nor should haue won the ryng or gott the gole before me.—Hall. Rich. III. an. 2.

As in the rennynge, passyng the gole is accounted but rashenesse, so rennynge halfe way is reproued for slowenesse.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, b. iii. c. 20.

Canara byrds, come in to bear the bell,
And goldfinches do hope to get the gole.
Gascoigne. The Complaints of Phylomene.

Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels, or fronted brigades form.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

And the slope sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal
Of his chamber in the east.—Id. Comus.

O'er-spent with heat, his breath he faintly drew,
Parch'd was his mouth, nor yet the goal in view,
And the first apple on the plain he threw.
Euseb. Ovid. Met. b. x.

So self starts nothing but what tends apace
Home to the goal, where it began the race.
Cowper. Charity.

GOAR. } Gore, in Chaucer, Mr. Tyrwhitt says he does not understand in either of the places cited below. A correspondent suggested to him that gore is a common name for a slip of cloth or linen, (q. slit or rent from the whole breadth,) which is inserted in order to widen a garment in any particular place. This sense, he adds, will suit very well with the context of verse 3237, but hardly with v. 13,719. Gore-coat, (Grose, Supplement,) a gown or petticoat gored, or so cut as to be broad at the bottom, and narrower at the upper end, such as may be seen in some ancient pictures, particularly of Queen Elizabeth. See GORE.
GOARISH. }
Goarish, in Beaumont and Fletcher, is, (met.) rent, ragged; or—pieced or patched.

A seint she wered, barred all of silk,
A barme-cloth eke as white as morwe milk
Upon hire lendes, ful of many a gore.
Chaucer. The Milleres Tale, v. 3237.

Me dremed all this night parde,
An elf-quene shall my lemman be,
And slepe under my gore.
Id. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13,719.

May they know no language but that gibberish they prattle to their parcels, unless it be the goarish Latine they write in their bonds, and may they write false, and loose their debts.
Beaum. & Fletch. Philaster, Act v. sc. 1.

GOAT. } Goth. Gaitei; A. S. Gat, gat; Dut. Geyt; Ger. Geis; Sw. Get, which Junius thinks may be from the Gr. Χαιτη, coma, juba; the animal receiving its name in the northern languages from a Greek word which expresses a quality peculiar to it, viz. its length of hair. Wachter thinks that gitz, geiz, animal avidum, might be formed from the A. S. Gyt-sean, cupere, concupiscere; and the animal be so called quia appetit non appetenda, (sc.) leaves, the bark, shoots of trees, especially of vines; (more probably so called from its lascivious appetency.) See GAT-TOOTH.
GOATISH. }

Thei wenten aboute in brok skynnes and in skynnes of geet.—Wiclif. Hebrewis, c. 11.

[They] walked vp and doune in shepes skynnes, & in goates skynnes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But Crist beinge a bischop of goodis to comynge entride bi a largere and parfitere tabernacle not maad bi hond, that is to seie not of this makyng neither bi blood of gost buckis or of caluys.—Id. Ebrewis, c. 9.

Wherof, if that I shall conforme
The figure vnto that it is,
These olde clerkes tellen this:
That it is like a gote skipende:
And for that it is suche semende,
It is hote capra saliens Gower. Con. A b. vii.

To kepe him from pikinge it was a greate paine,
He gased on me with his gotishe berde,
When I loked on him me purse was half aferde.
Skelton. The Bouge of Court

Goates bring forth foure kids other whiles, but that is very seldome. They goe with young five monthes as ewes do
Holland. Plinie, b. viii. c. 50.

On's shield the goatish Satires dance around,
(Their heads much lighter then their nimble heels)
Silenus old, in wine (as ever) dround,
Clos'd with the ring, in midst (though sitting) reels.
P. Fletcher. The Purple Island, c. 7.

Is not thilke same a gote-herd prowde,
That sittes on yonder bancke;
Whose straying heard them selfe doth shrowde
Emong the bushes rancke?
Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. July.

He said, and seconding the kind request,
With friendly step precedes his unknown guest,
A shaggy goat's soft hide beneath him spread,
And with fresh rushes heap'd an ample bed.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xiv.

But all alone the hoary king he found;
His habit coarse, but warmly wrapt around;
His head, that bow'd with many a pensive care,
Fenc'd with a double cap of goat-skin hair.
Id. Ib. b. xxiv.

The goat is the most local of any of our domestic animals, confining itself to the mountainous parts of those islands his most beloved food are the tops of the boughs or the tender bark of young trees, on which account he is so prejudicial to plantations, that it would be imprudent to draw him from his native rocks, except some method could be devised to obviate this evil.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Goat

A herd of goats, each shining morn,
Midst scraggy myrtle, pointed thorn,
Quick glancing to the sun, display'd
Their spotted sides, and pierc'd the shade:
Their goat herds still, like those of old,
Pipe to the stragglers of the fold.—Whitehead. Variety.

GOB. } "Fr. Gob, gobeau, and the verb
GOBBET. } gober, to ravine, to devour; feed
GOBBLE. } greedily; swallow great morsels, let down whole gobbets," (Cotgrave) Skinner thinks it is not very absurd to derive the Fr. Gob from the verb couper, to cleave.

In the glossary to Horæ momenta Cravenæ, gob is said to be "The mouth; also a copious expectoration: lumps, as gobs of suet." See also Brocket and Moor.

"A gob,—an open or wide mouth. Hence, to gobble, to swallow greedily or with open mouth. Gob, in the south, signifies a large morsel or bit: so we say a good gob, i.e. a good segment or part. The dim. whereof is gobbet, cut into gobbets, perhaps from the Greek word Κοπτω, κομμα."—Catalogue of North Country Words, by Tomlinson, in Ray.

Gob is more probably from the A. S. Ge-openian, to gape, to open. Gop-enian, (and dropping the termination) gop, gob or gub; and applied consequentially to the quantity received or ejected at one opening of the mouth.

The more common word, gob-et, is applied to—
A part or portion, a fragment, a piece; to a piece swallowed at one gulp.

To gobble,—to devour, to swallow large pieces; to swallow greedily; to make a noise by an action of the throat similar to that of swallowing greedily. "Gobble-cock, Turkey-cock."

And there hit [lightning] passed in, and alle to brast a grete beem, and sparkeled the smale gobettes alle about the cnurch.—R. Gloucester, p. 415.

So hope ich to have of hym his al myghty
A gobet of his grace. Piers Ploughman, p. 30.

And alle eten and weren fulfild, and thei token the relifes of broken gobilis twelve cofyns ful.—Wiclif. Matthew, c. 14.

And they did al eate, and were sufficed, and they gathered vp of the gobets that remayned xii. baskets full.
Bible, 1551 Ib.

He salde, he hadde a gobbet of the seyl
That Seint Peter had, whan that he went
Vpon the see, till Jesus Crist him hent
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 698.

The herde of hartes, founden is anone
With hey gobet, prick thou, let gon, let gon.
Id. Legend of Dido.

Reioyce vpon thine assistante companion, Ladye Discention, who hath burst loose frō the pit of bottomlesse helle, that she might heape vppon the many gubs of goulde.
Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 104.

——— He gaping wide his threefold lawes
At hungry caught that gubbe
Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. vi.

And then as well he maye, and so doth he soone after, call the heretikes the church, and therin calleth he both twaine as proprely, as if ye woulde cut of a cantell or a gobbet from an whole lofe, and then call the cantell a lofe, and the lofe a cantell.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 616.

——— That little land he gave
Throate the lawyer swallowed at one gob.
Barry. Ram Alley, Act i. sc. 1.

He slewe Hamon neare to a hauen of the sea and threw him gobbet meale therein, it is now called South-hampton.
Stow. The Romans, an. 21.

But the caitifs that were present, rather of malice than of ignorance, misconstruing his words, murthered the archbishop without further delaie, brained him and hacked him in gobbets.—Holinshed. Ireland, 1534.

He [Shaxton, Bishop of Salisbury] complains of the practice of putting false relics on the people, naming stinking boots, mucky combs, ragged rockets, rotten girdles, locks of hair, gobbets of wood as parcels of the holy cross, of which he had perfect knowledge.
Burnet. History of the Reformation, an. 1536.

The time too precious now to waste,
The supper gobbled up in haste;
Again afresh to cards they run,
As if they had but just begun.—Swift. Lady's Journal.

On such occasions, after he has made them scamper, he returns to his female train, displays his plumage around, struts about the yard, and gobbles out a note of self-approbation.—Goldsmith. Animated Nature. The Turkey.

Every body knows the strange antipathy the turkey cock has to a red colour; how he bristles, and, with his peculiar gobbling sound, flies to attack it.—Id. Ib.

GO'BLET. Mid. Lat. Gobel, gobelettus; Dut. and Fr. Gobelet, which Junius and others (see Menage) think is akin to the Gr. Κυπελλον; more probably to gob, gobet, (sc.) a cup containing a large quantity for one opening of the mouth, for one draught or swallow.

Ye that drinke wyne out of gobiettes.
Bible, 1551. Amos, c. 6.

And the Frenshe kyng gaue hym a goblet of syluer weynge iiii. marke.—Berners. Froissart. Cron. vol. ii. c. 87.

Drunken distemper in the goblet flows.
Carew. Cœlum Britannicum.

Best wits, while they, possest with fury, thinke
They taste the Muses' sober well and drinke
Of Phœbus' goblet, (now a starry signe)
Mistake the cup, and write in heat of wine.
Beaumont. Against abused Loue.

A goblet rich with gems, and rough with gold,
Of depth, and breadth, the precious pledge to hold,
With cruel care he chose: the hollow part
Enclos'd, the lid conceal'd the lover's heart.
Dryden. Sigismonda & Guiscardo.

Two bowls white foaming with their milky store
Of generous oil, two brimming goblets more,
Each year we shall present before thy shrine.
And cheer the feast with liberal draughts of wine.
Beattie, Past. 5.

GO'BLIN. Fr. Gobelin; Ger. Kobold, which Casaubon and other etymologists (on the authority of the scholiast upon Aristophanes) derive from the Gr. Κοβαλος. Minshew, supported by Skinner, from the Fr. Gober, to gobble, to devour; because nurses tell infants that such dæmons devour children whole. See Du Cange, Menage, and Wachter.

By their (the Popes) charming they stirred up walking spirits, bugs goblins, fiery sightes, & diuers terrible goasts & shapes of thinges, with howlinges and groaninges aboute deade men's graues, perswadinge the simple people yt they were deade men's soules.—Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 74.

By night affrighted in his fearful dreams,
Of raging fiends and goblins that he meets,
Of falling down from steep rocks into streams;
Of deaths, of burials, and of winding sheets.
Drayton. Barons' Wars, b. v.

From this ignorance of how to distinguish dreams, and other strong fancies, from vision and sense, did arise the greatest part of the religion of the Gentiles in time past, that worshipped Satyrs, Fawns, Nymphs, and the like; and now-a-days the opinion that rude people have of Faeries, Ghosts, and Goblins.—Hobbs. Of Man, pt. i. c. 2.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have really no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid inculcate these often on the mind of a child, and raise them there together, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again as long as he lives.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 33.

Meantime the village rouses up the fire;
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn, goes the goblin-story round;
Till superstitious horrour creeps o'er all.
Thomson. Winter.

Every one will be sensible of this, who considers how greatly night adds to our dread, in all cases of danger, and how much the notions of ghosts and goblins, of which none can form clear ideas, affect minds which give credit to the popular tales concerning such sorts of beings.
Burke. Sublime and Beautiful, pt. ii. §. 3.

GOD, v.
GOD, n.
GO'DDESS.
GODDI'ZE, v.
GO'DHEAD.
GO'DHOOD.
GO'DLESS.
GO'DLESSNESS.
GO'DLIKE.
GO'DLY, adj.
GO'DLY, ad.
GO'DLILY.
GO'DLINESS.
GO'DSHIP.
GOD-CHILD.
GOD-DAUGHTER.
GOD-FATHER.
GOD-MOTHER.
GOD-SON.

Goth. Goth; A. S. God; Dut. Goed; Ger. Gott; Sw. Gud. This word (says Junius) is very clearly derived from the Goth. Goth; A. S. God, good; in Dut. Goed, in Ger. Gutt; and Minshew, God quasi good, because God is only goodness. The A. S. God, from the verb Godian, juvare, meliorare; to aid or assist, to improve or better. See the quotation from Wilkins.

The Author of all good.

God-father, A. S. God-fader, so called, quia coram Deo se ut parentem infanti illi, cujus est pater initialis fore promisit; because he promised before God that he would be as a parent to that infant, whose pater initialis (i. e. whose father at his initiation or reception into Christ's holy church) he was. See GOSSIP.

God, v. in Shakespeare; godded me,—acted towards me as if I were a god.

Goddize, v. is a coinage of Warner.

Ther fore ys messageres mid gode lettres he nom,
That to the Pope Eleuchere hartiliche heo wende
That he quik into ys lond Crystendome hym sende,
That he mygte serue God, for he wilnede much ther to,
And he ne schulde not be glad, er the dede were y do.
R. Gloucester, p. 73.

Feble was the Godfader, aftur wam the name was.
Id. p. 69.

He was bothe gode & wys in alle his dedes
& right understandyng, to help at alle nedes,
Mikille he wirschiped God and serued our Lady.
R. Brunne, p. 35.

At the begynnynge of the worlde God gaf the dom hym selve
That Adam, Eve, and hus issue alle
Sholden deye doun ryht, and dwelle in peyne evere
If thei touchede the treo, and of the frut eten.
Piers Ploukman, p. 349.

Cros & curteis Christ this begynning spede,
For the Fader's frendshipe, yt fourmed heavun
& through ys special Spirit yt sprōg of hē tweyne
And al in one Godhed endles dwelleth. Id. Crede.

And it is ympossible to please God without feith, for it bihoueth that a man comynge to God beleue that he is, and that he is rewardere to men that seken him.
Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 11.

But without faith it is impossible to please him, for he that commeth to God must beleue that God is, and that he is a rewarder of them that seke hym.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

Ye shuln first in alle your werkes mekely beseechen to the high God, that he wol be your conseillour and shapeth you to swiche entente that he yeve you conseil and comforte, as taught Tobie his sone.—Chaucer. Tale of Melibeus.

I n'ot whe'r she be woman or Goddesse.
Id. The Knightes Tale, v. 1163.

If so be that my youthe may deserve,
And that my might be worthy for to serve
Thy Godhed, that I may ben on of thine,
Then praie thee to rewe upon my pine.—Id. Ib. v. 2383.

And certes, parentele is in two maners: eyther gostly or fleshly: gostly, is for to delen with her Godsibbes: for right so as he that engendreth a child, is his fleshly father, right so is his Godfather, his father spirituel, for which a woman may in no lesse sinne assemble with hire Godsib, than with hir owen fleshly broder.—Id. The Persones Tale.

Lo these Goddes and well mo
Amonge the Grekes thei had tho,
And of Goddesses many one,
Whose names thou shalt here anone
And in what wise thei deceiuen
The folee, which her feith receiuen.—Gower. Con. A. b. 7

And thus she, whiche was all honestie
To Godwarde, after her intent,
At night vnto the temple went,
Where that the fals priestes were
And thei receiuen hir there
With such a token of holyness,
As though thei seen a Goddesse. Id. Ib. b. i.

For man, as tellen us the clerkes,
Hath God above all earthely werkes
Ordeined to be principall,
And eke of soule in speciall
He is made liche to the Godhede. Id. Ib. b. ii.

The Metapōtines knowing of the oracle of the Gods, thinkinge it good to work speedily in the pacifying of their ghostes, and in pacifying of the Gods, set vp little images of stone to the yōg men, and appeased the Goddes with bread sacrifices.
Goldyng. Justine, fol. 23.

Therefore after her death she was worshipped for a Goddesse, and her image set up with a rocke as a tokeu and a signe of chastity and labour.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 3.

The Jewes bare a speciall malyce agaynste Paule, partly for that, that he openly professed himselfe to be an apostle of yᵉ Heathen, whom the Jewes aborred as vnreligious and godles.—Udal. Argument of the Epistle to Hebrues.

He doeseueth himselfe, and maketh a mocke of himselfe vnto the godles hypocrites and infidels.
Tyndall. Workes, p. 99.

A certaine young man, who liued godlylye here with vs in this cytie, when he was taken at Dornick was condemned with this sentence, that yf he wold denye the confessio of his faith he shuld be but beheaded, but yf he perseuered in his purposed opinion, he shuld be burned.
Calvine. Foure Godlye Sermons, Ser. 2.

In this text, kinges be taught to moderate their victories, and that it is their office to see the youghth diligently & godly brought up and learned.
Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 1.

For godly sorow causeth repentaunce vnto saluation not to be repented of: when worldly sorow causeth death
Id. 2 Corinthians, c. 7

Goodlines is greate ryches, if a man be content with that he hath.—Bible, 1551. 1 Tim. c. 6.

Godamarcy, seyd our kyng, of they seruevse to daye,
Yeffe thow hafe awt to do with me, or owt to saye,
They frende schall y yeffor be, be God that ys bot on.
Ancient Popular Poetry. The King & the Barkar.

Theodatus the First was a Romane, the son of one Stenen a Subdeacon; he deuised a newe founde aliance betwene the Godfather and yᵉ Goddaughter, and between the Godmother and her Godsonne, calling it spirituall cosanguinitye: and therefore he commaunded that neyther the Godfather nor his Godsonne should not marrye the Goddaughter and so the Godmother likewise.—Bale. Pageant of Popes, fol. 40.

It is lawfull for them to take as many Godfathers and Godmothers as they will, the more the better.
Hacklyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 321.

Nothing speake we for our own sakes: but whether we speake of our great acts, and thereby seame to be peuishe. peuishe are we to godwarde, to whose glory we rehearse such thinges, as we by his helpe did.—Udal. 2 Cor. c. 5.

But their hartes remayned styll faythlesse to godward, and toward his mercy and truth.—Tyndall. Workes, p. 35.

Corio. This last old man,
Whom with a crack'd heart I haue sent to Rome,
Lou'd me, aboue the measure of a father,
Nay, godded me indeed.
Shakespeare. Coriolanus, Act v. sc. 3.

I suppose, therefore, that to seek after any shape of God, and to assigne a forme and image to him, bewraieth mans weaknesse. For God, whosoeuer he be [if happy there be any other, but the very world] and in what part soeuer resiant, all sense he is, all sight, all hearing, he is all life, all soule, all of himselfe.—Holland. Pline, b. ii. c. 7

——— So little knows
Any, but God alone, to value right
The good before him, but peruerts best things
To worst abuse, or to thir meanest use.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iv.

But what car'd he for God or godliness?
All his care was himselfe how to advaunce,
And to vphold his courtly countenaunce
By all the cunning meanes he could deuise;
Were it by honest wayes, or otherwise,
He made small choyce.—Spenser. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

The wood-borne people fall before her flat,
And worship her as goddesse of the wood,
And old Sylvanus selfe bethinks not, what
To think of white so faire, but gazing stood
In doubt to deeme her borne of earthly brood.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. I. c. 6.

Proserpin her offence,
Growen, through misguides, veniall perhaps,
We censure in suspence,
And faire, loued, fear'd, Elizabeth
Here goddiz'd euer since.
Warner. Albion's England, b. ix. c. 41.

When now these wizards with transfix'd hearts
To make his glory by the same the more,
Confess a godhead shining through their hearts
Which by their magics they deny'd before.
Drayton. Moses his Birth and Miracles.

If therefore we would advertize young men, that poets write thus, not as if they praised and allowed such speeches, but as they knew full well that they be lewd and naughty, so they do attribute them unto as wicked and godless persons, they should never take harme by any evil impressions from poets.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 19.

——— Stand onely and behold
God's indignation on these godless pour'd
By mee, not you but me they have despis'd,
Yet envied. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

——— Discord, whose small sparks once blowne,
None but a God, or godlike man can slake,
Such as was Orpheus, that when strife was grown
Amongst those famous impes of Greece, did take
His siluer harpe in hand, and shortly friends them make. Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iv. c. 2.

Requiring of him [John Caluine] that by his grave counsell, and godly exhortation, he would animate her majesty constantly to follow that, which godlily she had begun.
Knox. History of the Reformation, an. 1558.

Godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things.
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 2.

St. Wynabald again at Hydlemayne enjoy'd
The abbacy, in which his godly time employ'd
In their conversion there which long time him withstood.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 24.

He [Duke Robert] was so well pleased with his entertainment, that in requital thereof and to do favour to the queen, that was his god-daughter, he released to King Henry the three thousand marks which he was yearly to pay him.
Baker. Henry I. an. 1104.

It is a custom of the Catholic Church, that at the baptizing of infants there be godfathers and godmothers. This custom is still of use in the Church of England: and although much of the reason for which they were first introduced is ceased, and the case altered; yet it is enough to every man that is a subject, that it is the custom.
Bp. Taylor. Rule of Conscience, b. iii. c. 4.

Accept my simple legacie,
Of godhood most deuine,
Sayd Brenn. And with a self wrought wound
Did perish, and his men
Departing, wonne, and left the name
To Gallo Grecia then.
Warner. Albion's England, b. iii. c. 16.

Anaxagoras, asserting one perfect mind ruling over all, (which is the true Deity,) effectually degraded all those other pagan Gods, the sun, moon, and stars, from their godships, by making the sun nothing but a globe of fire, and the moon earth and stones, and the like of the other stars and planets.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 233.

As the foundation of this [virtue] there ought very early to be imprinted on his mind a true notion of God, as of the independant Supreme Being, author and maker of all things, from whom we receive all our good, who loves us, and gives us all things.—Locke. Of Education.

And his common title amongst the Latines, was Deus Optimus Maximus. And our forefathers in this nation, seem to have given this very name of God from good.
Wilkins. Natural Religion, b. i. c. 10.

Thee, goddess thee, the clouds and tempests fear,
And at thy pleasing presence disappear:
For thee the land in fragrant flowers is dress;
For thee the ocean smiles, and smooths her wavy breast.
Dryden. Lucretius, b. i.

She faints, she falls, and, scarce recovering strength,
Thus, with a faultering tongue she speaks at length.
Are you alive, O goddess-born! she said,
Or if a ghost, then where is Hector's shade.
Dryden. Virgil Æneid, b. iii.

Canst thou by reason more of godhead know,
Than Plutarch, Seneca, or Cicero. Id. Religio Laici.

Vain wretched creature, how art thou misled
To think thy wit these god-like notions bred!
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heaven, and of a nobler kind. Id. Ib.

About this time one John Huntingdon, a zealous priest and poet, compiled a poem, entitled, the genealogy of heretics mentioning only the names of such godly men as had been no friends to the pope, and no other heretics were once touched at as if there were no heretics but such as opposed the pope.—Strype. Mem. Hen. VIII. an. 1540.

By the means of this man, [Dr Barnes,] and some few others in that University, [Cambridge,] many became godly learned.—Id. Ib.

He saith it not, as supposing godliness and contentedness to be separable; but rather, as implying godliness, therefore to be most gainful, because sufficiency and contentedness do ever attend it.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 3.

I'm come, o'er mountains steep, o'er dusty plains
Half-chok'd with dust, half-drown'd with rains;
Only your godship [Neptune] to implore,
To let me kiss your other shore.
Swift. Epigrams on Windows.

——— A remnant
Inspir'd by me, through the dark ages kept
Of my old Roman flame some sparks alive
The seeming God-built city, which my hand
Deep in the bosom fix'd of wandering seas
Thomson. Liberty, pt iv.

I shall comprehend promiscuously the duty of parents, and, in case of their death, of guardians and of God fathers and God-mothers: though this for the most part signifies very little more than a pious and charitable care and concernment for them, because the children for whom they are sureties are seldom under their power.—Tillotson, Ser. 51.

For Æneas was actually wounded, in the twelfth of the Æneis, though he had the same God smith to forge his arms as had Achilles.—Dryden. Dedication to the Æneis.

Happy the man, who sees a God employ'd
In all the good and ill that checker life!
Resolving all events with their effects
And manifold results, into the will
And arbitration wise of the Supreme.—Cowper. Task, b. ii.

Thy form benign, oh Goddess, wear,
Thy milder influence impart,
Thy philosophic train be there
To soften, not to wound my heart
Gray. Hymn to Adversity.

Here then lies the difficulty: These sects removed all passions from the Godhead, especially anger: and, on that account, rejected a future state of rewards and punishments; while yet they believed a Providence, which was administered by the exercise of those very passions.
Warburton. Divine Legation, b. iii. s. 4.

They now are deem'd the faithful, and are prais'd
Who, constant only in rejecting thee,
Deny thy Godhead with a martyr's zeal,
And quit their office for their errour's sake.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

It was easy to foresee what would follow from this vigilant and able divine, when his lordship's [Bolingbroke] godless volumes should come forth; and the dread of it seems to have kept them back for the remainder of his life.
Hurd. Life of Warburton.

——— Here the mind,
Lull'd by the sacred silence of the place,
Dreams with enchanted rapture of the groves
Of Academus, and the solemn walks
As erst frequented by the God-like band
Of Grecian sages.—Cowper. Power of Harmony, b. ii.

Each God of eminent degree
To some vast beam compar'd might be;
Each Godling was a peg, or rather
A cramp, to keep the beams together.
Churchill. The Ghost, b. ii.

He finds the puny mansion fallen to earth,
Its Godlings mouldering on th' abandon'd hearth:
And starts, where small white bones are spread around,
Or little footsteps lightly print the ground.
Beattie. Battle of the Pygmies and Cranes.

While Bigotry, with well dissembled fears
His eyes shut fast, his fingers in his ears,
Mighty to parry and push by God's word
With senseless noise, his argument the sword,
Pretends a zeal for godliness and grace,
And spits abhorrence in the Christian's face.
Cowper. Hope.

In the next place, his feet peruse,
Wings grow again from both his shoes;
Design'd no doubt, their part to bear,
And waft his God-ship through the air.
Goldsmith. A New Simile in the Manner of Swift.

That colony has cost the nation very great sums of money; whereas the colonies which have had the fortune of not being God fathered by the Board of Trade, have never cost the nation a shilling, except what has been so properly spent in losing them.—Burke. On the Œconomical Reform.

A subscriber may justly say, If my subscription is to go in charity, I myself have many objects as deserving, and more connected with me than any God son of Mr. Cowper
Anecdotes of Bp. Watson, vol. ii. p. 270

GO'DWIT. Skinner,—from God, i. e. good, and wihta, an animal; q. d. avis bona, sapore grata. Serenius,—from the Isl. God, good, and veide, præda venatione capta; vel, si mavis, vist, victus.

The puet, godwit, stint, the palate that allure,
The muser and doe make a wasteful epicure.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 25.

Th' Ionian godwit, nor the ginny hen
Could not goe downe my belly then
More sweet than olives, that new gathered be
From fattest branches of the tree.
B. Jonson. Praises of a Countrie Life. From Horace.

GO'FFISH. Fr. Goffe, dull, sottish, lumpish, doltish, blockish. Mr. Grose says, Goff, a foolish clown, (North.)—Oaf, a foolish fellow, (North and South).—Goff appears to be oaf, with the common A. S. prefix ge. See OAF.

But nathelesse, yet gan she him beseech
For to beware of goffish peoples speech
That dremen things, which that neuer were.
Chaucer. Troilus, b. iii.

GOG. From the A. S. Gan-gan, to go. See AGOG, and GIG.

Luc My ladies cloak; nay, you have put me into such a gog of going, I would not stay for all the world.
Beaum. & Fletch. Wit without Money, Act iii. sc. 1.

GO'GGLE, v. } Wiclif renders luscum, i. e.
GO'GGLE, s. } unoculum, goggle-eyed; but
GO'GGLE-EYED. } it seems very probable that goggle is the diminutive of Gog, agog, and means moving, a moving eye; applied to a prominent, restless eye; or it may be from ooghel-en, the dim. of Dut. Ooghen, with the prefix ghe. (See OGLE.) Junius thinks that the initial s being rejected, goggle-eyed may be the A. S. Scegl-egede; but scegl or sceol is the Eng. Scowl, and scowl-eyes are separated eyes, or eyes looking different ways. To goggle, is—

To move, to strain or stretch, the eye, (sc.) a prominent, restless eye, from one object to another.

That if thin yghe sclaundrith thee caste it out, it is bettre for thee to entre gogil-yghed [luscum] into the rewme of God than haue tweyne yghen and be sent into helle of fier.
Wiclif. Mark, c. 9.

Let the gogle eied Gardiner of Winchester gyrde at it till hys rybbes ake and an hondred digging deuyls vpon his side, yet shal not one iote of the Lord's promisse be vnfulfylled at the tyme appoynted for that blasphemous whore's ouerthrowe, his most holy mother.—Bale. English Votaries, pt. i.

Such sight have they that see with goggling eyes.
Sidney. Arcadia, b. ii

They gogle with their eyes hither and thither.
Holinshed. Description of Ireland, c. 1

Give him warning, admonition, to forsake his sawcy glavering grace; and his goggle-eye: it does not become him, sirrah; tell him so.—B. Jonson. Poetaster, Act iii. sc. 4.

He was of personage tall and of body strong, broad chested, and used both his hands alike, faire complexion; but great and goggle-eied, whereby he saw so clearly, as is incredible to report.—Speed. The Romans, b. vi. c. 4. s. 6.

She [Pythias, or Priestess of Apollo] came out foaming at the mouth, her eyes goggling, her breast heaving, her voice undistinguishable and shrill, as if she had an earthquake within her labouring for vent.—Dryden. Life of Plutarch.

Which made him hang his head and scowl,
And wink and goggle like an owl.—Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 1.

It [the sea-lion] has a great goggle-eye, the teeth 3 inches long, about the bigness of a man's thumb.
Dampier. Voyage, an. 1683.

Palmated feet might have been joined with goggle-eyes; or small eyes might have been joined with feet of any other form.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 15.

Those muscles, in English, wherewith a man ogles,
When on a fair lady he fixes his goggles,
We found 'em much worn.
Byron. Dissection of a Beau's Head.

GOLD. } See GILD. Golden—
GO'LDEN. } Made of gold; having the qua-
GO'LDENLY. } lities of gold; applied to colour;

having the colour of flame; a flame colour; a yellow colour. And further, bright or glaring; brilliant or splendid; having the value of gold; valuable, precious, highly to be prized or valued.

Myd her gold & seluer & myd her tresour he mygte
Sustenyny gode wyle hys ost vorto fygte.
R. Gloucester, p. 171.

Grete treuage thei toke of this londe here.
Thre thousand pounde of gold to paye ilk a ghere.
R. Brunne, p. 7.

Thanne gan Mede muken [meeken] here. and Mercy bysoghte
And profrede Pees a present. al of pure golde.
Piers Ploughman, p. 68.

In which ye schulen make loye though it bihoueth now a litle to be sori in dyuerse temptacioun, that the preuyng of youre feith be mych more precious than gold that is preued bi fier, and be foundun into herying and glorie and onour in the reuelacioun of Iesus Christ.—Wiclif. 1 Peter, c. 1.

In which time ye shall reioyce, though now for a season (if nede require) ye are in heaulneas, thorow manifold temptations, yt your fayth once tryed, being much more precious then gold that perisheth (though it be tried wt fire) might be found vnto laude, glory and honour, at the appearynge of Jesus Christ.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

And after the veil the secounde tabernacle that is seid sancta sanctorum, that is hooli of hooli thingis, hauynge a goldun censer and the ark of the testament kouered aboute on ech side with gold.—Wiclif. Ebrewis, c. 9.

But with in ye second vaile was ther a tabernacle, which is called holyest of al, which had the golden senser, & the arcke of the testamente ouerlayde rounde about with gold.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

This marchant which that was ful ware and wise,
Creanced hath, and paid eke in Paris
To certain Lumbardes redy in hir hond
The sum of gold and gate of hem his bond.
Chaucer. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,298.

He raulshed apples, fro the wakinge dragon: and his hande [illegible] the more heaule, for the golden metall.
Id. Boecius, b. v.

Where stoode a wonder strange image:
His head with all the necke also
They were of fine golde both two.—Gower. Con. A. Prol.

When the King approched nere to the citie, Edmonde Shee gold-smithe then Mayre, with Willyam White and John Mathewe Sheriffis, and all the other Aldermennein scariette, with fiue hundred horse of the citizens in violette, receiued him reuerently at Harnesey.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 44.

Oh that the use of gold were clean gone: would God it could possible be quite abolished among men, setting them as it doth into such a cursed and excessive thirst after it, if I may use the words of most renowned writers: a thing that the best men have always reproched and railed at, and the onely means found out for the ruine and overthrow of mankind.—Holland. Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 1.

I sawe Phœbus thrust out his golden hede,
Upon her to gaze;
But when he sawe, howe broade her beames did sprede
It did him amaze.—Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. May.

My brother Jaques he keepes at schoole, and report speaks goldenly of his profit.—Shakes. As You Like It, Act i. sc. 1.

Two metals, as gold and silver, cannot be the measure of commerce both together, in any country: because the measure of commerce must be perpetually the same, invariable and keeping the same proportion of value in all its parts. But so only one metal does, or can do itself: so silver is to silver, and gold to gold.
Locke. Of Raising the Value of Money.

The golden age was first, when man, yet new,
No rule but uncorrupted Reason knew:
And, with a native bent, did good pursue.
Dryden. The Golden Age.

The proportion between the quantities of gold and silver annually imported into Europe, according to Mr. Meggen's account, is as one to twenty-two nearly; that is, for one ounce of gold there are imported a little more than twenty-two ounces of silver.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. i. c. 12.

If then I say—a gold ring, a brass tube, a silk-string: here are the substantives adjected positu, yet names of things, and denoting substances. If again I say—a golden ring, a brazen tube, a silken string; do gold, and brass, and silk, cease to be the names of things, and cease to denote substances; because, instead of coupling them with ring, tube, and string, by a hyphen thus -, I couple them to the same words by adding the termination en to each of them!
Tooke. Diversions of Purley, pt. ii. c. 6.

Still had she gaz'd; but midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue,
Through richest purple to the view,
Betray'd a golden gleam.
Gray. On the Death of a Favourite Cat.

GOLL. Skinner thinks from the A. S. Wealdan, (ge-wealdan,) to rule, to direct, (whence the Eng. wield,) because we rule and direct all things by our hands; and he thinks it a truly elegant word.

The hands.

Geff. The news hath reach'd
The ordinaries, and all the gamesters are Ambitious to shake the golden gole
Of worshipful mastir Luke.
Massinger. The City Madam, Act iv. sc 1.

Vber. Fy, Mr. Constable, what golls you have! is justice so blind
Y' cannot see to wash your hands? I cry you mercy, sir;
Your gloves are on.—Beaum. & Fletch. Coxcomb, Act i. sc. 1.

GOME. A. S. Guma, one who has the care of, from gym-an, to take care of, guard, attend to. Applied generally to—

A man: corrupted into groom, (qv.)

Thon godspel ys her ageyn. [against this] as gomes may reden. Piers Ploughman, p. 178.

He suffreth more than God quath he. no gome as ich leyve.
Id. p. 225.

This was the tyxt triweliche. ich toke ful good gome.
Id. p. 321.

Thanne seyde alle and some,
The traytour schall be take,
And never ayen hom come
Thaugh he wer thoghtyer (doughtyer) gome,
Than Launcelet du Lake
Lybeaus Disconus. Ritson, vol. ii.

GO'NDELAY. } It. Gondola, gondoliere. Menage, — from gondus, formed from Gr. Κονδυ, which Hesychius interprets ποτηριον Βαρβαρικον, κυμβιον, a barbaric cup, a boat.
GO'NDOLA.
GONDOLI'ER.

Wayting to passe, he saw whereas did swim
Along the shore, so swift as glaunce of eye,
A little gondelay, bedecked trim
With boughs and arboure wouen cunningly
That like a little forest seemed outwardly.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 6.

—— If you make haste you may apprehend him
Rowing upon the water in a gondole
With the most cunning curtizan of Venice.
B. Jonson. The Fox, Act iii. sc. 6.

If 't be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(As partly I find it is) that your fair daughter
At this odde euen and dull watch o' th' night,
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of common hire, a gondelier.—
Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

Or as, with gondolas and men, his
Good excellence the Duke of Venice,
(I wish for rhyme, 't had been the King.)
Sails out and gives the gulph a ring.
Prior. Ep. to Fleetwood Shepherd, Esq.

A gondola, with two oars, at Venice, is as magnificent as a coach and six horses, with a large equipage in another country.—Addison. Travels in Italy. Venice.

GO'NFANON. It. Gonfalon. Caseneuve says, "A word, the origin of which it is difficult to determine." Skinner,—from A. S. Gum-a, a man, and fana, a sign or ensign.

"A little square flag, or penon at the end of a launce; or (more particularly) an old fashioned banner, or square standard born on the top of a launce; such as, even at this day, is used in the wars made by the Pope," (Cotgrave.) It is applied generally to—

A standard, banner or ensign.

Gouffaucon, in Chaucer, is (as Skinner believes) incorrectly written for gonfanon or gonfennon.

Fro Charles kyng sanz faile thei brouht a gonfaynoun.
R. Brunne, p. 30.

His body thei hewe on foure quarters,
To hang in foure tounes, to mene of his maners
In stede of gonfaynouns, and of his baners. Id. p. 330.

And that was he that bare the ensigne
Of worship, and the gonfaucon.—Chaucer. Rom. of the R.

And lord of so high renown
I bare of loue the gonfenoun. Id. Ib.

Ten thousand thousand ensignes high advanc'd,
Standards and gonfalons twixt van and reare
Streame in the aire, and for distinction serve
Of hierarchies, of orders, and degrees.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

GONG. A. S. Gang, latrina, a privie, a jakes. Somner, — from A. S. Gaggan, (pron. gan-gan,) to go; because (says Skinner) all go thither for themselves and not by deputy; more probably because all that entereth into the belly goeth thither.

And namely thise harlottes, that haunten bordelles of thise foule women, that may be likened to commune gong whereas men purge hir ordure.—Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

In this yere also, fell that happe of the Jewe of Tewkysbury, which fell into a gonge vpon the Saturday, and wolde not for reuerence of his sabot day, be plucked out; whereof heryng the Erle of Gloucetyr that the Jew dyd so great reuerence to his sabbot daye thought he wolde doo as moche vnto his holy day, which was Sonday, and so kept him tyll Monday, at which season he was foundyn dede.
Fabyan, vol. ii. Hen. III. an. 1259.

GONG. See the quotation following.

There is one that strikes on a small gong, or a wooden instrument, before every stroke of the oar, then the rowers answer all at once with a sort of a hollow noise, through the throat, and a stamp on the deck with one foot, and immediately plunge their oars into the water. Thus the gong and the rowers alternately answer each other, making a sound that seems very pleasant and warlike to those who are at a small distance on the water or shoar.
Dampier. Voyage. Tonquin, an. 1688.

GOOD, adj.
GOOD, s.
GOOD, ad.
GOO'DLESS.
GOO'DLY, adj.
GOO'DLY, ad.
GOO'DLY-HEAD.
GOO'DLINESS.
GOO'DNESS.
GOODS.
GOO'DSHIP.
GOO'DY.
GOO'DYSHIP.

Goth. Gods; A. S. God; Dut. Goed; Ger. Gutt; Sw. God. Junius remarks, that (in the Codex Argenteus) goth passim est bonum, whence he infers that goth is taken e medio Gr. Αγαθος. Skinner prefers the Lat. Gaudeo. It is from the A. S. God-ian, juvari, prodesse, meliorem facere, meliorescere, bene cedere, conducere, ditare; to serve or assist; to aid, to benefit, to profit, to prosper; to advance or confer an advantage; to promote, to forward the welfare or wellbeing.—Tooke (see 8vo ed. vol. ii. p. 80,) suggests: "Geoced; perhaps goced, written and pronounced good, which the Scotch pronounce and write gude." Good is very extensively and very variously applied.

Serving, conducing or convenient, generally, to any end or purpose; serviceable, beneficial, profitable; useful, able; suitable, fit.

Serving or conducing to, health or happiness; salutary, salubrious, wholesome; cheering or cheerful, kindly, benevolent or beneficent; prosperous, happy.

Conducing to, or causing, any pleasing or agreeable sensations; pleasing or gratifying or agreeable to the taste.

Serving, aiding or assisting the completion or fulfilment, the validity or force, the virtue, the value; complete or full, valid, forceful, valuable; virtuous; worthy of credit or consideration, esteem or honour; creditable, considerable, estimable, honest or honourable.

Goody,—i. e. good-wife.

Good is much used—prefixed.

For the Kyng of France herde telle of hire godenesse,
And bad hire fadir graunt hym the gode Cordelille.
R Gloucester, p. 31.

Plente me may in Engelond of alle gode y se.—Id. p. 1.

Hii putte hem vorth byuore the othere, as godemen agte [ought.] Id. p. 459.

The Monen day that felle to be next after the tueift day,
The Kyng of France & he, at the riuer of S. Rymay,
Held a Parlement, gode sikernes to make,
That bothe with on assent the way suld vndertake
R. Brunne, p. 147.

Alle thei wasted quitely & slouh the folk fulle gerne
Bot tho that fled with ther godes to the ilde of Seuerne
Id. p. 66.

For that is Godes owen good. Piers Ploughman p. 175.

And to clergie ich cam, as clerkes me seide
And ich gret hym goodeliche. Id. p. 190.

For thi God of hus goodnesse. that furst wan [man?] Adam.
He set hym in solace furst, and in soverayne murthe.
And sutthe suffrede hym to synege [sin] sorwe to fele
To white ther thorw what wele was. and kyndeliche to knowe. Id. p. 351.

And he that best laborede, best was alowed.
And leders for here laborynge, over al the lordes goodes.
Piers Ploukman, p. 141.

And these it ben that ben sowen on good lond which heren the word and taken, and maken fruyt, oon thritty fold, oon sixty fold, and oon an hundred fold.
Wielif. Mark, c. 4.

And those that were sowen in good grounde are they that hear the word and receaue it, and bring forthe fruite, some thirtie fold, some sixtie folde, some an hundred folde.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

Wher thou dispisist the richessis of his goodnesse, and the pacience and the long abidyng knowist thou not that the benygnite of God ledith thee to forethinkyng.
Wiclif. Rom. c. 2.

Either dispysest thou the riches of his goodnesse, pacyence and long sufferaunce? And remembrest not howe that ye kindenes of God leadeth the to repentaunce.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

He seide also to hise disciplis, there was a riche man that hadde a baylyff. and this was defamed to him, as he hadde wasted hise goodes.—Wiclif. Luke, c. 16.

And he sayde also vnto his disciples, There was a certaine ryche má, which had a stewarde that was accused vnto him, that he had wasted his goodes.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

He hath ymade us spenden mochel good,
For sorwe of whiche almost we waxen wood,
But that good hope crepeth in our herte
Supposing ever, though we sore smerte
To ben releved of him afterward.
Chaucer. The Chanones Yemannes Tale, v. 16,338.

We moun creancen while we han a name,
But goodies for to ben it is no game.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,220.

And for ther is gret peril in werre; therefore shulde a man flee and eschewe warre in as muchel as a man may goodly.—Id. Tale of Melibeus.

For ouer this, to spake of goodlihede
She passeth all that I can of rede.
Id. The Floure of Curtesie.

And therefore, dere and benigne lady, we praie you and beseche you as mekely as we conne and moun, that it like unto youre grete goodnesse to fulfille in deede youre goodly wordes.—Id. The Tale of Melibeus.

Til Christe's moder (blessed be she ay)
Hath shapen thurgh hire endeles goodnesse
To make an end of all hire heviuesse.
Id. The Man of Lowes Tale, v. 5371.

The God of Loue me folowed aye
Right as an hunter can abide
The beest, till he seeth his tide
To shoten at goodnes to the deere
Whan that him nedeth go no nere.—Id. Rom. of the Rose.

Why hast thou drede of so good one
Whom all vertue hath begone
That in her is no violence,
But goodlihede and innocence,
Without spotte of any blame. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

——— But when he herde
The high wisdome which he saide,
With goodly wordes thus he praide,
That he him wold tell his name. Id. Ib.

The high God of his goodnes. Id. Prologus.

And for the goodship of this dede,
Thei graunten hym a lustie mede,
That euery yere, for his truage,
To hym and to his heritage,
Of maidens faire he shall haue three. Id. Ib. b. iv.

When Platoes tale was done
then Tullie prest in place:
Whose filed tongue with augred talke
would good a simple case.
Turbervile. An Answere in Dispraise of Wit.

And then shall hartie loue continue long togither goodly, in case both parties doe theyr duties accordingly.
Udal. Ephes. c. 6.

Aristotle the most wise philosopher, biddeth women vse less apparell than the law suffereth: & he biddeth them consider, that neither the goodlines of apparel, nor the excellencie of beautie, nor the aboundance of gold is of so great estimation in a woman as is measurablenes and diligence to liue wel and honestly in all things.
Vives. Instruction of a Christian Woman, b. i. c. 9.

Behold, vitailes shalbe so good cheape vpon earth, that they shall thinke thēselues to be in good case.
Bible, 1583. 2 Esdras, xvi. 17.

—— If then his Providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good,
Our labour must be to pervert that end,
And out of good still to find means of evil.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b i.

Was I to have never parted from thy side.
As good have grown there still a liveless rib:
Being as I am, why didst not thou, the head,
Command me absolutely not to go,
Going into such danger as thou saidst? Id. Ib. b. ix.

At last the trumpets, triumph sound on hie.
And running heralds humble homage made,
Greeting him goodly with new victory,
And to him brought the shield, the cause of enmitie.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i.

Upon the way him fortuned to meet
(Faire marching vnderneath a shady hill)
A goodly knight, all arm'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet.
Id. Ib. b. ii.

While vnresolv'd he stood, the victor knight
Arriued, and seem'd in quicknesse, haste and speed,
In boldnesse, greatnesse, goodlinesse and might,
Aboue the princes born of human seed.
Fairefax. Godfrey of Bovlogne, b. xx. s. 107.

The same one day, as me misfortune led,
I in my father's wondrous mirrour saw,
And pleased with that seeming goodly-hed,
Vnwares the hidden hooke with baite I swallowed.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 2.

But thou hast promis'd from us two a race
To fill the earth, who shall with us extoll
Thy goodness infinite, both when we wake
And when we seek, as now thy gift of sleep.
Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

Where they in ydle pomp, or wonton play
Consumed had their goods and thriftlesse howres,
And lastly thrown themselves into these heavy stowres.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 5.

Soft gooddie Sheepe; then said the Foxe, not soe.
Unto the King so rash ye may not goe.
Id. Mother Hubberd's Tale.

King. So, goodie agent? and you think there is no punishment due for your agentship?
Beaum. & Fletch. The Lover's Progress, Act v. sc. 1.

I see thee, lord and end of my desire,
Exalted high as virtue can require;
With power invested, and with pleasure cheer'd,
Sought by the good, by the oppressor fear'd.
Prior. Henry & Emma.

The idea thus made, and laid up for a pattern, must necessarily be adequate, being refer'd to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original, but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination.
Locke. Of Hum. Underst. b. ii. c. 31.

To match this monarch, with strong Arcite came
Emetrius, King of Jude, a mighty name,
On a bay courser, goodly to behold,
The trappings of his horse adorn'd with barbarous gold.
Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

The goodliness to the sight, the pleasantness to the taste, which is ever perceptible in those fruits which genuine piety beareth, the beauty men see in a calm mind and a sober conversation, the sweetness they taste from works of justice and charity, will certainly produce veneration to the doctrine which teacheth such things, and to the authority which enjoins them.—Barrow, vol. i. Ser. 4.

Lucilius was the man who bravely bold
To Roman vices did this mirror hold,
Protected humble goodness from reproach,
Show'd worth on foot, and rascals in the coach.
Dryden. The Art of Poetry, c. 2. Satire.

The more shame for her goodyship
To give so near a friend the slip.—Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3.

Sworn foe to good and bad, to great and small,
Thy rankling pen produces naught but gall:
Let Virtue struggle, or let Glory shine,
Thy verse affords not one approving line.
Smollett. Reproof. A Satire.

Fair in the bosom of the level lake
Rose a green island, cover'd with a spring
Of flow'rs perpetual, goodly to the eye
And blooming from afar.—Logan. The Episode of Lavina.

So far as May doth other months exceed
So far in virtue and in goodlihead
Above all other nymphs Ianthe beare the meed.
Thomson. Hymn to May.

But goodness is strictly, and eminently moral. It is in its nature of a boundless extent. If it be not universally operative it cannot exist as a perfection: it degenerates into partial attachments, and a partial fondness; and thus the idea of an exalted and amiable principle of action is destroyed. This attribute must be universally relative for good. It is, in the divinity, a pattern and prototype of the moral relation of man to man.—Cogan, Dis. i. c. 1.

But not to understand a treasure's worth,
Till Time has stolen away the slighted good
Is cause of half the poverty we feel
And makes the world the wilderness it is.
Cowper. Task, b. vi.

But I am sure the natural effect of fidelity, clemency, kindness in governours, is peace, good-will, order, and esteem, on the part of the governed.
Burke. On American Taxation.

GOOSE. Goo'SERY. Go'ZZARD. A. S. Gos; Dut. Goes, gans; Ger. Gans. (See GANDER.) Applied (met.) to—
Any thing silly.

Wrightes he did make, haules and chambres riche.
When Harald or the king wild come thider efteons
In the tyme of gese, to take them venysons.
R. Brunne, p. 64.

Men gaf fiueten schillynges for a goos or a heen.
Id. p. 174.

Bothe my goos and my grys, and my gras he taketh.
Piers Ploughman, p. 66.

Op̄ swyne op̄ gees dryue. Id. p. 71.

This miller to the toun his doughter send
For ale and bred, and roasted hem a goos:
And bond hir hors, he shuld no more go loos.
Chaucer. The Reves Tale, v. 4135.

Yet whan the raine raineth and the gose winketh
Litell wotteth the gosling what the gose thinketh.
Skelton. The Crowne of Laurell.

The goose likewise is very vigilant and watchfull. Witnesse the Capitoll of Rome, which by the meanes of geese was defended and saved; whereas at the same time, through the default of dogs, (who should have given warning) all had like to have been lost.—Holland. Plinie, b. x. c. 22.

There will not want divers plain and solid men, that have learnt by the experience of a good conscience, what it is to be well taught, who will soon look through and through both the lofty nakedness of your latinizing barbarian, and the finical goosery of your neat sermon actor.
Milton. Apology for Smectymnuus.

Shall I, like Curtius, desperate in my zeal,
O'er head and ears plunge for the common weal
Or rob Rome's ancient geese of all their glories,
And cackling save the monarchy of tories?
Pope. The Dunciad, b. i.

I dare not hope to please a Cinna's ear,
Or sing what Varus might vouchsafe to hear.
Harsh are the sweetest lays that I can bring,
So screams a goose where swans melodious sing.
Beattie, Past 9.

A person, called a gozzard, i. e. goose herd, attends the flock, and twice a day drives the whole to water, then brings them back again to their habitations, helping those that live in the upper stories to their nests without ever misplacing a single bird.
Pennant. British Zoology. The gray lag Goose.

GOOSE-BERRY. Skinner thinks so called, because the juice of these berries, when half ripe, are the best sauce to a goose. Junius suspects that the name was originally groiseberrie, corrupted from the Fr. Groiselle, and that by a further corruption, our gooseberry was formed. Our English gardeners say, so called from its gross or thick skin. The French, from the resemblance of the berries to those of the grossus or unripe fig.—Perhaps it is gorse-berry. See GORSE.

There [illegible] also great store of gooseberries, strawberries, damaske roses, parseley, with other very sweete and pleasant hearbes.—Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 205.

All the other gifts appertinent to man (as the malice of this age shapes them) are not woorth a gooseberry.
Shakespeare. 2 Pt. Hen. IV. Act i. sc. 2.

Very well, cried I, that's a good girl, I find you are perfectly qualified for making converts, and so, go help your mother to make a gooseberry pye.
Goldsmith. Vicar of Wakefield, c. 7.

GOR-BELLY. Go'RBELLIED. See GORE.

And what betokeneth this vnto vs? What els trowe you, but that likewyse as a greate gorbelyed glotton; so corpulente and fatte that he canne scantelye goe.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 1402.

And than the head aketh, & the stomach knaweth, and the next meale is eaten wt out appetite, with gorge upon gorge & grief vppon grief, til the gorbely be compelled to cast vp al again, and then falle to a rere supper.
Id. Ib. p. 99.

Tra. O, we are vndone, both we and ours for euer.
Fal. Hang ye gorbellied knaues, are you vndone?
Shakespeare. 1 Pt. Hen. IV. Act ii. sc. 2.

——— Nero did not take
A noble club-foot-stripling; ne're contract
With one throat-swoln, gorbellied, or crump-back'd.
Holiday. Juvenal, Sat. 10.

They called him Phiscon and Grypos: as ye would say, gorebelly, and hook nosed.—North. Plutarch, p. 189.

GOR'CROW. See GORE.

Now, now, my clients
Beginne their visitation! vulture, kite,
Raven, gor-crow, all my birds of prey,
That think mee turning carcase, now they come.
B. Jonson. Fox, Act i. sc. 2.

It will also eat grain and insects, and like the raven will pick out the eyes of young lambs when just dropped, for which reason it was formerly distinguished from the rook, which feeds entirely on grain and insects, by the name of the gor or gorerow.

Pennant. British Zoology. The Carrion Crow.

GO'RDIAN. Gordian knots, so called from Gordius, a ploughman, and afterwards king of Phrygia, who "folded and knitt a rope with many knots, one so wrethed within another, that no mā could perceive the manner of it, neyther where the knottes began, nor where they ended." And as there was a prophesy "that he should be lord of all Asia that could undo the endles knott," Alexander, fearful of the consequences of failing to undo it, "out of hande cutt with his sworde the cordes asunder, thereby either illuding or els fultilling the effect of the prophecye," (Brende's Q. Curtius, fol. 20.)

Whatsoever it was, I must be fain to leave it as a Gordian knot, which no writer helps me to untie.

Baker. King Stephen, an. 1154.

If once you let the Gordian knot be ty'd,
Which turns the name of virgin into bride,
That one fond act your life's best scene foregoes,
And leads you in a labyrinth of woes,
Whose strange meanders you may search about,
But never find the clue to let you out.

Walsh. To a Lady who had resolved against Marriage.

GORE, v. } Gore-bellied, (says Skinner,) either from gore, sanguis, tabum, or gor, cœnum;—Gor and
GORE, n. } gore are the same word differently applied.
GORY. } Somner has ge-horwigend, sordidus, unclean, corrupt, vile, sordid, growing hoary or sinnewy: and this is from the A. S. verb Harian, (with the usual prefix ge,) ge-harian, by contraction gar, (pronounced broad gaur,) ian, canescere, mucescere; to wax gray or hoary, to grow musty, mouldy, or hoary. The adjective ge-hor (by contraction gore or gor) might be first extended in its application to the filth arising from mouldiness, and thence to any filth, corruption, or pollution, and more particularly to that occasioned by the slaughter of animals; as gory blood, gore-blood, a mixture of blood and filth. Hence gor, without the affix, blood, carnage; and gorebelly, a belly filled with or greedy of meat; gor-crow, a crow feeding on flesh or carrion, (Skinner.) (See GOR-BELLY, GOR-CROW.) To gore, Skinner thinks may be contracted from the A. S. Geborian, to bore, to perforate. Junius observes,—"Anglis quoque is dicitur gored, cujus ilia perforata graveolentem excrementorum spurcitiem egerunt." And thus, to gore,—

To cause gore, to expel or emit, to discharge, to shed gore; and generally, to stick or stab, to pierce or penetrate. And hence probably a gour or gore, a slit. See GOAR.

Pyrrhus shall come besprent with Priam's blood,
That gored the son before the father's face
And slew the father at the altar eke.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Downe strait he falles, & armour large with goare-blood embrues. Phaer. Virgill. Æneidos, b. xii.

He spake: and strait the sword aduis'de into his throat receaues,
And gushinge goary blood the lyfe amid his armour leaues.

Id. Ib. b. x.

He with his handes straue to vnloose the knottes
Whose sacred fillettes all besprinkled were
With filth and gory blod and venim rank.

Surrey. Virgile. Æneis, b. ii.

Through all those foldes the steele-head passage wrought
And through his shoulder perst; wherewith to ground
He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 8.

The willing redbrest, flying through a thorne,
Against a prickle gor'd his tender side,
And in an instant, so, poor creature, dyde.

Browne. The Shepherd's Pipe, Ecl. 1.

And now, thir mightiest quell'd, the battel swerv'd,
With many an inrode gor'd; deformed rout
Enter'd and foul disorder.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. vi.

Sad Amaranthus, made a flowre but late,
Sad Amaranthus, in whose purple gore
Me seemes I see Amintas wretched fate,
To whom sweet Poets verse hath given endlesse date.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 6.

——— But the bloudie fact
Will be aveng'd, and th' others faith approv'd
Loose no reward, though here thou see him die,
Rowling in dust and gore.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b xi.

The obligation of our bloud forbids
A gorie emulation twixt vs twaine.

Shakespeare. Troil. & Cress. Act iv sc 5.

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,
The Muse herself, for her enchanting son?
Whom universal Nature did lament,
When by the rout, that made the hideous roar,
His goary visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore.

Milton. Lycidas.

And in dark nights, and in cold days, alone
[Cromwell] Pursues the monster throughout every throne,
Which shrinking to the Roman Denn impure,
Gnashes her goary teeth. nor there secure.

Marvell. Works, vol. iii. p 303.

Though much dismay'd with what had lately hapt
On gore-drown'd Gadmoor in that bloody show r,
And fearing by the foe to be entrapt.

Drayton. The Miseries of Queen Margarate.

He gaz'd with wonder on their equal might,
Look'd eager on, but knew not either knight:
Resolv'd to learn, he spurr'd his fiery steed
With goring rowels to provoke his speed

Dryden. Palamon & Arcite.

Beneath the brain the point a passage tore,
Crash'd the thin bones and drown'd the teeth in gore.
His mouth, his eyes, his nostrils, pour a flood;
He sobs his soul out in the gush of blood.

Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xv.

——— Great Ajax from the dead
Stripe his bright arms, Oileus lops his head;
Toss'd like a ball and whirl'd in air away,
At Hector's feet the gory visage lay. Id. Id. b. xiii.

We ascribe vices to a horse, that will not obey the whip or the spur or to an ox that attempts to gore the attendants, instead of yielding his neck to the yoke.

Cogan. Ethical Treatise, Dis 2 § 1.

The hand [Cortez] that slew till he could slay no more,
Was glued to the sword-hilt with Indian gore.

Cowper. Charity.

——— Our ancestors
Selected such, for hospitable beds
To rest the stranger, or the gory chief,
From battle or the chase of wolves return'd

Dyer. The Fleece, b ii.

GORGE, v. } Fr. Gorger, engorger; It. In-
GORGE, n. } gorgiare, ingurgitare, from the Lat. Gurges; which, as Skinner observes, was used even in the purer ages of the Latin tongue for helluo, a glutton. The shrill-gorged lark in Shakespeare is "the shrill-throated." To gorge—
To swallow or pass down the throat, to feed gluttonously, to cram the stomach, to glut.

The counseler heareth causes with lesse pain being emptie, then he shal be able after a full gorge.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 112.

And being full paunched with gorge upon gorge, ye haue no minde to relieue your poore bretheren perishing for famine, as though ye wer born to feede none but your own selfes, and were not bounde to relieve the necessitie of your neighbour.—Udal. Luke, c. 6.

Look at the full-fed hound or gorged hawk,
Unapt for tender smell or speedy flight,
Make slow pursuit, or altogether balk,
The prey wherein by nature they delight.

Shakespeare. Rape of Lucrece.

Edg. From the dread soumet of this chalkie bourne
Look vp a height, the shrill-gory'd larke so farre
Cannot be seene or heard; do but look vp.

Id. Lear, Act iv. sc. 6.

As when a vultur on Imaus bred,
Whose snowie ridge the roving Tartar bounds,
Dislodging from a region scarce of prey,
To gorge the flesh of lambs or yeanling kids,
On hills where flocks are fed, flies toward the springs
Of Ganges, or Hydaspes, Indian streames.

Milton. Paradise Lost, b. iii.

He with him clos'd, and, laying mighty hold
Upon his throte did gripe his gorge so fast,
That wanting breath him down to ground he cast.

Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 4.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed vp his gorge, that all did him detest.

Id. Ib. b. i. c. 4

And as those birds do much delight in blood,
With human flesh would have their gorges fill'd,
So waited they upon their swords for food,
To feast upon the English, being kill'd.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

The first night (sayth he) ye might haue seene the Englishmen bathing themselues in wine, and casting their gorges, there was crying, shewting, wassailing, and drinking, shewting far aboue measure.—Stow. Edw. II. an 1313

But fiends to scourge mankind, so fierce, so fell,
Heav'n never summon'd from the depths of Hell,
Bloated and gorg'd with prey, with wombs obscene,
Foul paunches, and with ordure still unclean.

Pitt. Virgil. Æneid, b iii.

It was to stimulate their cannibal appetites (which one would think had been gorged sufficiently) by variety and seasoning; and to quicken them to an alertness in new murders and massacres, if it should suit the purpose of the Guises of the day.—Burke. On the French Revolution

GO'RGEOUS. } Fr. Gorgias. Probably GO'RGEOUSLY. } from gorge, and transferred
GO'RGEOUSNESS. } from the palate to the eye;
Luxuriously, richly, sumptuously, adorned; gay or showy; splendid or magnificent.

With holinesse dooeth he reproue, when he speaketh of gorgeous aray of harlots decking, of game players disguising, of golden spurres, saddles, and brydles!

Sir T. More. Workes, p. 808

How outragiously are their priestes and churches orned and gorgiously garnished in their popetry passetymes and apes playe.—Joye. Exposicion of Daniel, c. 7.

For to the eyes of all the Utopians, except very few (which had been in other countries for some reasonable cause) all that gorgeousness of apparel seemed shamefull and reproachful.—More. Utopia, by Robinson, b. ii. c. 6.

Some rip'ning, ready some to fall,
Some blossom'd, some to bloom,
Like gorgeous hangings on the wall
Of some rich princely room.

Drayton. The Description of Elysium.

——— Son, take my keys,
And let this preparation for this marriage,
(This welcome marriage) long determined here,
Be quick, and gorgeous.

Beaum. & Fletch. Four Plays in One.

What difference betweene men enriched with all abundance of earthly and heauenly blessings, and idols gorgeously attyred, but this, the one takes pleasure in that which they haue, the other none.—Hooker. Ser. Of the Nature of Pride

It seem'd to outvye whatever had been seene before of gallantry and riches, and gorgeousness of apparel.

Baker. Charles II an 1661.

To prohibit gorgeous and costly apparel to be worn but by persons of good quality, shall save the gentry of the kingdom much more money than they shall be taxed to pay your majesty.—Ludlow. Memoirs, vol. iii. p. 272

As for the matter of cloathing, our Saviour goes on, who can be more gorgeously and splendidly apparalled, than the flowers of the field? and yet they toil not, neither do they spin.—Sharp, vol. iv. ser. 1.

And thence "the mighty visitant," that came
To touch thy bosom with her sacred flame,
Recall'd the long lost beams of grace,
That whilom shot from Nature's face,
When God, in Eden, o'er her youthful breast
Spread with his own right hand perfection's gorgeous vest.

Mason Ode. To Memory

To recommend this system to the people, a perspective view of the court gorgeously painted and finely illuminated from within, was exhibited to the gaping multitude.

Burke. On the Present Discontents.

GO'RGET. Fr. Gorgerin; It. Gorgietta.
A collar, (says Skinner,) so called because it covers the gorge, or gullet; the throat.

His horse sore wounded; whilst he went aside
To take another still that doth attend,
A shaft which some too lucky hand doth guide,
Piercing his gorget, brought him to his end.

Drayton. The Battle of Agincourt.

Which Clifford perceiuing, sought to auoide, and whether for haste, heate, or paine, put off the gorget he wore, when sodainely an arrow without an head, shot from the bow of some layde in ambush, pierc'd through his throat.

Speed. Edw. IV. b. ix c. 17. § 7

Three glittering dragons to the gorget rise,
Whose imitated scales, against the skies
Reflected various light. Pope. Homer. Iliad, b. xi.

GO'RGON, n. } Gr. Γοργων, Gorgo; from
GO'RGON, adj. } γοργος, vividus, acer, terri-
GORGO'NIAN. } bilis, and hence applied to Medusa; and poetically extended to—

Any thing terrible, dreadful, frightful.

Gorgon, in the citation from Spenser, is DEMOGORGON, (qv.)

A bold bad man, that dar'd to call by name
Great Gorgon, Prince of darknesse and dead night,
At which Cocytus quakes, and Styx is put to flight.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 1.

But fate withstands, and to oppose th' attempt
Medusa with gorgonian terrour guards
The ford. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. ii.

—— The rest his look
Bound with gorgonian rigor not to move.—Id. Ib. b. x.

But brave Aconteus, Perseus' friend, by chance
Look'd back, and met the Gorgon's fatal glance;
A statue now become, he ghastly stares,
And still the foe to mortal combat dares.
Maynwaring. Ovid. Met. b. iv.

He saw, already one in Heav'n was plac'd,
And one with more than mortal triumphs grac'd
The victor Perseus with the Gorgon-head
O'er Lybian sands his airy journey sped.
Ewsden. Ovid. Met. b. iv.

But Pallas came in shape of rust,
And 'twixt the spring and hammer thrust
Her gorgon shield, which made the cock
Stand stiff, as twere transform'd to stock.
Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2.

As if the dire goddess that presides over it [War] with her murderous spear in her hand, and her gorgon at her breast, was a coquette to be flirted with.
Burke. On a Regicide Peace.

Oh gently on thy suppliant's head,
Dread Goddess, lay thy chastening hand!
Not in thy gorgon terrours clad
(As by the impious thou art seen.)
Gray. Ode to Adversity.

—— Still the sound
Of her gorgonian shield my ears retain,
Whilst earnest, striking on its rim her spear,
The virgin warrior spake.—Glover. The Athenaid, b. xi.

GO'RMAND. See GOURMAND.

GORSE. A. S. Georst, gorst. Gorse,—furz, furbush. (Somner.) Goss,—furze, (Kent, Grose.) Though distinguished by Shakespeare from furz, it belongs to the same genus of plants, the Genista Spinosa. It is probably the past part. geors-od of ge-yrsian, irasci, and so called from its painful prickliness.

—— Looke the other way,
And loe where Richmond in a bed of gorse
Encampt himselfe ore night and all his force:
Upon this hill they met. Corbet. Iter Borreale.

—— So I charm'd their eares
That calf-like, they my lowing followed through
Tooth'd briars, and sharpe firzes, pricking gosse and thornes,
Which entred their frail skinne.
Shakespeare. Tempest, Act iv. sc. 1.

The common, overgrown with fern, and rough
With prickly gorse, that, shapeless and deform'd,
And dangerous to the touch, has yet its bloom,
And decks itself with ornaments of gold,
Yields no unpleasing ramble.—Cowper. The Task, b. i.

GOS-HAWK. A hawk, so called because flown at geese, (Skinner.) Gross-hawk, or great-hawk, (Minshew;) "but," adds Skinner, "I far prefer the former." And see the example from Pennant.

He coude hunt at the wilde dere,
And ride on hauking for the rivere [i. e. water fowl]
With grey goshauk on hond.
Chaucer. The Rime of Sir Thopas, v. 13,668.

Dedalion, and he par cas,
Fro kynde of man for shape was
In to a goshawke of likenes. Gower. Con. A. b. iv.

The squirrill thincking naught
that featly cracks the nut,
The greedie goshawke wanting pray
in dread of death doth put.
Turberville. The Lover whose Mistress feared a Mouse, &c.

The gos-hawk and the pheasant there do twin,
And in the ark are perch'd upon one pin.
Drayton. Noah's Flood.

The goshawk was in high esteem among falconers, and flown at cranes, geese, pheasants, and partridges.
Pennant. British Zoology. The Goshawk.

GO'SLING. A dim. of goose, (qv.)

If one of their goslings be stung never so little with a nettle, it will die of it.—Holland. Pliny, b. x. c. 59.

Surpris'd at all they met, the gosling pair
With awkward gait, stretch'd neck, and silly stare,
Discover huge cathedrals, built with stone,
And steeples tow'ring high, much like our own.
Cowper. Progress of Errour.

GO'SPEL, n. } A. S. God-spell, derived by GO'SPELLER. } some from God, Deus, and GO'SPELLING, n. } spell, sermo, historia; by GO'SPELLIZE, v. } others from God, bonus, and spell, nuntium, quasi bonum nuntium, good tidings, and thus agreeing with the Gr. Ευαγγελιον, (of which it is probably a translation.) Somner knows not which to prefer. Junius adopts the latter. Camden says, "The gladsome tidings of our saluation, which the Greeks call euangelion, and other nations in the same word, they called God-spell, that is God's speech." Junius remarks that the English language retains this word, but in the German it has been suffered to perish. See the quotation from Horsley.

Gospelled, in Shakespeare,—obedient to the precepts of the gospel.

Sente Peter—
Pope was at Rome first, Christendom to lere,
And sende Sent Mark the Euangelist into Egypt for to preche
The gospel that he hadde ymad, and Cristendom to teche.
R. Gloucester, p. 67.

For God as the godspel seith, goth ay as in the poure [sc. clothing.] Piers Ploughman, p. 206.

Jheaus answerde and seyde truelye I seye to you there is no man that leveth hows or bretheren or sistres or fadir or modir or children or feeldis for me and for the gospel, whiche schal not take an hundrid fold so myche now in this tyme housis and britheren and sistres, and modris, and children and feeldis with persecutiouns, and in the world to comynge everlastynge lyf.—Wiclif. Mark, c. 10.

Jesus answered and sayde: verily I say vnto you, there is no mā that forsaketh house, or bretheren, or systers, or father, or mother, or wyfe, other children, or landes for my sake and the gospel's, which shal not receaue an hundred folde now in this lyfe· houses and bretheren, and sisters and mothers, and children, and landes with persecutions. and in the world to come eternall lyfe.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

He was also a lerned man, a clerk,
That Christes gospel trewely wolde preche.
Chaucer. The Prologue, v. 483.

I woul you saine withouten drede
What men may in the gospell rede
Of Saint Mathewe the gospellere
That saieth, as I shall you saie here.—Id. Rom of the R.

—— Sonne myn
To preche, and suffer for the feith,
That haue I herd the gospel seith:
But for to flea, that here I nought.—Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

In the whole multitude that professed the gospell, all be not good, all cannot away with the mortifying of their flesh; they will with good-will beare the name of Christians, of gospellers, but to doe the deedes they grudge, they repine, they cannot away with it.
Latimer. Sermon preached at Stamford, Oct. 9, 1550.

Then Jesus shewing his pietifull affeccion both in coûtenaunce and lyes (with which affeccion euery gospeller ought to be sory for other mens harmes,) touched theyr lyes· and forthwith theyr lyes beyng opened, they sawe, and with others they folowed Jesus.—Udal. Matthew, c. 20.

For I suppose it is not vnknowen vnto thee, that all the others, that cleaued vnto me in Asia, afterwarde forsoke me, and inasmuch as they were with me but with fayntholowe hartes, by and by throughe occasion their counterfaicte gospelling beganne to appere, and they beganne also at Rome to geue me ouer.—Id. Tymothie, c. 2.

The people inclineth to new learninge, and goeth from their olde beleue of holy churche, they that were monkes, priestes, and fryers are now become gospel-teachers.
Bale. Image, pt. ii.

Are you so gospell'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heauie hand hath bow'd you to the graue,
And begger'd yours for euer?
Shakespeare. Macbeth, Act iii. sc 1.

But the gospel is therefore a covenant of grace, not that works are excluded from our duty, or from cooperating to heaven; but that because there is in it so much mercy, that the imperfections of the works are made up by the grace of Jesus, and the defects of innocence are supplied by the substitution of repentance.
Bp. Taylor. Great Exemplar, pt. ii. s. 12.

By this good instruction and training them unto religion, the city of Rome by little and little became so tractable, and had the great power of King Numa in such admiration, that they took all to be as true as the gospel that he spake, though it had no more likelihood of truth, than tales devised of pleasure.—North. Plutarch, p. 59.

Hold thee contented, thou foolish fellow, (quoth the parson.) If I should tell mine hearers of so great a number, I should but discredit the gospeller, and they would not beleeve me.—Holinshed. Description of Ireland, vol. vi. c. 1

The fourth thing misliked is, that against the Apostle's prohibition to haue any familiaritie at all with notorious offenders, Papists being not of the church are admitted to our very communion, before they haue by their religious and gospel-like behauiour purged themselues of that suspition of Popery which their former life haue caused
Hooker. Ecclesiasticall Politie, b. v. § 68.

Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord; touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive ye. And this command thus gospelliz'd to us, hath the same force with that whereon Ezra grounded the pious necessity of divorcing.
Milton. Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce, b. i. c. 8.

And therefore drawing to a close of his gospel, and shewing the end for which he writ it, he has these words: Many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples which are not written in this book; but these are written, that ye may believe that Jesus is the Messiah, the son of God; and believing ye might have life.
Locke. Reasonableness of Christianity

We study and search the Scriptures; O, alas! but we first seek not nor crave for God's Holy Spirit, &c. but read, learning thereout something, to show ourselves gospellers, or picking places every where to maintain argument, &c
Strype. Life of Abp. Whitgift, b. iii. c. 12.

You know, I prophesied to you before the sweat came, what would come, if you repented not your carnall gospelling.
Id. Mem. an. 1555. Bradford to the Univers. of Camb.

In the mean time give me leave to put you in mind of what is done in the corporation (whereof you are a member) for gospellizing (as they phrase it) the natives of New England.
Boyle. Works, vol. i. p. 109. Life.

The original word, which is expressed in our English Bibles by the word gospel, signifies good news, a joyful message, or glad tidings; and our English word gospel, traced to its original in the Teutonic language, is found to carry precisely the same import, being a compound of two words, an adjective signifying good, and a substantive which signifies a tale, message, or declaration.—Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 10.

There stands the messenger of Truth: there stands
The legate of the skies!—His theme divine,
His office sacred, his credentials clear.
By him the violated law speaks out
Its thunders; and by him, in strains as sweet
As angels use, the gospel whispers peace.
Cowper. The Task, b. ii.

When the law of nature came to be shunned as a dangerous and fallacious guide; and faith, traditional, not scriptural, had usurped its province of interpreting gospel-righteousness: then it was, that these bright examples of a new kind of virtue appeared amongst them, in a barbarous rabble of saints; who under the common name of RELIGIOUS, and on a pretence of a more sublime and elevated virtue than natural religion taught, ran into the most horrid excesses of fanaticism and superstition.
Warburton, vol. ix. Ser. 8.

GO'SSAMER. The Author of the English Dictionary (says Skinner) so calls that morning dew (diurno sole exsiccatum) which, like a spider's web, covers whole fields, more especially after a length of fine weather. He derives it from the Fr. Gossampine; Lat. Gossipium, the plant that bears cotton. The Author of Horæ Momenta Cravenæ tells us that the true etymon of this word is obvious to many illiterate peasants in Craven: this down or exhalation being well known by the name of summer goose or summer gauze, hence "Gauze o' th' summer," gausamer, alias gossamer. But he should consider whether a word, thus so apparently indigenous, must not have been familiar in the language before the introduction of the word gauze, (qv.) In the King of Fairy (cited by Dr. Jamieson) it is written gar-summer. In Chaucer, gos-somer. The Germans (as Dr. J. also remarks) call it sommer-weber and weeber-sommer, i. e. the webs of summer; which may seem to countenance the presumed discovery of the Cravenist,—but it has already been shown that gar or gor, means hoar; and hence, probably, gar or gor-summer is summer's hoar, in opposition to winter's hoar, or hoar frost. It is not only applied to—

The morning dew that like a spider's web covers whole fields; but to—

Webs or filmy substances floating in the air. Also met.

As sore wondren som on cause of thonder,
On ebbe and floud, on gossomer, and on mist,
And on all thing, till that the cause is wist.
Chaucer. The Squieres Tale, v. 10,573.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamere,
Fly Cranion, her charioteer,
Upon the coach-box getting.
Drayton. The Court of Fairy.

A louer may bestride the gossamoure
That ydles in the wanton summer ayre
And yet not fall.
Shakespeare. Romeo & Juliet, Act ii. sc. 6.

The Muses friend (gray-eyde Aurorn) yet
Held all the meadows in a cooling sweat,
The milk-white gossamores not upwards, snowd,
Nor was the sharp and usefull steering goad
Laid on the strong neckt oxe.
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. ii. s. 2.

Foolish the bard, who in such flimsy times,
Would load with satire or with sense his rhymes,
No, let my numbers flutter light in air,
As careless as the silken gossamer.
Mason. Epistle to Dr. Shebbeare.

GO'SSIP, v. Go'ssip, n. Go'ssiping, n. Go'ssipry. } Sponsors for an infant in baptism, from the A. S. God, and sib or syb, (qv.) cognatio, affinitas, kindred, affinity; q. d. cognatus in Deo, of kin in God. And this affinity (says Skinner) was considered of so much consequence, that by the Canon Law an intermarriage was forbidden between godsibs to the same child as if the nearest of kin. (And see the first quotation from Chaucer.) And as (says Junius) female gossips frequently, under cloak of this spiritual relationship, used to meet to tell stories and tipple over them, hence the English derived the expressions, to go a gossiping; also, a gadding and drunken gossip. See the quotation from Ritson's Ancient Songs; and also that from Verstegan.

A sponsor for an infant in baptism;—a talking, tattling, or tippling companion.

And if I have a gossib, or a friend,
(Withouten gilt) thou chidest as a fend,
If that I walke or play into his hous.
Chaucer. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 5825.

Yes yes, quod I, a womā can kepe a counsaill well ynough. For thoughe she tell a gossippe she telleth it but in counsayle yet, nor that gossippe to her gossip neither, and so whan all the gossippes in the towne know yt, yet it is but counsayle still.—Sir T. More. Workes, p. 230.

Some there be, that will nothing let their accustomed stations, & feastings, and visitting their gossips, nor break any of their haunted pleasures, though their husbandes be shut vp at home.
Vives. Instruction of Christian Women, b. ii. c. 4.

No more shal that free state of liuyng be bounde vnder yoke of damnable dreames, neither for vowes vnadulsed, nor for popyshe orders, nor yet for anye gossyprye, but be at full lybertie as the Lord hath ordained it.—Bale. Image, pt. iii.

One mother, when as her foole-hardy child
Did come too neere, and with his talants play,
Halfe dead through feare, her little babe reuil'd,
And to her gossips gan in counsell say.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

Go ye be flore be twayne and twayne,
Wysly that ye be not I sayne,
And I shall go home & come a gayne,
To witte what dothe oure syre.
Gode gosyp.
Lytyll Thanke. Ritson. Ancient Songs.

Our Christian ancestors understanding a spirituall affinity to grow betweene the parents, and such as undertooke for the childe at baptisme, called each other by the name of godsib, which is as much to say, as that they were sib together, that is, of kin together through God.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 7.

Then mother Bumby, a mad jocund mate,
As ever gossip'd. Drayton. The Moon-Calf.

I aske you not, as the value of the thing, for then I should demand of you a thousand crownes, so the Cardinals Montalto, Furness the great Duke of Tuscany, my gossip, with diuers other princes have given me; but I despise money.—B. Jonson. The Fox, Act ii. sc. 2.

The dame reply'd: "'Tis sung in every street.
The common chat of gossips when they meet."
Dryden. The Hind & Panther.

All that I aim at, by this dissertation, is, to cure it of several disagreeable notes, and in particular of those little jarrings and dissonances which arise from anger, censoriousness, gossiping, and coquetry.—Spectator, No. 147.

The pleasure I used to take in telling my boy stories of the battles, and asking my girl questions about the disposal of her baby, and the gossiping of it, is turned into inward reflection and melancholy.—Tatler, No. 95

Now from the roost, or from the neighb'ring pale,
Where, diligent to catch the first faint gleam
Of amiling day, they gossip'd side by side,
Come trooping at the housewife's well-known call
The feather'd tribes domestic. Couper. Task, b. v.

Though Sammarthanus's Pædotrophia, or, Art of Nursing, is in Latin; yet the poet descends to such minute precepts as really concern the nurses and gossips.
V. Knox. Winter Evenings, Even. 12.

GOTH. Go'thick. Go'thick, n. Go'thicism. } "Gothi olim Getæ a vernaculo suo jat, id est, gigas, denominati," (Spelman.) Skinner enumerates three other etymologies; 1. from Ger. Got, Deus, and thienen, servire; 2. from A. S. God; Ger. Gott, Deus, q. d. divinus populus; or 3. from God, good, from their great virtues. And see the quotation from Verstegan.

The Gothes, being members of the Germane nation, were so called of the country they dwelled in, which lying on the South part of the kingdom of Swedia, and being more better and fertill then all the other countries that lye North from it, was therefore called Gotland, which is to say Goodland.
Verstegan. Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, c. 1.

Nor thee, his ancient master, laughing sage,
Chaucer, whose native manners, painting verse,
Well moralis'd, shines through the Gothic cloud
Of time and language o'er thy genius thrown.
Thomson. Autumn.

Confining his labours almost wholly to religious and legendary histories, he [Albert Durer] turned the Testament into the history of a Flemish village, the habits of Herod, Pilate, Joseph, &c. their dwellings, their utensils, and their customs, were all Gothic and European.
Walpole. Catalogue of Engravers, vol. v.

The parish church of Lambeth is at a small distance from the Palace, has a plain tower, and the architecture is of the Gothic of the time of Edward IV.
Pennant. London. Lambeth Church.

GOVE, v. Ray says, a goff is a mow of hay or corn, (Essex;) and Mr. Moor, in his Suffolk Words, writes it—Goof or Goaf. Tusser speaks of the gofe-ladder, or ladder to mount the goaf, or mow. Gove,—is Ge-hove, i. e. hove or heaved, raised or thrown up.

In goeing at harvest, learn skilfully how,
Each grain for to lay by itself on a mow
Seed barley, the purest, gove out of the way;
All other nigh hand, gove just as ye may.
Tusser. August's Husbandry.

GO'VERN, v. Go'vernable, Go'vernal. Go'vernance. Governa'tion. Go'verness. Go'verning, n. Go'vernment. Go'vernour. } Fr. Gouverner; It. Governare; Sp. Gobernar; Lat. Gubernare; Gr. Κυβερνα-ειν. A common derivation is κυμα ερευ-ναν, fluctum scrutari, (see Martinius,) but according to Lennep compounded of κυβος, caput, the head, and an unused verb, ερω-ειν, frequenter movere, to move frequently; κυβερναω igitur (he adds) est caput agito, quod est guberno. Scheidius observes, that the Æolians wrote κυμερνητης, which makes him suspect that the word is compounded of κυμα, a wave, and ερω-ειν, to move; and that κυμερνητης was, qui fluctus moveat, motor fluctuum, one who moves, or a mover of the waves.

To rule or regulate, guide or direct, the motions or actions; generally, to rule, guide or direct; have or exercise power or authority over; to have the mastery, to restrain.

After king [Lud] ther was kyng ys brother Cassibel,
That noble prince was y now & that lond gouernede wel.
R. Gloucester, p. 44.

Thise were mayntenours, to sustene the coroun,
& rightfulle gouernours, the folk in feld & toun.
R. Brunne, p. 146.

But if ony widowe hath sones or children of sones lerne sche first to gouerne hir hous.—Wiclif. 1 Tymothy, c. 5.

And lo schippis whanne thei ben greete, and ben dryuun of stronge windis, yet thei ben borun aboute of a litil gouernail where the mouyng of the gouernour wole.
Id. James, c. 3.

Behold also the shyps, whych though they be so great, and are dryuen of fearce wyndes, yet are they turned aboute wyth a verye smal helme, whethersoeuer the violence of y^e gouernour wil.—Bible, 1551. Ib.

But the centurian beleeuyed more to the gouernour, and to the lord of the schip than to these thingis that weren seid of Poul.—Wiclif. Dedis, c. 27.

Neuerthelater the vnder captayne beleued the gouerner and the master, better than the thynges which were spoken of Paule.—Bible, 1551. Acts, c. 27.

Now Jesu Crist, that of his might may sende
Joye after wo, govern us in his grace,
And kepe us alle that ben in this place.
Chaucer. The Man of Lawes Tale, v. 5581.

But at the last, with mochel care and wo
We fell accorded by ourselven two.
He yaf me all the bridal in myn hond
To han the governance of house and lond.
Id. The Wif of Bathes Prologue, v. 6306.

And ye maistresses in your olde lif,
That lordes doughters han in governance,
Ne taketh of my wordes displesance:
Thinketh that ye ben set in governinges
Of lordes doughters, only for two thinges.
Id. The Doctours Tale, v. 12,007.

Beth not be daffed for your innocence,
But sharply taketh on you the governaille.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 9068.

And tables as wel for the gouernacion of the clock, as for to find the altitude, meridian, and many another notable conclusion.—Id. Of the Astrolabie.

Shall crueltie be your gouernesse
Alas, what hart may it long endure.
Id. La Belle Dame sans Mercie.

And natheless thou shalt be lerned,
That will shulde be gouerned
Of reason. Gower. Con. A. b. iii.

Nought only vpon loves chance,
But vpon euery gouernance
Whiche falleth vnto mans deed
Foolhast is euer for to drede.—Id. Ib.

At Rome whan Appius
Whose other name was Claudius,
Was gouernour of the citee,
There fyll a wonder thynge to see,
Touchend a gentill mayde, as thus.—Id. Ib. b. vii.

Certayne thei that haue the charge of a prince, be the gouernale of the ship, the standerd of an army, the gouernance of people, the guide of wates, the shild of kynges, the treasure of all, bycause thei haue among their handes, hym that afterward ought to gouerne all the world.
Golden Boke, c. 8

This league in no wise, was a breche of the league taken wyth the Emperor and the Lady Margaret gouernesse of Flaunders in no point.—Hall. Hen. VIII. an. 17.

The Frenche kynge had ben vnder the gouernaunce of his vncles euer syth the dethe of the laste kynge his father
Berners. Froissart. Cronycle, vol. ii. c. 150

From Memphis he passed vpon the same riuer vnto the inward partes of Egipt, and set a staye and order in the gouernment of the countrey in such sort, that he chaunged nothing of theire lawes and custemes.
Brende. Quintus Curtius, fol. 70

There be both reasons and examples vndoubtedly infinite, wherby maye be proued, that there can be no perfect publyke weale, without one capitall and soueraygne gouernour, whiche maye long endure or continue.
Sir T. Elyot. The Governour, c. 3.

Whilst they were young, Cassibalane their Eme
Was by the people chosen in their stead,
Who on him tooke the roiall diademe
And goodly well long time it gouerned.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 10.

There is not a more tonsile and gouernable plant in Nature, for the cypress may be cut to the very roots, and yet spring afresh.—Evelyn. On Forest Trees, c. 23

Some others were sent thither [to the universitie] by their parents, to save themselves the trouble of governing them at home, during that time wherein children are least governable.
Hobbs. Behemoth, pt. iii.

He of his gardin had the gouernale,
And Pleasure's porter was devisd to bee,
Holding a staffe in hand for more formalitee.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 12.

Whose countries he redus'd to quiet state,
And shortly brought to civile gouernaunce,
Now one, which erst were many made through variaunce.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 10.

He wrote likewise to the Lord John the infant, the Lord of Biskie, and to the Ladie Marie of Biskie, gouernesse of the King of Castile and Leon.—Holinshed. Edw. II. an. 1326.

Treading back again with lost labour, all our happy steps in the progress of reformation, and most pitifully depriving ourselves the instant fruition of that free government which we have so dearly purchas'd, a free commonwealth, not only held by wisest men in all ages the noblest, the manliest, the equalest, the justest, government, the most agreeable to all due liberty and proportion'd equality, both human, civil and Christian, most cherishing to virtue and true religion, but also (I may say it with greatest probability) plainly commended, or rather enjoyn'd by our Saviour himself, to all Christians, not without remarkable disallowance, and the brand of gentilism upon kingship.
Milton. Way to establish a Free Commonwealth.

It is true indeed that Plato himself seems to acknowledge a certain plastick or methodical nature in the universe, subordinate to the Deity, or that perfect mind, which is the supreme Governor of all things.
Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 110.

Can we climb above the heaven of heavens, and there unlock his closet, rifle his cabinet, and peruse the records of everlasting destiny by which the world is governed?
Barrow, vol. iii. Ser. 23.

It [the storm] came on very fierce, and we kept right before the wind and sea, the wind still increasing: the ship was very governable and steered incomparably well.
Dampier. Voyage, vol. iii. an. 1699.

The bishop's governance should be so gentle and easie, that men hardly can be unwilling to comply with it.
Barrow. Of the Pope's Supremacy.

To convince the world you are not partial, pray proceed to detect the male administration of governesses as successfully as you have expos'd that of pedagogues.
Spectator, No. 314.

That, which begins and actually constitutes any political society, is nothing but the consent of any number of freemen capable of a majority to unite and incorporate into such a society. And that is that, and that only, which did, or could give any beginning to any lawful government in the world.—Locke. Of Civil Government, b. ii. c. 8.

So that their politick societies all begun from a voluntary union, and the mutual agreement of men freely acting in the choice of their governors and forms of government.
Id. Ib.

The old prerogative enthusiasts, it is true, did speculate foolishly, and perhaps impiously too, as if monarchy had more of a divine sanction than any other mode of government, and as if a right to govern by inheritance were in strictness indefeasible in every person, who should be found in the succession to a throne, and under every circumstance which no civil or political right can be.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

Charles the First and his Queen, and the Lady Morton, governess of the royal children, who is celebrated by Waller.
Walpole. Anecdotes of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

The Revolution was made to preserve our ancient indisputable laws and liberties, and that ancient constitution and government which is our only security for law and liberty.
Burke. On the French Revolution.

It was observed, that men had ungovernable passions which made it necessary to guard against the violence they might offer to each other. They appointed governours over them for this reason, but a worse and more perplexing difficulty arises, how to be defended against the governours.
Id. A Vindication of Natural Society.

GOUGE, v. Fr. Gouge. A joiner's tool, says Menage, from gubia, mot Gaulois.

The word is used by the North Americans, who in their savage quarrels not unfrequently gouge out eyes.

——— I will saue in cork
In my mere stop'ling, 'boue three thousand pound
Within that terme: by googing of 'hem out
Just to the size of my bottles, and not slicing.
B. Jonson. The Diuelle is an Asse.

GOUJEERS. The Goujeres, i. e. morbus gallicus. Gouge, Fr. signifies one of the common women attending a camp; and thus, Goujeers, gougeries, the disease incident to and derived from the gouges. In the first folio written good yeares. Sir Thomas Hanmer has the credit of making the correction and explaining the word.

——— Wipe thine eyes,
The good yeares shall deuoure them, flesh and fell
Ere they shall make vs weepe.—Shakes. Lear, Act v. sc. 3.

GOURD. Fr. Gohourde, from the Lat. Cucurbita, (Menage.)

The extract from Cook's Voyages explains that given from Chaucer.

And wete ye what? I have here in my gourd
A draught of win, ye of a ripe grape.
Chaucer. The Monciples Prologue, v. 17,031.

Gourdes rawe be vnpleasant in eatinge, yll for the stomake, and almost neuer digested.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 14.

Of the like nature (I meane for their manner of growing) be the gourds. Winter and all cold weather they cannot endure: they love also places well watered and dunged.
Holland. Plinie, b. xix. c. 5.

All these pleasant gourds, under which we were sometimes solacing and caressing ourselves, how are they perish'd, in a moment! how are they withered in a night! how are they vanish'd, and come to nothing!
Clarendon. Civil War, vol. iii. p. 630.

——— The gourd and olive brown
Weave the light roof the gourd and olive fan
Their amorous foliage, mingling with the vine
Who drops her purple clusters through the green.
Dyer. Ruins of Rome.

It [the catalogue of household utensils] consists of gourd-shells, which they convert into vessels that serve as bottles to hold water, and as baskets to contain their victuals and other things, with covers of the same, and of a few wooden bowls and trenchers of different sizes.
Cook. Voyages, vol. vi. b. iii. c. 9.

GO'URMAND, v. / GO'URMAND, s. / GO'URMANDER. / GO'URMANDIZE, v. / GO'URMANDIZE, s. } Fr. Gourmander; of unsettled origin. Perhaps corrupted from gourd and manger; and thus signifying, to eat with taste or relish, with appetite, with greediness.

To eat greedily or gluttonously, to devour ravenously.

Woe vnto you, for whan bothe these corporal meates and drinkes wherwith ye so delicately and voluptuously fede yourselfes, yea and the bealy too whiche gourmaundeth, shall bee consumed, than shal ye bee houngrie and finde no relief.
Udal. Luke, c. 6.

Foreseene alway, that they eate without gourmandyse, or leaue with somme appetyte.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 1.

——— That great gourmond, fat Apicius.
B. Jonson. Sejanus, Act i.

A tigre forth out of the wood did rise,
That with fell clawes, full of fierce gourmandize,
And greedy mouth, wide gaping like hell gate,
Did run at Pastorell, her to surprise.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. vi. c. 10.

The pamper'd stomach more than well suffic'd,
Casts up the surfeit lately gormandiz'd.
Drayton. The Barons' Wars, b. vi.

But with his teeth rending her throat asunder,
Besprinkel'd with her blood the green grass under,
And gurmandizing on her flesh and blood,
He vomiting returned to the wood
Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

——— How happy floods are ye,
From our predestin'd plagues that priviledged be,
Which only with the fish which in your banks do breed
And daily there increase, man's gormandize can feed.
Drayton. Poly-Olbion, s. 2.

Now Pardie (quoth he) the Persians are great gourmanders and greedy gluttons, who having so great store of viands come hither among us, for to eat up our browne bread and course bisket.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 385.

Such as those hardy people use,
To walk on fire without their shoes,
Who, on occasion, in a dark hole
Can gormandize on lighted charcoal.
King. Orpheus & Eurydice.

——— The world, the cit-like world,
Bids thee beware; thy little craft essay;
Nor piddling with a tea spoon's tender form,
See with soup-ladles devils gormandize.
Shenstone. Economy, pt. i.

GOUT. / GO'UTY. } Fr. Goutte; It. Gotta; Sp. Gota; Barb. Lat. Gutta; from the Lat. Gutta, a drop, (say Skinner and Junius) i. e. the former (who was a physician) adds, "Distillatio vel catarrhus in articulos."

The goute let hire nothing for to dance.
Chaucer. The Nonnes Preestes Tale, v. 14,846.

They [radishe roots] be vnholsome for them, that have continually the goute, or peynes in the joyntes.
Sir T. Elyot. The Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 16.

O ye olde gowtie people, ye forgeat yourself, and renne in poste after the lyfe, and ye neuer regarde what shall fall.
Golden Boke, Let. 5.

Touching the gout, (Podagra) the time hath been when it was not so common a disease as now it is; and not only in our fathers and grandsires dates, but even in our age and within my remembrance it was not ordinary sicknesse here in Italie, as being a forrein maladie and come out of straunge countries hither to us: for certainly if it had been knowne to the Italians in old time, I doubt not but it would haue founde a Latine name to be called by.
Holland. Plinie, b. xxvi. c. 10.

Were I a leech, as who knows what may be;
The liberal man should live, and carle should die,
The sickly ladie and the gowtie peere,
Still would I haunt, that love their life so dear.
Bp. Hall, b. ii. Sat. 4.

The best lies low, and loathes the shallow view,
Quoth old Eudemon, when his gout-swolne fist
Gropes for his double ducates in his chest.
Id. b. iv. Sat. 1.

Not giving like to those, whose gifts though scant
Pain them as if they gaue with gowty hand.
Such vex themselves, and ease not others' want:
But we alike enjoy, alike command.
Davenant. Gondibert, b. i. c. 6.

Among all the diseases to which the intemperance of this Age disposes it, (at least in these Northern climates) I have observed none to increase so much within the compass of my memory and conversation as the gout.
Sir W. Temple. Of the Cure of the Gout.

Another shakes the bed, dissolving there,
Till knots upon his gouty joints appear,
And chalk is in his crippled fingers found.
Dryden. Persius, Sat. 5.

Which for the reasons before mentioned, makes the young shoots tumify, and grow knotty and gouty.
Derham. Physico-Theology, b. viii. c. 6. (Note 32.)

His luxurious and sedentary life brought on the gout, and hurt his fortune.—Walpole. Anec. of Painting, vol. ii. c. 3.

GOUT. Fr. Goutte; Lat. Gutta, a drop. Dr. Farmer says, that gouts for drops is frequent in old English.

——— I see thee still;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before.—Shakes. Macbeth, Act ii. sc. 1.

GOWK, v. / GO'WKY. } See GAWK.

The gome that so gloseth chartres, a goky he is yholden.
Piers Ploughman, p. 221.

Nay, looke how the man stands, as he were gok't!
B. Jonson. The Magnetick Lady, Act iii. sc. 6.

GOWN, s. / GO'WNED. / GO'WNIST. } Fr. Gonne, gonnelle; It. Gonna; Low Lat. Guna; and Gr. Barb. Γουνα, which Spelman thinks may be from γουνα pro γουνατα, i. e. genua, quasi vestis quæ genua tegit, ut humerale quæ humeros, podera, quæ pedes: but this does not seem to be the proper use of the word. Is not a gown an open garment, open in the front? and may it not be from the A. S. Gin-an, hiare, to yawn. (See the quotation from Kennet.) Applied to—

A long open garment; as a lawyer's gown, a morning gown for men. It is now also applied to—

Garments not open; as a round gown.

And fewe robis ich fonge. oth' forrede gounes.
Piers Ploughman, p. 253.

Ther is also the coetlewe furring in hir gounes.
Chaucer. The Persones Tale.

Tell, quod the lord, and thou shalt have anon
A gowne-cloth, by God and by Saint John.
Id. The Sompnoures Tale, v. 7834.

Girt in my giltles gowne, as I sit here and sow
I see that thinges are not indede as to the outward show.
Surrey. An Answere in the Behalfe, &c.

Their shoubes or gounes are hayrie on the outside, and open behind, with tailes hanging downe to their hammes.
Hackluyt. Voyages, vol. i. p. 54.

The Duke of Buckingham ware a gowne wrought of needle worke and set vpon cloth of tissue, furred with sables, the which gowne was valued at 1500*l.*
Stow. Hen. VII. an. 1507.

Martilla. Then, dainty girls, I make no doubt,
But we shall neatly send her out:
But let's amongst ourselves agree,
Of what her wedding gown shall be.
Drayton. The Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 8.

For if that time don let thy glory liue,
Well maist thou boast, how ever base thou bee,
That thou art first, which of thy nation song
Th' olde honour of the people gowned long.
Spenser. The Ruines of Rome.

A noble crew about them waited round
Of sage and sober peeres, all gravely gown'd.
Id. Faerie Queene, b. i. c. 12.

The comparison then is briefly between a gowned man and a souldier's condition in respect of expedition.
Holiday. Juvenal. Illus. of the Sixteenth Satyre.

For those inrich our gownists, these
Eternize with their pen.
Warner. Albion's England, b. v. c. 27.

The weary swain, fast in the arms of sleep,
And busy gown-man, by fond love disguis'd
Will leisure find to make themselves despis'd.
Buckinghamshere. Essay on Poetry.

The toga, or gown, seems to have been of a semicircular form, without sleeves, different in largeness, according to the wealth or poverty of the wearer, and used only upon occasion of appearing in publick.
Kennet. Roman Antiquities, pt. ii. b. v. c. 7.

The mercer entertained me with the modern manner of some of the nobility receiving company in their morning gowns; perhaps, sir, adds he, you have a mind to see what kind of silk is universally worn.

Goldsmith. Citizen of the World, Let. 76.

GRA'BBLE. A. S. Grapian, to feel, to handle, to grab or groap, (Somner.) Of this obsolete grab, grabble is a diminutive.

To feel, (sc.) as if to find something; as if to find the way we should go.

And so [Cato] went forward at adventure, taking extream and incredible paine, and in much danger of his life, grabling all night in the dark without moonlight, through wild olive trees, and high rocks.—North. Plutarch, p. 294.

GRACE, v.
GRACE, n.
GRA'CEFUL.
GRA'CEFULLY.
GRA'CEFULNESS.
GRA'CELESS.
GRA'CELESSLY.
GRA'CING, n.
GRA'CIOUS.
GRA'CIOUSLY.
GRA'CIOUSNESS.
GRATIO'SITY.

Fr. n. Grace; It. Grazia; Sp. Gracia; Lat. Gratia, from grat-es; grates, from the Gr. Χαριτες, by metathesis for gartes; and this from χαιρ-ειν, gaudere; which Lennep and Scheidius derive from χα-ειν, explicare; and the latter adds, that the verb χαιρ-ειν, seems to be equivalent to the Lat. Explicatâ, exporrectâ, fronte esse, opposed ad frontem in rugas contractam, tristem, austeram; and that hence is deduced the notion—animi liberalis et benè confidentis: and thus it may be considered as having been primarily applied to—

An open (countenance;) a serene, calm, benignant (countenance;) to free good-will or kindness; favour, favourable or kind appearance, (generally) pleasing appearance: also to—the effect of favour, of beneficence, of God's favour. And the verb, to grace,—

To favour or bestow favour, or honour or dignity; to honour, to dignify, to decorate, to adorn.

Grace, the noun, is applied as a title of honour; also, to the thanks (gratias) offered before or after meals. The Gloss. to Wielif refers to Mark xiv. for graces, (thanks,) but the word is not there: the constant expression of Wielif is "to do thankings."

Graceful (in Winter's Tale,) full of grace. Gracious, sometimes, as we now use graceful.

And nathles he bygan ye herte in bocsumnesse amende,
An thogte on the vayre grace, that houre Louerd hym sende. R. Gloucester, p. 318.

Than was Inglond in pes & charite,
& alle in Henry gracious kyng & fre.—R. Brunne, p. 133.

Fair grace William fond, his chance fulle well him satte,
The reame of Inglond so graciously he gatte.—Id. p. 72.

Ich have forgyve the meny gultes. and my grace graunted
Bothe to the & to thyne. in hope thow sholdest amende.
Piers Ploughman, p. 44.

And God is ay gracious. to alle that gredeth [calleth] to hym. Id. p. 236.

Gracousliche hit growede. Id. p. 304.

And the aungel entride to hir. hail ful of grace the Lord be with thee. blessid be thou among wymmen.
Wiclif. Luk, c. 1.

And the angel went in vnto her, & sayde: hayle full of grace, the Lord is with the, blessed art thou amonge wemen.
Bible, 1551. Ib.

And whanne twei gheeris weren fillid Felix took a successour Porcius Festus, and Felix wolde give grace to Iewis, and left Poul boundun.—Wielif. Dedis, c. 24.

Who coud it tell, or who coud it endite,
The joye that is maked in the place:
Whan Theseus hath don so fayre a grace!
Chaucer. The Knightes Tale, v. 1876.

O rodie rosier flouring without opine
Fountain al filthless, as bireil currant clere.
Sum drop of thy graceful hewe to us propine.
Id. A Balade of our Ladie.

(Qd. Pandarus) alas what may this be
That thou dispaired art, thus causelesse
What, lueth nat thy lady, benedicite
How wost thou so, that thou art graceless.
Id. Troilus, b. i.

——— As God wold,
A knave child she bare by this Waltere
Ful gracious, and fair for to behold.
Id. The Clerkes Tale, v. 8489.

Don John him maketh feste and mery chere;
And he him tolde agen ful specially,
How he had wel ybrouht and graciously
(Thanked be God) all hole his marchandise.
Id. The Shipmannes Tale, v. 13,274.

Why liked me thy youth and thy fairnesse
And of thy tongue, the infinite graciousnesse.
Chaucer. Legend of Hypsipyle & Medea.

Yeue and departe thyn almesse,
Do mercy forth with rightwisenes,
Beseche and praie the highe grace,
For so thou might thy peas purchace
With God, and stonden in good accorde,
But pride is loth to lese his lord.—Gower. Con. A. b. i.

O Abraham, sith it so is
That Lazar maie nought do me this
Which I haue axed in this place,
I wold praie in an other grace.
For I haue yet bretherne fiue,
That with my father bene aliue,
Together dwellende in one hous,
To whom, as thou art gracious,
I praie, that thou woldest sende
Lazar. Id. Ib. b. vi.

When I was faire and younge then favoure graced me;
Of many was I soughte their mistresse for to be;
But I did scorne them all, and answered them therefore,
Goe, goe! goe, seeke some other-wher, importune me no more.
Vere, Earl of Oxford, in Ld. Orford's Works, vol. i.

Aristotle, in whome nature hath powred her graces plentifully, teacheth by precepts, in all our doings, to take good aduice.—Wilson. The Arte of Logike, fol. 1.

And that he was not all witles, though bi defaute of good wil he waxed in conclusió gracelesse, appereth well.
Sir T. More. Workes, p. 585.

The French, in his whole language, hath not one word that hath his accent in the last syllable, saving two, called antepenultima; and little more hath the Spanish; and therefore very gracelessly may they use dactyls
Sidney Defence of Poesy.

Wherefore thirdely, in my name, and in our names (for al they are rebuked in me) with all meekenes & reuerence, I beeseeche your grace of gracious audience and of fauourable iustice.—Barnes. Workes, p. 218.

To what persones (be they neuer so ignoraunt or vnlearned) maie not this most earneste zeale of a princesse of such high estate, be an effectuall prouocation and encouraging, to haue good mynde and wil to reade, heare and embrace, this deuoute and catholike paraphrase, so plainly and sensibly translated, and so graciously by her offered, and (as ye would sate) put in al folkes handes to be made familiar vnto thē.—Udal. To Queen Katherine, vol. i.

Now is young March more than a Duke of York;
For youth, love, grace, and courage, make him more;
All which for fortune's favour now do work;
Who graceth freshest actors evermore.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. vii.

But Infinite in pardon was my Judge
That I, who first brought death on all, am grac'd
The source of life. Milton. Paradise Lost, b. xi.

Certis said he, I n'ill thine offred grace
Ne to be made so happy doe intend:
Another bliss before mine eyes I place,
Another happinesse, another end.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii. c. 7.

——— You haue a holy father,
A graceful gentleman, against whose person
(So sacred as it is) I haue done sinne.
Shakespeare. The Winter's Tale, Act v. sc. 1.

And ent'ring as a suppliant all sad
With graceful sorrow, and a comely gate,
She pass'd the presence; where all eyes were cast
On her more stately presence as she past.
Daniel. Civil Wars, b. viii.

I by his wisdom sage and learned aim;
He by my beauty gracefully doth shine.
Beaumont. Pysche, c. 16.

In like maner the flowers and adornments of Moral Philosophy, are apt and serviceable for the affecting and entertaining our Imagination by the gracefulness and elegancy of their perswasions, which are very congruent with the nature of our affections.
Mountague. Devoute Essayes, pt. i. Treat. 19. s. 3.

——— (For they were three Ungracious children of one graceless syre.)
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. iii. c. 5.

Which cruell outrage when as Artegall
Did well avize, thenceforth with wearie head
He shun'd his strokes, where-ever they did fall,
And way did give unto their graceless speed.
Id. Ib. b. v. c. 11.

With his faire mother he him dights to play
And with his goodly sisters, Graces three.
Id. Ib. b. ii. c. 3.

La. Why that word makes the faults gracious.
Shakespeare. Two Gentlemen of Verona, Act iii. sc. 1.

For thee Ile lock vp all the gates of loue,
And on my eie lids shall conuecture hang,
To turn all beautie into thoughts of harme,
And neuer shall it more be gracious.
Id. Much Adoe about Nothing, Act iv. sc. 1.

Because Cassandra's mad, her brainsicke raptures
Cannot distaste the goodnesse of a quarrell.
Which hath our seuerall honours all engag'd
To make it gracious.—Shakes. Troil. & Cress. Act ii. sc. 2.

O! pardon, and vouchsafe with patient eare
The brave aduentures of this faery knight,
The good Sir Guyon, graciously to heare;
In whom great rule of temp'raunce goodly doth appear.
Spenser. Faerie Queene, b. ii.

For like as of valiant he derived valour, of just Justice, of clement clemency; so also of gracious he comes in with gratosity, of good goodnesse, of great greatnesse, of honest honesty, and all other such like dexterities, affabilities, and courtesies he termed by the name of virtues, and so pestered philosophy with new, strange, and absurd words, more iwis than was needful.—Holland. Plutarch, p. 54.

Then it is [when a sinner repents] that our blessed Lord feels the fruits of his holy death, the acceptation of his holy sacrifice, the graciousness of his person, the return of his prayers.—Bp. Taylor, vol. i. Ser. 1.

Alone Laertes reign'd, Arcesius' heir,
Alone, Ulysses drew the vital air,
And I alone the bed connubial grac'd,
An unblest offspring of a sire unblest.
Pope. Homer. Odyssey, b. xvi.

And indeed great reason it was, that he that was Lord of Heaven should have his descending into the flesh graced and owned with the testimonies of stars and angels, one shining and the other singing at so great a blessing coming upon mankind.—South, vol. xi. Ser. 4.

Tell her that's young,
And shuns to have her graces spy'd,
That hadst thou sprung
In deserts, where no men abide,
Thou must have uncommended dy'd.
Waller. Song: Go Lovely Rose.

Not much unlike [is it] to that comparison, which Pythagoras made for the gracing and magnifying of philosophy and contemplation.—Bacon. Advan. of Learning, b. ii.

So little do the events of things answer the first appearances, that a royal family of three princes and two princesses all young and graceful persons that promised a numerous issue, did moulder away so fast, that now, while I am writing, all is reduced to the person of the Queen, and the Dutchess of Savoy.—Burnet. Own Time, an. 1662.

This [to ground their fans] teaches a lady to quit her fan gracefully when she throws it aside in order to take up a pack of cards, adjust a curl of hair, replace a falling pin, or apply herself to any other matter of importance.
Spectator, No. 102.

And by these means, and notable gracefulness in his behaviour, and affability, in which he excell'd, he [the Earl of Carlisle] had wrought himself into a particular interest with his master, and into greater affection and esteem with the whole English nation, than any other of that country.
Clarendon. The Civil War, vol. i. p. 61.

So Schism was begot; and Sacrilege and she,
A well-match'd pair, got graceless Heresy.
Dryden. The Hind and the Panther, pt. i.

Or if my heedless youth has step'd astray,
Too soon forgetful of thy gracious hand,
On me alone thy just displeasure lay,
But take thy judgments from this mourning land.
Id. Annus Mirabilis.

I therefore beg you will be graciously pleased to accept this most faithful zeal of your poor subject, who has no other design in it, than your good, and the discharge of his own conscience.—Bp. Burnet. Life. Letter to Charles II.

The graciousness and temper of this answer, made no impression on them; but they proceeded in their usual manner.
Clarendon. The Civil War, vol. i. p. 325.

The grace-cup follows to his Sovereign's health,
And to his Country, plenty, peace, and wealth.
King. The Art of Cookery.

Thus have I thought to grace a serious lay
With many a wild indeed but flow'ry sprig,
In hopes to gain, what else I must have lost,
The attention pleasure hath so much engross'd.
Cowper. Charity.

What I mean is in relation to the grace, which the assertors of the right of appeal thought fit to propose, in order to refer the decision of this point to the arbitration of the senate.—Hurd. The Opinion of an Eminent Lawyer.

Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare:
Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay.
Gray. The Progress of Poesy.

Yet there are those, who're fond of wit,
Although they never us'd it yet,
Who wits and witlings entertain,
Of Taste, virtù, and Judgment vain;
And dinner, grace, and grace-cup done
Expect a wond'rous deal of fun.
Lloyd. To George Coleman, Esq.

In this case, this roundness, this delicacy of attitude and motion, it is that all the magick of grace consists, and what is called its je ne sçai quoi, as will be obvious to any observer, who considers attentively the Venus de Medicis, the Antinous, or any statue generally allowed to be graceful in a high degree.—Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, s. 22.

In both these [posture] to be graceful it is requisite that there be no appearance of difficulty; there is required a small inflexion of the body; and a composure of all the parts in such a manner as not to incumber each other, not to appear divided by sharp and sudden angles.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s 22.

For the philosophic nature of his worth requiring he should shew by what means those societies were introduced, this affords him an opportunity of sliding gracefully and easily from the preliminaries into the main subject

Warburton. On Mr. Pope's Essay on Man.

Gracefulness is an idea not very different from beauty; it consists in much the same things; gracefulness is an idea belonging to posture and motion.

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. iii. s. 22.

Instead of regulating the selfish appetites, they laboured all they could to eradicate and destroy them, as things, even in their nature vicious; as the graceless furniture of the old man with his affections and lusts.

Warburton. Works, vol. ix. Ser. 8.

The call of Abraham from a heathen state, represents the gracious call of Christians to forsake the wickedness of the world.—Gilpin, vol. ii. Ser. 16.

All the sacrifices which were enforced on account of transgressions, were considered as solemn acts of atonement, for, if they were performed precisely according to the manner appointed, they were graciously accepted, and the particular offence was considered as obliterated.

Cogan. Theol. Disq. pt. ii. c. 1.

We may conclude, therefore, that this prophetic text had a completion, in the literal and superficial sense of the words, in both its branches,—in the beauty of our Saviour's person, no less than in the graciousness of his speech.

Bp. Horsley, vol. i. Ser. 6.

GRADE, v.
GRADA'TION.
GRA'DATORY.
GRA'DIENT.
GRA'DUAL.
GRA'DUALLY.
GRADUA'LITY.
GRA'DUATE, v.
GRA'DUATE, adj.
GRA'DUATE, n.
GRA'DUATESHIP.
GRADUA'TION.
GRADUA'TORY.

Fr. Grade; It. and Sp. Grado; Lat. Gradus. "Duplicata scansio gradus dicitur, quod gerit ab inferiore in superiorem," (Varro, lib. iv.) Gradus is thus applied to—

The motion of one (foot) to pass before the other, over or above the other; to pass forward or backward; to a step upward or forward. (See DEGREE.) And gradation,—

Advance or promotion, rise or exaltation, step by step, in regular order or series, in rank or title, dignity or honour. To graduate,—

To have or cause to have, to give or take, advancement, or promotion, or rise; to advance, or promote, to proceed, in regular order or series; to confer or assume, rank or title or honour; to note or mark out, delineate or describe, the order or series.

Gradely,—orderly, decently,—still in use in the North, (Brockett.)

Grade, n. has crept into frequent use.

Also some observed the elevation of the pole, and drew plats of the countrey exactly graded.

Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. iii. p. 153.

Gradation, is when we rehearse the word that goeth next before, and bring an other word thereupon that encreaseth the matter, as though one shoulde goe vp a payre of stayres and not leaue till he come at the top.

Wilson. The Arte of Rhetorique, p. 207.

The Chinians therefore do vse a kinde of gradation in aduancing men vnto sundry places of authority, which for the most part is performed by the senatours of Paquin

Hacluyt. Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 94.

The three principall graduates do, for honours sake, drinke off a cup filled euen with the king's owne hand, and are graced with other solemnities.—Id. Ib. p. 93.

Had they not learn'd of men, who was their king,
They civilly had spent their lives' gradation,
As meeke and milde as in their first creation.

Browne. Britannia's Pastorals, b. i. s. 4.

Preferment goes by letter, and affection,
And not by old gradation where each second
Stood heire to th' first.—Shakespeare. Othello, Act i. sc. 1.

—— Floure and thir fruit
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd
To vital spirits aspire.—Milton. Paradise Lost, b. v.

If the transition from humane into perfect mind, is made by a gradual ascent, we cannot conceive, that the personal relation which mind hath to body, should be quitted all at once; but answerably, by degrees.

Grew. Cosmo. Sacra, b. ii. c. 8.

Which while some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light, they have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover whose existence is evidenced by light.—Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 10.

That the salts of natural bodies do carry a powerful stroke in the tincture and vernish of all things, we shall not deny, if we contradict not experience, and the visible art of dyars, who advance and graduate their colours with salts.

Brown. Vulgar Errours, b. vi. c. 12.

Habits do, in like manner, gradually evolve themselves, in a long train or series of regular and artificial motions, readily promoting the doing of them, without comprehending that art and reason by which they are directed.

Cudworth. Intellectual System, p. 157.

This fresh man colledge [an university in Durham] lived not to be matriculated, much less (not lasting seven years) graduated, God in his wisdom seeing the contrary fitter.

Fuller. Worthies. Durham.

Then it evidently follows, that, if there were any such action in the next life, the pure soul would apply itself thereto according to the proportion of her judgments, and as they are graduated and qualified.

Digby. Of Man's Soul, c. 2.

That which strikes the great stroke toward our after deceptions, is the pertinacious adherence of many of these first impressions to our graduate understanding

Glanvill. The Vanity of Dogmatizing, c. 8.

Dane. I would be a graduate sir, no freshman.

Beaum. & Fletch. Maid of the Inn, Act iv. sc. 1.

[He may] finish his circuit in an English concordance and a topic folio, the gatherings and savings of a sober graduateship.—Milton. Liberty of Unlicens'd Printing.

For upholding the fabrick this order would be taken, that every Earl's son at his entry should give 40*s*. with so much at his graduation; every Lord's son, 30*s* &c.

Spottiswood. Church of Scotland, b. iii. an. 1560.

And, if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall.

Pope. Essay on Man, Epist. 1.

Others or the same [chemists] speak of [it] as a graduatory substance (as to some metals) or both.

Boyle. Works, vol. v. p. 591.

Amongst these [gradient] automata: that iron spider mentioned in Walchius, is more especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, besides the outward similitude (which was very exact) had the same kind of motions with a living spider, and did creep up and down as if it had been alive.—Wilkins. Dædalus, b. ii. c. 4.

The next degree to these, will give him no great trouble; and thus by a gradual progress from the plainest and easiest historians, he may at last come to read the most difficult and sublime of the Latin authors, such as are Tully, Virgil, and Horace.—Locke. Of Education, s. 184.

The texture is so artful, that it may be compared to the work of his own Arachne, where the shade dies so gradually, and the light revives so imperceptibly, that it is hard to tell where the one ceases and the other begins.

Garth. Ovid. Metam. Pref.

According to these observations he graduates his thermometers.—Derham. Physico-Theology, b. i. c. 2. Note 3.

The sum of these articles were, "that no bishop should make any minister, but of the full age of four and twenty, and a graduate, or at least able to give an account in Latin of the thirty-nine articles, and to note the sentences of Scripture whereupon those articles were grounded.

Strype. Life of Abp. Grindal, b. ii. c. 11.

We must remember, that the idea of pain, in its highest degree, is much stronger than the highest degree of pleasure; and that it preserves the same superiority through all the subordinate gradations

Burke. On the Sublime and Beautiful, pt. ii. s. 5.

Most people must have observed the sort of sense they have had on being swiftly drawn in any easy coach on a smooth turf, with gradual ascents and declivities. This will give a better idea of the beautiful, and point out its probable cause better, than almost any thing else.

Id. Ib. pt. iv. s. 23.

It is a melancholy consideration that man, as he advances in life, degenerates in his nature, and gradually loses those tender feelings which constitute one of his highest excellencies.—Knox. Essays, No. 39.

One is, that she [Nature] works within certain limits, allows of a certain latitude within which health may be preserved, and within the confines of which it only suffers a graduated diminution.—Paley. Natural Theology, c. 26.

Invest me with a graduate's gown,
Midst shouts of all beholders,
My head with ample square cap crown,
And deck with hood my shoulders.

Smart. On taking a Bachelor's Degree.

The bounty which that Philosophical Emperor, [Marcus Antonius] as we learn from Lucian, bestowed upon one of the teachers of philosophy, probably lasted no longer than his own life. There was nothing equivalent to the privileges of graduation.—Smith. Wealth of Nations, b. v. c. 1.

Could this gradatory apostacy [of Macbeth] have been shown us, could the noble and useful moral, which results, have been thus forcibly impressed upon our minds, without a violation of those senseless unities.—Seward, Let. 3. p. 243.

GRAFF, v.
GRAFF, n.
GRAFT, v.
GRAFT, n.
GRA'FTER.
GRA'FTING, n.

Fr. Greffer; Dut. Greffien, which, says Lye, you may derive from the A. S. Graf-an, insculpere, (in Goth. Graban.) Graft (sometimes written graff) is the past tense of this A. S. verb, graf-ed, grafd, graft, (see Tooke, ii. 176,) and upon this participle the verb, to graft, is formed. To graff or graft, is—

To cut into, to make an incision; by usage,—for the purpose of an insertion,—and, consequentially, to insert or fix or fasten in or upon.

And the graffe of grace.—Piers Ploughman, p. 23.

What if ony of the braunchis bin brokun whanne thou were a wilde olyue tree art grafid among hem, and art maad felowe of the roote and of the fatnesse of the olyue tree?—Wielif. Romayns, c. 11.

Though some of the braunches be broken of, and thou beynge a wylde olyue tree, arte grafte in amonge them, and made partaker of the rote and fatnes of the olyue tree.

Bible, 1551. Ib.

Then they framed themselfes to lyue by lawes and not by force, then they lerned to shred their vynes, and they lerned to plant and graffe their olyues.—Goldyng. Justine, fol. 178.

Nature is a right that phantasie hath not framed, but God hath grafted and gyuen man power therunto wherof these are dersyued.—Wilson. Arte of Rhetorique, p. 33.

How coulde so barraine soile
bring forth so good a graffe,
To whom the reast that seeme good corne
are in respect but chaffe?

Turberville. To a late acquainted Friend.

At this time it is enough for you to bee grafted in the stocke from whence through faith ye may receiue life.

Udal. John, c. 25.

So long haue I listened to thy speech
That grafted to the ground is my breach.

Spenser. Shepheard's Calender. February.

Make choice of your graffs from a constant and well bearing branch As to the success of graffing, the main skill is, to joyn the inward part of the cion to the sappy part of the stock, closely, but not too forceably; that being the best and most infallible way, by which most of the quick and juicy parts are mutually united, especially toward the bottom.

Evelyn. Pomona, c. 3.

The first is, to set the graffe or sion betweene the barke and the wood: for in old time truly, men were affraid at first to cleave the stocke, but soon after they ventured to bore a hole into the very heart of the wood: and then they set fast into the pith just in the mids thereof, but one sion or graffe, for by this kind of graffing, impossible it was that the said pith should receive or bear any more.

Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 14.

For all this, he [a prince] is nothing but a servant, overseer, or graff, and not the head, which is a title belonging only to Christ.—Knox. Hist. of the Reformation, Pref.

Touching other points belonging to the feat of grafting, all dependeth upon the goodnesse or malignitie of the skie and weather.—Holland. Plinie, b. xvii. c. 15.

God doubtless makes her, and doth make her good,
And grafts her in the body, there to spring,
Which, though it be corrupted flesh and blood,
Can no way to the soul corruption bring.

Davies. Immortality of the Soul, s. 8.

